[11] Ver. 25. Τὸ βάπτισμα Ἰωάννου πόθεν ἦν; ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, ἢ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων; The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or from men?] From heaven, i. e. from God; for heaven here is not opposed to earth, but to men. So to sin against heaven, Luke xv. 18—21. is to sin against God. (See the note there.) John was a voice crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord: (Matt. iii. 3.) he baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying to the people, that they should believe in him that was to come after him, that is, in Christ Jesus: (Acts xix. 4.) he came to give testimony to Christ, (John i. 7. 15.) declaring that he was the Lamb of God, that took away the sins of the world: (ver. 29.) whence it is evident that the chief priests and pharisees could not own the baptism of John to be from heaven, but they must also own Christ to be the Son of God, and him concerning whom God had testified by a voice from heaven, and by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him, that he was the beloved Son in whom he was well pleased; whence these great doctors chose rather to pretend ignorance, than to confess that truth which would condemn them. And whereas it is added, ver. 26. that all held John ὡς προφήτην, as a prophet; this as doth not import similitude, but that he was truly so; as when it is said, we have seen his glory, ὡς μονογενοῦς, as of the only-begotten of the Father, John i. 14. ὡς ἐξουσίαν ἔχων, as having authority, Matt. vii. 29. (see note on Rom. ix. 32.) hence he is said to be a prophet, Luke xx. 6. and ὄντως προφήτης, truly a prophet, Mark xi. 32.

[12] Ver. 28—31. A man had two sons.] By the first of these two sons, all the interpreters I have read understand the publicans; by the second, the scribes and pharisees: because Christ, in the close of this parable, (ver. 32.) seems so to interpret it. But yet it seems to me a probable conjecture, that by the first son, we may understand the gentiles, represented by the prodigal son, Luke xv. For it hath been noted on ver. 1, 2. of that chapter, that publicans by the Jews were ranked with the heathens, and that the heathens were represented by the Jews as πόρναι, harlots, and born of harlots. (See the note on John viii. 41.) And when Christ came among them, or they came to him, he found them still more ready to believe in him than the Jews, and more especially than the scribes and pharisees; he not finding such faith in Israel as in the centurion, Matt. viii. 10, 11. and in the Syrophœnician woman, Mark vii. 29. (See xiv. 34—36. John xii. 20. 23, 24.) So the import of it may be this; You Jews, who style yourselves the sons of God, and you scribes and pharisees, who pretend to so much religion, and so great zeal for God, and to be guides to others in the way of life, are not only more alien from it, when taught you by me and my forerunner, than the publicans and harlots, but than those gentiles are, whom you represent as such.

And in this interpretation I have the suffrage of Origen* upon the place, who saith, In my judgment the parable contains τὸν περὶ τοῦ ἀπειθήσαντος Ἰσραὴλ τῷ θεῷ λόγον, καὶ τὸν περὶ τοῦ πιστεύσαντος λαοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν, a discourse of the infidelity of Israel, and of the belief of the gentiles. Of the same opinion are Theophilus Antiochenus, Hilary, Can. 22. in Matt. St. Jerome, opus imperfectum, Chrysostom, and Theophylact.

[13] Ver. 32. For John came to you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not, &c.] So saith Josephus,† that the Baptist came to teach them virtue, and to come to his baptism, exercising τὴν πρὸς ἀλλήλους δικαιοσύνην καὶ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν εὐσεβείαν, righteousness towards one another, and piety towards God. It follows, but the publicans and harlots believed on him, and you afterward repented not that ye might believe, &c. Christ here saith that the publicans and harlots προάγουσιν, go before you into the kingdom of God; (ver. 31.) not that the scribes and elders of the people of the Jews followed after them, for those scribes and pharisees received not the baptism of John, Luke vii. 39. but that by their example they shewed them the way they ought to follow. Now from this parable note,

First, That the scribes and pharisees and other Jews might and ought to have been moved by the admonitions of the Baptist, and the example of the publicans, to repentance and faith; for why else doth Christ here blame them, that they were not prevailed on by these means to believe and repent?

Secondly, That therefore an internal, irresistible force or power cannot be necessary to produce this repentance and this faith. For if the publicans and harlots were thus moved to repent, what wonder is it that they went before the scribes and pharisees, who, having no such powerful impulse, were left under an impossibility of repenting? Why is it that it is represented as their crime, that they did not repent at the preaching of John, or follow the example of the publicans, since the event shews, that no such irresistible motive to repentance was contained either in the Baptist's preaching, or in their example?

[14] Ver. 33. There was a certain householder, &c.] For explication of this parable observe, that in it is represented,

First, The favour and providence of God towards the Jewish church and nation, as being the vineyard he himself had planted, and had watered with his heavenly dew, the waters of life; i. e. the doctrine of the law and the prophets; he also had enclosed it and hedged about it, not only by his care and providence, but by his covenant of circumcision, and his presence with them, and his owning them for his own people, above all the nations of the earth. Note,

Secondly, That the husbandmen to whom this vineyard

* Apud Huet. tom. i. p. 456.

was let out were the priests and Levites, doctors and rulers of that church and people; who are here represented, not only as wanting in their duty, which was to make this vineyard fruitful, and to prepare it to receive his prophets and messengers with due reverence, and especially to receive his Son and their Messiah with faith, reverence, and obedience; but even consulted with, and spurred on the people to offer the most vile affronts unto them, and even to destroy his Son and their Saviour; for though Christ spake this parable to the people, (Luke xxix. 2.) the priests and pharisees perceived that he spake of them, (ver. 45.) When therefore it is here said, they will reverence my son, (ver. 37.) these words, as Theophylact notes, Christ spake, not being ignorant what really they would do, ἀλλὰ τὸ ὀφεῖλον πραχθῆναι καὶ τὸ εἰκὸς λέγων, but shewing what was fitting to be done, and they ought to have done; and therefore, Luke xx. 13. the phrase is varied thus, ἴσως, perhaps they will reverence my son when they see him.

Thirdly, That this deportment of the husbandmen, and of the people led and excited by them to this murder of his Son, and treatment of his prophets, would render them obnoxious to the heaviest of Divine judgments.

[15] Ver. 41. They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men.] How this is to be reconciled with St. Luke, see Luke xx. 16.

[16] Ver. 43. Διὰ τοῦτο ἀρθήσεται ἀφ' ὑμῶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ. For this thing, i. e. the builders refusing this stone, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, &c.] Hence it is evident that God deserted the Jewish church, and let this stone so fall upon them, as to grind them to powder, because of their rejecting the Messiah. The evidence that this affords to the truth of the Christian faith, see in the Preface to the Gospels.

[17] Ver. 44. And he that falleth on this stone shall be broken, &c.] i. e. He that stumbles on this stone, whilst he is here on earth, being offended at his doctrine, life, or death, shall be broken by his fall upon it, as is the person stoned, by the sharp stone he falls upon; but he on whom this stone shall fall, when he is elevated to his throne of glory, shall be more violently shattered by it; as is the person stoned by the great stone, as big as two men can lift, thrown down violently upon his breast.

CHAP. XXII.

1. AND Jesus answered (with relation to them), and spake again to them by parables, and said,

2. The (doctrine of the) [1] kingdom of heaven (preached to this nation) is like (to find a success answerable) unto (that of) a certain king, who made a marriage for his son,

3. And sent forth his servants to call them who were (to be) bidden to the wedding: (viz. the apostles, and the seventy sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. x. 6. Luke x. 1.) and (being thus lovingly invited) they would not come.

4. (Wherefore) again he sent forth other servants (viz. the apostles, and the hundred and eight on whom the Holy Ghost fell), saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come (I pray you) to the marriage (feast).

5. But they made light of it (i. e. the invitation), and went their way, one to his farm, and another to his merchandise:

6. And the remnant (of them) took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew (some of) them.

7. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he [2] sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city (and so will this spiritual King deal with those of this nation, who not only refuse his invitation to partake of the blessings of the gospel, but also kill his messengers; he by the Roman army will destroy them and their capital city).

8. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding (feast) is ready, [3] but they who were bidden were not worthy (and therefore shall not taste of this feast).

9. Go ye therefore into the [4] highways (to the dispersion of the Jews and to the gentiles), and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10. So these servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11. And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a [5] man which had not on a wedding-garment (i. e. a faith and conversation answerable to the design of the gospel):

12. And he saith to him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding-garment? and he was (as one) speechless.

13. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth: (so shall it be with the Jews, the children of the kingdom, Matt. viii. 12. Luke xiii. 28.)

14. For [6] many (of the Jews) are called, but few (of them) are chosen, (i. e. believers of the gospel, see note on 1 Pet. ii. 9.)

15. Then went the pharisees (perceiving that this parable was designed against them), and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16. And (accordingly) they sent unto him their disciples with the [7] Herodians, saying (with insidious flattery), Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man ('s person): for thou regardest not the person of men.

17. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou (in this case)? Is it [8] lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? (that if he had said no, they might represent him as an enemy to Cæsar; if yea, as no friend to the nation.)

18. But Jesus perceived their wickedness (i. e. their evil design), and said (to them), Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites (endeavouring to ensnare me under pretence of reverence to me)?

19. Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought to him a (Roman) penny.

20. And he saith to them, Whose is this image and superscription (that this money bears)?

21. They say to him, (It is) Cæsar's. Then saith he to them (this being an evidence that Cæsar's government hath obtained among you), Render therefore to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and to God the things that are God's (i. e. the tribute due to his temple).

22. When they had heard these words, they marvelled (at his wisdom), and left him, and went their way.

23. The same day came to him the [9] sadducees, who say that there is no resurrection (of the body), and asked him,

24. Saying, Master, Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25. Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife to his brother:

26. Likewise the second also, and the third, (and so on) to the seventh.

27. And last of all the woman died also.

28. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29. Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures (declaring that there shall be a resurrection), nor the power of God (enabling him to effect it).

30. (And as for your argument against it, it is grounded on a false supposition); for in the [10] resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven (in that they cannot die, Luke xx. 36. and so can need no reparation by new births).

31. But as touching the [11] resurrection of the dead, (this, I say, is denied by you, because ye know not the Scriptures; for) have ye not read that which was spoken to you by God, saying,

32. I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, (and so I own them still as my sons and children? now) God is not the God of (them who are to continue in the state of) the dead, but of the living; (his children being sons of the resurrection, Luke xx. 36.)

33. And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

34. But when the pharisees had heard that he had put the sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35. Then one of them, which was a lawyer (i. e. an interpreter of the law), [12] asked him a question, tempting him (i. e. making a trial of his skill), and saying,

36. Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

37. Jesus said to him, Thou shalt [13] love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind (i. e. above and before all other things, affecting them only with relation and subordination to God).

38. This is the first and great commandment.

39. And the second is like to it, (viz.) [14] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

40. On these two commandments [15] hang all the law and the prophets (these being an abridgment of what is contained in them both).

41. While the pharisees were (thus) gathered together, Jesus asked them,

42. Saying, What think you of Christ? whose son is he? They say to him, (He is) the son of David.

43. He saith unto them, How then doth David in (the prophetical afflatus of the) spirit call him Lord, saying,

44. The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?

45. If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?

46. And no [16] man was able to answer him a word (to that inquiry), neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII.

[1] Ver. 2. THE kingdom of heaven is likened, ἀνθρώπῳ βασιλεῖ, ὅστις ἐποίησε γάμους, to a king who made a marriage for his son.] That γάμος signifies a marriage-feast we learn from Phavorinus,* and others, on those words of Homer, Od. a. 225. εἰλαπίνης γάμος. (See Dr. Hammond on Matt. ix.) And because these feasts continued sometimes a week or more, as we learn from those words of Laban to Jacob, Gen. xxix. 27. fulfil her week; i. e. keep a seven days' feast for her marriage; and from Samson, who at his marriage ἐποίησε πότον ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ, made a feast seven days, for so used the young men to do; (Judg. xiv. 10.) therefore the word is γάμους in the plural, there being not many marriages, but many wedding-feasts at a marriage. This sense of the word is evident from ver. 4. My oxen and fatlings are killed, come, εἰς γάμους, to the marriage-feast. The king here represents God the Father, the son the Lord Jesus Christ, described often as the spouse of his church, Matt. ix. 15. xxv. 1. John iii. 29. 2 Cor. xi. 2. Apoc. xix. 7. the servants sent to call them that were bidden, i. e. the Jews invited by the Baptist, and our Lord, calling them to repentance, because the kingdom of God was at hand, might be the apostles and the seventy disciples, sent at first only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; (Matt. x. 5, 6. Luke ix. 2. x. 1.) the servants sent again after the fatlings were killed, were the same apostles and other spiritual persons, sent after our Lord's resurrection with a new commission, to be Christ's witnesses in Jerusalem, and throughout all Judea; (Acts i. 8.) for the words son and the kingdom of heaven, represented by this parable, will not permit us to say these servants were the prophets sent before to the Jews.

Ver. 3. The kingdom of heaven is like to a man who sent his servants.] Here note, that though all the ancients from Origen, except St. Hilary, say that the servants first sent out were the prophets of the Old Testament; yet this seems plainly contrary to the text: first, because this also is a parable concerning the kingdom of heaven, and therefore respecting only those times when that kingdom was come. Secondly, It is a parable of a king making a marriage for his son, which is generally interpreted of Christ the bridegroom of his church, and therefore only can respect the times of his advent. Thirdly, The servants sent out the second time, were sent to the same persons to whom the first were sent: (ver. 4.) and yet it is granted, that the servants sent out the second time were the apostles of our Lord.

[2] Ver. 7. The king was wroth, πέμψας τὰ στρατεύματα αὐτοῦ, ἀπώλεσε τοὺς φονεῖς ἐκείνους, καὶ τὴν πόλιν αὐτῶν ἐνέπρησε, and sending his armies destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city.] i. e. Upon their refusal, he decreed to send the Romans to destroy the Jews, and burn their temple and their city; which they so fully performed, as to destroy, during those wars, saith Josephus, eleven hundred thousand Jews; to burn their temple; consume, and so lay waste their city; as that all men conceived, saith Josephus, it never could be built again.

[3] Ver. 8. Οἱ δὲ κεκλημένοι οὐκ ἦσαν ἄξιοι, But they that were called were not worthy.] They were not well disposed to receive the gospel, not willing to repent, and believe, and entertain the preachers of it kindly, which is the indication Christ gives his apostles, who were ἄξιοι, worthy;

* Ὁμήρος οὐ τὸ ἔγγαμον μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ἑστίασιν γάμον καλεῖ.

(Matt. x. 11. 13, 14.) they were ἀμελήσαντες, despisers of this spiritual banquet, out of love to their secular interests; here ver. 5. they loved other things more than Christ, and the blessings of his kingdom; which he that doth, saith Christ, οὐκ ἐστί μου ἄξιος, is not worthy of me, because he will not take up his cross and follow me. (Matt. x. 37, 38.)

[4] Ver. 9. Πορεύεσθε οὖν ἐπὶ τὰς διεξόδους τῶν ὁδῶν, &c. Go therefore into the highways, &c.] i. e. To those of the dispersion; for after they had begun at Jerusalem, and preached through Judea, they also were to preach the gospel to the other Jews, the seed of Abraham; this salvation being to be tendered to the Jews first, and also to the gentile. (Rom. i. 16. ii. 10.) Hence Paul saith thus to the Jews of Antioch, It was necessary the gospel should be first preached to you; (Acts xiii. 45, 46. xviii. 6. xxviii. 28.) and afterward τοῖς ἔξω, to those who were without the covenant made to Abraham.

[5] Ver. 11. Εἶδεν ἐκεῖ ἄνθρωπον οὐκ ἐνδεδυμένον ἔνδυμα γάμου, He saw there a man not clothed with a wedding-garment.] Faith alone cannot be here the wedding-garment, since to receive the invitation, and to come to the wedding-supper, must import believing. By the man therefore who had not on this garment, I conjecture we are to understand the false brethren of the Jewish nation, who preached Christ not sincerely but out of contention; (Phil. i. 15.) contending for the necessity of circumcision, and of the observation of the law of Moses to justification, and who by this subverted the souls of others, (Acts xv. 1. 24.) made Christ to die in vain, (Gal. ii. 21.) Christians to fall from grace, (Gal. v. 14.) and the apostles to labour in vain, among the gentiles; (Gal. iv. 11.) and of whom the apostle saith, their end shall be according to their works. (2 Cor. xi. 15.) That this man must represent the Jews is evident, (1.) because he is cast out into outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth, which Christ applies to the Jews, the sons of the kingdom, Matt. viii. 12. Luke xiii. 28. whilst the gentiles are said to come to this supper. (2.) Because the reason assigned of this punishment is this, that many are called, but few are chosen: (ver. 14.) for that this belongs peculiarly to the Jews, see note on xx. 16. (3.) Christ had said in the former chapter, that the kingdom of God should be taken from them; and here proceeding to discourse of the same thing, as appears from the connective particle, ver. 1. of this chapter, he shews how worthy the Jews would be of this punishment, as being either wholly refractory to God, calling them by his Son to the participation of these blessings, or coming to them without due preparations, as the false apostles and deceitful workers did; or else by casting off that wedding-garment they had once put on, as did those Jews whose charity waxed cold, (Matt. xxiv. 10—12.) and who being scandalized fell off from the Christian faith. It remains then that these backsliders, or these false apostles, must be the persons represented by the man not having on his wedding-garment.

Ver. 13. Bind him hand and foot.] Theophylact here notes, that this present time is the only time of working; in the future all the practical powers of the soul are bound, καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶ ποιῆσαι τι ἀγαθὸν εἰς ἀντισήπωσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, and then we can do nothing good to make a compensation for our sins.

[6] Ver. 14. Many are called, but few are chosen.] This parable, saith Theophylact, respects the Jews who were called, but not elected, ὡς μὴ ἀκούσαντες, as not hearkening to God's call; whence he infers, that μετὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ καλεῖν· τὸ δὲ ἐκλεκτοὺς γένεσθαι, ἢ μὴ, ἡμέτερον ἐστι, our calling is of God, but that we are elect, or not, is from ourselves.

[7] Ver. 16. Μετὰ Ἡρωδιανῶν, with the Herodians.] Here Jerome notes that some of the Latins ridiculously thought, they were called Herodians, who thought Herod was the Christ,* though he himself, in his dialogue against the Luciferians, hath these words, "Herodiani Herodem regem suscipere pro Christo," received Herod the king for Christ; this also was the opinion of Tertullian in his book de Præscript. cap. 47. of Epiphanius, Hær. 7. and of Philastrius, cap. 48. And Origen conjectures that they were called Herodians, who taught τελεῖν τὸν φόρον Καίσαρι, that tribute-money was to be paid to Cæsar; the soldiers were so called by the pharisees, saith St. Jerome here, "quia Romanis tributa solvebant," because they paid tribute to the Romans. And sure this opinion must seem ridiculous to them who consider that Herod was an alien, not a Jew of the seed of Abraham, or of the root of David, and was dead before Christ's return out of Egypt; whereas all thought that Christ was to be found not among the dead but the living, and many that he should never die. (John xii. 34. see the note on Matt. xvi. 6.)

[8] Ver. 17. Ἔξεστι δοῦναι κῆνσον Καίσαρι, ἢ οὔ; Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? &c.] Here note,

First, That though the question be only proposed thus, ἔξεστι; Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? yet the decision in the affirmative, that it was lawful to pay it to Cæsar, was plainly a decision of the right of Cæsar to receive, and therefore to demand it, as being to them the minister of God. (1.) Because St. Paul hath plainly told us, that therefore pay we tribute to him to whom we lawfully do pay it, because he is the higher power and the minister of God. (Rom. xiii. 6.) And also because it is his due; for so it follows, render therefore to all, τὰς ὀφειλὰς, their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due; and this is still more evident from those words of Christ, Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's: where Christ seems to me, even to strike at the root of that corrupt opinion of the Gaulonites and zealots, that they, being God's people, were not to own any other as their Lord, by this distinction betwixt things belonging to Cæsar, viz. tribute, and things belonging to God, viz. the shekel of the sanctuary. But, to omit this, either Christ, when he said, Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, spake to the purpose, and by way of answer to the question proposed, or he did not; to say he did not, is in effect to say, he spake impertinently, which I hope no Christian will affirm: if he spake to the purpose of the question; seeing he said, upon their owning the tribute-money to bear Cæsar's image, by way of inference, ἀπόδοτε οὖν, Render therefore to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, he as plainly intimates the tribute-money did of right belong to Cæsar, as by saying, Render to God the things that are God's, that what he styled the things of God, did of right belong to God. For those Jews, who held that tribute was not to be paid to Cæsar, did so; because they apprehended it unlawful to own any other as their lord and governor, but God; or one of their own nation whom he had appointed to rule over them. (See the note on 1 Pet. ii. 16.)

I therefore cannot think with Grotius, that Christ here leaves the matter of right undecided; or with Mr. Clerc, that he doth not by his answer own that tribute was rightly demanded by Cæsar, seeing Christ could not then have said by way of inference, Render therefore to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and this right of Cæsar had its rise from their own act of submission to the Roman government, as formerly they had done to the Assyrian; which national submission with promise of fidelity, having obtained now about a hundred years, was a just ground for Cæsar's right. And therefore king Agrippa* tells them, that οἱ τὸ μὲν ὑπακοεῖν ἐκ διαδοχῆς εἰληφότες, they who had received this subjection by succession from their ancestors, could not rebel without contumacy. And Josephus† tells them, that to seek now to shake off the yoke, καὶ μακροῖς εἴξαντας χρόνοις, when for a long time they had yielded to it, would subject them to an evil death. Note,

Secondly, That our Lord answers from the received maxim of the Jews, that wherever the money of any person was owned as the current coin of the kingdom, there the inhabitants owned that person as their lord and governor; that is, they acknowledged him to be the higher power, and the minister of God in respect to them: whence he that doth adulterate, diminish, or counterfeit this coin, becomes guilty of the crime, læsæ majestatis: and David, though anointed by Samuel, is declared not to be their king whilst Saul lived; because "numisma Saulis adhuc obtinet," the coin which had the image of Saul upon it was still the current coin. So that these captious men could take no advantage against him from this answer; because it was founded upon their received principles. Note,

Thirdly, That Christ justly calls these persons hypocrites; because they pretended to own him as a just person, and one who bore no respect to persons, and yet came with design to accuse him for an unjust decision: and (2.) because they, saith St. Luke, xx. 20. feigned themselves to be such as they were not, and to have that opinion of him which was far from their hearts; both which are manifest indications of gross hypocrisy.

[9] Ver. 23. Προσῆλθον αὐτῷ σαδδουκαῖοι, οἱ λέγοντες μὴ εἶναι ἀνάστασιν, The sadducees came to him, saying, There is no resurrection.] It is true, that the sadducees held, that there was neither angel of any permanent, nor spirit of any separate existence from the body: (Acts xxiii. 8.) for their opinion, saith Josephus,‡ was, that death, τὰς ψυχὰς συναφανίζει τοῖς σώμασι, extinguishes souls together with the bodies; and that they rejected ψυχῆς δὲ τὴν διαμονὴν, both the duration of the soul, and future punishments and rewards: but then it is true also, that the sadducees say, μὴ εἶναι ἀνάστασιν, that there is no resurrection. (Acts xxiii. 8.) And hence the Jews introduce them, saying,§ The cloud fails and goes away; so he that descends into the grave, returns not from it. Nay, they denied, or at least knew not, that the power of God was sufficient to raise the dead; for, ye err (saith Christ), not knowing the Scriptures, neither the power of God, (ver. 29.) And therefore, St. Paul, speaking of the resurrection from the dead, asks, Why it should be thought a thing incredible for God to raise the dead? (Acts xxvi. 7, 8.)

[10] Ver. 30. Ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει, In the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but ὡς ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν οὐρανῷ εἰσὶ, are as the angels of God in heaven.] They are as the angels, not in all respects, but as to immortality and incorruptibility; and so they need no marriage to perpetuate their generations in the world: so saith St. Luke, They can die no more, but are ἰσάγγελοι, equal to the angels. (Luke xx. 36.) And that in this, especially, consists their likeness to the angels, we learn from the like words of Philo, concerning Abraham,—that leaving the world,* προστίθεται τῷ Θεοῦ λαῷ, καρπούμενος ἀφθαρσίαν, ἴσος ἀγγέλοις γεγονὼς, he was gathered to the people of God, having obtained incorruptibility, being made like to the angels. Vain therefore is the inference of the papists hence, that the souls of the just see God as the angels do, and know of the conversion of sinners: this likeness to the angels relating not to the qualities of their souls, but to the freedom of their bodies from corruption. Hence also it is evident against Heinsius, and others on this place, that ἀνάστασις, even when it is not joined with flesh, or body, signifies the resurrection of the flesh, or body; and when the resurrection of the dead is mentioned, as here, it never bears any other sense.

[11] Ver. 31, 32. Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῶν νεκρῶν, but concerning the resurrection of the dead,—I am the God of Abraham, &c.] Those learned men are very much mistaken, who say, that Christ designed not here to prove the resurrection of the body, but only the ἀναβίωσις, or life of the soul after death. For (1.) the argument of the sadducees being taken from the supposition, that if there was a resurrection, there must be a marriage, and the persons raised must be man and wife as they were before, shews plainly, that they put the question concerning the resurrection of the body; for marriage belongs not to separate souls, but only to persons in the body: and therefore, if Christ said any thing pertinent to their objection, and opposed his argument to that which they designed to disprove, he must speak of, and prove, the resurrection of the body. And therefore Methodius† well notes, that if Christ had not done this, but only had asserted the permanency of the soul, he had not answered, but confirmed the reasoning of the sadducees against the doctrine of the pharisees. (2.) Christ here declares the sadducees thus erred, not knowing the power of God: (ver. 29.) now, that consists not in sustaining an immortal soul in life, but in raising the body from the dust to life. (Acts xxvi. 8. Eph. i. 19, 20. Phil. iii. 21. Heb. xi. 19.) And (3.) this is extremely evident from the very words of Christ, both here and in St. Mark and Luke; for (1.) the question put to Christ is not put thus, If their souls live, whose wife is she? but, ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει, ὅταν ἀναστῶσι, &c. in the resurrection, when they shall arise, whose wife shall she then be? (Mark xii. 23.) To which Christ answers thus, Ὅταν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῶσιν when they arise from the dead, (ver. 25.) when they partake τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῆς ἐκ νεκρῶν, of the resurrection from the dead, (Luke xx. 35.) they neither marry, nor are given in marriage. Now a time so determined, and respecting what should be hereafter, cannot refer to the present state of their souls, which in no sense are raised from the dead, but only to the future condition of their bodies. (2.) Christ manifestly declares the question was περὶ τῶν νεκρῶν, ὅτι ἐγείρονται, concerning the dead, that they rise again, (Mark xii. 26.) touching the resurrection of the dead here; and that this was the thing he was to prove, from what they had read concerning Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. (Luke xx. 37.) And the argument from them will appear strong and convincing, upon consideration of these following particulars.

First, That God is the God and Father of them only who are his sons: thus, when God had chosen Israel to be his people in covenant, and promised to be their God, διακριτικῶς; or, in distinction from others, he styled them his sons, saying, υἱοὶ ἐστὲ, Ye are the sons of the Lord your God: (Deut. xiv. 1. xxxii. 18. Isa. xlv. 11.) or else his son, Israel is my son, my first-born; say then to Pharaoh, Let my son go: (Exod. iv. 22, 23. Jer. xxxi. 20. Hos. xi. 1.) and in the New Testament, ἔσομαι αὐτῷ Θεὸς, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται μοὶ υἱὸς, I will be to him a God, and he shall be to me a son; (Rev. xxi. 7.) I will be to you a Father, and ye shall be to me sons and daughters. (2 Cor. vi. 18.) Note,

Secondly, That this υἱοθεσία, or sonship, imports the redemption of the body from corruption; for we wait, saith the apostle, for the adoption, that is, for the redemption of the body; (Rom. viii. 23.) the revelation of the sons of God expected, (ver. 19.) is their deliverance from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, (ver. 21.) And the apostle proves, that our mortal bodies, dead because of sin, shall be raised by the Spirit of God dwelling in them; because they who have the Spirit of God, are the sons of God, from ver. 11. to 17. And in this very argument, St. Luke expressly saith, That they that are thought worthy of the life to come, and of the resurrection from the dead, are υἱοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, the sons of God, as being children of the resurrection, (xx. 36.) Hence, because God, who is not the God of the dead, but of the living, is called the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,* Irenæus infers, that without doubt they live to God, "cum sint filii resurrectionis," being the sons of the resurrection; and it is the same with him to be a son of God, and "hæreditatem consequi incorruptelæ," to enjoy an incorruptible inheritance. Hence the apostle saith, The sons of God must be the heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ: (Rom. viii. 17.) St. John, that they shall inherit all things: (Rev. xxi. 7.) the author to the Hebrews, that God was not ashamed to be called the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, because he had prepared for them a kingdom. (Heb. xi. 6.) Nor were the Jews unacquainted with this notion of a son of God, as one who was to be rewarded by him after death, or of a son of Abraham, who was to be partaker of a happy resurrection. For thus the book of Wisdom introduceth the wicked, speaking of the good man, μακαρίζει τὰ ἔσχατα δικαίων καὶ ἀλαζονεύεται πατέρα Θεὸν, He pronounced the latter end of the just blessed, and boasts, that he hath God for his Father; let us cut him off with a shameful death: εἰ γάρ ἐστιν ὁ δίκαιος υἱὸς Θεοῦ, for if the just man be the son of God, he will receive him; and by his words there will be a visitation of him. (Wisd. ii. 16. 20.) Thus, saith he, they spake because they knew not the mysteries of God, nor hoped for the reward of holiness, nor discerned the recompence of blameless souls; for God made man επ' ἀφθαρσία, for incorruption, and to be an image of his own immortality, (ver. 22, 23.) And again, The souls of the righteous are in the hands of God, καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς αὐτῶν ἀθανασίας πλήρης, and their hope is full of immortality; in the day of their visitation they shall shine, (iii. 1. 4. 7.) And a third time, Then shall the righteous stand with great boldness before the face of them who afflicted them; and they shall say, We fools counted his life madness, and his end to be without honour; how is he numbered, ἐν υἱοῖς Θεοῦ, among the sons of God, and his portion is with the saints? (v. 1. 4, 5.) The seven sons mentioned in the Maccabees, are by Josephus still called Ἀβραὰμ παῖδες, children of the stock of Abraham; and as the book of Maccabees still introduces them, declaring, that God ἀναστήσει ἡμᾶς εἰς αἰώνιον ἀναβίωσιν ζωῆς, would raise them up to life eternal. (2 Macc. vii. 9. 23.) And Josephus * introduces their mother, comforting them with those words of Solomon, wisdom is a tree of life to them that do her will; and those of Ezekiel, εἰ ζήσεται τὰ ὀστᾶ τὰ ξηρὰ; shall these dry bones live? and those words of God in the song of Moses, I kill, καὶ ζῆν ποιήσω, and I will make alive: so he also declares of these martyrs,† that, dying for God, they also ζῶσι Θεῷ, ὅπερ Ἀβραὰμ, καὶ Ἰσαὰκ, καὶ Ἰακὼβ, lived with God, as do Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs, and‡ ran ἐπ' ἀθανασίας ὁδὸν, in the way of immortality, and that § Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, received them dying. He also mentions a παλιγγενεσία, reviviscence of all that observe the law of Moses, though they die for it, saying, that to them ‖ ἔδωκεν ὁ Θεὸς γένεσθαι τὲ πάλιν καὶ βίον ἀμείνω λαβεῖν ἐκ περιτροπῆς, God hath granted to them to live again, and to receive a better life in reversion, or at the revolution of all things. So then Christ's argument runs thus, Those of whom God after their death is the God and Father, they shall rise again (for they must be the sons of God, and therefore sons of the resurrection, to whom belongs the adoption or sonship, i. e. the redemption of their bodies from corruption); but God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, therefore they shall rise again.

Here Theophylact observes, that as the sadducees made their objection against the resurrection from the law of Moses, so Christ confirms that doctrine from the law and from the words of Moses.

[12] Ver. 35. Ἐπηρώτησεν εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν ὁ νομικὸς, A lawyer asked him, (see note on Mark xii. 28.) ποία ἐντολὴ μεγάλη ἐν τῷ νόμῳ; Which is the great commandment in the law?] This was a famous question among the Jews; some contending that the precept of sacrifices was the greatest, as is insinuated, Mark xii. 33. (see Pirke Eliezer, cap. 16. p. 33.) others were for the precept of the phylacteries, to whom Christ answers from what was written in the phylacteries;

[13] Ver. 37. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.] Note here,

First, That this is a precept given to the Jewish nation, and so it follows that it ought to bear that sense, which is the certain import of it in all those other places of the Old Testament, where it only doth occur; it being only found in the New Testament as a citation thence. It is therefore certain, that it doth not require us to love God in perfection of degrees, or in the elevated sense contended for by some, but only to love him with a sincere and a prevailing love. For,

First, God's servants entered into a covenant to serve the Lord after this manner; thus Asa gathered all Benjamin and Judah, and they entered into covenant to seek the Lord with all their heart, and with all their soul: (2 Chron. xv. 12.) and good Josiah, with all his people, made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments with all their heart, and with all their soul. (2 Kings xxiii. 3.) Now if in this covenant they promised to love God with every degree of every power; i. e. with the whole possibility of the soul, to make him not only the principal, but the only object of their love, they promised what they knew they never could, what to be sure they never did perform. And why then is it said, that the people stood to the covenant, and that God was found of them? But if they only promised love of sincerity, and love to God above all other things, and that they would adhere to him and his service, then may this phrase import no more.

Secondly, This God required them to do, to render them the objects of his grace and favour, promising to have mercy on them in their captivity on this condition: If from thence (saith Moses) thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him; if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. (Deut. iv. 29.) And again, If thou shalt return to the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion on thee, and will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed; and thou shalt possess it, and he will do thee good. (Deut. xxx. 2, 3.) And upon this condition only doth Solomon desire this mercy, saying, If they turn to thee with all their heart, and all their soul, in the land of their enemies, then hear thou their prayer and supplication. (1 Kings viii. 48.) Now is it reasonable to conceive that God required such an absolute perfection of degrees in their affection and obedience, to qualify them for his favour under their captivity? If so, they must for ever have continued captives. Or would he promise to restore them to their good land, and to do them good, upon a condition that would not permit them either to desire that pleasant land, or any other temporal enjoyments as their good? Sure the suspension of his favour upon this condition, is a clear evidence, that this phrase bears a milder sense.

Thirdly, God doth acknowledge that some of them did actually love him thus, that king David had kept his commandments, and followed him with all his heart, saving in the matter of Uriah; 1 Kings xiv. 8. And yet we find him guilty of mistrust of God's own promise, by saying, I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul, 1 Sam. xxvii. 1. of lying to Abimelech, xxi. 2. of a rash oath, in swearing to cut off the house of Nabal, xxv. 22. of injustice, in giving a deceitful Ziba half the goods of Mephibosheth, 2 Sam. xix. 29. and of pride, in numbering the people, xxiv. 1. God also testifies of good Josiah, that he turned to the Lord with all his soul, and all his heart, and all his might, 2 Kings xxiii. 24, 25. Since therefore God himself declares of men thus subject to imperfection, that they did thus love him, that love cannot require a perfection of degrees, but only a sincere and prevalent affection to him. This precept therefore must imply three things.

First, That we are to love God above all things appretiativè; i. e. so as to prize him in our judgments above all things, to esteem him more valuable in himself, more beneficial to us, than all things else we can enjoy; according to that saying of the Psalmist, Thy loving-kindness is much better than is life itself; (Psal. lxiii. 3.) to esteem him as the only felicity of our immortal souls; the chief and most desirable good; the only being in whom is perfect rest, entire complacency, and full satisfaction, to be found; and consequently to look on all things else as loss and dung, compared to him. And whilst we retain this value for him, we can never prize or be concerned for any thing so much as his favour, nor refuse to part with any thing which tendeth to deprive us of it; we can never value any thing so much as to permit it to rival him, who is exceedingly more precious in our eyes, and more desirable to our souls, and so we cannot overvalue any worldly thing. This therefore may be truly styled, the loving him with all our mind.

Secondly, That we are to love God above all things comparativè; i. e. with a superlative affection, so as to be ready always to prefer his favour before all other things. And this affection, this cleaving of our hearts unto him, must follow from the forementioned estimation of him: for if we fully are convinced that there is infinitely more excellency in God, more happiness to be expected from him, than all the honours, pleasures, profits, interests, relations, and satisfactions the world can tender, and so the highest reason that he should always be preferred before them, and that we should still cleave unto him in opposition to any other thing; it is certain he can have no rival in our hearts, nothing that stands in competition for our love, nothing we do not truly hate and despise comparatively to his favour; nothing that can tempt us to depart from him, or to do the thing which will hazard his favour, or provoke his displeasure; and may we not then be said to love him with an entire and undivided heart?

Thirdly, That we are to love God above all things intensivè; that is, our desires must be more ardently inclined towards his favour, and the enjoyment of him; we must long, thirst, and pant more after him; rejoice more in his favour than any other thing, be more concerned to retain it than to secure any worldly blessings, and be more satisfied in it than in marrow and fatness: and what more can the love of God with all our souls import? For seeing such a prevalence of our desires towards him, and delight in him, will not permit us to desire any thing in opposition to him, or against his will and pleasure; but will constrain us to quit all other interests, that we may happily retain our interest in him we thus desire, and delight in, above all other things; it follows, that by thus loving God with all our souls, our love unto or desire of the creature, can never be inordinate or irregular, and so can never be offensive to God; and then it cannot be forbidden by the command, to love the Lord our God with all our souls. In these things seems to be implied, or from them certainly will follow, that endeavour above all things to please him, that industrious care to serve and obey him, that vigorous employment of all other faculties in his service, which will demonstrate that we comparatively do not labour for the meat that perisheth, do not permit our secular employments, or our pursuit of any temporal enjoyments, to impair our diligence in the securing our eternal interests; and therefore that, in the true import of the phrase, we love God with all our might;

all other senses of it being inconsistent with that diligence in our calling, and that industry in our civil affairs, which God himself requires of us. And, Fourthly, Hence it follows, that we are to love all other things only in way of relation and subordination to God; for if we do co-ordinately love any other thing, we love it equally with God. And certainly if God requires us to love him with all our hearts and all our souls, our love to other things must virtually be comprised in our love to God, or be dependent on it, or subservient to it, or else we must deprive him of some portion of the heart he calls for. Moreover, God being our ultimate and chiefest good, all other things can only be good as they conduce to the enjoyment or service of him, and so are to be loved for him; that is, we must love them as they relate to him, as they enable us to serve him, as they are or may be instrumental to his glory, or to our enjoyment of him.

And of this exposition of these words we cannot reasonably doubt, if we consider that our Lord himself doth plainly seem to favour and approve of it, making that service, and so that love which he requires from us, to consist in that prevalence of affection which enables us, in any competition betwixt the love of the world, and the love of him, to cleave to God, and despise the world. This evidently is the import of these words, No man can serve two masters (when their service and commands do interfere), for he will either hate the one and love the other, or he will cleave to the one and despise the other; ye cannot (therefore) serve God and mammon. (Matt. vi. 24.)

Again, Christ places the due love of himself in the prevalence of our affections to him above other things, saying, He that loveth father or mother, son or daughter, ὑπὲρ ἐμὲ, above me, is not worthy of me. (Matt. x. 37.) Whence it must follow, by the rule of contraries, that he who loveth Christ more than father or mother, son or daughter, or any worldly interest whatever, must be worthy of him. From these two places it is therefore evident, that to love God so as to despise and to forsake all other things, to cleave unto him; to love God superlatively, so as to have our affections more powerfully carried out after him than any other thing that is most dear unto us, is, in the Scripture sense, to love God with a whole and entire heart. And surely, if I love God so as to love nothing which is contrary to him, or which he forbiddeth me to love, I can do nothing contrary to the love I owe to him. If I love him, so as to prize neither friendship, relations, fame, honour, pleasures, riches, life, or any temporal concernments, so as to offend him by preserving them, I do not inordinately love them; for obedience being the true test of love, where there is no neglect of obedience, there can be no want of love. Moreover, if I prize nothing in comparison with God in my mind, if I cleave to nothing in competition with him in my will, if I desire nothing in comparison with him in my affections, if I pursue nothing but with relation to his glory and in subordination to his sacred will, how can I be wanting in my duty to him? And if I be not wanting in my duty to him, how can I sin against him?

[14] Ver. 39. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.] Here note, (1.) that by our neighbour here, we are to understand every other person who is capable of kindness from us, and stands in need of help. So St. Paul expounds it, Rom. xiii. 8. Owe no man any thing, but to love one another, for ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἕτερον, &c. he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the law, which saith, Thou shalt love τὸν πλησίον, thy neighbour as thyself. This will be evident,

First, From our Lord's answer to this inquiry, Who is my neighbour? for such a case did he propound in demonstration of this point, as did extort from a great rabbi this frank confession, that even a Samaritan discharging a great office of humanity towards a Jew, acted the part of a true neighbour to him, and consequently that such humanity and mercy was also due from any Jew to a Samaritan. Now Scripture and the Jewish records do inform us, that there was the greatest strangeness and averseness betwixt the Jew and the Samaritan, they would have no converse together, they would receive no kindness one from another; witness the question which the woman of Samaria puts to Christ, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, who am a woman of Samaria, for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans? (John iv. 19.) Hence saith the son of Sirach, Two nations doth my soul hate, the Samaritans and the Philistines. (Ecclus. l. 26.) And hence that proverb of the Jews, that to eat flesh with a Samaritan, is as bad as to eat swine's flesh. Now hence it clearly follows, that Christ, by shewing that the Jews and the Samaritans were neighbours, must teach us that no difference of nation or religion, no alienation of affections, can exempt us from owning any person as our neighbour; and that by saying, Go thou and do likewise, our Lord obligeth us to love them as we love ourselves, and to be helpful to them in their need, according to our power.

Secondly, This is apparent from all those evangelical commands which do extend this duty to all men, and thereby shew that all men are to be beloved as neighbours; such are these exhortations, As you have opportunity, do good to all men; (Gal. vi. 10.) see that none render evil for evil unto any man, but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves and to all men. (1 Thess. v. 15.) To this intent are those directions, to follow peace with all men, to be patient and gentle towards all men: such, lastly, is that fervent supplication of St. Paul to his Thessalonians, the Lord make you to increase in love towards one another, and towards all men: all which expressions make it evident, that the affection of the Christian must extend to all men, and that his neighbourhood is universal and unlimited.

Thirdly, This also will be evident from the example we are called to imitate in this affection, viz. the love and mercy of our God and Saviour; for we are to be followers of God as dear children, and walk in love, and to be perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect. Now God is good to all, and his mercies are over all his works; he is the Saviour of all men, this kindness he is willing to vouchsafe, this saving health he freely tenders, and joyfully imparts to the greatest of repenting prodigals; he is kind to the unthankful and the wicked, and maketh his sun to rise upon the just and the unjust; and in this he expecteth to be imitated by us, if ever we desire to be deemed his children, or to enjoy the blessings he hath prepared for them alone: thus our great Teacher doth instruct us, I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, that you may be children of your Father which is in heaven. Moreover, the kindness of our Lord to all his brethren, partakers of the same nature with him, disposed him to taste death for every man, and purchase their redemption with his precious blood; for he gave himself a ransom for all. Since therefore we are called to imitate the love and kindness of our God and Saviour, our duty must be answerable to the Divine grace, our charity must follow the example of our blessed Lord; and therefore every man must be our brother, not only as he is derived from the same common stock by nature, but as by grace we are partakers of the same universal and redeeming love. And,

Fourthly, If Christianity obligeth us to bear a brotherly affection towards the worst of enemies, to treat them with the greatest love and kindness, if without this affection to them we vainly do pretend to act as Christians, then must all men become the objects of the Christian's love. For as for friends, even nature and gratitude oblige us to bear affection to them, and if we do no more, our Lord informs us, that we do nothing which can entitle us to a reward from him, or shew we are advanced above the rank of publicans and sinners; For if you only love them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same? And if you only do good to them who do good to you, what thanks have you, for sinners also do the same? (Matt. v. 46. Luke vi. 33.) If then the worst, the most despiteful, and disobliging of our enemies must, by the Christian, be thus loved, and therefore owned as his neighbour, what man can be excluded from that appellation?

To love this neighbour as ourselves, (1.) it is not necessary that we should love him from the same inward principles and dispositions which excite our affection to ourselves; for we by nature are so framed, that we are forcibly engaged to avoid that which is evil and afflicting to us, from that quick sense of pain and trouble it createth to us, and to pursue that which doth gratefully affect us, from the experience of that inward pleasure, joy, and satisfaction which we reap from the enjoyment of it; but we find no proportionable inward sense of pain from that which is afflictive to our brother, nor yet of pleasure from what is advantageous and grateful to him; and therefore cannot from the same inward principles be moved so strongly to prevent the pain, want, infamy, he may labour under, or to procure his pleasure and advantage: and therefore the Divine wisdom saw it meet to supply this defect, by deterring us from the neglect of our regard towards our brother in his misery, by threatening the severest punishments to this want of mercy; and therefore, by the consideration of the greatest evils which might befal ourselves for that neglect, and to engage us to all the acts of kindness, charity, and mercy to our brother in his misery, by the promise of the most excellent rewards, or of the choicest blessings, and so to move us to these duties from the like principles of self-love.

Secondly, This rule doth not engage us upon pain of God's displeasure to an absolute equality in our affection to our brother and ourselves, but only to make that affection which we bear to ourselves the rule, and the direction, for the expression of our love unto our brother; it saith, sicut teipsum, non quantum teipsum; it enjoins us to love our brother in all the instances in which we do express our love unto ourselves, but not in equal measure: for certainly my love unto myself must have priority unto the love I bear unto my brother in all equal circumstances. For instance, if I see my brother in danger of his life, I am not bound to put my own in equal danger to preserve him, but only to do all I can, without incurring the like danger, to prevent his death. If I perceive he is in want, the law of charity will not oblige me to put myself in equal want, but only to impart to him what I do not want: it doth not bind me to quench his thirst, or to allay his hunger, with the meat or drink I want as much as he, but only with those viands I can minister without like sense of want. If he be in the pest-house, or labours under an infectious disease, I am not bound to venture the procuring the same fatal malady, to comfort or relieve him under it, but only to afford him what comfort and relief I can, without endangering myself. The reason is apparent from this very rule, because we cannot thus affect ourselves, and therefore cannot be obliged thus to love our brother; that is, no man can put his life in danger to prevent the danger of his life; no man can supply his own wants by parting with that he equally wants; and therefore no man can be obliged by this rule to this deportment towards others, nor can we rationally desire that others should do so for us, and therefore we cannot be obliged to do so for them. But then we absolutely are obliged by it,

First, To the greatest freedom from all hatred, ill-will, or malice to our brother, all alienation of mind, or averseness from doing offices of kindness to him; for no man hateth his own self; or is averse from doing kindness to himself. (Eph. v. 29.)

Secondly, To be careful that we never do him any injury, οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἑαυτῷ κακὰ βουλήσεται, for no man wisheth evil to himself, and love worketh not evil to our neighbour. (Rom. xiii. 10.)

Thirdly, That we still retain a kind affection to him, and a readiness to do him good; for we have always this goodwill to our ownselves; and this is necessary, both that our charity may be acceptable to God, and that we may both seriously desire, and, as we have opportunity, promote, his good. And therefore,

Fourthly, We are to be as helpful to him as our circumstances will permit, both in our words, our prayers, instructions, advice, admonishments, and consolations, and in our works, the labours of our hands, our bodies, and the expenses of our purse, that, by thus serving and bearing one another's burdens, we may fulfil the law of love. (Gal. v. 14.)

Fifthly, We are to sympathize with, and commiserate him in his afflictions, (1 Cor. xii. 26.) and do what in us lies to alleviate his burdens; (Gal. vi. 2.) and to rejoice with him in his prosperity: for we in our prosperity rejoice, in our adversity are sorry. This therefore is a rule we are not only taught of God, (1 Thess. iv. 9.) but we are taught it from our ownselves; this being the great advantage of this rule, that it sends us not to learn our duty from the great doctors of the world, but only to the law written on all our hearts, or to that celebrated rule of the philosophers, "nosce teipsum," know thyself, reflect upon the inward motions of thy heart, and observe thy demeanour to thyself; and this will faithfully admonish thee, and make thee skilful to discern what is the love and kindness which thou owest to others, and will enable thee to judge aright in all the instances of justice and humanity.

[15] Ver. 40. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.] This is a metaphor taken from the custom mentioned by Tertullian, of hanging up their laws in a public place, to be seen of all men; and it imports, that in them is compendiously contained all that the law and prophets do require in reference to our duty to God and man: for though there be some precepts of temperance which we owe to ourselves, yet are they such as we may be moved to perform from the true love of God and of our neighbour; for if we truly love God, we cannot be wanting in them, for the love of God will make us humble, contented with our portion; it will preserve us from all intemperance, impatience, and evil lustings; it will make us watchful over ourselves, to keep a good conscience, and solicitous for our eternal weal; and the love of our neighbour will free us from all angry passions, envy, malice, and other perturbations which arise against him. (See Examen Millii here.)

[16] Ver. 46. Καὶ οὐδεὶς ἐδύνατο αὐτῷ ἀποκριθῆναι λόγον· And no man could answer him a word.] Hence it is plain, that the artifices which the Jews now use to evade this place, by saying, these words belong to Abraham, or David, or, as Justin Martyr* testifies, to Ezekiel, had not then obtained: for, if it had not then been the received opinion that this Psalm belonged to the Messiah, Christ would not have alleged it to this end, much less would he have put the scribes and pharisees to silence by so doing. And whereas Woltzogenius here notes, that this place proves Christ is not God, because he is here distinguished from God, by sitting at his right hand: this we grant, according to that human nature, from which alone he is said to sit at the right hand of God; and though, as he replies, the human nature is no person, whereas it is the person of Christ which sits at the right hand of God; this is nothing to the purpose: for, though it be Christ personally taken, who sits at the right hand of God, yet he is not said to sit there according to his Divine, but human nature; thus is it, the Lord of glory who was crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 8. yet he was not crucified as the Lord of glory.

CHAP. XXIII.

1. THEN spake Jesus to the multitude and to his disciples,

2. Saying, [1] The scribes and the pharisees sit in Moses's seat (i. e. are the received interpreters of the law of Moses).

3. All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe (according to that law), that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not (themselves that which they teach to be the duty of others).

4. [2] For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but (are so forgetful of the mercy required by the law, that) they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers (i. e. they will do nothing to remove those burdens from them that are oppressed with them).

5. But (and) all their works they do to be seen of men, (i. e. for ostentation of piety; to which end) [3] they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, (as men highly concerned to remember the commandments of the Lord, writ upon these phylacteries, Numb. xv. 38, 39.)

6. And (they) love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,

7. And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

8. [4] But be not ye called Rabbi (guides, but only teachers and ministers of the word, which ye have learned from Christ): for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren (or equally his servants in this ministry).

9. And call no man your father upon the earth (i. e. be swayed by no man in matters of faith, as children are by the will of their fathers); for one is your Father, which is in heaven (to whose will and precepts alone you owe an absolute subjection).

10. Neither be ye called masters; for one is your Master, even Christ (from whom ye receive what you communicate to others, and so ye have no power over the faith of men, as masters have over their servants, but are only stewards and dispensers of the mysteries of Christ).

11. But he that is greatest among you, shall be your servant, (for the sake of Christ, 1 Cor. iii. 5. 2 Cor. iv. 5.)

12. And whosoever shall exalt himself (by acting not as a servant, but a lord and master) shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself (to the meanest office in this ministry) shall be exalted.

13. But woe to you, scribes and pharisees, (who are) hypocrites! for [5] ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men (by your example, doctrine, and authority): for ye neither go in (to it) yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering (into it) to go in.

14. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for [6] ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence (that ye may be more trusted by them, ye) make long prayers (as devout persons): therefore ye shall (for this hypocrisy) receive the greater damnation.

15. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, (who are) hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land (go to all the regions of your dispersions) to make one proselyte (to your religion); and when he is made (so), [7] ye make him twofold more the child of hell (more opposite to the gospel and the professors of it) than yourselves.

16. Woe to you, ye blind guides, which say, [8] Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing (obligatory); but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor (i. e. he is obliged to perform his oath)!

17. Ye fools, and blind! for (since ye swear by something sacred, let me ask), Whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold? (i. e. makes it more sacred than any common gold.)

18. And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, (you say) it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty (if he do not perform his oath).

19. Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifies the gift? (which is therefore sacred, because offered on it.)

20. Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things (all gifts laid) thereon, (and by him to whom they are offered.)

21. And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein.

22. And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

23. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have [9] omitted the more weighty matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done (because your own constitutions require them), and not to leave the other undone (which God especially requires).

24. Ye blind guides, which [10] strain at a gnat (i.e. who scruple things of the least moment), and swallow a camel (i. e. but venture freely on the grossest sins).

25. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye (act as men intent to) make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter (to appear clean in the eye of men), but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26. Thou blind pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter (the inward motions of thy heart), that the outside of them (i. e. thy actions) may be clean also.

27. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for [11] ye are like to whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness (and therefore have a white mark set upon them, that they may be avoided).

28. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous to men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

29. Woe to you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! [12] because you build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

30. And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in (shedding) the blood of the prophets.

31. Wherefore ye be witnesses to (against) yourselves, that ye are the children of them who killed the prophets.

32. Fill ye up then (Gr. and ye will fill up) the measure of your fathers (sins, and shew greater malice against the prophets now sent by God to you).

33. (For) ye (are) serpents, ye (are a) generation of vipers (i. e. more venomous against me and my disciples, than ever your forefathers were against the old prophets), how (then) can ye escape the damnation of hell?

34. [13] Wherefore, behold, I send to you prophets, and wise men, and scribes (i. e. true interpreters of the law and the prophets): and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city:

35. [14] That upon you (thus outdoing the malice of your forefathers against the prophets, sent to you by God) may come (the punishment of) all the righteous blood (of God's prophets) shed upon the earth, [15] from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew (i. e. stoned, 2 Chron. xxiv. 22.) between the temple and the altar.

36. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, [16] how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings (i. e. have treated you with the most tender affection), but ye would not (embrace my kind offers)!

38. Behold, (therefore now) your house is left unto you desolate.

39. [17] For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth (Gr. after a while), till (the time cometh, that) ye shall (would gladly) say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord (i. e. it would be joyful news to you indeed, to hear of a Messiah coming to deliver you from the impendent vengeance, and then you shall see him coming, not as a saviour, but a severe avenger).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIII.

[1] Ver. 2. ΕΠΙ᾽ τῆς Μωσέως καθέδρας ἐκάθισαν οἱ φαρισαῖοι, Ver. 3. πάντα οὖν ὅσα ἂν εἴπωσιν ὑμῖν τηρεῖν, τηρεῖτε καὶ ποιεῖτε. The scribes and pharisees sit in the seat of Moses; Ver. 3. And therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do.] i. e. Saith Theophylact, All that they require, ἐκ τῶν Μωσέως βίβλων ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ νόμου, from the books of Moses, or the law of God: which interpretation must be allowed of, (1.) because Christ elsewhere requires his disciples to beware of the leaven, that is, the doctrine, of the scribes and pharisees; (Matt. xvi. 6. 12.) and that because they taught for doctrines the commandments of men, and by their traditions made void the law of God, (Matt. xv. 6. 9.) and were blind leaders of the blind into the pit; (ver. 14.) bidding them to understand, that nothing from without a man defiled a man; than which nothing could be more contrary to their doctrines and traditions: and elsewhere, refuting their doctrine touching divorce, chap. xix. and touching oaths, ver. 16, &c. he therefore could not here say, without this restriction, that they should do and observe all their commands, without a contradiction to his own frequent doctrine. (2.) He speaks of those things which these doctors ought to have done, but did not, ver. 3. whereas they would have deserved no reprehension for not doing that which was not required of them by the law. Thus the word πάντα, all things, must be restrained, when the apostle commands servants to obey their masters, and children their parents, κατὰ πάντα, in all things; (Coloss. iii. 20. 22.) and wives to be subject to their husbands, ἐν παντὶ, in every thing. (Eph. v. 24.) Thus Isidore Pelusiota* teacheth us to interpret those words. Note also, that Christ speaks not here of the great Sanhedrin, or the chief priests; for when mention is made of them in the New Testament, this is still under the name of priests, elders, rulers, or princes of the people; of whom here is no mention, but only of the scribes and pharisees, who are said to sit in the seat of Moses, because they undertook to interpret the law of their great prophet Moses, either publicly to the people, or privately in the schools; and whilst they determined things doubtful and undetermined in the law, not contrary to the precepts of it, their decisions were to be observed for order's sake: Hence, of the tithing mint and cummin not mentioned in the law of Moses, but prescribed by them, Christ saith, ταῦτα ἔδει ποιῆσαι, these things ought to be done, (ver. 23.)

[2] Ver. 4. Δεσμεύουσι γὰρ φορτία βαρέα καὶ δυσβάστακτα, &c. For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, &c.] These heavy burdens, saith Theophylact, were παραδόσεις ἐπέκεινα τοῦ νόμου, their traditions added to the law, and called by their own writers, פרושים מכות, the strokes of the pharisees, as being such as made the service of God burdensome. But then, when I consider how punctual they pretended to be in the observance of them, what a reverence they had for them, even above the law of Moses, and how highly they were offended with Christ, and his apostles, for not walking according to them; I am apt, with Menochius and Maldonate, to interpret those words, they will not move them with one of their fingers, not of their neglect to observe them themselves, but of their tenacious exacting of them without mercy, even from those whom they saw grieved and oppressed with these burdens; and to refer those words, they say, and do not, to the things taught by them, according to the law, mercy, judgment, and the love of God. (See Examen Millii here.)

[3] Ver. 5. Πλατύνουσι δὲ τὰ φυλακτήρια αὐτῶν. They also do make broad their phylacteries.] What great holiness they placed in putting on the phylacteries, we learn from the Targum on Cant. viii. 3. which introduceth the Jews speaking thus, I am chosen above all people, because I bind my frontals to my head, and my left hand, and my parchment is fixed to the right side of my gate, or door, so that a third part of it comes up to my bed, that the evil spirits may not hurt me: and yet very learned men think, these phylacteries are not commanded, Exod. xiii. 9. 16. but that those words are only metaphorically to be understood, as a command to have God's laws perpetually before their eyes, and his deliverances always in remembrance; according to the like metaphor of Solomon, when he saith of the precepts of wisdom, Bind them about thy neck, and write them on the tables of thy heart: (Prov. iii. 3.) and that the like words, Deut. vi. 8, 9. are to be expounded by the foregoing words, ver. 6. The word which I command thee this day, shall be in thy heart; and, xi. 18. Ye shall put my words in your heart, and in your soul. For since these words, Deut. vi. refer to the whole law of Moses, it seems not reasonable to think, that God required them to write all the precepts of it upon their phylacteries, or the posts of their doors.

Ver. 6. They love the uppermost rooms in the synagogues.] There shewing their pride, saith Theophylact, where they ought to have taught others humility.

First, That Christ cannot reasonably be supposed to forbid either fathers to be so called by their children, this appellation being frequent in the sacred writers; or aged and spiritual persons to admit that title in the vulgar acceptation of it: for thus St. John styles the aged, fathers, 1 John ii. 13. and St. Paul styles himself a father to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. iv. 15. and to the Galatians, iv. 19. These titles therefore, which men inspired by the Holy Ghost did use, after these words were spoken by our Lord, cannot be reasonably thought to be the thing forbidden by Christ.

Secondly, Nor doth Christ here forbid these titles, only because they savoured of pride and affectation, but because they were a great intrenchment on God the Father and the Son, ascribing to those men, who had usurped these names, what properly belonged to their heavenly Father (so the reason here assigned shews, viz. Call no man your father upon earth, for one is your Father which is in heaven; i. e. to whom alone belongs that title); and attributing to earthly guides and masters, what was due only to Christ our teacher and spiritual guide; Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ: (ver. 8.) Neither be ye called masters (guides, or leaders), for one is ὑμῶν ὁ καθηγητὴς, your leader, even Christ, (ver. 10.) Note,

Thirdly, That the words, rabbi, father, guide, master, or teacher, were the titles which were then usually by the Jews conferred on their wise men, the fathers of tradition, or the men of the greatest understanding in the law of Moses; such persons they thought fit to salute not in a common form of words, but by these pompous titles. Thus of Jehoshaphat they tell us, That when he saw a disciple of the wise, he would rise from his throne, embrace him, kiss him, and say to him, Abba, abba, rabbi, rabbi, mori, mori; that is, my father, my rabbi, my guide, or teacher. These titles were esteemed so due to them, that they say, the Sanhedrin did twenty-four times excommunicate those who gave not the honour of a master to their rabbins. Now by the word rabbi, they understood such a teacher whom they stood bound to hearken to, depending on his words, and not disbelieving, swerving from, or doubting of the truth of what he taught. Hence doth Gamaliel advise the ignorant among the Jews, to get themselves rabbies, that they may no longer doubt of any thing: and R. Eliezer saith, That he who separates from the school of his rabbi, or teacheth any thing which he hath not heard from his master, provokes the Divine Majesty to depart from Israel. Maimonides saith, That men of the degree of rabbi, were also called abba, i. e. father; and they took to themselves this title as well as that of rabbi: now to these fathers, they ascribed the same high and incontestible authority. Hence Maimonides saith, That he that will be holy, must perform the words of the fathers; and they declare that the words of Cabala, or the traditions of their fathers, were equal to the words of the law, and more to be regarded than the words of the prophets; that a prophet was not to be believed, except he could shew a sign, or a miracle; but as for these elders, or fathers, they were to be believed without them: it being said of them, Deut. xvii. 11. According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do. The word mar, καθηγητὴς, which they used in Babylon, to signify one who in Judea was called rab, with them signifies a guide and leader in the way of happiness: and of this, saith St. Paul, they are confident, that they are guides to the blind, a light to them that sit in darkness, instructors of the simple, and masters of babes; (Rom. ii. 17—19.) and that so certainly, that their decisions were not to be doubted of, but were to be reputed of equal authority with the determinations of the prophets: For (saith Maimonides*) if a thousand prophets, who were equal to Elias and Elisha, bring one interpretation, and a thousand and one wise men produce one contrary to it, we must incline to the most, and be obliged rather to act according to the sentence of these wise men than that of the thousand prophets. In his explication of the thirteenth treatise of the Sanhedrin, he distributes men, who interpret the sayings of the wise men, into three ranks; (1.) those who say their words are to be interpreted according to the letter, as thinking,† "Sapientes in omnibus indubitatæ veritatis in dictis suis," &c. The wise men in all their sayings of undoubted truth, meant only what they perceive by their words. (2.) Those who elude the words of the wise, judging themselves more wise and perspicacious, and saying, ‡ that they were deceived: these he pronounces fools, and accursed, for saying these things against those great men, of whose wisdom they were well assured: the words of the scribes, according to their blasphemous sayings, being* more amiable than the words of the prophets, and more weighty; and, the words of the Cabala equal to the words of the law. And even Josephus† saith, That they who were of the sect of the pharisees, followed their guide, and thought it necessary to observe and contend for whatsoever he would command; the sadducees held it a virtue, to doubt of, or contend against, the teachers of the wisdom which their traditions contained; but they yielded such honour to their ancestors, that they durst not be so bold as to gainsay any thing that they had introduced as fit to be observed; where we have the διδάσκαλοι in express words, καθηγηταὶ in the word ἡγεμόνες, guides, and fathers in the τῇ ἡλικίᾳ προήκοντες, or the ancients; and all of them represented as persons, of whose doctrines none ought to doubt, and whose sayings no man should gainsay. And again, the pharisees delivered νόμιμα πολλὰ, many things to be received as laws, which were not in the law of Moses; from which, though the sadducees dissented, yet when they came to the magistrates, they were forced to subscribe to them,‡ διὰ τὸ μὴ ἄλλως ἐνεκτοὺς γένεσθαι τοῖς πλήθεσιν, since otherwise they would not be endured by the multitude; among whom, so great was their authority, that though they spake against the king, or the high-priest,§ εὐθὺς πιστεύεσθαι, they were presently believed. And even the Scripture informs us, that they taught for doctrines, or for things necessary to be observed, the commandments of men, (Matt. xv. 9.) and pronounced them accursed who held contrary to their sentiments. (John vii. 47—49.) The import therefore of these words seems to be this:

First, That no man was to be called father upon earth, so as that we should yield an absolute subjection to his will and pleasure, or be absolutely swayed and governed by it.

Secondly, That we should call no man guide, or master upon earth, no fathers, no church, no councils, so as absolutely to submit ourselves in the concernment of our eternal interests, to the conduct of their judgments, or give them dominion over our faith and conscience; Christ being the sole guide and teacher of his church, commissionated by his Father to reveal his will, and teach us what is needful to be known, believed, or done, in order to salvation; and even his apostles being only to be looked upon as the ministers and ambassadors of Christ, and only to be credited as, by their gifts, and by the miraculous powers derived from him, they taught men those things he had commanded, and by his Spirit had revealed to them.

[5] Ver. 13. Κλείετε τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men.] The business of a key being to open and give entrance into a place, they who obstructed this entrance are here said to shut the kingdom of heaven against men: and this the scribes and pharisees did, (1.) by their example; for, pretending to be guides to others, they themselves refused to go into it, and so obstructed the entrance of others, by saying, Have any of the scribes or pharisees believed on him? (John vii. 48.) they made good that of Christ, you enter not in yourselves. (2.) By their doctrine; they cavilling at all that he said, and endeavouring to render the truth of it suspected, rejecting him as not of God, because he kept not the sabbath, (John ix. 16.) and accusing him of blasphemy, and casting out of devils by Beelzebub, (Matt. xii. 24.) and by their vain traditions, which he deservedly rejected, putting a bar to the spiritual doctrine of his kingdom; thus did they shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. (3.) By their authority; excommunicating and maliciously persecuting them who owned his doctrine, and decreeing that they should be cast out of the synagogue, (John ix. 22.) and professing to have an authority to pass judgment on true and false prophets.

Ver. 14. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι ὑποκριταὶ.] These words, saith Dr. Mills, Origen and Eusebius do not own, they seem to be put in here from St. Mark and Luke. (Prol. p. 42. col. 2.) If we may judge of Eusebius, from whom no place is cited, by what is said of Origen, the doctor must mistake in both; for Origen expressly cites these words, Hom. 15. in Jer. p. 145. and citing ver. 15. in Matt. p. 326. he styles the words, The second woe denounced in the gospel of St. Matthew against the scribes and pharisees. They are also owned by Chrysostom, Theophylact, and by all the versions.

[6] Κατεσθίετε οἰκίας τῶν χηρῶν, καὶ προφάσει μακρὰ προσευχόμενοι, Ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers.] This sect (saith Josephus*) pretended to a more exact knowledge of the law, οὗ χάριν ὡς τὸ θεῖον προσποιουμένων ὑπῆκτο ἡ γυναικωνῖτις, on which account the women were subject to them, as pretending to be dear to God. And when Alexandra† obtained the government, they insinuated themselves into her favour, as being the exactest sect of the Jews, and the exactest interpreters of the law, and, abusing her simplicity, did, as they listed, remove and dispose, bind and loose, and even cut off men. They were in such vogue for their long prayers, which they continued sometimes three hours, that perhaps they sold them, as do the Roman priests their masses, or pretended others should be more acceptable to God for them; and so might spoil devout widows by the gifts or salaries they expected from them. Now this being only a hypocritical pretence of piety, must be hateful to God, and so deserve a greater condemnation. (See Examen Millii here.)

[7] Ver. 15. Ποιεῖτε αὐτὸν υἱὸν γεέννης διπλότερον ὑμῶν, You compass sea and land to make one proselyte,—and ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.] It was the complaint of the Jewish nation, that the proselytes were scabs of the church, and hindered the coming of the Messiah, as being ignorant of the law, and bringing in revenge. Justin Martyr‡ informs us of them, that these proselytes did not only disbelieve Christ's doctrine, ἀλλὰ διπλότερον ὑμῶν βλασφημοῦσιν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, but were twice more blasphemous against him than the Jews themselves, endeavouring to torment, and cut them (i. e. the Christians) off wheresoever they could, they being in this the instruments of the scribes and pharisees.

you which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple it is nothing, &c.] Of this see the notes on v. 36. and observe, (1.) that τὸ ὀφείλειν signifies to be obliged to perform his oath, so that they thought that other oaths might be violated without sin. (2.) That they so valued swearing by the gifts of the altar, ver. 18. because they brought in gain to them. (3.) Observe, that those words, He that sweareth by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things upon it, are to be thus understood,—that he sweareth by him whose altar it is, for the accessory follows the principal; and an oath must be supposed to be by something which can testify to the truth, and punish the falsehood of it; and so he that thus swears, must in all reason be supposed to swear by that God also, to whom the altar doth belong.

[9] Ver. 23. Καὶ ἀφήκατε τὰ βαρύτερα τοῦ νόμου, &c. And omit the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith.] This is indeed the bane of all religion and true piety, to prefer rituals and positive institutions before the precepts of natural religion, which are always good and necessary upon their own account, and not only because commanded; and human institutions before Divine; and this is a certain sign of gross hypocrisy. Faith in, or the love of, God, (as it is, Luke xi. 42.) is the foundation of all piety; mercy, of all that charity we shew to our brother; and judgment, of all righteous dealing. Now, that the pharisees wanted this faith and love to God, was visible from their hypocrisy; that they were full of rapine and injustice we learn from ver. 25. that they were a crafty sort of men, prone to envy and hatred, from Josephus, Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 3.

[10] Ver. 24. Οἱ διϋλίζοντες τὸν κώνωπα, τὴν δὲ κάμηλον καταπίνοντες, Who strain at a gnat, but swallow a camel.] Vain is here the suspicion of Cajetan, that camel cannot be the true reading, because no man can swallow it; he might as well have suspected the beam mentioned chap. vii. because no man's eye can contain it. This the rulers and the pharisees did in not admitting the thirty pieces into the treasury, because it was the price of blood; and yet with those very pieces hiring Judas to procure the shedding that blood; and by scrupling to enter the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, but not scrupling to shed the blood of the innocent. (John xviii. 28.)

[11] Ver. 27. Παρομοιάζετε τάφοις κεκονιαμένοις, Ye are like to whited sepulchres.] Luke xi. 44. ὡς τὰ μνημεῖα τὰ ἄδηλα, as graves that appear not. For explication and reconciliation of the words of the evangelists, note, (1.) that they who touched any part of a sepulchre, were by the law of Moses polluted by it, Numb. xix. 16. (2.) That therefore, to avoid this pollution, the Jews were wont to put some sign or mark upon it, by which it might be discerned to be a sepulchre, and so might be avoided; for so their canon runs, that if any man finds a sepulchre, he is bound to put a mark upon it, that it be not an offence to others, since otherwise they might be in perpetual danger of contracting uncleanness: this mark they made with lime macerated with water, which made them appear white; and when these marks were worn out, and so the sepulchres become ἄδηλα, indiscernible, the grass being grown over them, and the herbs that grew upon them making them ὡραῖα, beautiful, as to outward appearance, and like to other earth, so that men were in danger of being polluted by them, they were again marked and made white with lime: they are therefore said to appear beautiful to men, by St. Matthew, for the same reason that they are styled ἄδηλα, indiscernible, by St. Luke, because the white mark was worn out, or so covered over with grass and herbs, that it could not be discerned. Such, saith Christ, are ye pharisees, appearing outwardly specious and fair to men, whilst yet your inward parts are full of hypocrisy and iniquity. Vain then is the imaginary pretence of any contradiction in what Dr. Hammond here offers from Dr. Pocock, the whited sepulchres being sepulchres which at first had received this white mark, or cippus; but yet the sight of it was lost by the herbs growing up high enough to cover it, or by the rain washing it away.

[12] Ver. 29, 30. Ὅτι οἰκοδομεῖτε τοὺς τάφους τῶν προφητῶν, καὶ κοσμεῖτε τὰ μνημεῖα τῶν δικαίων, Woe unto you—for ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous.] Wherefore ye be witnesses to yourselves (i. e. you yourselves witness), that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets; (ver. 31, 32.) fill ye up then, καὶ πληρώσατε, and ye will fill up, the measure of your fathers' cruelties in this kind: being now fitly compared to serpents and vipers for the venomous hatred you bear to me, the Prophet promised by Moses, and those sent among you in my name, and will thereby shew you are their children, as well by disposition as by natural descent. The words in St. Luke, xi. 47, 48. run thus: Woe to you, for ye build up the sepulchres of the prophets, whom (you acknowledge that) your fathers killed ἄρα μαρτυρεῖτε· you therefore by this testify that you are by nature the children of those fathers, for they (i. e. their fathers) killed them, and you (the children of them) build their sepulchres (καὶ συνευδοκεῖτε τοῖς ἔργοις τῶν πατέρων ὑμῶν), and by your hatred against me and mine, you farther shew your likeness to them in dispositions also: so that I foresee, that of those wise men which I send to you, some of them you will persecute, and some of them you will kill and crucify, and so will so far fill up the measure of their sins, that upon you may justly fall the punishment of all the blood of the prophets and righteous men shed by your fathers, and by you their children in iniquity. All that can be objected against this paraphrase, which makes the words of Luke so plain, and so exactly to agree with the words here, is, that it puts these words, καὶ συνευδοκεῖτε τοῖς ἔργοις τῶν πατέρων ὑμῶν, and ye allow of the works of your fathers, in a parenthesis; of which we have examples in the New Testament sufficient to justify the doing this; so Mark xii. 12. They sought to lay hold upon him (ἔγνωσαν γὰρ ὅτι πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὴν παραβολὴν εἶπε, for they knew he spake this parable against them), but they feared the people: xvi. 3, 4. They said, Who shall roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? (καὶ ἀναβλέψασαι θεωροῦσιν ὅτι ἀποκεκύλισται ὁ λίθος, and looking up, they saw it was rolled away;) for it was very great. (See Mark xiv. 22. 24. Luke v. 15, 16. 27. Rom. iii. 5. 8. Rev. xx. 12, 13. see the like in the Old Testament, Gen. xiii. 10. Exod. xii. 15. Cant. i. 5.)

[13] Ver. 34. Wherefore I send among you prophets and wise men: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them ye shall scourge, &c.] This they did, stoning Stephen, Acts vii. 59. cutting off James with the sword, Acts xii. 2. scourging Peter and the apostles, Acts v. and persecuting Saul and Barnabas from city to city. (See note on Luke xi. 49.)

[14] Ver. 35. Ὅπως ἔλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πᾶν αἷμα δίκαιον, ἐκχυνόμενον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, That upon you may come (the national punishment of) all the blood shed in the land.] i. e. That it may come upon you, taking pleasure in the works of your fathers, and by the said bloody actions filling up the measure of their sins by killing your Messiah, the chiefest of all prophets; and the wise men he sent last of all to offer terms of pardon and salvation to you: and this rendered their punishment not only equitable, but almost necessary; for it being the observation of their own wise men, from Gen. xv. 16. That God taketh not vengeance of a nation till they have filled up the measure of their sins; the Jews of that generation doing this to the utmost, and by their εὐδοκία, i. e. the pleasure which they took in doing not only the like, but even more bloody actions, they becoming ex post facto partakers with their forefathers in their sins; and being not deterred from the like actions by all the punishments which they had suffered by them in the captivity of their whole nation, they made it both equitable and necessary this punishment should fall upon that generation.

[15] Ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ δικαίου Ἄβελ ἕως τοῦ αἵματος Ζαχαρίου υἱοῦ Βαραχίου· From the blood of righteous Abel (the first prophet and preacher of righteousness, Heb. xi. 4. 2 Pet. ii. 5.) to the blood of Zacharias the son of Barachias.] Here two things need to be explained; viz. who was the son of Barachias, and why he is mentioned rather than any of those righteous persons who were afterward destroyed by the Jews. To the first question, I answer, (1.) that he could not be Zacharias, υἱὸς Βαράχου, the son of Baruch, mentioned by Josephus,* as μισοπόνηρος, a hater of wicked things and persons, and therefore slain by the zealots ἐν μέσῳ τῷ ἱερῷ, in the middle of the temple. For (1.) the name seems not the same; for as Baruch in Jeremiah and the Apocrypha, is always called by the Septuagint, Βαρούχ, so ברכיה is still rendered by them Βαραχίας, Isa. viii. 2. Zech. i. 1. 7.; and Neh. iii. we find Βαραχίας, ver. 4. and Βαρούχ, ver. 20. which shews they were not the same names. (2.) The blood of Βαραχίας was the blood of a prophet, (Luke xi. 50, 51.) whereas the Baruch mentioned by Josephus was no prophet, nor doth it appear that he was a righteous person, he being an unbeliever, and one of those who rebelled against Cæsar; and (3.) Christ speaks here of the prophets whom ἐφόνευσαν, they had slain, not of one who was only to be slain a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, for then none of the people could have understood his meaning. Nor (2.) could he be Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist; for as he was not owned by the Jews to be a prophet, nor was he sent by God unto the Jews under that character; so Origen† confesseth that it cannot be proved from Scripture either that he was the son of Barachias, or that he was slain between the temple and the altar. And indeed that he was the son of Barachias is only said by Nicephorus out of Hippolytus; that he was slain in the temple is a tradition more current among the ancients,‡ but yet St. Jerome saith, it is only taken, "ex quibusdam apocryphorum somnis," from some dreams of apocryphal writers. And indeed the tradition is false in the foundation, that he was slain for placing the Virgin Mary in that apartment of the temple, which was proper to the virgins; whereas, though there was the court of women, yet there was no peculiar apartment for the virgins. Nor (3.) could it be Zacharias, one of the minor prophets, he living when the temple was in its ruins, and neither temple nor altar was set up again; nor do any of the Jewish historians say that he was slain at all, much less that he was slain between the temple and the altar. It remains therefore, (4.) that we here understand that Zecharias of whom we read, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20. that he said to the people, Why transgress ye the commandments of God, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath forsaken you; and that the people stoned him in the court of the house of the Lord; and ver. 22. that dying he said, The Lord look upon it, and require it. But against this it is objected, Obj. 1. That he was Zechariah son of Jehoiada, ver. 20. this here was the son of Barachiah.

Ans. St. Jerome testifies that the gospel of the Nazarenes read the son of Jehoiada; and the word Barachiah signifying praise God, as Jehoiada doth, why might not that be translated in Greek υἱὸς Βαραχίου, which was spoken in Syriac, the son of Jehoiada? Moreover, it is common among the Jews to change proper names, especially when they have any thing of the Shem Hamporash, or Jehovah, in them, into words of like signification; so for Judas some use Thaddeus, of the same import, and from the same root תרוה, and Jehoiakim is the name given by the king of Egypt to Eliakim, 2 Kings xxiii. 34. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. that is, he turned El into Jah; and why then may not here Jehoiada be turned into Barachiah?

Obj. 2. But since Christ begins with Abel, the first prophet and righteous person which was slain, why should he end with one slain before the destruction of the temple, and not with one near the time when he spake?

Ans. That Christ, speaking here of prophets slain by the Jews, doth come to the lowest instance, no other prophet being slain after by them; for if the tradition touching Esaias be true, he was slain, not by consent of the Jews, as was the son of Jehoiada, but only by the cruelty of Manasses. 2. There could be no fitter instance than this was for our Saviour's purpose, whether we consider the occasion of this prophet's death, the manner of it, or the judgments which ensued upon them for it. For,

First, He died, as Christ and his apostles were to do, for reproving the Jews for their transgression and revolt from God, and was the son of one who had shewed great kindness to them.

Secondly, He dying said, The Lord look upon it, and require it; foretelling that God would, or desiring that he would, require his blood at their hands; which prayer God answered so fully, that in a year all the princes of Judah and Jerusalem were destroyed by the Syrians, and the spoil carried to Damascus: (2 Chron. xxiv. 23.) and Joash, who commanded this murder, was slain by a conspiracy of his own servants, (ver. 25.) And from this very time the state of Judah and Jerusalem grew worse and worse, till at last the city was broken up, the temple burned, and the people captivated by Nabuzar-adan; "who (say the Jews) finding the blood of this prophet bubbling up in the temple, inquired whose blood it was; and when the Jews answered, it was the blood of a prophet slain by them, who had foretold all they had suffered by Nabuzar-adan, he slew ninety-four thousand of the rabbins, priests, and members of the Sanhedrin to appease it. Hence the Jews speak of it as of blood provoking God to anger, he will call to remembrance their iniquity, that they may be taken." This, saith Midrash Coheleth, is the blood of Zachariah. And when Jeremiah introduceth the Jews speaking thus, (Lam. ii. 20.) Behold, O Lord, and consider, shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord? the Targum introduces the house of judgment, answering, Was it fit for you, even in the day of propitiation, to kill a priest and a prophet, as you did Zachariah the son of Iddo in the house of the sanctuary of the Lord, because he would have withdrawn you from your evil ways?

[16] Ver. 37, 38. Ποσάκις ἠθέλησα, *How oft would I have gathered your children,—*καὶ οὐκ ἠθελήσατε, and ye would not.] Here note, that by Jerusalem we are to understand not only the inhabitants of the city, but of all Judea, as appears, (1.) because this is the import of the word elsewhere, when neither the city is mentioned, nor is it taken metaphorically for the heavenly Jerusalem; as 2 Kings xix. 21. 2 Chron. xxviii. 10. Isa. xxxvii. 22. Lam. ii. 14, 15. Ezek. ix. 9. Joel iii. 6. Luke ii. 28. xxiii. 28. (2.) From the punishment denounced upon her, since that belongs to all whom Christ would have gathered, (ver. 37.) and to whom he wished that they had known in their day the things belonging to their peace. Whence it follows,

First, That Christ did very seriously desire the conversion of those Jews who continued in their impenitence and unbelief, as here he shews by the similitude of the affection of a hen to her chickens; and Luke xix. 41—43. by his weeping over them.

Secondly, That they whom he so seriously desired to convert, would not be converted when they might have been so: for therefore were they not converted; because they would not be gathered.

Ver. 39. I say unto you, that οὐ μή με ἴδητε ἀπ' ἄρτι, ἕως ἂν εἴπητε, εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, ye shall not see me from henceforth (Gr. after a while), till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.] These words by the connexion of them with the former thus, Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, λέγω γὰρ, for I say, &c. seem manifestly to relate to the time of the destruction of the Jews, and to bear this sense; You, who have now with so much indignation heard the children and people saluting me thus, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, after a while shall lie under so great calamities for the punishment of your infidelity, that you would be glad of a deliverer to whom you might say these words. This may be also gathered from the words ἀπ' ἄρτι, after a while; for after Christ's ascension they saw him not till he came to the destruction of Jerusalem, which in the following chapter is so often styled, the time of the coming of the Son of man; the time when ἀπ ἄρτι, after a while, they should see the Son of man coming in the clouds. (Matt. xxvi. 64.) And Josephus informs us, that when the Jews were nigh to destruction, they earnestly expected their Messiah, or one coming in the name of the Lord to deliver them: and readily followed those false prophets and deceivers,* who promised them deliverance; and bid them προσμένειν τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ βοήθειαν, expect help from God. If this exposition be not allowed, I would willingly refer this to the time mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 26. When the Deliverer shall come out of Sion, and turn away iniquity from Jacob, and so all Israel shall be saved, by their conversion to the Lord, and saying, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; till which time their house shall be left to them desolate. (Luke xxi. 24.) And thus it is a commination, that after a while the kingdom of God should be taken from the Jews of that age, and this calamity should continue long on their posterity.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. AND Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple.

2. And Jesus said to them, See ye not all these things? [1] verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3. And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came to him privately, saying, [2] Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming (to do these things), and of the end of the world? (or, τοῦ αἰῶνος, of this age.)

4. And Jesus answered and said to them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

5. [3] For (before this happeneth) many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

6. And (when) ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, see that ye be not troubled: for all these things (or this) must come to pass, but the end (of the Jewish age and polity) is not yet.

7. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: [4] and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8. All these are the beginning of (their pangs of) sorrows.

9. [5] Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill (some of) you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.

10. And then shall many be offended (i. e. fall off from the gospel), and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11. And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many.

12. And because iniquity (and persecution) shall abound, the love of many (to me and my doctrine) shall wax cold.

13. But he that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved (i. e. preserved from this destruction).

14. [6] And this gospel of the kingdom (of God) shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations (that I am the Christ); and then shall the end come (of that church and polity).

15. [7] When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, (i. e. the Roman army, Luke xxi. 20.) spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand) (what the prophet there intends),

16. [8] Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains (take this opportunity to flee thence with the greatest expedition):

17. Let him which sitteth on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house:

18. Neither let him who is in the field return back to take (up) his clothes.

19. And woe to them who are with child, and to them that give suck in those days (and so are not in condition to fly swiftly and speedily out of this danger)!

20. [9] But (and) pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the sabbath-day (not in winter, when long and hasty journeys are most difficult; not on the sabbath-day, when your flight will render you obnoxious to the displeasure of the Jews):

21. [10] For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be (afterward, and so your flight will be more hazardous).

22. [11] And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved (or escape): but for the elect's (i. e. the Christians') sake those days shall be shortened. (That this is the true import of the elect, see note on Mark xiii. 10.)

23. Then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ, or there (he is); believe him not.

24. For there shall (then) arise [12] false Christs and false prophets, and (they) shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect (i. e. do all that possibly they can to deceive even Christians by them).

25. Behold, I have told you before (ver. 5. 12. of these things).

26. Wherefore, [13] if they shall say to you, Behold, he (i. e. Christ) is in the desert; go not forth (to seek him there: or if they shall say), Behold, he is in the secret chambers (of the temple); believe it not.

27. For (the coming of the Son of man will not be secret, or obscure, but) [14] as the lightning (which) cometh out of the east, and shineth even to the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

28. For wheresoever the carcass is (i. e. the Jews are), there will the eagles (the Roman armies, whose ensign is the eagle) be gathered together.

29. (And) [15] immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken (i. e. all the government both in church and state shall be overthrown, as it was by the zealots):

30. And then shall appear the [16] sign of the Son of man (who is) in heaven (i. e. the Roman army coming to the destruction of the city, the temple, and people of Jerusalem): and then shall all the tribes of the earth (or land) mourn, and (then) shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

31. And [17] he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet (i. e. his messengers with the trumpet of the gospel), and they shall gather together his elect (among the gentiles) from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. (Luke xiii. 28, 29.)

32. Now learn a parable of (from) the fig-tree: (For) when her branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh.

33. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things (come to pass), know [18] that it (i. e. the ruin foretold) is nigh, even at the doors.

34. [19] Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be (assuredly) fulfilled: (for)

35. Heaven and earth shall pass away (at the end of the world you inquire after), but my word shall not pass away (unperformed).

36. But [20] of that day and hour (when they are thus to pass away, you are not to inquire; for of that) knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, (nor the Son, Mark xiii. 32.) but my Father only.

37. But (know in general), as (in) the days of Noe (the flood of which he prophesied was unexpected), so shall also the coming of the Son of man be (at both these times).

38. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark,

39. And knew not till the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man (then) be.

40. [21] Then (shall the providence of God be so remarkable in preservation of his faithful people, that) two (shall) be in the field; the one shall be taken (by the Roman army), and the other left.

41. Two (women shall be) grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left, (and the like distinction will the angels make at the great day of judgment, xxv. 32.)

42. Watch therefore: for ye know not (at) what hour your Lord doth come.

43. But know this (this ye know), that if the good man of the house had known in what watch (of the night) the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

44. Therefore be ye also [21] ready: for in such an hour as ye think not (of) the Son of man cometh.

45. Who then is [23] a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made (a) ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season (instruction suitable to their exigencies)?

46. Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing (i. e. employed in preserving them from apostacy in this hour of temptation).

47. Verily I say to you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods (i. e. shall amply reward his fidelity).

48. But if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming (and so begin to doubt the truth of it);

49. And (by reason of this backsliding heart) shall begin to smite his fellow-servants (i. e. Christians), and to eat and drink with the drunken; (i. e. indulge himself in sensual pleasures on this account, 1 Cor. xv. 32.)

50. The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of,

51. And (for his perfidiousness) shall [24] cut him asunder, and appoint (him) his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIV.

[1] Ver. 2. VERILY I say unto you, οὐ μὴ ἀφεθῇ ὧδε λίθος ἐπὶ λίθον, ὃς οὐ μὴ καταλυθήσεται, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, which shall not be thrown down.] The exact completion of the things foretold in this chapter touching the destruction of the temple, city, and people of Jerusalem, being an eminent confirmation of the truth of Christ's prophetic office, and of the Christian faith, I shall, as they occur, take notice of them. And (1.) to complete this prediction, Josephus* doth inform us, that Titus commanded the soldiers, τήν τε πόλιν ἅπασαν καὶ τὸν νεὼν κατασκάπτειν, to dig up the foundations both of the temple and city. Eleazar, in Josephus,† speaking of this house of God, saith, πρόῤῥιζος ἐκ βάθρων ἀνήρπασται, it has been rooted up from the very foundations. The Jewish Talmud‡ and Maimonides add, that Turnus (i. e. Terentius) Rufus, captain of the army of Titus, did with a ploughshare tear up the foundations of the temple, and thereby signally fulfil those words, Micah iii. 12. Therefore shall Zion for your sakes be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountains of the Lord as the high places of the forest. And, saith Josephus,§ We may well admire the exactness of the time, for the burning of the temple, καὶ μῆνα καὶ ἡμέραν ἐπετήρησε τὴν αὐτὴν, happened on the same month and day on which it formerly was burned by the Babylonians.

[2] Ver. 3. Εἰπὲ ἡμῖν, πότε ταῦτα ἔσται, καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον τῆς σῆς παρουσίας, καὶ τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, Tell us when these things shall be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world.] Gr. αἰῶνος, of the age. This in St. Mark runs thus, Tell us when these things shall be, καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον ὅταν μέλλῃ πάντα ταῦτα συντελεῖσθαι, and what is the sign when these things shall be accomplished. (Mark xiii. 4.) In St. Luke thus, When shall these things be, and what is the sign, ὅταν μέλλῃ ταῦτα γίνεσθαι, when these things are to be done? (Luke xxi. 7.) From which places, compared with this, it appears, that the three things here mentioned relate to the same time, and are only an inquiry to this effect; When wilt thou come to destroy the temple, and to put an end to the Jewish church and age? for what is the sign of thy coming in St. Matthew, is the sign when these things shall be done, in St. Luke; what is in St. Matthew συντελεία, the end of the age, is in St. Mark, the time when these things are about συντελεῖσθαι to be accomplished. (2.) Christ so answers to the question touching the sign of his coming, as manifestly to shew it contemporary with the desolation of the temple and polity of Jerusalem, saying, ver. 27. As the lightning cometh from the east, and shineth to the west, so shall be ἡ παρουσία, the coming of the Son of man; for, ver. 28. where the carcass is, there shall the eagles be gathered together; i. e. the Roman army, whose ensign was the eagle: so that the coming of this army to destroy them, and the coming of the Son of man, must be contemporary. And again, ver. 37. 39. As it was in the days of Noe, so shall be ἡ παρουσία, the coming of the Son of man: for two shall be in the field, ver. 40. two grinding at the mill, ver. 41. the one shall be taken, and the other left; which words are followed in St. Luke with these, where the carcass (or body) is, there shall the eagles be gathered together, Luke xvii. 34. 37. (3.) This will be farther evident by comparing other words of Christ with those contained in these three chapters of St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke; for Christ saith, Mark ix. 1. There are some standing here who shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom, or, according to some copies, in his glory. And, xxvi. 62. Within a while ye shall see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. When therefore it is said, Matt. xxiv. 30. Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 27. Ye shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory; this advent must be while some were living that stood by Christ, and within a while, and so not at the end of the world. And in like manner, that the συντελεία τοῦ αἰῶνος, or the end of the age, is the same with the end of the Jewish state, appears from these words, You shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, ἀλλ' οὔπω ἐστὶ τὸ τέλος, but the end (you inquire after) is not yet, ver. 6. Mark xiii. 7. Luke xxi. 9. and ver. 13. he that endureth εἰς τέλος, to the end, shall be saved, and ver. 14. the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached through the world for a testimony to the gentiles, and then ἥξει τὸ τέλος, the end shall come; for what is in St. Matthew and St. Mark the end, is Luke xxi. 20. ἡ ἐρήμωσις αὐτῆς, the desolation of Jerusalem by the Roman army compassing her about. Nor is it to be wondered that the apostles, who had learned that the coming of the Messiah, and the end of the then present world, should be together, should thus inquire of them together; or that this should be styled the end of the Jewish age, Christ being styled the Father of the age to come, Isa. ix. 6. the age of Christianity, the age to come, Heb. vi. 5. and the end of the ages, 1 Cor. x. 11.

[3] Ver. 5. Πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐλεύσονται ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι μου, λέγοντες ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ Χριστός, Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and, ver. 11. Many false prophets shall arise, and deceive many.] So Mark xiii. 6. Luke xxi. 8. A distinction is to be made betwixt false Christs and false prophets: they properly are termed false Christs, who took upon them to be the Christ, and came under that name, as the words here shew. Such as Dositheus,* who said, αὐτὸς εἴη ὁ προφητευόμενος ὑπὸ Μωσέως Χριστὸς, he was the Christ foretold by Moses. And Simon Magus,† who said, he appeared among the Jews, ὡς υἱὸς, as the Son of God. And such perhaps were those many, whom, saith Josephus,‡ βασιλείαν ὁ καιρὸς ἀνέπειθε, the time of the advent of their king Messias prevailed with to set up for kings. From these, saith Hegesippus,§ came false Christs and false prophets. There arose (saith Hippolytus‖) some, saying, I am Christ, as Simon Magus, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ, and the rest, whose names I have not time to reckon up. The false prophets were such as promised or foretold false things; and such were, saith Josephus,¶ (1.) an Egyptian false prophet and magician, who gathered together about thirty thousand Jews, whom he had deceived. (2.) One Theudas, a magician, προφήτης γὰρ ἔλεγεν εἶναι, for he said he was a prophet, and deceived many. (3.) Ψευδοπροφήτης τις, a certain false prophet, who bid them go into the temple, where God would shew them manifest signs of a deliverance. He adds, that there were then †† πολλοὶ προφῆται, many prophets, who taught them even to the last to expect help from God. (See the note on ver. 24. 26.)

[4] Ver. 7, 8. There shall be λιμοὶ, καὶ λοιμοὶ, καὶ σεισμοὶ κατὰ τόπους, famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places; λιμοὶ καὶ ταραχαὶ, famines and tumults, Mark xiii. 8, 9. φοβητρά τε καὶ σημεῖα ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ μεγάλα ἔσται, there shall be fearful sights, and great signs from heaven, Luke xxi. 11.] To speak particularly of the wars, rumours of wars, and tumults, which then happened, would be to transcribe a great part of the history of Josephus. But,

First, There was a famine in the fourth of Claudius, according to Eusebius; which, saith he, oppressed τὴν οἰκουμένην, the Roman empire, but more especially Palestine, Acts xi. 28. by which (saith Josephus*) many perished for lack of food: and this we learn even from profane historians, referred to by Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. ii. cap. 8. from Suetonius] in Claudio, cap. 18. where Scaliger saith, there were two famines in the reign of Claudius; from Dio, lib. lx.

Secondly, I find Josephus saying, That when one Niger was slain by the Jews, he imprecated λιμόν τε καὶ λοιμὸν ἐπὶ πολέων, famine and pestilence upon their cities, ἃ δὴ πάντα κατὰ τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἐκύρωσεν ὁ Θεὸς, all which God brought upon them. (De Bell. Jud. lib. iv. cap. 23. p. 885. D. E.)

Thirdly, Grotius reckons up many earthquakes, which happened in the reigns of Claudius and Nero, at Crete, Smyrna, Miletus, Chios, Samos, Laodicea, Hierapolis, and Colosse; in all which places the Jews lived. There happened in Judea, saith Josephus, vehement winds, dreadful thunderings and lightnings, καὶ μυκήματα σειμένης τῆς γῆς ἐξαίσια, and vast movings of the shaken earth, which, in the judgment of all, portended no small evil. (De Bell. Jud. lib. iv. cap. 17.)

Fourthly, Josephus, in his preface to his history of the Wars of the Jews, undertakes to record the miseries, calamities, and desolations, which then befel them, καὶ πρὸ ταύτης σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, and the signs and prodigies preceding them. In his seventh book,† cap. 31. he reckons up ἐναργῆ καὶ προσημαίνοντα τὴν μελλούσαν ἐρημίαν τέρατα, the prodigies which manifestly imported their future desolation; as, v. g. That ὑπὲρ τὴν πόλιν ἄστρον ἔστη ῥομφαίᾳ παραπλήσιον, καὶ παρατείνας, ἐπ' ἐνιαυτὸν κομήτης, a sword seemed to hang over the city, or a comet pointing down upon it for a year, which plainly seemed to portend their ruin by the sword: and that before the sun went down, ὤφθη μετέωρα περὶ πᾶσαν τὴν χώραν ἅρματα καὶ φάλαγγες ἔνοπλοι διαττούσαι τῶν νεφῶν, καὶ κυκλουμέναι τὰς πόλεις, there were seen in the clouds, armies in battle-array, and chariots encompassing the country and investing their cities, which there are (saith he) men still living to attest: that the great gate of the temple, which twenty men could scarcely shut, and which was made fast with bolts and bars, αὐτομάτως ἠνεῳγμένη, was seen to open of its own accord, to let in their enemies; for so (saith he) our wise men construed that omen: that at the ninth hour of the night at the feast of unleavened bread, τοσοῦτον φῶς περιέλαμψε τὸν βωμὸν καὶ τὸν ναὸν, as great a light shone upon the temple and the altar, as if it had been noon-day: that at the feast of Pentecost, when the priests went at midnight into the temple to attend their service, first they heard a kind of a noise, as of a movement from the place, and then a voice saying, μεταβαίνωμεν ἐντεῦθεν, Let us go hence. And these things Tacitus,* a Roman historian of that age, doth thus epitomize: Armies seemed to meet in the clouds; weapons were seen glittering; the temple seemed to be on a flame with fire issuing from the clouds, and a Divine voice was heard, That the Deity was quitting the place, and a great motion as of his departing. Josephus adds, as τὸ τούτων φοβερώτερον, a thing more terrible, that four years before the wars, one Jesus began at the feast of tabernacles to cry, φωνὴ ἐπὶ Ἱεροσόλυμα καὶ τὸν ναὸν, φωνὴ ἐπὶ τὸν λαὸν πάντα, A voice against Jerusalem and the temple; a voice against all the people, Woe, woe to them; and that he continued crying thus about seven years. So express is the account of the τὰ φοβητρὰ, frightful things, and signs from heaven, mentioned by our Lord; and of the sign of the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, μετὰ δυνάμεως καὶ δόξης, with a glorious host, or with power and glory, according to our Lord's prediction, ver. 30.

[5] Ver. 9—12. Τότε παραδώσουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς θλῖψιν, καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν ὑμᾶς· Then shall they deliver you up to affliction, and shall kill you, &c. Ver. 10. Then shall many be offended, and betray others. Ver. 12. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.] Before all these things (are accomplished) they shall lay their hands upon you, and shall persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and to prisons. (Luke xxi. 12.) They shall deliver you up to the Sanhedrins, and you shall be beaten in the synagogues, and shall be brought before kings and governors for my name's sake. (Mark xiii. 9. 14.) Christ begins here to foretell what should happen to his apostles and disciples, and to others, before the destruction of Jerusalem; the troubles and persecutions which should come upon them, both from their enemies and seeming friends, and what event these persecutions should have on some unsound and temporizing Christians, and what deliverance would be vouchsafed to those who persevered to the end: and that all these things exactly came to pass, we learn from Scripture and church-history. For,

First, They suffered a great fight of afflictions, Heb. x. 32, 33. being persecuted by those of their own nation, 1 Thess. ii. 14, 15. and suffering fiery trials from them, 1 Pet. iv. 12. I persecuted them (saith St. Paul) to strange cities, Acts xxvi. 11.

Secondly, They were imprisoned; Peter, Acts iv. 3. Paul and Silas, Acts xvi. 23. 2 Cor. vi. 23. I delivered up to prison men and women, Acts xxii. 4. I shut up many of the saints in prison, saith St. Paul, Acts xxvi. 10.

Thirdly, They were beaten in the synagogue; St. Paul and Silas, Acts xvi. 23. 2 Cor. xi. 23—25. Peter and John, Acts v. 18. (See note on Mark xiii. 9.)

Fourthly, They were brought before councils and Sanhedrins; Peter and John, Acts iv. 3. 6. the disciples, Acts viii. 3.: before kings; James and Peter before Herod, Acts xii. 1, 2. Paul and Peter before Nero: before rulers; Paul before Gallio, Felix, and Festus, Acts xviii. 12. xxiii. 33. xxv. 6.

Fifthly, They were killed; Stephen by the judgment of the council, Acts vii. 59.; James the greater by Herod, Acts xii. 1.; the less, by Ananus the high-priest; yea, multitudes of Christians were persecuted to the death by Saul, Acts xxii. 4. by Nero, Tacit. Annal. 15. p. 363. by the Jews, Justin. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 234, 235.

Sixthly, As we learn from the Jewish Talmud,* That in the days of the Messiah, the son should afflict the father, and a man's enemies should be those of his own house: so do we learn from Tacitus, in the place forecited, that Christians were delivered up by their parents, brethren, kinsfolk, friends: from Josephus,† That contention sprang up ἐν οἰκίαις, in their very houses; and that the Idumeans slew πολλοὺς τῶν συγγενῶν, many of their own kindred; and from the Scripture, that the Jews persecuted those of their own country. (1 Thess. ii. 14.)

Seventhly, That upon occasion of these persecutions, the love of many waxed cold, and many Jews revolted from the Christian faith, see the preface to the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, sect. 7. and on ii. 3.

And, lastly, Of the care of God in preserving his faithful servants in this time of imminent danger, Eusebius‡ informs us, saying, That before the war all the faithful of the church of Jerusalem were astonished, κατὰ τίνα χρησμὸν τοῖς αὐτόθι δοκίμοις δ' ἀποκαλύψεως δοθέντα, μεταναστῆναι τῆς πόλεως, by an oracle delivered by revelation to men approved there, to depart from the city, and to get over Jordan, and go to Pella: and Epiphanius,§ declaring, That προεχρηματίσθησαν ὑπ' ἀγγέλου, they were forewarned by an angel to depart from the city, as being now ready to perish. The occasion of this departure was, saith Dr. Hammond, wonderful: for Cestus Gallus then besieged the city; and if he would, saith Josephus,‖ he might easily have taken it, and put an end to the war; but he without cause raising the siege, and going from it, πολλοὶ τῶν ἐπιφανῶν Ἰουδαίων, ὥσπερ βαπτιζομένης νεὼς, ἀπενήχοντο τῆς πόλεως, many eminent Jews fled from the city, as from a sinking ship; among whom, doubtless, were those Christians who remained, saith Epiphanius,¶ after the destruction of Jerusalem.

[6] Ver. 14. Καὶ κηρυχθήσεται τοῦτο τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς Βασιλείας ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ—καὶ τότε ἥξει τὸ τέλος· And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world,—and then shall the end come.] That it was thus before the destruction of Jerusalem spread through the Roman empire, styled, ἡ οἰκουμένη, the world; St. Paul informs us, saying of the preachers of it, their sound had gone forth into all the earth, and their words εἰς πέρατα τῆς οἰκουμένης, to the ends of the world. (Rom. x. 18.) He also tells the church of Rome, i. 8. that their faith was spoken of throughout the world; and that of Colosse, i. 6. 23. that the truth of the gospel was come, not to them only, but to all the world, and preached to every creature. And Clemens, bishop of Rome, his contemporary, saith, The nations beyond the ocean, ταῖς ἐπιταγαῖς τοῦ δεσπότου διευθύνονται, were governed by the precepts of the Lord. Now this he only truly could foretell, who, having all power in heaven and earth, was able to effect it.

[7] Ver. 15. Ὅταν οὖν ἴδητε βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως. When then ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by the prophet Daniel, stand in the holy place (he that readeth, let him understand): that is, saith St. Luke, xxi. 20. When ye see Jerusalem compassed about with the Roman armies, then know and understand that her desolation draweth nigh.] This army might be called an abomination, as being so to the Jews,* by reason of the images of Cæsar, and an eagle in the ensigns of it, the abomination of desolation, because it was to lay the country, city, and the temple desolate; and to stand in the holy place, as standing within the circuit of the holy city Jerusalem, as it is styled Matt. iv. 5. 1 Macc. x. 31. and was esteemed by the Jews. (See Ainsw. in Numb. v. 3.) How exactly this army fulfilled our Lord's prediction, by encompassing this city, see note on Luke xix. 43. Dan. ix. 27.

Βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως, the abomination of desolation.] To the note there add; it is said by some that the argument used against the Jews, from the completion of the weeks of Daniel, that their Messiah must be come, was not taken notice of by any of the ancients before Tertullian; nor did the apostles ever use it to that end: but though it be not mentioned by the apostles, yet was it urged by Clemens Alexandrinus in the close of the second century, Strom. i. p. 330, 331.; and it seems here plainly to be referred to by our Lord in these words, When you see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by the prophet Daniel, standing in the holy place; he that readeth, let him understand; viz. the completion of that prophecy; and that this also was the sense of the ancient Jews, we learn from Josephus, who saith, that, at the same time, καὶ περὶ τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἡγεμονίας ἀνέγραψε, καὶ ὅτι ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἐρημωθήσεται· sup. τὸ ἔθνος ἡμῶν· he writ concerning the government of the Romans, and that the Jewish nation should be brought to desolation by them; and that these things were left on record, that the readers, τὰ συμβάντα σκοποῦντες, seeing them accomplished, might admire the honour conferred upon him by God. (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 12. p. 355.)

[8] Ver. 16. Τότε οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ φευγέτωσαν ἐπὶ τὰ ὄρη· Then let them who are in Judea flee to the mountains.] This respects the time when Cestus Gallus came with his army even to the upper city: for when he withdrew it thence, πολλοὶ διεδίδρασκον ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως ἁλωσομένης αὐτίκα, many fled from the city, as if it would be taken presently, saith Josephus.† And then the Christians fled to Pella in Peræa, a mountainous country, and other places under the government of king Agrippa, where they found safety.

[9] Ver. 20. Προσεύχεσθε δὲ ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ φυγὴ ὑμῶν χειμῶνος, μηδὲ ἐν σαββάτῳ· And pray that your flight may not be in winter, nor on the sabbath-day.] Not in the winter, the ways being then scarce passable; nor on the sabbath-day, lest you be exposed to the indignation of the Jews for travelling on that day, or hindered from doing it by your own superstition: for Josephus,‡ in his Life, informs us, their laws would not suffer them either to travel or to fight on that day; having sent (saith he) armed soldiers from Tarichee, I would not recall them, though I needed them much, because they could not on the sabbath ὅπλα λαβεῖν κωλυόντων ἡμᾶς τῶν νόμων, take up arms, the laws forbidding us. And he informs us,§ that the Romans chose that day to fight against Jerusalem; because they found them more slow to fight upon that day, διὰ τὴν δρησκείαν, because of their religion. The Nazarene Christians also observed the law; and most of those who remained in Judea till the time of Hadrian, as we learn from Sulpitius Severus, lib. ii. §. 45. and Eusebius's Chronicon and Hist. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 6. Christ therefore doth not by this precept establish the Jewish sabbath, but speaks this to prevent any mischiefs believers might suffer from the hatred of the Jews, or their own superstition.

[10] Ver. 21. There shall be then great tribulation, οἵα οὐ γέγονεν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου ἕως τοῦ νῦν, οὐδ' οὐ μὴ γένηται, such as never was from the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be.] These words seem to be a familiar form of expressing a thing that is exceeding great, or perhaps the greatest in its kind, rather than a prediction that no future calamity should be like it. So Exod. x. 14. Before them there were no such locusts, neither after them shall there be such: and Joel ii. 2. A day of darkness and of gloominess; there hath not been ever the like, nor shall there be after it. Now Josephus,* speaking of the same destruction, saith, μήτε πόλιν ἄλλην τοιαῦτα πεπονθέναι, no other city ever suffered such things; and again, τὰ γοῦν πάντων ἀπ' αἰῶνος ἀτυχήματα πρὸς τὰ Ἰουδαίων ἡττᾶσθαί μοι δοκεῖ κατὰ σύγκρισιν,† all the calamities which have ever happened to any from the beginning, seem not comparable to those which befel the Jews.

[11] Ver. 22. And if those days had not been shortened, no flesh could be saved; but διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς, for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.] That by the elect here we are to understand, not the Jews, but the Christians, see note on Mark xiii. 20. And so perilous were those times by reason of the Sicarii and the zealots, as well as of the Romans, and so hard was it with the Christians flying to the mountains, and being there without houses, and without necessaries, that they could not have long subsisted; and therefore God in his providence shortened those days by their mutual slaughters, the burning their granaries, and the famine, and by enfeebling the Jews; so that Titus himself confessed, that ὁ Θεὸς ἦν ὁ τῶνδε ἐρυμάτων Ἰουδαίους καθελών,‡ it was God who deprived the Jews of those fortresses.

[12] Ver. 24. False Christs and false prophets shall arise, καὶ δώσουσι σημεῖα μεγάλα, καὶ τέρατα· ὥστε πλανῆσαι, εἰ δυνατὸν, καὶ τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.] That the false Christs and prophets, mentioned note on ver. 5. did great wonders, is certain; for the Scripture testifies of Simon Magus that he bewitched the Samaritans so with his sorceries that they all gave heed to him, Acts viii. 9, 10.: and church-history is very large in the accounts they give how he prevailed by them to be worshipped in many places: and Dositheus, saith Origen,§ did τερατεύεσθαι, do prodigious things. This is true also of the false prophets mentioned by Josephus, they being still represented by him as μάγοι καὶ γόητες, magicians and sorcerers. (See the note on 2 Thess. ii. 9.)

As for that phrase, they shall deceive, εἰ δυνατὸν, if it were possible, the very elect, that it doth not argue the perseverance of believers to the end, and that it is impossible they should fall away, will be apparent from these things:

First, Because Christ so solemnly exhorts them to use the greatest caution that they be not seduced by these men, saying, ver. 4, 5. Let no man deceive you: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many, ver. 11.: and again, If they say, Here is Christ, or there, believe it not, ver. 23. for many false Christs and false prophets shall arise to deceive the elect; look ye therefore to it, behold, I have foretold you all things, Mark xiii. 22, 23. Now is it suitable to the wisdom of our Lord to exhort Christians to use so great diligence and caution, lest they should be deceived by these men, and at the same time to assure them it was utterly impossible they should be deceived? Moreover, I ask to whom doth he direct this exhortation—to the elect? Then must he do it to them who could not possibly be deceived, and so his words must bear this uncouth sense, Be very careful, lest ye be deceived by these men; for I assure you, it is absolutely impossible they should deceive you. Or was he thus concerned only for reprobates? And why then did he from all eternity decree that they should finally miscarry, and never should have grace effectual or sufficient to preserve them from those deceits?

Secondly, In the same chapter our Lord exhorts them to see to it, to watch and pray, lest that day of affliction, that hour of temptation coming suddenly, should find them sleeping, and lest their hearts should be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and that day should come upon them unawares; to watch and pray, that they may be accounted worthy to escape all these things, and stand before the Son of man. (Mark xiii. 33. 35, 36. Luke xxi. 34. 36.) Now are these suppositions, which can agree to men, who cannot possibly be found sleeping in this spiritual sense, on whom the day of Christ cannot come thus unprepared, who never can be unworthy to stand before the Son of man? Can there be any need of such vehement exhortations to constant prayer and vigilance, heed and circumspection, to prevent what could not possibly befal them? Or was our Saviour thus concerned only to exhort them, who he well knew could never possibly avoid these things?

Thirdly, Christ here declares, that by reason of the extreme affliction of those times, many should be offended, i. e. should fall off from the faith; (see note on Matt. xviii. 6.) and adds, that because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold, but he that endures to the end shall be saved, ver. 12, 13.: where, that Christ speaks not of a hypocritical outward profession of affection to him, may be gathered from his styling of it, not pretence, but love; his supposition that it was fervent love, for what was never hot, cannot wax cold; yea, such love, in which had they endured, they would have certainly been saved; and yet he doth not only intimate that some would not continue in this love to the end, but plainly doth foretell that it in many would wax cold. To answer therefore directly to the argument urged from this text, I say,

First, That the phrase εἰ δυνατὸν, if it be possible, or, if it may be, doth not denote an absolute impossibility, but only a great difficulty in the performance of an act possible. So Acts xx. 16. Paul hastened εἰ δυνατὸν αὐτῷ, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem before Pentecost, and yet sure he made not all this haste to do what was impossible. The apostle commands, εἰ δυνατὸν, if it be possible, as much as in you lieth, have peace with all men; (Rom. xii. 18.) and yet doth not exhort us to use our utmost endeavours to do what was impossible; εἰ δυνατὸν, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, saith Christ, Matt. xxvi. 49. and yet he adds, all things are possible to thee, O Father, Mark xiv. 35,36. and hence the phrase is changed by St. Luke into εἰ βούλει, if thou wilt. Now, that the deceiving of Christians in those times of miraculous endowments was very difficult, is evident from that speech of Galen concerning a thing hardly feasible, Ῥᾷττόν τις τοὺς ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ μεταδιδάξειε, sooner may a Christian be turned from Christ.

Secondly, This phrase imports, not what the event would be upon the elect, but the vehemence of the endeavours of seducers, that they would do the utmost they could possible to shock the Christian, and seduce him from his steadfastness, as is evident from the words of St. Mark, xiii. 22. They will shew signs and wonders, πρὸς τὸ ἀποπλανᾶν, εἰ δυνατὸν, to deceive, if they are able, the elect. Now, to say such a one will do you mischief if he can, or if he be able, is surely no security that he can do you none. And,

Thirdly, Should this phrase respect the event, it may do it not absolutely, but only with relation to the means here mentioned; i. e. they shall shew great signs and wonders, which shall prevail to seduce Jews, heathens, and Samaritans, and even Christians, were it possible for impostors by lying signs and wonders to deceive them, who are invested with the power of working true and greater signs and wonders by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and will attend to the things wrought among them, or by them.

[13] Ver. 26. If then they shall say to you, ἰδοὺ, ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ ἐστὶ· μὴ ἐξέλθητε, Behold, he is in the wilderness; go not forth.] Here Christ points to the very place where those false prophets should appear, or whither they should lead their followers. Accordingly Josephus saith, Many impostors and magicians persuaded the people, εἰς τὴν ἔρημον ἕπεσθαι, to follow them into the desert, where they promised to shew them manifest signs and wonders done of God. (Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. p. 695. De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 23. p. 796. G.)

[14] Ver. 27, 28. Ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ ἀστραπὴ, &c. For as the lightning goeth from the east to the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be.] i. e. You will then need none to instruct you where Christ is, or to say to you, He is here, or there; for by the Roman army, which shall pass through the territories of the Jews like lightning, his coming to take vengeance on that nation shall be manifest; and wherever the Jews, who like dead carcasses shall be devoured by the Roman eagles, are, thither shall he fly with them, to tear and to devour them.

[15] Ver. 29. Εὐθέως, Immediately after the tribulation of those days, ὁ ἥλιος σκοτισθήσεται, καὶ ἡ σελήνη οὐ δώσει τὸ φέγγος αὐτῆς, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, &c.] It being here foretold that this should happen immediately after the wasting of the Jews by Vespasian's army flying quickly through Galilee, Idumea, and Judea; this cannot be taken literally, because no such thing then happened either to the sun, moon, or stars. It must be therefore a metaphorical expression, to signify, as it doth frequently in the Old Testament, and other writers, an utter desolation, and terrible destruction brought upon a nation, and upon their capital cities, compared to the sun and moon: for in this language the prophet Isaiah speaks of the destruction of Babylon, saying, xiii. 9, 10. The day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it: for the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. The indignation of God against the Idumeans is represented in like dreadful words, Isa. xxxiv. 3, 4. so is the destruction of Sennacherib and his people, Isa. li. 6. so is the destruction of Egypt, Ezek. xxxii. 7. And in these words this very destruction is foretold by Joel, The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall not yield their light. (Joel iii. 15. ii. 31.) This, therefore, saith Maimonides,* is a proverbial expression, importing the destruction and utter ruin of a nation. Artemidorus † also saith, that the sun darkened or turned into blood, and the stars falling, or disappearing, import the destruction of many people. And in this sense it is almost incredible, which Josephus saith, viz. that eleven hundred thousand perished in that siege. (De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 45. p. 968. D.)

Another exposition of these words is this, That then there shall be a destruction of their ecclesiastical and civil state, and of the rulers of them both; according to those words of Maimonides,‡ This metaphor imports, that men who for their state and dignity might be compared to the sun, moon, and stars, shall suddenly fall down as a leaf from the vine, and from the fig-tree. And this happened a considerable time before the destruction of Jerusalem, when the thieves and zealots, saith Josephus,§ kept all the nobles, and τοὺς κατὰ χώραν προύχειν δοκοῦντας, rulers of the country, in close custody; when the zealots ‖ slew and consumed τὸ γενναῖον the nobility, and made it their business τὸ μηδένα τῶν δυνατῶν καταλιπεῖν, to leave none of the men of power alive, and when twelve thousand of the nobility perished after this manner;¶ when the high-priests, and among them Ananus, were destroyed by the Idumeans, which Josephus reckons as ἀρχὴ τῆς ἁλώσεως, the beginning of their captivity;†† when they abolished the families of the high-priest by succession, καὶ καθίστασαν ἀσήμους καὶ ἀγεννεῖς, and placed in their room men ignoble and unknown, who neither belonged to the priesthood, nor knew what the office of high-priest meant. That this was to happen before the great and terrible day of the Lord, or at that time, we learn from the prophet Joel, saying, that then the sun shall be darkened, &c. This therefore cannot be referred to any time after the destruction of Jerusalem.

[16] Ver. 30. Καὶ τότε φανήσεται τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, &c. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds with power and great glory.] Some think that the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and in the clouds, must note some visible sign of his appearance in the heavens; and they refer this to the fearful sights, the sword and comet hanging over Jerusalem, and the armies and chariots seen in the clouds; but these things happened, according to Josephus,* πρὸ τῆς ἀποστάσεως, καὶ τοῦ πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον κινήματος, before their revolt from the Romans, and the beginning of the war, and therefore cannot be the thing intended here. Our Saviour's coming here seems therefore to import his coming by the Roman army to besiege and to destroy Jerusalem and the unbelieving Jews; for so Christ seemeth plainly to interpret this coming of the Son of man, ver. 27. The coming of the Son of man shall be as the lightning, shining from the east to the west; ὅπου γὰρ, for wheresoever the Jews are, thither shall the Roman army be gathered (see ver. 27. above): his coming therefore must be with the Roman army. And this interpretation will not seem strange, if we consider, (1.) that God's coming to destroy, or execute his vengeance on a wicked generation, is represented as his coming in the clouds of heaven. So 2 Sam. xxii. 8. The earth trembled, and the foundations of heaven shook, because he was wroth: and, ver. 10. he bowed the heavens, and came down; and thick darkness (or a dark cloud) was under his feet. Psal. xcvii. 2, 3. Clouds and darkness are round about him: a fire goes before him, and devours his adversaries round about. And, Nahum i. 3—5. The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and the storm, and the clouds are the dust under his feet. Bashan languisheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth. The mountains quake, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein. And this great day of the Lord is thus described by Joel, chap. ii. as a day of darkness and gloominess, of clouds and thick darkness,—a great people and a strong; i. e. the Chaldeans coming against Jerusalem to destroy the city and the temple, and after them the Romans to do the same thing. And of this destruction by the Chaldeans, the author of the Lamentations saith, i. 13. He sent a fire into my bones ממרום from on high; from heaven, saith the Targum. And St. John, in the Revelation, speaking of things that were to be done ἐν τάχει, quickly, i. 1. and of καιρὸς ἐγγὺς, a time that was near, ver. 3. which is the expression used of this destruction, ver. 7. saith in these very words, Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and then shall the tribes of that land mourn. Which words seem plainly to relate to this very time, and might be a vision seen by John before the destruction of Jerusalem, though the following prophecies were imparted to him afterward. I confess many of the fathers, from the fifth century downwards, interpret this of the sign of the cross; but that fancy is sufficiently confuted from the event, there being no such appearance in the heavens before the destruction of Jerusalem: it also is rendered improbable from the silence of Josephus and Eusebius, which two historians have given us the fullest narrative of all the circumstances relating to that terrible destruction. In fine, a late author † hath eased us of all our disputes about this sign, by shewing, that as the sign of Jonas the prophet, Matt. xii. 39. is the sign which is Jonas the prophet; so the sign of the Son of man inquired after, Matt. xxiv. 3. is the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven. And this interpretation is confirmed from the parallel places, Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 27. where, instead of the sign of the Son of man, mentioned here, we read thus; Hereafter shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds: and from Matt. xxvi. 64. From henceforth ye shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven.

[17] Ver. 31. Καὶ (τότε Mark xiii. 27.) ἀποστελεῖ τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ μετὰ σάλπιγγος φωνῆς μεγάλης, &c. And (then) will he send forth his angels with the trumpet of a great sound, or voice, and they shall gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of the heaven to the other.] Here the τότε then, in St. Mark, so plainly shews that this relates to the same time mentioned in the foregoing verse, that no explication of these words, referring them to a long time after the destruction of Jerusalem, ought to be admitted as the true sense of them. Dr. Lightfoot gives the sense of these words thus; When Jerusalem shall be reduced to ashes, and that wicked nation cut off, then shall the Son of man send his ministers (Christians) of several nations from the four corners of the heavens; so that God shall not want a church, although that ancient nation be rejected and cast off, the churches of the gentiles succeeding to her. To strengthen this interpretation, let it be considered,

First, That God's prophets, messengers, and ministers, both in the Old and the New Testament, are styled οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ, his angels. So 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15. God sent his prophets; but, ver. 16. they mocked τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ, his messengers. So Haggai is ἄγγελος Κυρίου, the messenger of the Lord, i. 13. So is the priest, Mal. ii. 7. the Baptist, Mal. iii. 1. Matt. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. Luke vii. 27.

Secondly, That their preaching is represented as a voice, yea, as the voice of a trumpet. As in these words, Lift up thy voice like a trumpet, Isa. li. 1. (See Jer. vi. 17. Ezek. xxxiii. 3—6.) And the preaching of the apostles is φωνὴ, a voice going through the earth, Rom. x. 18.

Thirdly, That the calling and coming in of the gentiles at the casting off the Jews is represented as their coming in from the four winds, or the four corners of the earth. Many shall come from the east and from the west: (Matt. viii. 11.) but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness, (ver. 12.) You shall be cast out: and they shall come from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in my kingdom. (Luke xiii. 28, 29.)

Fourthly, That the destruction of Jerusalem, and the unbelieving Jews in this extraordinary manner, was so exact a completion of our Lord's prediction, so great a demonstration of his indignation against unbelievers, of his protection of his faithful servants, and such a justification of this prophet against their accusations, and such an evidence of their sin who crucified and rejected him, that it might well prepare the gentiles more freely to embrace the Christian faith.

[18] Ver. 33. Ὅτι ἐγγύς ἐστίν, ἐπὶ θύραις, That it is nigh, even at the door.] This I have interpreted, in compliance with our translation, of the ruin of the Jewish nation. I now think it more agreeable to this phrase in Scripture to understand οὗτος, ille. He, the Son of man mentioned ver. 30. stands at the door; for so St. James plainly interprets this phrase, by saying, ἡ παρουσία τοῦ κυρίου ἤγγικε, The coming of the Lord draweth nigh, ὁ κριτὴς πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν ἕστηκεν, the

* De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 31. † John Buxtorf.

Judge standeth before the door, (v. 8, 9.) And St. Luke, by varying the phrase thus; Know that the kingdom of God is nigh; (Luke xxi. 31.) i. e. the coming of Christ to execute his kingly office on the Jews, and give his kingdom, thus taken from them, to the believing gentiles. (Matt. xxi. 43.)

[19] Ver. 34. Verily I say unto you, οὐ μὴ παρέλθῃ ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη, ἕως ἂν πάντα ταῦτα γένηται· This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled.] These words, ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη, this age, or generation, shall not pass away, afford a full demonstration that all which Christ had mentioned hitherto was to be accomplished, not at the time of the conversion of the Jews, or at the final day of judgment, but in that very age, or whilst some of that generation of men lived; for γενεὰ αὕτη, this generation, never bears any other sense in the New Testament, than the men of this age. So Matt. xi. 16. To whom shall I liken γενεὰν ταύτην, the men of this age? xii. 42. The queen of the south shall rise up in judgment, μετὰ γενεᾶς ταύτης, with the men of this age; and, ver. 45. So shall it be τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ πονηρᾷ, with the wicked of this age: Matt. xxiii. 36. All these things shall come ἐπὶ τὴν γενεὰν ταύτην, upon the men of this age: Mark viii. 12. τί ἡ γενεὰ ταύτη; Why do the men of this age seek a sign? No sign shall be given τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ, to the men of this age: Luke vii. 31. To whom shall I liken the men τῆς γενεᾶς ταύτης, of this age? Luke xi. 29. The Son of man shall be a sign τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ, to the men of this age: so again, ver. 30—32. 50, 51. xvi. 8. and Acts ii. 40. Save yourselves ἀπὸ γενεᾶς τῆς σκολιᾶς ταύτης, from this froward generation. (2.) This is farther evident, because the kingdom of God was then instant, and at the door. (Luke xxi. 29. 31.) And having shewed, from Josephus, how punctually these predictions were fulfilled, I may conclude with Eusebius,* συγκρίνας δέ τις τὰς τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν λέξεις ταῖς λοιπαῖς συγγράφεως ἱστορίαις περὶ παντὸς τοῦ πολέμου· He that shall compare the words of our Saviour with those of Josephus concerning the war of the Jews, cannot but admire the wisdom of Christ, and own his predictions to have been Divine.

[20] Ver. 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, &c.] See the note on Mark xiii. 22.

Ver. 39. Καὶ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, and knew not till the flood came.] It is certain that they of the old world had sufficient intimation of the judgment threatened to them from Noah, a preacher of righteousness to them, (2 Pet. ii. 5.) and from the ark he prepared for the preservation of himself and of his family before their eyes; (Heb. xi. 7.) from the striving of his Spirit, by his prophets, with them, and from the term of a hundred and twenty years assigned for their repentance. (Gen. vi. 3.) They are therefore here said not to have known this, because they did not savingly improve their knowledge of it to the preventing of that judgment. So, after all our Saviour's instructions of them in the way of life, the Jews are said not to have known the time of their visitation, or the things which belong to their peace. (Luke xix. 42.)

[21] Ver. 40. Τότε δύο ἔσονται ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, &c. Then two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left, &c.] This, by Dr. Hammond, seems to be well referred to the especial providence of God, discernible in those times, in rescuing some, who seemed equally exposed to danger, from the destruction which shall fall on others; for that it relates not to the final judgment, but to the time of the destruction of the Jews by the Roman army, is evident from the same words recorded by St. Luke, xvii. 35, 36. For there the disciples ask their Lord where this shall be? and Christ answers, (ver. 37.) that where the carcass (i. e. the Jews) are, there will the eagles (i. e. the Roman army, whose ensign was the eagle) be gathered together. And hence it is also evident, that the following words being connected to these by the copulative οὖν, thus, watch therefore, must refer to the same subject.

[22] Ver. 42. Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὑμεῖς γίνεσθε ἕτοιμοι, Watch therefore: Ver. 44. Therefore be ye also ready.] It is probably conjectured by Dr. Lightfoot, that the discourse of Christ, upon this subject, ended at ver. 42. or 44. as in St. Mark and St. Luke it seems to do; and that the words following were, as St. Luke places them, xii. 39. spoken at another time, and upon another occasion; but because they well accord also with this place and this occasion, and do there, as well as here, follow the exhortation given, ver. 43. St. Matthew hath added them to this chapter. Note, Secondly, That the metaphor of Christ's coming as a thief, i. e. unexpectedly, doth not prove that these words must respect Christ's coming to the final judgment only, they being used touching his coming unexpectedly, to execute any judgment on a church or nation; as when Christ saith to the church of Sardis, (Rev. iii. 3.) Watch, or I will come to thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know the hour when I will come upon thee. And some probably conjecture they are used by St. Paul, 1 Thess. v. 2. with a particular relation to this judgment inflicted on the Jews, which being the most signal preludium to and proof of that final judgment which shall be exercised on all the enemies of Christ's kingdom, may well be represented in a similitude used by St. Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 10. and by our Lord, Luke xii. 39, 40. with relation to it.

[23] Ver. 45. Τίς ἄρα ἐστὶν ὁ πιστὸς δοῦλος καὶ φρόνιμος. Who therefore is that faithful and wise servant, &c.] i. e. The servant who continues constant in the service of his Lord, under all the persecutions and abounding iniquities of those times, he shall make him ruler over all his goods; i. e. shall greatly reward his faithfulness, as this phrase signifies, xxv. 21. 23. for that this phrase cannot import his advancement to the highest dignities in the church, is evident from this, That then all that continued faithful to Christ in those times of trial, must have been made bishops. The evil servant here mentioned seems to be the apostatizing Jew, who, having deserted the faith himself, was instrumental to smite his fellow-servants, and to betray them to the enemies of Christianity, as our Lord foretold it would be, Matt. x. 21. xxiv. 10. And that which induced them thus to apostatize, was this very imagination, that our Lord declared his coming to deliver them, and execute the judgments here foretold, 2 Pet. iii. 4. whence the apostles encourage them to perseverance, by saying, It is but yet a little while, and he that cometh will come, and will not tarry, Heb. x. 27. and that the Judge stands at the door, James v. 9. and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, ver. 8.

[24] Ver. 51. Καὶ διχοτομήσει. And shall cut him asunder.] This was the punishment inflicted by Samuel on Agag, the enemy of God's people, 1 Sam. xv. 33. and by David on the Ammonites, 2 Sam. xii. 31. and by Trajan * the Roman emperor on the rebellious Jews; it was by Nebuchadnezzar threatened to the blasphemers of the true God, Dan. iii. 29. and by young Daniel, to the false accusers of Susanna, ver. 55. 59. It was used of old, to those who were false to their creditors, saith Tertullian,† to rebels and betrayers of their country, and that not only in the east, but among the Romans, as we learn from Suetonius‡ in the life of Caius, from Horace,§ and from Dio; and by the Greeks, as we learn from Homer,‖ from Sophocles, and from Aristophanes; and in Egypt, as we learn from Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 39. And therefore this punishment, saith Christ, will I inflict on those who are perfidious in their covenant of baptism, and enemies to my government.

See the appendix to this chapter at the end of this Gospel.

CHAP. XXV.

1. THEN [1] shall the (persons admitted into the) kingdom of heaven be likened to ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

2. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

3. They that were foolish took their lamps, and (but) took no oil with them (to replenish them when the oil in them was spent):

4. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

5. (And) while the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

6. And at midnight there was a cry (or proclamation) made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

7. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed (or, to trim) their lamps.

8. And the foolish said to the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out.

9. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; [2] lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

10. And whilst they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage (feast): and the door was shut.

11. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us (also).

12. But he answered and said, Verily I say to you, I know you not (i. e. I own not such slothful and improvident persons as fit to be received to my feast).

13. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

14. For the kingdom of heaven (or the coming of the Son of man) is as a man travelling into a far country, (as Christ might be said to do, going to heaven to receive a kingdom, Luke xix. 12. and to return at the time of the restitution of all things, Acts iii. 21.) who (at his departure) called his own servants, and delivered to them his goods.

15. [3] And to one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made (the increase of them) other five talents.

17. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18. But he that had received one (only) went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

19. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them (i. e. Christ comes from heaven to take an account of men's actions).

20. And so he that had received five talents, came and brought other five talents, saying (to his lord), Lord, thou deliveredst to me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them five talents more.

21. His lord said to him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over (in) a few things, I will (therefore) make thee ruler over many things (i. e. will greatly reward and dignify thee): enter thou into the joy of thy lord (i. e. thou shalt rejoice with me in heaven).

22. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst to me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23. His lord said to him (also), Well done, (thou) good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou (also) into the joy of thy lord.

24. Then he who had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed (i. e. requiring an increase far exceeding what thou gavest):

25. And I was afraid (that I should not be able to improve my talent to such advantage as thou mightest expect), and (therefore) I went and hid my talent in the earth (whence now I bring it to thee): lo, there thou hast what is thine.

26. His lord answered and said to him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, (thou professest that) thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed (i. e. that I expected some profit from the talents I committed to thee):

27. Thou oughtest therefore (that thou mightest not be condemned by thine own mouth) to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received my own with usury (or improvement: then saith he to his other servants),

28. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it to him that hath ten talents: (they say to him, Lord, he hath ten pounds already, Luke xix. 25. the lord answers, Therefore I give him more.)

29. For to every one that hath (so as to improve it) shall be given (more), and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not (or doth not improve what he hath) shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: (where) there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

31. (So likewise will it be at my coming, for) [4] when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory (as a righteous judge):

32. And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

33. [5] And he shall set the sheep (who are to receive the sentence of absolution) on his right hand, but the goats (who are to receive the sentence of condemnation) on the left (hand).

34. Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, [6] inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world (or from the creation of man):

35. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in;

36. (I was) naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came to me (ye exercised all offices of charity towards my members).

37. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38. When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39. Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40. And the King shall answer and say to them, Verily I say to you, Inasmuch as ye have done it (or this) to one of the least of these (whose faith in me has rendered them as dear as, Matt. xii. 50. and whom by taking their nature upon me, and dying in it to purge them from their sins, I have made and treated as, Heb. ii. 11.) my brethren, ye have done it to me (these members of my body being one with their head).

41. Then shall he say also to them on the left hand, [7] Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared (not originally for you, but) for the devil and his angels:

42. (This being the just reward of your impiety and unmercifulness, which have made you like them:) For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink;

43. I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44. Then shall they (also) answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45. Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say to you, [8] Inasmuch as you did it not to one of the least of these (my members), ye did it not to me (for had you borne a kind affection to me, you would have thus ministered to my members for my sake).

46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous (shall go) into life eternal.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΟΤΕ ὁμοιωθήσεται ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν δέκα παρθένοις, Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened to ten virgins.] Here note,

First, That the kingdom of heaven sometimes signifies the kingdom of the Messiah, or the gospel dispensation; as when this kingdom is said to be come to the Jews, or they are bid to pray that it may come; and when it is said to be at hand, and they are advised to enter into it, and pronounced fit or unfit to do so. Sometimes it signifies the doctrine, or the preaching of the doctrine of that kingdom, or, as it is, Matt. xiii. 19. ὁ λόγος τῆς βασιλείας, the word of the kingdom; Matt. xxiv. 14. τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς βασιλείας, the gospel of the kingdom; as when Christ or his apostles are said to speak, τὰ περὶ τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ, the things which concerned the kingdom of God, Acts i. 3. viii. 12. xix. 8. to preach and testify the kingdom of God, Acts xx. 25. xxviii. 23. 31. Rom. xiv. 17. 1 Cor. iv. 20. εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, to evangelize the kingdom of God, Luke iv. 43. and when Christ threateneth to the Jews, that the kingdom of God should be taken from them, Matt. xxi. 43. But when it is said, the kingdom of heaven is like, or may be likened, to this or that, the meaning seems to be chiefly, So will it be in reference to the preaching, the propagation, or reception of the gospel, or doctrine of the kingdom; as in the parable, or the similitude and resemblance of the good seed propounded; v. g. when this good seed is sown, it will by some be trod under feet, in others choked with worldly cares, in others withered by the cold blasts of persecution, but in some it will bring forth fruit to perfection; when it is sown, the enemy will come, and sow tares among it; when men are invited to it, some will make excuses why they do not accept the invitation; some will persecute the messengers of it; some will come to it without a wedding-garment; some without oil in their lamps; some improving the talents given, and some hiding them in a napkin, and the like. Note,

Secondly, That this parable, or something very like it, is to be found in the Jewish records; so in Reschith Cochma we read thus, Our wise men of blessed memory say, Repent whilst thou hast strength to do it, whilst thy lamp burns, and the oil is not extinguished; for, if thy lamp be gone out, thy oil will profit thee nothing: our doctors add in Midrash,* that the holy blessed God said to Israel, My sons, repent, whilst שערי תשובה, the gates of repentance stand open; for I receive a gift at present, but when I shall sit in judgment in the age to come, I receive none. Another parable of theirs runs thus, †This thing is like to a king who invited his servants, but appointed no set time; those that were wise, adorned themselves, and sat in the porch of the palace; those that were foolish, went about their own business.—‡The king on a sudden called for his servants; the first went in adorned, the second undressed: the king was pleased with the wise, and angry with the foolish, and said, They who are prepared, shall eat of my banquet; they that are unprepared, shall not eat of it. Note,

Thirdly, That Origen,§ St. Chrysostom,‖ and St. Jerome, and others of the ancients, say, that this parable is designed against late repentance, and declares, it will be invalid to them who live under the gospel; as will be evident, if we consider, that from this parable our Lord concludes for the necessity of constant vigilance, (ver. 13.) and for the necessity of assiduous prayer and vigilance against all the cares of this life, (Luke xxi. 34. 36.) and of fidelity in doing the work of the Lord. (Matt. xxiv. 45, 46.) For what great necessity can there be, of so great vigilance, such assiduous prayer, such fidelity in doing the Lord's work, if the neglect of all those duties, till God calls us hence, will not prejudice our eternal interests? This also is evident from the design of the like Jewish parables; and note, that the door was shut, (ver. 10.) seems to be an allusion to the Jewish phrase of shutting the gates of repentance; as when the priests offered their oblations, and they found no acceptance, because the Governor of the world had shut the gate of repentance; and the same we learn also from the parable of the talents. Good therefore is the advice of the son of Sirach, Humble thyself before thou beest sick, and in the time of sins shew repentance, and defer not till death to be justified. (Ecclus. xviii. 21, 22.)

[2] Ver. 9. Μήποτε οὐκ ἀρκέσῃ, Perhaps it will not suffice for us and you.] Here μήποτε is used for fortasse, perhaps, as I have shewed, note on 2 Tim. ii. 26.

Ver. 13. See the defence of the reading here, Examen Millii.

[3] Ver. 15. Καὶ ᾧ μὲν ἔδωκε πέντε τάλαντα, ᾧ δὲ δύο, ᾧ δὲ ἕν: And to one he gave ten talents, to another two, and to another one.] Of this parable, as it respects the master travelling into a far country, and the servants to whom the talents were delivered, see note on Luke xix. 12. where it is also proved, that it relates to the Jewish nation, and therefore is here mentioned after Christ's prediction of the dreadful judgments which should befal that nation for murdering their Messiah, and not improving the day of their visitation. Here, therefore, I shall only add these few short notes:

First, That the master here distributes his talents, κατὰ τὴν ἰδίαν δύναμιν, according to the several abilities of his servants, which in some were greater, and so they were fitted to manage a greater sum; in some less, and so they were intrusted with a lesser, and accordingly he is satisfied with a less increase in them: so, v. g. Christ gave to his disciples a clearer and fuller knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, Mark iv. 11. but spake to other Jews in parables, καθὼς ἠδύναντο ἀκούειν, as they were able to hear, (ver. 33.) So Origen* here, κατὰ γὰρ τὴν ἑκάστου δύναμιν, ᾧ μὲν δίδονται πέντε τάλαντα, ὡς δυναμένῳ διοικεῖν τὰ τοσαῦτα· ἄλλῳ δὲ δύο ὡς μὴ χωροῦντι, τὰ πρὸ αὐτοῦ· ἄλλῳ δὲ ἕν, ὡς καὶ τοῦ ἑτέρου ὑποδεεστέρῳ, according to each man's ability he gave his talent; to one man five, as being able to traffic with them; to another two, as being not sufficient to manage more; and to a third one, as being still more infirm.

Secondly, That these talents were spiritual, and given for a spiritual end; that they who used them well, might have more, and might enter into the joy of their Lord, or rejoice with him in his banquet, or the marriage-feast prepared for them; and that they who did not improve them might have their talents taken from them, and they be cast into utter darkness. And, because banqueting and nuptial-feasts were still attended with great joy, insomuch that the Hebrew word משתה, which signifies a banquet, and a nuptial-feast, is by the LXX. rendered sometimes δοχὴ, a banquet, (Gen. xxvi. 30. Esth. i. 3. v. 4. 8. 12. 14.) sometimes γάμος, a marriage-feast, (Gen. xxix. 22. Esth. ii. 18. ix. 22.) and once χαρὰ, joy; (Esth. ix. 17.) therefore, the entering into this marriage-feast, or supper, prepared for this lord, is here styled, entering into the joy of his Lord. Note, Thirdly, That none to whom these talents were imparted, wanted power to improve them for the advantage of their master, and so to receive the reward of their industry; for Christ saith to them all, Negotiate till I come, Luke xix. 13. All therefore could have done so.

Hence, he who did not improve his talent, is styled not only a slothful, but a wicked servant, and is accordingly punished: now there can be no iniquity in not doing what he could not do, nor any punishment due upon that account; this being to punish because he did not an impossibility.

Fourthly, That ἔχειν, to have, here is εὖ ἔχειν, to improve; and not to have, not to improve, see note on Matt. xiii. 12.

Fifthly, When it is said here, ᾔδεις, thou knewest, or knewest thou, that I was an austere man, reaping what I did not sow; this is not a concession that the master was truly so, but an argument out of his own mouth to condemn him, not for acting suitably to his own hard conceptions of his Lord. (Luke xix. 22.) Nor do these words, Thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers, shew, that Christ approved of usury; but only, that he who thought so sordidly of his master, should have used his talent agreeably, that so he might have had his own with usury.

Ver. 27. Thou oughtest to have put my money to the usurers.] That is, saith Jerome, "Cæteris doctoribus, quod fecerunt apostoli, per singulas provincias presbyteros et episcopos ordinantes;" i. e. To other teachers, as the apostles did, ordaining bishops and presbyters in every province: which words, though they contribute nothing to the meaning of the text, yet they afford a plain testimony, that, even in St. Jerome's judgment here, bishops were placed in every province by the apostles themselves. He also adds, that "hinc intelligimus gentilium et philosophorum bonam vitam recipere Dominum;" hence we understand, that our Lord approves of the good life of heathens and philosophers. I suppose, because this is the best improvement of their talents, and all that could be reasonably expected from them: God having given them no other rule to walk by; and so requiring no more of them than their sincere conformity to that law of nature he had given them.

[4] Ver. 31. Ὅταν δὲ ἔλθῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, &c. When therefore the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him.] It is to me a wonder, that men should imagine this refers not to the general day of judgment, but either to the time of exercising judgments on the Jewish nation, or to the setting up a triumphant kingdom here on earth; seeing (1.) here is a more clear description of Christ's coming to judgment in words and circumstances elsewhere acknowledged to relate to the great and final judgment: for here he comes in majesty and glory, attended with all the holy angels, and sits down upon the throne of his glory; and thus will he be attended, when he comes to render to every one according to his works, viz. in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels; (Matt.

* Ed. Huet. tom. i. p. 344.

xvi. 27.) When he shall come in flaming fire to take vengeance on all that obey not his gospel, and to be glorified in his saints, 2 Thess. i. 7—9. Jude 14, 15. (2.) He speaks here of the time when he shall gather before him all nations, (ver. 32.) all sheep and goats, (ver. 33.) all that shall receive a sentence of bliss or condemnation, (ver. 34. 41.) and of the time when they that are the blessed of the Father shall receive the kingdom prepared for them, and when the wicked shall go into everlasting punishment; (ver. 46.) which are manifest indications of the final judgment.

[5] Ver. 33. Καὶ στήσει τὰ μὲν πρόβατα ἐκ δεξιῶν αὐτου, τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια ἐξ εὐωνύμων, And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left.] Here seems to be an allusion to the received custom of the Jews in capital causes, to place them who were to receive the sentence of absolution on the right hand in the Sanhedrin, but those who were to receive the sentence of condemnation on the left: as Maimonides* saith, They that stand on the right hand, are the just: they on the left, the guilty: Kimchi on 1 Kings xxii. 19. On his right hand is life, on his left death. So R. Eliezer, cap. 4. §. 4.

[6] Ver. 34. Κληρονομήσατε τὴν ἡτοιμασμένην ὑμῖν βασιλείαν ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world.] The Jews say, that God prepared Paradise from the beginning, even before the earth was made; and this they gather from Gen. ii. 8. and the Lord God planted a garden, מקדם, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, Aquila, ἐκ πρώτης, Symmachus, from the beginning. (See Pirk. Eliezer, cap. 3. §. 3.)

[7] Ver. 41. Πορεύεσθε εἰς τὸ πῦρ αἰώνιον, τὸ ἡτοιμασμένον τῷ διαβόλῳ καὶ τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ, Depart from me into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.] The rabbins often say, that hell was created the second day: (see Pirk. Eliezer, cap. 4. §. 1.) the fathers, on the contrary, viz. Origen, Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact, observe, (1.) that Christ saith not of the punishment, as he doth of the blessing here pronounced, that it was prepared from the beginning of the world, lest it should be thought, that God designed men's punishment before they sinned. (2.) That though Christ saith, Come ye blessed of my Father, he said not, Go ye cursed of my Father; because God is the author and procurer of men's happiness, but man only is the author of his own misery. And (3.) that he speaks of this eternal fire as designed originally not for man, but for the devil and his angels; but man, by giving himself up to the thraldom of that evil one, and working himself up to his likeness, sinks himself down to the infernal regions, and becomes like to him in torments, whom in manners he hath so much resembled.

[8] Ver. 40. 45. Ἐφ' ὅσον ἐποιήσατε ἑνὶ τούτων τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου τῶν ἐλαχίστων, ἐμοὶ ἐποιήσατε, Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it to me.] For so close is the union betwixt Christ and his members, that he looks upon the favours conferred on them as done to himself, and promises accordingly a reward for them; (Matt. x. 42.) and also threatens punishment to them who do neglect, and are injurious to them, as if they had been so to him, (ver. 45.) And therefore he speaks to a persecuting Saul thus, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? (Acts ix. 4.) And, O! how highly ought we to esteem of him, who so esteemed us!

Ver. 42. I was hungry, and you gave me no meat.] Here Theophylact well observes, that it is not sufficient to preserve us from that dreadful sentence, depart from me, &c. that we have done no evil, if we have been deficient in those acts of charity and mercy we owe to the members of Christ's body.

CHAP. XXVI.

1. AND it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said to his disciples,

2. Ye know that [1] after two days is the (time of the Jews') Passover, and the Son of man is (then to be) betrayed (Gr. delivered up) to be crucified.

3. Then (i. e. two days before the Passover) assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, to the palace of the high-priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4. And (they) consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5. But they said, (Let us) not (do this) on the [2] feast-day, lest there be an uproar among the people, (for they feared the people, Luke xxii. 2.)

6. Now when Jesus was in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper (whom Christ had healed of his leprosy),

7. There came to him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and (she taking it) poured it on his head, as he sat at meat.

8. But when (some of, Mark xiv. 4.) [3] his disciples saw it, they had indignation, (and murmured against the woman, Mark xiv. 5.) saying, To what purpose is this waste (of the ointment made)?

9. For this ointment might have been sold for much, and (the money might have been) given to the poor.

10. When Jesus understood it (i. e. knew that they thus murmured), he said to them, Why trouble ye the woman (without cause)? for she hath wrought a good (and charitable) work upon me.

11. For ye have the poor (for whom you pretend such kindness) always with you; (and when you will you may do them good, Mark xiv. 7.) but (as for) me, [4] ye have not always (a like opportunity of shewing kindness to me, I being shortly to be taken from you.

12. She therefore hath piously chosen the present opportunity), for in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it (though unwittingly, as a preparation) for my burial, (nor shall her charity be lost; for)

13. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached (as it will be) in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her (to all future ages).

14. Then [5] one of the twelve, who was called Judas Iscariot, (Satan being entered into him, Luke xxii. 3.) went to the chief priests,

15. And said to them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him to you? (and they were glad, and promised to give him money, Mark xiv. 11.) and they covenanted with him for [6] thirty pieces of silver.

16. And from that time he sought (an) opportunity to betray him.

17. Now the [7] first day of the feast of unleavened bread (being come, two of) the disciples came to Jesus, saying to him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18. And he said, Go into the city to such a man, (who will meet you carrying a pitcher of water, Mark xiv. 23. follow him, Luke xxii. 10.) and say to him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the Passover at thy house with my disciples, (where therefore is the room where I may eat it with them? Luke xxii. 11. and when he hath shewed you the room, there make ready, ver. 12.)

19. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and (finding that it was as he had said, Mark xiv. 16. they) made ready the passover.

20. Now when the evening was come, he sat down with the twelve.

21. And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say to you, That one of you shall betray me, (for the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me in the dish, Mark xiv. 18. Luke xxii. 21.)

22. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say to him, Lord, is it I (that shall do this thing)?

23. And he answered and said, [8] He that (now) dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.

24. The [9] Son of man goeth (to suffer death), as it is written of him: but (seeing God's foreknowledge how wicked any man will be, if left to act according to those evil dispositions which he hath wilfully contracted, lessens no man's guilt; notwithstanding) woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born (it being better not to be, than to be miserable).

25. Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I (that shall betray thee)? He said unto him, (It is as) thou hast said.

26. And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and [10] blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; [11] this (broken bread) is (the memorial of) my body; (Luke xxii. 19. and broken for you, 1 Cor. xi. 24.)

27. And he took the cup (after supper, Luke xxii. 20.) and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, [12] Drink ye all of this (cup);

28. For this (wine, given separate from the bread,) is (the memorial of) my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of (their) sins.

29. But I say to you, [13] I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom; (i.e. till the kingdom of God come, Luke xxii. 18. and you eat and drink with me in my kingdom, ver. 30.)

30. And when they had sung a hymn, they went out to the mount of Olives.

31. Then saith Jesus to them, All ye shall be [14] offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad (Zech. xiii. 7. and this will be fulfilled in you).

32. But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

33. Peter answered and said to him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended (on that account).

34. Jesus said to him, Verily I say to thee, That this night, before the [15] cock crow (in the morning), thou shalt deny me thrice.

35. Peter said to him (again), Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. (And) likewise also said all the disciples.

36. Then cometh Jesus with them to a place called Gethsemane, (situate between the river Cedron, mentioned John xviii. 1. and the mount of Olives, ver. 20.) and saith to the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy (and afraid, Mark xiv. 33.)

38. Then saith he to them, [16] My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even to death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. (against temptation).

39. And he went a little farther (about a stone's-cast from them), and [17] fell upon his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible (that thy glory and the salvation of men may equally be promoted otherways), let this cup pass from me: nevertheless (be it) not as I will, but as thou wilt; (then an angel appeared to him from heaven, to strengthen him, Luke xxii. 43, 44.)

40. And (then) he cometh to the (three) disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith to Peter, (Why sleep you?) What, could ye not watch with me one hour?

41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation (so as to be foiled by it); the [18] spirit indeed is willing (to make good resolutions, ver. 35.) but the flesh is weak (and so unable to perform them without Divine assistance, to be obtained by prayer, and improved by vigilance).

42. He went away again the second time, and (being heard, in that he feared, Heb. v. 7. he) prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43. And he came (back to the disciples) and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy, (and they knew not what to answer him, Mark xiv. 40.)

44. And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

45. Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith to them, [19] Sleep on now, and take your rest (for by your watching ye can shew no farther kindness to, or concern for me): behold, the hour (of my apprehension) is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46. Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

47. And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48. Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, the same is he: [20] hold him fast, (and lead him away securely, Mark xiv. 44. see John xviii. 8. 12.)

49. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him.

50. And Jesus said to him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? (Is it to betray the Son of man with a kiss? Luke xxii. 48.) Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

51. And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus, (to wit, Simon Peter, seeing what was done, said, Master shall I smite with the sword? Luke xxii. 49. and straightway he) stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high-priest's, and smote off his (right) ear; (and the name of that servant was Malchus, John xviii. 10.)

52. Then said Jesus to him, Put up again thy sword into its place: [21] for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. (See the note here.)

53. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels (for my defence)?

54. But (should I do this) how then shall the Scripture be fulfilled, that thus it must be? (or, how can I refuse the cup which my Father hath given me to drink? John xviii. 11.)

55. In that same hour Jesus said to the multitudes (sent to apprehend him), Are ye come (now) out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? (whereas) I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me, (but this is your hour, and the power of darkness, Luke xxii. 53.)

56. But all this was done, that the Scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

57. And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to (Annas first, John xviii. 13, 14. and thence to) [22] Caiaphas the high-priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.

58. But Peter followed him afar off to the high-priest's palace, and (being introduced by another disciple, John xviii. 15, 16.) went in, and sat with the servants, to see the end (of this matter).

59. Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, [23] sought false witness against Jesus to put him to death;

60. But found none: yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none (that could testify any thing against him which deserved death). At the last came two false witnesses,

61. And said, This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.

62. And (then) the high-priest arose, and said to him, Answerest thou nothing? [24] What is it which these witness against thee? (Gr. Why do these witness (thus) against thee, if it were not true?)

63. But Jesus held his peace. And the high-priest answered and said to him, [25] I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God (or not).

64. Jesus saith to him, (It is as) thou hast said: [26] nevertheless, I say to you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven; (i. e. you ask me whether I am the Christ, and will not believe that I am so; but ye shall shortly be convinced of it by the mission of the Holy Ghost from heaven, and by my coming in the clouds of heaven to take vengeance on you for your unbelief.)

65. Then the high-priest [27] rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what farther need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.

66. What think ye (of it)? They answered and said, He is guilty of death.

67. Then did they (who were officers of the court) spit in his face, and (they) buffeted him; and others (of them) smote him with the palms of their hands, (speaking many blasphemous words against him, Luke xxii. 65. and)

68. Saying, Prophesy to us, thou Christ, Who is he that smote thee?

69. Now Peter sat without in the palace; and [28] a damsel came to him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.

70. But he denied (it) before them all, saying, I know not (any thing of) what thou sayest.

71. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said to them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

72. And again he denied (it) with an oath, (saying,) I do not [29] know the man.

73. And after a while came to him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

74. Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately (after he had said this) the cock crew.

75. And Peter remembered the words of Jesus, who said to him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVI.

[1] Ver. 2. AFTER two days is the Passover, and the Son of man shall be delivered up to be crucified.] Here Grotius notes, that it is a tradition of the Jews, which appears yet in the books of their cabalists, that in the days of the Messiah they should be redeemed on the very day that they came out of Egypt; which is true if it respect the day of their coming out of Egypt, that being the fifteenth day of Nisan, but is not true of the fourteenth day on which the paschal lamb was offered, Christ being not crucified on Thursday, but on Friday.

[2] Ver. 5. Ἔλεγον δὲ, μὴ ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, ἵνα μὴ θόρυβος γένηται ἐν τῷ λαῷ, And they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar among the people.] Maimonides* saith, it was the custom among the Jews to punish those who rebelled against the sentence of the judge, or the high-priest, or were notoriously criminal, at one of the three feasts; because then only, by reason of the public congress of people, all might hear and fear, according to the law, Deut. xvii. 12, 13. From this received custom, the fathers of the Sanhedrin seem willing to recede for fear of the multitude; but having so fair an offer made by Judas, they embrace that season.

[3] Ver. 8. Ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἠγανάκτησαν, &c. But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?] This was only said by Judas, and that out of covetousness. (John xii. 3. 6.) Some of the disciples seemed to like the motion by reason of the specious pretext of charity under which it was covered, (Mark xiv. 5.) and the rest did not contradict it, but seemed rather by their silence to approve it, and therefore are here mentioned, without exception, as copartners with him; but Christ calls this a good work, ver. 10. as being in itself lawful, and done out of a good end and intention; and justifies this from an argument à pari, that she had laid out this expense on his dead body; they who did customarily use such ointments and sweet odours at their funerals, could not have reasonably found fault with it, and therefore had no ground to do it now, his body being shortly to be buried; to the pretence of Judas he answers, that by reason of his approaching death, this must be shortly done to him, or not at all; whereas they having the poor always with them, could never want objects of their charity; and that good work which was to be done now, or never, was then preferable to that for which they had perpetual occasions.

[4] Ver. 11. Ἐμὲ δὲ οὐ πάντοτε, But me ye have not always.] These words destroy the doctrine of transubstantiation; for if Christ were, as to soul, body, and divinity, truly in the host, that being always with them of Rome, they would have Christ always with them, and might at any time spend their money in adorning their host, or upon the oblation of it, and so Christ's reason for doing that then would be invalid. Note also from these words following, ver. 13. that this good deed should be mentioned, wherever the gospel was preached, for a memorial of her, that we may laudably prosecute that which will procure us a good name, and spread our reputation to future ages.

[5] Ver. 14. Τότε πορευθεὶς εἷς τῶν δώδεκα, Then one of the twelve went to the chief priests.] He is noted to be one of Christ's disciples, to aggravate the foulness of his crime, and to denote the completion of the prophecy, He that eateth bread with me, hath lifted up his heel against me. (Psal. xli. 9.) The time when Judas thus betrayed him, is hinted in the particle, τότε, then; viz. according to the tradition of the church, the consultation of the Sanhedrin with him, and his agreement to betray Christ to them was on Wednesday, this being assigned as one reason why they fasted on Wednesday and Friday,* because Christ was betrayed on Wednesday, and he suffered on Friday.

[6] Ver. 15. For thirty pieces of silver.] i. e. For thirty shekels, that is, 3*l.* 15*s.* of our money, saith Dr. Hammond. This, as Mr. Ainsworth and Maimonides observe on Exod. xxxi. 32. was the price paid for a man or a maid-servant, when, being smitten by an ox, they died; so vilely was he esteemed by them, who shed his precious blood for them! Of Satan's entering into Judas, see note on Luke xxii. 3, 4.

[7] Ver. 17. Τῇ δὲ πρώτῃ τῶν ἀζύμων, &c. Now the first day of unleavened bread came his disciples to him, saying, Where wilt thou that we prepare the passover? &c.] Of the time when our Saviour kept the Passover, see the Appendix to the fourteenth chapter of St. Mark. Here note, first, from the word ἀνέκειτο, he lay down, ver. 20. that Christ observed not the paschal supper in that manner or gesture in which it was instituted at first; viz. that they should eat it standing, &c. Exod. xii. 11. but did eat it lying down or inclining on the left side, as it was the manner of the Jews then to do; and though the Jewish doctors required and imposed this rite as a significative ceremony of their rest in Canaan, to which they were but going, or travelling, when they celebrated the Passover in Egypt, and of their redemption; and upon that account would * permit none to eat it otherwise than in this posture; yet Christ used it: whence we may learn, that our blessed Lord was not so scrupulous as some men are, who dare not use a significant ceremony, or to receive the eucharist, kneeling, because that was not the posture used at the first institution of it, though they do receive it sitting, and therefore not in the posture used by Christ and his apostles when it was first instituted. (2.) Upon these words, Where wilt thou that we keep the Passover? Dr. Lightfoot observes, that the houses of Jerusalem were not then to be let, but were of common right for any that would eat the passover in them.

[8] Ver. 23. Ὁ ἐμβάψας μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν τῷ τρυβλίῳ τὴν χεῖρα, &c. He that dips his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.] Hence it appears, that Judas was present with them at the celebration of the paschal supper; and that he continued with them at the celebration of the other sacrament, is evident from the words following the institution and distribution of it; But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me, is with me on the table. (Luke xxii. 21.)

[9] Ver. 24. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom he is betrayed! it were good for that man that he had not been born.] Hence two things clearly follow: (1.) That the prediction of this event, that Jesus should thus suffer, and that by the treachery of Judas, did lay on Judas no antecedent necessity of doing this action; because it did not lessen the woe due to him for it; but only doth suppose in God a knowledge how the will of man, left to his own freedom, will determine or incline itself. Of this, see note on Luke xxii. 22. (2.) That Christ, by saying, it were good for that man that he had not been born, sufficiently shews this cannot be the portion of all men, except some few elect, as some men think, and as it follows from the supposal of an immutable decree, that such persons only should be saved, and all others left under such a preterition as will infallibly render it better for them never to have been born; and would have made this the condition of Judas, though he had not done this, provided he was none of God's elect.

[10] Ver. 26. Jesus took bread, καὶ εὐλογήσας, ἔκλασε, and blessed it, and brake it.] That εὐλογεῖν, to bless, here and in St. Mark, is the same as εὐχαριστεῖν, to give thanks, in St. Luke and St. Paul; and that the bread was only blessed by giving thanks over it, see proved on Matt. xiv. 19. And that the breaking of the bread to be distributed, is a necessary part of this rite, is evident. For (1.) the continual mention of it by St. Paul and all the evangelists, when they speak of the institution of this sacrament, shews it to be a necessary part of it; according to that observation of the council of Toledo,† That Christ, by breaking the bread, and distributing it broken to his disciples, " id sine dubio egit, quod nos in posterum facturos edocuit," did doubtless teach us hereafter to do as he did. (2.) Christ said, Take, this is my body broken for you; (1 Cor. xi. 24.) whereas, where the elements are not broken, it can be no more said, This is my body broken for you, than where the elements are not given, This is my body given for you. (3.) Our Lord saith, Do this in remembrance of me; i. e. Eat this bread broken, in remembrance of my body broken on the cross: now, where no body broken is distributed, there nothing can be eaten in memorial of his broken body. Lastly, The apostle, by saying, The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? sufficiently informs us, that the eating of his broken body is necessary to that end. (1 Cor. x. 16.) Hence was it that this rite of distributing bread broken continued for a thousand years, and was, as Humbertus* testifies, observed in the Roman church in the eleventh century.

[11] Τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ σῶμά μου, This is my body.] Here let it be observed, (1.) that these words contain not all that our Lord said; for our Lord spake these words but once; and therefore they who say, as do St. Luke and the apostle Paul, his words were these, This is my body given, or my body broken, for you, can say no more than our Lord said at the first institution of this sacrament; for otherwise they must aver, that Christ then said, what really he never said. When then St. Matthew and St. Mark inform us that he said, This is my body, they must say the truth, but not the whole truth; that being, as St. Luke and St. Paul inform us, This is my body given, or broken, for you. Moreover, it is to be observed, that neither the evangelist nor the apostle uses the future, but both the present tense, saying, This is my body, τὸ διδόμενον, given, τὸ κλώμενον, broken; This is my blood, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, shed. Now, from these observations it is manifest, that these words cannot signify, This is substantially and really my body broken and my blood shed for you; for this being spoken before Christ's body was broken on the cross, and before his blood was shed, Christ could not say, in the literal and proper sense, This is my body broken, or my blood shed, for you; but he might say, This bread is broken to represent to you my body, which shall be broken, and my blood, which shall be shed, for you. For so the Scripture usually speaks in sacramental matters; saying of circumcision, even before Abraham was circumcised, This is my covenant betwixt me and thee, (Gen. xvii. 4. 19. 23. 36.) and of the paschal lamb, This is the Lord's passover, before God, passing over the Israelites, had smitten the Egyptians. (Exod. xii. 11.) And this was therefore thus affirmed of these two sacraments, before the celebration of them, because they were then instituted as rites to be observed by his people when they did celebrate these sacraments. And in like manner the bread, in the first institution of this sacrament, is called Christ's body broken, as being instituted then to represent to all future ages his body which was to be broken for them; and the wine is styled his blood shed, as being instituted then as the perpetual representation and memorial of his blood shed and separated from his body on the cross; so that there is no need of the criticism of Grotius and others here, that the present tense is put for the future, broken for that which shall be broken, and shed for shall be shed. Nor could this way of speaking either seem harsh to, or otherwise be understood by, Christ's disciples, who had even then been eating of the paschal lamb, which they who laid before them were said, "apponere corpus paschatis," to place before them the body of the passover, or paschal lamb, called also by them, "corpus paschatis," the body of the passover; and they who ate of it were said, "comedere de corpore paschatis," to eat of the body of the passover, or of the lamb eaten in memorial of it: and when they ate of the unleavened bread, they said, "Hic est panis afflictionis, quem comederunt patres nostri in terra Ægypti," This is the bread of affliction (i. e. the representation and memorial of that bread) which our fathers did eat in the land of Egypt. What therefore could men accustomed to such sacramental phrases think of the like words of Christ, This (bread) is my body; but that it was to be the representation or memorial of it? Moreover, how could the apostles think that they had eaten Christ's broken body, or drank his blood shed for them, when they yet saw his body whole before them, and knew his blood was in his veins? How could they have been persuaded to drink blood, against the express letter of the law, or to have eaten human flesh, or swallow their Lord and Master down their throats? This being so absurd in the opinion of all mankind, not excepting Lanfrank, Algerus, Guitmund, and others, who first stickled for an absurdity beyond all example, that they ingenuously confess, *That did their senses perceive what their faith doth oblige them to believe, the horror of it would be so great, that "rarus esset qui ab hoc sacramento non abhorreret," almost all persons would abhor the receiving this sacrament. Hence they give these two notable reasons why, though they do substantially eat the flesh and drink that very blood which our Lord shed upon the cross, yet they do this under the covert of the accidents of bread and wine; viz.

First, That human piety might not abhor the sacrament,† as they then would do; for (say they) should they see the colour of human flesh, and the colour of human blood, and taste the savour of them, the horror of it would hinder the receiving of the sacrament, or the profit of so doing.

Secondly, That this was "digna causa," a just reason why our Lord's body and blood should lie thus concealed under the species of bread and wine,‡ lest it should be known to the infidels, and lie open to their blasphemies; lest the action should be ridiculous to them, scandalous, inhuman, and execrable. And indeed this being not only ἀνθρωποφαγία, the eating of man's flesh, and drinking human blood; but also θεοφαγία, the eating of their God; who knows not that on both these accounts the Christian faith was and is still execrable, both to Jew and gentile, to pagan and Mahometan? For,

First, The Apologies of the primitive Christians tell us, this was one of the great accusations which the heathens made against the Christians, That they did eat human flesh. This Trypho owns to be a common imputation upon Christians, though he judged it incredible. Justin Martyr,§

Irenæus, Tertullian, Minutius, and others, take notice of it, and refute it, and constantly reject it, as the vilest calumny, and an abominable thing, saying,* We Christians, ἀνθρωπίνων σαρκῶν βορὰς οὐ γινώσκομεν, do not own eating of human flesh; it is an infamous thing, and falsely is reported of us.—This is (saith Theophilus†) the most wicked and inhuman of all crimes objected to us, σαρκῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἡμᾶς ἐφάπτεσθαι, that we partake of human flesh: it is not possible that we should be guilty of so vile a thing.—Amongst us there is no eating of human flesh (saith Tatian‡); you are false witnesses who thus accuse us.—No man (saith Athenagoras§) who is not mad, can charge us with this thing; οὐ γάρ ἐστι πάσασθαι κρεῶν ἀνθρώπινων, for we may not eat human flesh. —It is the calumny of the devil, saith Minutius: You may be ashamed to object it to us, saith Tertullian.‖ Whereas, had they received this as an article of faith, that they did daily eat the flesh of the man Christ, and thought his word obliged them to do this; with what sincerity could they, without all limitation or distinction, not only have denied, but even detested the doing so? But that which makes it certain and beyond all doubt, that they conceived that Christ had never taught them properly and substantially to eat his flesh and drink his blood in the sacrament, is the memorable history of Sanctus and Blandina, two Christian martyrs, written by Irenæus,¶ and preserved to us by Œcumenius; viz. That "the heathens having apprehended the servants of Christians catechised, and using force with them, that from them they might learn something secret; the servants having nothing else to say that might be pleasing to their tormentors, having heard from their masters that the sacrament was the body and blood of Christ, told this to the inquisitors; who apprehending that the Christians had done this very thing, gave notice of it to other heathens, who endeavoured to force the martyrs, Sanctus and Blandina, to confess it; to whom Blandina readily and boldly answered, 'How should they endure those things, who so fast as not to enjoy lawful flesh?'" Now had the ancient Christians believed this doctrine, that they did truly eat Christ's flesh and blood in the sacrament, how could Irenæus have represented it as a plain mistake, both in those servants and the heathens, to think the sacrament was really Christ's flesh and blood? or have introduced Blandina refuting this imagination, had it been the sentiment of the church of Christ then, since by so doing she must have rejected one article of Christian faith? Or, how could Œcumenius have put these words into his commentary, without endeavouring to explain or reconcile them to the doctrine of oral manducation, had it then obtained? Let us then again consider, whether that ought to be received as an article of faith, owned by all Christians from the beginning, which from the beginning was so expressly denied to be ὄντως καὶ αὐτόχρημα, indeed, reality, or, in the thing itself, the flesh and blood of Christ; which made all the apologists for, and first defenders of the Christians, deniers of the truth; and to represent that as a false report, an infamous thing, a calumny of the devil, which was the plain and evident result of their own faith, and of the words of their great Master, as they are now interpreted by the church of Rome.

But then, when we advance to the consideration of this doctrine, not only as it makes the Christian to eat human flesh, and drink of human blood, but as it is the eating of that very God we worship, as the Trent council* hath defined; this renders it absurd, ridiculous, and blasphemous. For,

First, The very heathens owned this as the absurdest and most abominable thing, to be abhorred more than death. When we call wine Bacchus (saith Cicero†), and our fruits Ceres, we use the common mode of speaking, "sed ecquem tam amentem esse putas qui illud quo vescatur Deum credat esse?" but can you think any person so mad as to imagine, that which he eats to be a god?—The Egyptians (saith Origen‡) think a brute creature to be God; and therefore they do μέχρι θανάτου φυλάξασθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ τῶν ζώου κρεῶν γεύσασθαι, abstain from eating of his flesh more than from death. We read, Gen. xliii. 32. that it was an abomination to the Egyptians to eat bread with the Hebrews; because (say Onkelos and Jonathan) the Hebrews did eat those cattle which the Egyptians worshipped: and Moses would depart from Egypt before he sacrificed to the God of Israel; lest he should sacrifice to him the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, (Exod. viii. 26.) i. e. the beasts which the Egyptians worshipped, and therefore did abhor to kill, or to see killed before their eyes. (See Bochart. Hieroz. par. i. lib. ii. cap. 34, 35. par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 16.) Averroes§ was a learned heathen, who flourished in the eleventh century, when this portentous doctrine first obtained, and it forced him thus to blaspheme the Christian faith: I have inquired into all religions, and have found none more foolish than the Christians, because that very God they worship, they with their teeth devour: and thus he concludes, "quandoquidem Christiani id comedunt quod adorant," &c. because the Christians eat what they do worship, let my soul go to the philosophers. And Bellarmine‖ himself confesseth, that this, among the heathens, was always judged "stultissimum paradoxum," the most foolish paradox, as (saith he) from the words of Averroes doth appear. Hence as the highest infamy which the Mahometans can cast upon us, we are by them reproached as the devourers of our God, as M. la Boulay¶ informs us; and they affirm, that by thus eating of Christ's flesh, the Christians use him worse than did the Jews; because, say they, it is more savage to eat his flesh and drink his blood, than only to procure his death.

Secondly, That the Jewish sentiments as to this matter were the same, we learn from the epistle of the prophet Jeremy to the captive Jews; for he informs them, that what the Babylonians worshipped, should afterward be eaten; and, by this (saith he) ye may know they are no gods, Baruch vi. 72. Nor can we doubt of this, if we believe what is so often declared by the Christian fathers, that this was God's design in making the distinction betwixt clean and unclean beasts, to secure his people from idolatry; because, in Egypt, all beasts were deified (saith Pseudo Justin) *except swine; God therefore calls some of them unclean, some clean, and did permit them to sacrifice the clean beasts, and forbid them to eat of the unclean; δεικνύων αὐτὰ ἀνάξια ὄντα τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ προσηγορίας τε καὶ τιμῆς καὶ διὰ τοῦ θύεσθαι καὶ ἐσθίεσθαι, by both these things shewing they were unworthy the name and honour of a Deity; because they were sacrificed and eaten; and because they were called unclean.—God (saith Theodoret†) pronouncing some beasts clean and others unclean, persuades us not to think that any of them could be gods; for, how (saith he) can any man of sense think that to be a god which he abominates as unclean, or which is offered to the true God, and eaten by himself; and this he frequently repeats. St. Jerome‡ informs us, that Moses did beat the golden calf to powder, and then made the Jews drink of it: "ut discant contemnere, quod in secessum projici viderant," that the people might learn to contemn what they saw went down into the draught. Now, could the same God, who had taken such care under the old testament to teach the people that that could not be their God, which they did eat and sacrifice, appoint under the new testament, that the Christians' God should be continually sacrificed and eaten? But,

Thirdly, Nothing is more certain, than that the Christian apologists, or fathers, continually ridiculed the heathen for worshipping such deities as might be eaten and sacrificed, and pronounced it the highest absurdity to do so. And,

(1.) They declaim against the thing itself, as infinitely absurd and foolish, declaring, that it was § ἀβελτερίας ἐσχάτης τὸ ἐσθιόμενον προσκυνεῖν, the extremity of madness to worship what we eat; that no man of sense can think that a God which is παρ' ἑαυτοῦ ἐσθιόμενον, eaten by himself;‖ that the great lawgiver of the Jews commanded them to eat what other nations worshipped as gods, ἵνα εὐκαταφρόνητα φαίνηται ὡς παρ' αὐτῶν ἐσθιόμενα, that they might appear despicable in their eyes, as being eaten by themselves;¶ that these things must be unworthy the name and honour of a God, διὰ τὸ ἐσθίεσθαι, because they were eaten.

(2.) They upon this account deride the ignorance and folly of the heathens, and look upon this as a sure indication of it, that they did worship what was eaten. The Greeks through ignorance (saith Clemens of Alexandria) σέβονται καὶ ἃ δέδωκεν αὐτοῖς εἰς βρῶσιν ὁ Θεὸς, worship even those things which God hath given them to eat, and so become ungrateful to him.—"Nonne et Apim bovem cum Egyptiis adoratis et pascitis?" Do not you (saith Minutius††), with the Egyptians, worship and also feed upon an ox, which you call Apis? And is not this as great a folly as the worship of an ass's head, which without reason you object to us? This Athanasius* looks upon as an instance of the abominable worship of the Egyptians, that the same flesh, which some of them did consecrate as a god, was made the food of others. The Egyptians adore a calf, the Lybians worship sheep, both which, in our nations, are sacrificed and fed upon; this (saith he) is a certain indication of the folly of the heathen worship.—The heathens (saith Theodoret†) should have considered, ὡς τούτων τὰ μὲν ἐσθίουσιν, that some of these things they eat ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀβελτερίας καὶ παραπληξίας ἐσχάτης καὶ ὧν ἤσθιον τὰς εἰκόνας ἐθεοποίησαν, but through extremity of folly and stupidity, they consecrate the images of those things themselves did eat. (See Tatian, p. 149. Orig. contr. Celsum, lib. v. p. 249.) Now can it possibly be conceived, that all these fathers should ridicule and expose the religion of the heathens, for that very thing which made so great a part of their own religion? That they should look on it as an abominable and repugnant thing in heathens, only to worship that which others did eat, if it had been a constant custom of all Christians to worship as God what they themselves did eat? Could they brand that as the extremity of madness, stupidity, and folly, when done by heathens, which their faith taught them was the highest act of religious worship, when performed by themselves? Surely these things give us sufficient reason with Scotus‡ to admire, why such an interpretation should be put upon this one article, as makes our faith contemptible to all who are guided by reason? Nor can we abstain from thinking with Petrus Cluniacensis's§ carnal man, that it is against humanity, against piety, to break with our hands, to tear with our teeth, and to devour, as we do common meat, the flesh and blood of Christ, or that God and man should be devoured by men, the Master by his disciples, the Lord by his servants, and Christ by Christians.

[12] Ver. 27. Πίετε ἐξ αὐτοῦ πάντες· Drink ye all of this.] From these words it is evident, that all who come to the holy communion, are by Christ's precept obliged as well to drink of the cup as to eat of the bread: for, whereas most Romanists pretend, that Christ said only, Drink ye all of this, to them to whom he said, when speaking of the bread, Do this; and that those words were only spoken to his apostles, whom he then made priests: to this I answer, that we have clear and convincing evidence, that these words, Drink ye all of this, are to be applied to others besides the apostles; as, v. gr. (1.) From Christ's institution; whence I argue thus, Christ instituted no other supper than that which he administered to his disciples: if then he did not institute that for all believers capable, they have no right to any part of it by virtue of Christ's institution; it can be to them no sacrament for whom it was not instituted by Christ, since, by the definition of the Trent council,‖ the sacraments of the new testament were all instituted by him; they expect no blessing from it, since that depends upon Christ's ordinance; nay, they must be esteemed sacrilegious usurpers, as laying claim to that sacrament which never by Christ's institution did belong to them. If Christ did institute that sacrament for all believers capable, that is, to be a standing ordinance, by which, as his disciples then did, so all believers capable should afterward eat of what he called his body, and drink of what he called his blood; then did he institute it to be received of all that were fitted for, and capable to receive it, and in it said unto them, Drink ye all of this.

This appears farther, from the reason annexed to the receiving of the sacrament by Christ's apostles; for, since that reason equally concerns all believers capable and fitted to receive it, the institution must concern them all. Now the reason why Christ said to his apostles, Take and eat what I have broken, is by himself declared to be this; because it was his body broken, or his body given, for them: Take it (saith Christ), this is my body given for you. This therefore being the reason why they were to take and eat; and this reason concerning all believers capable and fitted to receive it, as much as the apostles and succeeding priests, the institution or command, to take and eat, must equally concern them. This argument transferred upon the cup runs thus: The reason of the participating of the cup, viz. because it is the blood of the new testament, which is shed for the remission of sins, doth concern laics as well as priests, his blood being equally shed for both; therefore the command, Drink ye all of this, to which the reason is annexed, concerns them also. Again, another reason why Christ said to his apostles, Eat this bread and drink this cup, was that by so doing they might remember his death, his body broken, and his blood shed for them, saith St. Luke; and shew it forth till his second coming, saith St. Paul. Now this, as St. Paul clearly shews in his discourse to the Corinthians, and all the world believes, as well concerneth all believers as it doth priests; and therefore the drinking of the cup, by which, as well as eating of the bread, this commemoration is by our Lord's institution to be made, must equally concern them.

[13] Ver. 29. I will not henceforth drink of the fruit of the vine, &c.] Of this and the following verse, see note on Mark xiv. 25, 26.

[14] Ver. 31. Πάντες ὑμεῖς σκανδαλισθήσεσθε. All ye shall be offended,—for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, &c.] It is certain that these words, All ye shall be offended because of me, must signify a great sin in his disciples; viz. that of deserting their Lord, and ceasing to own themselves his disciples, which was a virtual renouncing their Master: for σκανδαλίζεσθαι ἐν ἐμοὶ, to be scandalized because of me, never bears any other sense in the New Testament. (See the note on Matt. xi. 6. xviii. 6.) The words of Zachary, xiii. 7. seem primarily to be understood of an evil shepherd, or of such evil teachers to whom God threateneth the sword. Christ therefore seemeth here to mention them, not as a prediction concerning him and his apostles, but only as a proverbial expression, or rather an argument à majori, that if this would happen on the account of smiting an evil shepherd, much more at the smiting the good and great Shepherd of the sheep.

[15] Ver. 34. Πρὶν ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι, before the cock crow, πρὶν ἢ δὶς φωνῆσαι, before he crow twice, Mark xiv. 30.] Here note, that there is a double crowing of the cock mentioned by heathen authors, Ammianus,* Aristophanes,† and Juvenal;‡ the first was about midnight, the second at the fourth watch of the night, or the breaking in of the day; and this latter, as being the louder and more observable, in the enumeration of the times of the night, is that which is properly called ἀλεκτοροφωνία, or cock-crowing: so Mark xiii. 35. Ye know not when the Son of man comes, in the evening, or at midnight, ἢ ἀλεκτοροφωνίας, or at cock-crowing, or in the morning. So Censorinus§ and Macrobius‖ reckon from midnight to cock-crowing, and from thence to the morning; and Julius Pollux¶ says the same. Of this crowing of the cock, is St. Matthew and the other evangelists to be understood, when they relate Christ's words thus, before the cock crow (i. e. before that time of the night which bears that name, and that crowing of the cock which is emphatically so called), thou shalt deny me thrice, as appears from St. Mark, saying, that the cock crew after his first denial of Christ, xiv. 68. and crew the second time after his third denial, ver. 72.

[16] Ver. 38. Περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even to death.] There be many circumstances in our Saviour's passion which seem to shew his sorrow was exceeding great, and much surpassing the common sorrow of many who have been condemned to die. As, v. g.

First, The emphatical expressions by which the Scripture represents these sorrows; for, to express the greatness of them, they are here styled deadly sorrows: it was sorrow which reached to and surrounded his whole soul, it filled him with grief of heart, for ἤρξατο λυπεῖσθαι, he began to be grieved, saith St. Matthew, ver. 37. ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, to be filled with fear and anguish, saith St. Mark, xiv. 33. ἀδημονεῖν, to be faint and restless in his spirit, say they both.

Secondly, The greatness of the sorrows he endured, may be concluded from his importunate petitions to be delivered from what he feared; for he pathetically cries out, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: this prayer he thrice repeats upon his knees, and falling flat upon his face, to shew the strength and vehemence of this desire; and yet St. Luke adds, that, being in an agony, he prayed ἐκτενέστερον, with greater vehemency than before: (Luke xxii. 24.) he put up prayers and supplications with strong cries and tears; (Heb. v. 7.) and sure that cup must be exceeding bitter, which he so highly dreaded, and, with such cries and tears, and humble importunities, desired to be delivered from.

Thirdly, This will appear if we consider the agonies he suffered in the garden upon the apprehension of this bitter cup; for such was then his sorrow, that it forced open all his pores, and made even clots of blood to issue from them; now if a sudden watery sweat shews an extremity of fear and consternation of the mind, who can sufficiently conceive the greatness of that horror which produced these clots of blood?

Fourthly, This will be farther evident from the consideration of that angel, which, by God's commission, came from heaven to strengthen and support him under the apprehension of his sufferings; for sure that burden must be very weighty, which our Lord seemed thus unable to sustain, and under which his Father seemed so concerned to support him. And,

Fifthly, This may be probably concluded from that pathetical expression with which his soul expired, viz. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? (See the note on xxvii. 46.)

I add, That this excess of sorrow could not arise merely from the apprehension that he was to die, that his soul was for a season to be separated from his body, or that he was to suffer a death full of pain and ignominy. For (1.) the apostle doth inform us, that he was heard, i. e. delivered from his fear (Heb. v. 7. see the note there): and yet we know he was not delivered from the pain and ignominy of the cross, but suffered death upon it. (2.) If this excess of sorrow and consternation of his soul, proceeded only from the fear of such a death as any mortal man might suffer, for which he knew he should be gloriously rewarded, and from which he knew he should in three days be delivered; we must confess he was more troubled at the apprehension of it, than Socrates and many other philosophers of old, who had learned μὴ ἐν ταῖς συμφοραῖς περιλύπους ὑπάρχειν, not to be much afflicted with calamities; who suffered death with an undaunted courage, and waxed not pale at the divulsion or breaking of their limbs, though they had no such encouragements to suffer as he had; and that he was far more timorous than were those martyrs, who, with undaunted courage, suffered for his sake the greatest cruelties: and yet it is very difficult to assign any other cause of this excess of sorrow which then seized him; it being certain,

First, That he could not lie under the sense of any anger or indignation God had conceived against him; for sure he could not think God was then angry with him, when he was doing an act of most profound obedience to him, for which he had declared his Father loved him, and for which he knew he would reward him; nor is this well consistent with his commending his soul into the hands of his affectionate Father, his assurance he should go to Paradise, or his constant faith that he was still the Son of God, in whom his soul delighted. And hence it follows,

Secondly, That he could not lie under any doubtings of his Father's love, or any despondings upon that account; for he still addresses to him as his God and Father, and commends his spirit into his Father's hands; he declares his Father therefore loved him, because he laid down his life for his sheep. (John x. 17.) And he thus suffered in prospect of the joy or the reward of these his sufferings from God set before him. And this demonstratively follows from this consideration, that had he then doubted of God's love and favour to him, he could not at the same time have believed that he was the Son of God in whom he delighted; and so, though Satan did not prevail upon him at the first, he must have in this last temptation induced him to doubt of this particular. Nor,

Thirdly, Can I believe that God laid any grief or punishment upon the soul of Christ by his immediate hand. I have declared my opinion that it is not necessary to say, the future evils which the souls of wicked men shall suffer come from God's immediate hand; and endeavoured to shew that they may be accounted for, by considering their perpetual exclusion from a state of happiness, their eternal duration, and from the natural workings of their consciences in such a state; and what God doth not do to the wicked, doubtless he did not to his own beloved Son, when he became obedient to the death at his command. And, secondly, I am not able to conceive what he could suffer from the immediate hand of God; could God withdraw from him the sense of his favour, and yet not only highly love him at the same time for this very action, but set before him the joy and the reward he would confer upon him for thus suffering? If there were any seeming diminution of the sense of the Divine love, and of that sense of joy and consolation which deriveth from it, that may be better attributed to his excess of sorrow, which so possessed him, as that his human nature could not as formerly attend to the consideration of it: and this being innocent in itself, and sometimes incident to the most pious men, might then befal our Saviour, when he was in all things, sin only excepted, to be made like to us, that he might succour us when tempted. (Heb. ii. 17, 18. iv. 15, 16.) Or did he raise within him any sense of what might justly be inflicted on him for the sin of man, when he thus undertook to suffer in his stead? This surely must be needless, in respect to him who had the clearest view of the desert and heinousness of sin, and the most perfect knowledge of what God's law had threatened to it. This apprehension I conceive most likely to have been the ground of this our Saviour's bitter agony; but then this was the product not of God's immediate hand, but of his perfect knowledge, purity, and hatred of sin. Thirdly, Add to this, that the Scripture seems to be wholly silent in this matter; it saith, indeed, The Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all, or made our sins to meet upon him: (Isa. liii. 6.) but surely they then only were thus laid on him when he bare them. Now St. Peter doth assure us, that he bare our sins in his own body on the tree; and that by the stripes with which he was there smitten, we are healed. (1 Pet. ii. 24, 25.) Again, it is said, he gave his soul an offering for sin: (Isa. liii. 10.) but then it is evident to a demonstration, that his soul there only signifies his life; for so it follows, ver. 12. he poured forth his soul unto death; in which sense Christ himself declares that he did δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, give his life a ransom for many. (Matt. xx. 28.) It is farther said, that he was made a curse for us: (Gal. iii. 13.) but then it is declared expressly, that he was only so by being hanged on a tree, or by suffering that death, which all that suffered were by the law pronounced accursed. (See the note there.) Lastly, it is often said, he suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust: but then it well deserves to be observed, that the Scripture represents him as doing the great work of redemption, rather by what he suffered for us in the body, than by what he suffered in his soul; for it informs us, that he bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Christ once, that he died, and suffered for our sins; (Heb. x. 10. 1 Pet. ii. 24.) and yet it was not his soul, but his body only, which was subject to death; that he shed, he poured out his blood for the remission of our sins, that he washed us from our sins in his blood, that he made our peace through the blood of the cross, that he obtained eternal redemption for us by his own blood, that he sanctified us by his own blood, and by it cleanseth us from all sin, that we have redemption through his blood, even the remission of sins, and that he is our propitiation through faith in his blood. The sacrament we are to celebrate in thankful remembrance of what he suffered for us, doth only call us to remember that his body was given or broken for us, and his blood shed for the remission of our sins; so that if we would speak according to the constant language of the Holy Ghost in Scripture, we must ascribe the work of our redemption to our Lord's sufferings in the body for us; in which it is certain that he could suffer nothing answerable unto the punishment of damned spirits, but only gave his life a ransom for many.

[17] Ver. 39. Ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον. He fell upon his face, &c.] At first he fell upon his knees, and afterward upon his face, saying, Father, εἰ δυνατὸν, if it be possible, (i. e. if it be so, not in the nature of the thing, for thus he declared, all things were possible to his Father, Mark xiv. 35, 36. but according to his decree, and the Divine wisdom, if that saw any other way, by which his glory, and the salvation of men, might equally be consulted), let this cup pass from me; and when he saith, (ver. 42.) if this cup cannot pass from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. As this prayer is in effect the same with the former, it being said, that he prayed thrice, saying the same words, so the import of it seems to be to this effect; Though the condition of human nature prompts me to desire freedom from this bitter cup, yet seeing for this end came I to this hour, (John xii. 27.) and had a body prepared for me, that being obedient in it to the death, I might do thy will, O God! (Heb. x. 5. 7.) I submit my natural to thy Divine will.

My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.] Woltzogenius here notes, that it is evident that Christ could not be truly God; because he could not deliver himself from death, but was forced to pray to his Father for that deliverance. I answer, that hence indeed it follows, that he would not do this; but that he could not do it, is evidently false: for he who, with a word, struck all those who came to apprehend him to the ground, could certainly have escaped out of their hands, had he so pleased.

[18] Ver. 41. Τὸ πνεῦμα πρόθυμον, ἡ δὲ σὰρξ ἀσθενής· Watch and pray, &c. the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak.] What it is to enter into temptation, see note on Matt. vi. 13. Christ therefore here bids them to pray, not that they might not be tempted; for that this should befal them, our Lord assured them when he said, Satan had desired to sift them as wheat; (Luke xxii. 31.) but that they might not give place to it, or fall by it into sin. The following words, the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak, are not intended as an excuse, or mitigation of their sin, but as a motive to this prayer and vigilance; as if he should have said, You have all made large promises that if you should die with me you would not forsake me, and this you said readily, and with a purpose so to do; yet let me tell you, that when the temptation actually assaults; when fear, shame, pain, the danger of punishment, and death, are within view, and present to your sense, the weakness of the flesh will certainly prevail over these resolutions, if you use not the greatest vigilance, and do not pray with fervency for the Divine assistance.

[19] Ver. 45. Sleep on now, &c.] For by your watching you can shew no farther kindness and concern for me, who am now to be delivered into the hands of them who are emphatically styled sinners of the gentiles, Gal. ii. 15. Or, καθεύδετε τὸ λοιπὸν, sleep hereafter, and take your rest: behold, now is no time of sleeping, for the hour of your and my temptation is at hand. So Phavorinus saith, τὸ λοιπὸν ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀκολούθως, the word λοιπὸν signifies hereafter: it signifies, saith Stephanus, "deinceps, postea." So may τὸ λοιπὸν well be rendered, Acts xxvii. 20. 1 Cor. i. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Heb. x. 13. And this interpretation seems to be confirmed by the word ἀπέχει, added by St. Mark, chap. xiv. It is enough that you have slept already: or if, with the Vulgar, the Glossaries, and our Bois, we here interpret τὸ λοιπὸν, jam, now, as our translation doth, these words, being rendered interrogatively, give the sense thus: Do you sleep now, and take your rest, when the hour of temptation and the traitor is at hand? Ἀπέχει, it is enough that you have slept so long; arise now, and let us go hence.

[21] Ver. 52. Put up thy sword into its place, πάντες γὰρ οἱ λαβόντες μάχαιραν, ἐν μαχαίρᾳ ἀπολοῦνται, for all that take the sword shall perish by the sword.] St. Austin here tells us, "Gladium accipit quisquis, magistratu legitimo non concedente, eo utitur ad sanguinem proximi fundendum;" He takes the sword, who uses it to shed his neighbour's blood, without licence from the magistrate: which certainly is true of private persons in all cases, seeing self-defence against the assault of another private person is permitted by the magistrate: for if it be once granted that private persons, when they conceive that they are injured by him, may take up the sword against the magistrate, and repel force by force, tumults will be endless, and the authority of laws and the decision of judges will be precarious, it being ordinary for private persons, and for all sects and parties who are restrained by the laws, to think that they are injured; but yet it is not certain that this is the true import of these words, which Grotius and others thus interpret, Put up thy sword, thou needest not to use it in my cause against the injuries of the Jews, for, by God's sentence and decree, they that take the sword to shed the blood of the innocent, shall perish by the sword; and this the Jews will find by that tremendous vengeance the sword of the Romans shall execute upon them for this fact. And this interpretation is confirmed from the like words used, Rev. xiii. 10. viz. He that killeth (you) with the sword, shall be killed with the sword (of Christ); here is (the ground of) the faith and patience of the saints; viz. that that God, to whom vengeance belongeth, will plead their cause, and recompense vengeance to their enemies. (Rom. xii. 19.)

[23] Ver. 59, 60. They sought false witnesses, and found none.] See note on Mark xiv. 55, 56.

[24] Ver. 62. Τί οὗτοί σου καταμαρτυροῦσιν; What is it that these witness against thee?] Note here, that τί is frequently put for διὰ τι; why? so Matt. viii. 26. τί δειλοί ἐστε; why are ye fearful? Luke ii. 48. τί ἐποίησας; why hast thou dealt thus with us? John i. 25. τί οὖν βαπτίζεις; why then baptizest thou? Mark ii. 16. τί ὅτι; why is it that he eats with publicans? (See more examples in the note there.) So that these words seem to be better rendered, either as in the paraphrase, or, to what end do men witness against thee, if thou wilt answer nothing?

[25] Ver. 63. Ἐξορκίζω σε κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ· I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell me, whether thou art the Christ, the Son of God?] That this adjuration was equivalent to an oath, is proved, note on Matt. v. 34. 1 Thess. v. 27. This question in St. Luke runs thus, Art thou the Christ? (xxii. 67.) Whence it is highly probable, that, in the Jewish sense, to be the Christ, or the Messiah, and to be the Son of God, was the same thing.

[26] Ver. 64. Ἀπ' ἄρτι ὄψεσθε τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου καθήμενον ἐκ δεξιῶν τῆς δυνάμεως, καὶ ἐρχόμενον ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. From henceforth ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.] Here note, (1.) that the right hand of Power, or greatness, as it is in Heb. i. 13. viii. 1. is the right hand of God, who by the Jews is called Power. So Buxtorf in the word גבורה saith, the word is used by the rabbins and the cabalists as an epithet of God, it being usual with them to say, This comes מפי הגבורה, i. e. from the mouth of God. So Kimchi on Josh. vii. what was said to Moses, Lepani Hagebora, before God: and Ainsworth on Numb. vii. informs us, that Solomon Jarchi saith, Moses received not the offerings of the princes at the dedication of the tabernacle, till he was commanded by the mouth of the Power, that is, of God, (xxii. 69.) Note, (2.) that to come in or with the clouds of heaven, was by the Jews looked on as a certain indication of their Messiah: so the Targum on 1 Chron. iii. 24. And the sons of Elioenai are Hodaiah ועני and Anani, He is the king Messiah, who is to be revealed. So Tanchum, He is the king Messiah: for it is said, Dan. vii. 13. I saw in a vision of the night, and behold, עם ענני he comes with the clouds, or, as the Son of man; and in the Talmud, in the treatise of the Sanhedrin, the Messias is called Bar Nepheli, the Son of the clouds, which, saith R. David Cohen de Lara, is the Greek word νεφελαὶ, clouds, answering to hananim, and that the Messiah is so called, because it is written in Daniel, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. Now hence we learn how apposite Christ's answer is to the question of the high-priest; viz. You ask me whether I am the Christ, and will not believe that I am so, but you shall shortly be convinced of it to your great sorrow, when you see me coming with the clouds of heaven, to take vengeance of you for your unbelief. Note also, that these words cannot relate to the final day of judgment, because it is said ἀπ' ἄρτι, within a little while, and by St. Luke, ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, from this time, shall ye see the Son of man coming, &c. Moreover, as his sitting at the right hand of Power was visible to them by the effusion of the Holy Ghost, so was his coming to the destruction of Jerusalem, (See note on xxiv. 30.)

[27] Ver. 65. Then the high-priest rent his clothes.] This is expressly forbidden the high-priest, not only as to his sacerdotal vestments, but also as to his other garments, (Lev. xxi.) because he was not to appear before God in the habit of a mourner; but they by their traditions had so qualified that precept, as to allow the high-priest to rend his clothes at the bottom, but allowed him not to do it from the top to the breast; so Cunæus de Rep. lib. ii. cap. 3. though others say, he only was forbidden so to do in the time of his ministry: for Jonathan the high-priest rends his clothes, 1 Macc. xi. 71. and in Josephus* we read twice in one chapter, that the high-priests τὰς ἐσθῆτας διερρήξαντο, rent their clothes.

[28] Ver. 69. Peter sat without in the hall, καὶ προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ μία παιδίσκη, and a damsel came to him, &c.] To reconcile the seeming contrarieties in the evangelists, observe,

First, That whereas St. Matthew says, Peter sat, St. John, that he stood, he might do both, being sometimes sitting, and sometimes standing.

Secondly, Whereas it is said here he sat without, and yet ver. 58. that he followed Christ into the high-priest's palace, both are true; he being without that place where Christ was examined by the council, but not without the door of the house of Caiaphas; for afterward he went out of it, (ver. 75.)

Thirdly, Whereas the damsel here saith to Peter, Thou wast with Jesus; but the person in St. John, xviii. 25. Art thou not one of his disciples? it may be answered, that the question in St. John, according to the Hebrew way of speaking, is equivalent to an affirmation; and his disciples being all with him when he was apprehended, to be then with him, and to be one of his disciples, must be the same.

Fourthly, Whereas here in Matthew, and St. Mark, the second person who said, This man was with Jesus, was ἄλλη, another woman, ver. 71. παιδίσκη, a damsel, Mark xiv. 69. in Luke, ἕτερος, another person said, Thou art one of them, Luke xxii. 58. I think not fit, in answer to this, to say, ἕτερος may signify another, whether man or woman, as some do; for Peter's answer is, Man, I am not. The text affords us a better answer, viz. that the damsel said the second time, This man was with Jesus; but then she said this, not to Peter, but τοῖς ἐκεῖ, ver. 71. τοῖς παρεστηκόσιν, to the standers by, Mark xiv. 69. and said only οὗτος, this man was one of them; upon this, a man of the company accosts him personally, saying, Σὺ, Thou art one of them.

[29] Ver. 72. Οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον, I know not the man.] Very frivolous is the excuse of Hilary† here, and St. Ambrose‡ on Luke xxii. which they make for Peter, saying, He lied not in saying, I know not the man; because he knew him to be God: for this is, saith St. Jerome,§ so to defend the servant, as to accuse his Master of a lie: for if St. Peter did not deny him, Christ must have falsely said, Thou shalt deny me thrice. Cornelius à Lapide ingenuously confesseth, that he sinned mortally, by denying Christ with his mouth, and by that denial fell from grace; and it is certain, that by confirming this denial with an oath, and adding horrid execrations to it, his sin was highly aggravated. I therefore would not willingly say, as our best divines do, that his sin was a sin of infirmity; it being hard to conceive he could do all this without great checks of his conscience; but rather, that his bitter weeping, and his quick repentance, after Christ looked upon him, made atonement for it.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. [1] WHEN the morning (of the second day of the paschal feast) was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death:

2. And (accordingly) when they had bound him, they led him away, (from the house of Caiaphas to the judgment-hall, John xviii. 28.) and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor, (as one who by their law was to die as a blasphemer, John xii. 7. and by the Roman laws, as one who forbade the people to pay tribute to Cæsar, and made himself a king in prejudice to Cæsar, Luke xxiii. 2. John xii. 12.)

3. Then Judas, which had betrayed him (to them), when he saw that he was condemned (by them, and rescued not himself out of their hands), repented himself, and (Gr. repenting) [2] brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders (which he had received from them, that he might betray him to them),

4. Saying (to them), I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said (to him), What is that to us? see thou to that.

5. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and [3] hanged himself (executing upon himself that judgment which he had deserved for that fact).

6. And the chief priests took (up) the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful to put them (again) into the treasury (among the oblations consecrated to the service of God), because it is (the sum given as) the price of blood.

7. And they took counsel (together), and bought with them the (field, called the) potter's field, to bury strangers in (i. e. which they allotted for strangers to bury their dead in).

8. Wherefore that field (being bought with that money which was the price of blood) was called, The field of blood, until this day.

9. (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by [4] Jeremy the prophet, saying, (in the words recorded, Zech. xi. 12.) And they took the thirty pieces of silver, (which was) the price of him that was (so) valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value (as a slave, or servant: see note on xxvi. 15.)

10. And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.)

11. And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said to him, (It is as) thou sayest.

12. And when he was accused o the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing, (as knowing it was to no purpose to speak to them, Luke xxii. 68.)

13. Then said Pilate to him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? (yet thou answerest nothing.)

14. And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15. Now at that [5] feast (of the Passover, John xviii. 39. kept in memory of their redemption from Egyptian thraldom) the governor was wont to release to the people a prisoner, whom they would (desire).

16. And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas, (guilty of robbery, John xviii. 40. sedition, and murder, Luke xxiii. 19.)

17. Therefore, when they were gathered together, Pilate (hoping they would be ashamed to release such a villain) said to them, Whom will you that I (should) release to you? Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ (the King of the Jews? Mark xv. 9.

18. And this notorious malefactor he proposed to them, to preserve Jesus); for he knew that for envy they had delivered him (i. e. Jesus, into his hands).

19. When he was set down on the judgment-seat, his wife sent to him a (messenger), saying, Have thou nothing to do with (the condemnation of) that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him (which convince me it will be dangerous for thee to condemn him).

20. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and (desire the governor to) destroy Jesus.

21. (Then) the governor (being willing to release Jesus, Luke xxiii. 20.) answered, and (ἀποκριθεὶς, speaking again) said to them, Whether of the twain (mentioned) will ye that I release to you? They said, (Let it be) Barabbas.

22. Pilate said to them, What shall I do then with Jesus who is called Christ? They all (in compliance with the chief priests and elders, ver. 20.) said to him, Let him be crucified.

23. And the governor said, Why, (I find no cause of death in him, Luke xxiii. 22.) what evil hath he done (to deserve it)? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

24. When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing (in the behalf of Christ), but that rather a tumult was made, [6] he took water, and washed his hands, before the multitude, saying, (I by this ceremony declare, that) I am innocent of (from) the blood of this just person: see ye to it (that it lie not heavy upon you).

25. Then answered all the people, and said, (Whatsoever guilt there is in shedding) his blood (may it) be on us, and on our children.

26. [7] Then (to gratify the multitude, Mark xv. 15.) released he Barabbas to them: and when he had scourged (Gr. scourging) Jesus, he delivered him (up to them) to be crucified.

27. Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common-hall, and gathered to him the whole band of soldiers.

28. And they stripped him (of his own garments), and [8] put on him a scarlet robe (such as was worn by kings).

29. And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and (instead of a sceptre, they put) a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews!

30. And they spit upon him, and took the reed (out of his hand), and smote him on the head (with it).

31. And after that they had (thus vilified and) mocked him, they took the robe off from him (dethroning him from his pretended kingdom), and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him.

32. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name, (coming from the field, Mark xv. 21.) [9] him they compelled to bear his cross (with him, who through weakness was not sufficient to bear it to the place of execution).

33. And when they were come to a place called [10] Golgotha, that is to say, A place of a (the) skull, (where, saith tradition, the first Adam was buried),

34. [11] They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall (to intoxicate him, and take off the sense of his pain); and when he had tasted (thereof, or what it was,) he would not drink of it.

35. And (when) they (had) crucified him, they parted his garments, (except his woven coat, into four parts, John xix. 23, 24.) casting lots (for his coat): that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, (Psal. xxii. 19.) They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

36. And then sitting down, they watched him there;

37. And (Pilate) set up over his head his accusation, written (in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, Luke xxiii. 38.) THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

38. [12] Then were there two thieves crucified with him, one on the right hand, and another on the left; (and so that Scripture was fulfilled which said, He was numbered with the transgressors, Mark xv. 28.)

39. And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads,

40. And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself, if thou be the Son of God, (and) come down from the cross.

41. Likewise also the chief priests, mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said,

42. He saved others; (but) himself he cannot save. If he be (indeed) the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe (in) him.

43. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him, (or delighteth in him, Psal. xxii. 9.) for he said, I am the Son of God.

44. (One of) the thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth, (saying, If thou be the Christ, save thyself and us; but the other rebuked him, &c. Luke xxiii. 39—43.)

45. Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land (of Judea) until the ninth hour, (the sun being darkened, Luke xxiii. 45.)

46. And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, [13] Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou (so) forsaken me (as to give me into the hands of my enemies)?

47. Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias.

48. And straightway [14] one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar (which the soldiers drank), and put it on a reed, and gave (it) him to drink (to recreate his spirits).

49. The rest said, Let be, (Gr. let him alone,) let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50. Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, (said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; and having said this, John xix. 28—30. he) yielded up the ghost.

51. And, behold, [15] the veil of the temple (which parted the holy place from the most holy) was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; (Christ having, by his death, procured for us an entrance into the holy of holies, Heb. x. 20.) and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent;

52. And the graves were opened, and [16] many bodies of saints which slept arose,

53. And came out of the (their) graves after his resurrection, (who was the first-born from the dead, Coloss. i. 28.) and went into the holy city, and appeared to many.

54. Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, (viz. the soldiers, ver. 36.) saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying (some of them), [17] Truly, this was the Son of God; (and others, This was a just man, Luke xxiii. 47. and all that were present, smiting their breasts, departed, ver. 48.)

55. And many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee (to Jerusalem), ministering to him (of their substance).

56. Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James (the less) and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

57. When the even was come, there came [18] a rich man of Arimathea, (an honourable counsellor, Mark xv. 43. a good and just man, who expected the kingdom of God, and consented not to the counsel or deeds of them that condemned him, Luke xxiii. 50, 51.) named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58. He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus (that it might not be buried with the malefactors). Then Pilate (inquiring of the centurion, and being certified by him, that Jesus was dead indeed, Mark xv. 44, 45.) commanded the body to be delivered (to him).

59. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean (fine) linen cloth, (and Nicodemus, bringing a mixture of myrrh and aloes, of about a hundred pound weight, they wrapped up the body in the linen cloths, with the spices, as the Jews use to bury, John xix. 39, 40.)

60. [19] And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out of the (a) rock, (and wherein was never yet man laid, John xix. 41.) and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

61. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre; (who beheld where he was laid, Mark xv. 47. and prepared spices and ointments for his body, Luke xxiii. 56.)

62. Now the next day, that followed the day of preparation (viz. the sabbath-day in the morning), the chief priests and pharisees came together to Pilate,

63. Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, whilst he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again.

64. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say to the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

65. Pilate said to them, Ye have a watch: go your way, and make it as sure as you can.

66. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, (as Dan. vi. 17.) and setting a watch (i. e. a guard of sixty Roman soldiers).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΡΩΙ'ΑΣ δὲ γενομένης, When the morning was come.] This was the morning of the 15th of Nisan, and so the first day of the feast, as to the holy convocation; but the second day as to the putting away leaven out of their families, which was to be done on the fourteenth day on the evening. (See the appendix to chap. xiv. of St. Mark.)

[2] Ver. 3. Ἀπέστρεψε τὰ τριάκοντα ἀργύρια· Judas, when he saw that he was condemned, repenting, returned the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests.] It seems to me not improbable, that Judas when he betrayed Christ might have imagined, as the disciples did, and as the Jews thought of their Messias, that he would not have died, but either would have conveyed himself out of the soldiers' hands, as he did from the multitude, when they sought to stone him, or cast him down a precipice; or by some other miraculous way, would have preserved himself: and of this opinion, saith Theophylact, on ver. 5. were some of the fathers. And when he saw it was otherwise, he is not only sorry for what he had done, but confesses his sin, throws back the money as unlawfully got, and therefore not to be retained, but renounced together with the sin; quod enim scelere partum est, non debet retineri, sed cum ipso scelere abjici; and proclaims the innocency of his Lord: yet, that his sorrow was not that godly sorrow that works true repentance, is evident from our Lord's declaration, xxvi. 24. that it had been better for him he had not been born; and from his going to his own place. (Acts i. 25.) Moreover, it also seems to me a wonderful sign of the stupidity of the chief priests and elders, that they could answer, What is that to us? for could they think it no sin to hire a man to betray innocent blood? do they not confess, this very money was the price of blood? ver. 6. and, was it not the very money they gave to purchase that blood? and, was not the field they bought with it styled, upon this account, The field of blood? and, was not this a lasting testimony of their guilt, whose money purchased this blood? and therefore, Stephen roundly tells them, that they had been οἱ προδόται, the betrayers and murderers of that just one: (Acts vii. 52.) and they themselves, when the miracles done in Christ's name had awakened them, begin to be troubled, that the apostles should bring this man's blood upon them. (Acts v. 28.)

[3] Ver. 5. Καὶ ἀπελθὼν, ἀπήγξατο· And going away, he hanged himself.] That this is the proper import of these words, we learn from a parallel place in Arrian, upon Epictetus,* viz. That it is no intolerable thing to be hanged; for when any man judges it reasonable so to do, he goes and hangs himself. It bears no other sense in Tobit, when Sara, the daughter of Raguel, is said to be so sorry, ὥστε ἀπάγξασθαι, as to think of hanging herself, iii. 10. or in the words of Job, vii. 15. My soul chooseth strangling, that violent kind of death, rather than life. This is evident (1.) from the provocation which caused this grief, viz. that her maids reproached her as ἀποπνίγουσα, having strangled her seven husbands; and seeing they were thus dead, bade her go after them, ver. 8, 9. by these words, putting this very thought into her head; whence it follows, that hearing these things, she was so troubled, ὥστε ἀπάγξασθαι, as to think of strangling herself. (2.) This is still farther evident, from the consideration that restrained her, not from her grief, but from doing as they bade her, ver. 9. If I shall do this, I shall be a reproach to my father; not surely by being grieved and melancholy, but by cutting off myself by such a kind of death as is the punishment of great malefactors, ver. 10. And, (3.) that her grief and melancholy, and her desire of death, continued still as long as ever, appeareth from her following prayer to God, εἶπον, ἀπολῦσαί με, which is not to be rendered as Mr. Clerc doth, I said, Take me away; for the words preceding, καὶ νῦν κύριε, will not admit of that translation, and now, O Lord, I said, &c. but they are to be rendered in the imperative thus, And now, O Lord, command, or speak, that I may be taken away, and may not hear any more these reproaches; (ver. 13.) and, if it pleases thee not to kill me, ἐπίταξον ἀπολυθῆναι, command that I may be delivered, (ver. 6.) So again is the phrase used of Ahithophel, 2 Sam. xvii. 23. ἀπῆλθεν καὶ ἀπήγξατο, he went away, and hanged himself; not dying with excess of grief and melancholy, as some think; since that, in all likelihood, would have hindered him from setting his house in order, or giving such a solemn charge concerning it: as for the Hebrew חנק, that it very properly signified such a violent suffocation, is apparent, in that this chanak, or chinnuck, is one of their four kinds of death inflicted upon malefactors, and that they used proverbially to say,* If thou would be strangled, hang yourself upon a great tree. Nor is it necessary that the word should bear any other sense in Ælian,† when he says, σκώμματα οὐ μόνον ἐλύπησε ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπέκτεινε, scoffs have not only made men sad, but killed them: for though Socrates being scoffed at, laughed; yet Poliager, ἀπήγξατο, hanged himself: for these scoffs might be said to kill him, which caused him thus to slay himself. But then it will be asked, how this hanging himself can be reconciled with St. Peter's account of the death of Judas, that πρήνης γενόμενος, falling down headlong, or, as some copies have it, ἀποκρεμάμενος, thus hanging, he burst asunder, and all his bowels gushed out; "suspensus crepuit medius," saith the Vulgar; that is, leaping down, or precipitating himself from the tree on which he hanged himself, he had a rupture, by reason of the great jerk of that fall, which broke his peritonæum, and made his bowels fall into his scrotum: which frequently happens upon leaping or other violent motions of the lower parts. And, if this reading of the Latin and some Greek copies be allowed, St. Peter's account will be only an improvement of what St. Matthew said, and a declaration of what followed upon hanging himself: or, if we retain πρήνης γενόμενος, that is, saith Stephanus, in caput se dejiciens ex alto, seu πρηνιχθεὶς, and may be rendered præcipitatus, or "semet præcipitans crepuit medius," and precipitating himself, he burst in the middle; and then the halter which made him πρήνης, or in caput propendens, will be still hinted at by St. Peter. Or, if the falling of his bowels into the scrotum, be not thought sufficient to answer to those words, his bowels gushed out, the rim of his belly being burst, I know not why, in this extraordinary instance, we may not admit of a more than ordinary providence, to render the death of this traitor the more remarkable. Thus of Herod Agrippa, St. Chrysostom‡ saith, That because he gave not glory to God, διερράγη καὶ ἐξεχύθη τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ, he burst asunder, and his bowels gushed out. Pleasant here is the imagination of some of the fathers, that Judas knowing that Christ was to descend to hell to bring thence the souls that were there, went and hanged himself, that his soul might get thither before him, and so might be thence delivered with the rest. (So Theophanes, hom. 27. p. 202. Theophylact, in locum.) Better is their note upon his returning the thirty pieces of silver, viz. that "quod scelere partum est, non debet retineri, sed cum ipso scelere rejici;" that which is got by wickedness, ought not to be retained, but returned, and rejected with the sin.

[4] Ver. 9. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken, διὰ Ἱερεμίου τοῦ προφήτου, by Jeremiah the prophet.] Against the truth of this the Jews object, that the words cited here are not to be found in Jeremy, but only in the prophet Zachary. To which the learned answer:

First, That it is not certain, that the word Jeremy was in the original copies; for the Syriac and Persic versions have it not: so when this objection was made in St. Augustine's* time, he answers, Let this objector know, that all copies read not, by Jeremy the prophet, but some only, by the prophet; we may say therefore, those copies are most to be relied on which have not the name of Jeremy: but then he ingenuously confesses, that he durst not depend upon this answer, because most of the Latin and most Greek copies had the word Jeremy; and it is not to be thought, they would have put in a word to make the Scripture faulty.

Secondly, Dr. Lightfoot says, the prophecy of Jeremiah was placed first in the volume of the prophets, and so became the running title of that whole volume; so that what was writ in any of them, might be said to be written by Jeremy the prophet; but, though Jeremy might be placed first, I can hardly think, that Jeremy the prophet should signify the prophet Isaiah; and finding no other words of other prophets cited thus in the whole New Testament, I can hardly believe these words cited after this manner. And, therefore,

Thirdly, Observe, that St. Jerome† expressly affirms, that these very words, were writ, and read by him in an apocryphal book of the prophet Jeremy. And seeing we find, 2 Macc. ii. from ver. 1. to 9. many words spoken by the prophet Jeremy, which are not in the book of his prophecy, why might not these words also have been spoken by him, and kept in memory, or in some writing, till the time of Zachary? Of whom it is observable, that he loved to use the words of Jeremy, as will appear by comparing Zech. i. 4. with Jer. xviii. 11. and Zech. iii. 8. with Jer. xxiii. 5. Hence the Jews used to say, the spirit of Jeremy was in Zachary, and so both made but one prophet; and the Bishop of Bath and Wells and Mr. Mede think it highly probable, that Jeremiah wrote the ninth, tenth, and the eleventh chapters of Zechariah, in which last chapter these words are.

Ver. 14. Ὥστε θαυμάζειν τὸν ἡγεμόνα λίαν. See the defence of these words, Exam. Millii hic.

[5] Ver. 15. Κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἑορτὴν εἰώθει ἡγεμὼν ἀπολύειν, At the feast he was wont to release.] There being no such release made by the governor at the other festivals of the Jews, but at this only; and because a release was then κατὰ ἑορτήν, according to the nature of the paschal feast, kept in memory of their release from Egyptian bondage; (see note on Mark xv. 6.) it is not here so proper to observe, that it was the custom among other nations to release their prisoners on festival-days, especially if we consider, that, at least at other festivals, it was the custom of the Jews to punish criminals. (See note on xxvi. 5.)

[6] Ver. 24. Λαβὼν ὕδωρ, ἀπενίψατο τὰς χεῖρας, He took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am clean from the blood of this just man.] He did this, saith Origen,* according to the custom of the Jews, or, "ex consuetudine Judaica, volens eos de Christi innocentia non solum verbis, sed facto instruere;" being willing to assert Christ's innocency to them not in words only, but by deed. Thus, in the instance of unknown murder, the elders of the city were to wash their hands, and say, Our hands have not shed this blood; (Deut. xxi. 6, 7.) and the Psalmist having renounced all confederacy with wicked and mischievous men, saith, I will wash my hands (in testimony of my) innocency. (Psal. xxvi. 6.) And Wagenseil† upon Sota, thinks that Pilate had respect to this rite; but others think he rather did it according to the custom of the gentiles, who thought to purge themselves from bloodshed by washing. So the scholiast‡ upon Sophocles in Ajace, iii. 1. saith, It was the custom among the ancients when they had killed a man, or shed blood, to wash their hands in water, to purify them from their defilement. And Æneas§ in Virgil speaketh to the same purpose. (See Examen Millii here.)

[7] Ver. 26. Τότε ἀπέλυσεν αὐτοῖς Βαραββᾶν, Then he released to them Barabbas.] This Barabbas was imprisoned for sedition and murder: (Luke xxiii. 35.) so that if this were customary at this feast to release such criminals, then the law concerning the shedding of the blood of the wilful murderer, Numb. xxxv. 31, 32. must admit of some dispensation.

[8] Ver. 28. Περιέθηκαν αὐτῷ χλαμύδα κοκκίνην, They put on him a purple robe.] Some think the soldiers did this by advice of the Jews, intending by this purple to deride Christ's pretence of being their Messiah; it being a tradition with them, that when their Messiah comes, he shall be clothed with fine purple. (Moses Haddarf. in Bereschith Rabbi, cap. 49. 11.) But this consultation of the Jews with them being mentioned by none of the evangelists, I think the soldiers rather did it in derision of his title to be King of the Jews. The κάνδυς ἁλιπόρφυρος, and χιτὼν πορφύρεος μεσόλυκος, the sea-purple coat, and purple mixed with white, being proper to the kings of Persia. (See Brisson de Reg. Pers. lib. i. p. 37, 38.)

[9] Ver. 32. Τοῦτον ἠγγάρευσαν ἵνα ἄρῃ τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, They found a man of Cyrene,—him they compelled to bear his cross.] It was the custom, that he that was to be crucified should bear his own cross, as Lipsius‖ proves from Artemidorus and Plutarch; and so our Saviour for some time did, for he went forth, βαστάζων τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, bearing his cross; (John xix. 17. Heb. xii. 2.) but then ἐξερχόμενοι, going out with him, and finding it too burdenous for him, they compel this Simon to bear it either with or for him.

[10] Ver. 33. And when they were come to a place called Golgotha, ὅς ἐστι λεγόμενος κρανίου τόπος, that is to say, The place of a skull.] It is (saith Theophylact*) a tradition come down to us from the fathers, that Adam was buried here, and therefore (saith he) Christ, who was to heal the fall and death of Adam, was here crucified, that where the beginning of death was, there might be the dissolution of it: his witnesses of this tradition are Origen, Tertullian, Epiphanius, Athanasius, and St. Augustine; St. Jerome only on this place saying, This is a favourable interpretation, and pleasing to the ears of the people, "nec tamen vera," but not true.

[11] Ver. 34. Ἔδωκαν αὐτῷ πιεῖν ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς μεμιγμένον, They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall.] They gave him, (Mark xv. 23.) οἶνον ἐσμυρμισμένον, wine mixed with wormwood, which differs not from this account, for לענה, which signifies wormwood, is by the LXX. rendered χολή, Prov. v. 4. Lam. iii. 14. and so merora, which hath its name from bitterness, is rendered, Job xvi. 13. xx. 14. This kind of wine was given to intoxicate the condemned, and so to take away the sense of pain, whence it is called οἶνος κατανύξεως, the stupifying wine: (Psal. lx. 3.) on which account our Saviour, who needed none of these arts to diminish his sense of pain, that he might shew his patience and readiness to suffer, refused to drink it. (See note on Luke xxiii. 36.)

[12] Ver. 38. Then were crucified with him δύο λῃσταὶ, two thieves: and, Ver. 44. οἱ λῃσταὶ, the thieves upbraided him.] And yet one of them only did upbraid him. (See note on Luke xxiii. 40.) So the soldiers brought him vinegar, Luke xxiii. 36. John xix. 29. one of them did it, Matt. xxvii. 48. Mark xv. 36. The disciples had indignation, Matt. xxvi. 8. some of them, Mark xiv. 4. one of them, John xii. 4. So Mark xvi. 5. Matt. xxviii. 2. there is mention of one angel only, but Luke xxiv. 4. John xx. 12. there is mention of two.

[13] Ver. 46. Θεέ μου, Θεέ μου, ἱνατί με ἐγκατέλιπες; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?] Wonderful are the tragedies some make, and the scruples they have raised upon these plain words; when yet,

First, It is certain that in the Hebrew way of speaking, God is said to leave, or forsake any person, when he suffers him to fall into great calamities, and lie under great miseries, and doth not help him out of them. And therefore Zion being long afflicted is brought in by the prophet Isaiah thus complaining, ἐγκατέλειπέ με Κύριος, the Lord hath forsaken me, Κύριος ἐπελάθετό μου, the Lord hath forgotten me, (xlix. 14.) And the Psalmist, as he is frequent in the same complaint, (viz. Psal. x. 11. xlii. 10. xliii. 2.) so doth he manifestly thus explain himself in the following words, Why art thou far from my prayer, so that though I cry in the day-time thou hearest not? (Psal. xxii. 2—4.) Nor could David have any other meaning, when he calls God so fiducially his God, as Christ also here doth, and even breathes his last in these words, Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit; and saith of his suffering condition, It is finished, and doubted not but his soul should that day be in Paradise: so impossible is it that in these words he should intimate any failure of his trust in God, or any perturbation of spirit arising from the sense of Divine wrath. This being certain and allowed, let men say if they please, that now Satan was let loose upon him, because, after his first temptation, he receded only from him for a season, (Luke iv. 13.) and this was the hour of the prince of darkness; provided they still own, that the prince of darkness coming, found nothing in him for his temptations to work upon. (John xiv. 30.) Let them add, if they please, that the Divine glory parted from him, provided that they understand this κυριοπρεπῶς, in a sense becoming our Lord; either as Dr. Hammond hath it on Psal. xxii. 2. that the Divinity suspended its influence so far as to deliver up his body to death; or that the sense of what he suffered was so great, as that he could not then attend, as formerly, to that sense of Divine favour, or receive the joy and consolation from it, which he did before; the experience of the highest sorrows and the sublimest joys, at the same time, being not well compatible even with the innocent infirmities of human nature: these things are, perhaps, gratis dicta, but not dishonourable to our blessed Lord.

[14] Ver. 48. One—taking a sponge, filled it with vinegar, καὶ περιθεὶς καλάμῳ, ἐπότιζεν αὐτόν, and putting it on a reed, gave him to drink.] So Mark xv. 36. whereas St. John saith, ὑσσώπῳ περιθέντες, putting it upon hyssop, they put it to his mouth, (xix. 29.) which words the critics would without reason change into ὑσσὸν, a javelin; whereas St. John's hyssop may not only signify the leaves which by the smell do recreate, but also the stalk or stem which might support the sponge, that being, as their mustard-seed, much greater in those countries than it is with us.

[15] Ver. 51. Τὸ καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ ἐσχίσθη εἰς δύο, The veil of the temple was rent in twain.] They built no partition-wall, saith Maimonides, in the second temple between the holy place and the most holy, though in the first temple there was a wall built betwixt them of the thickness of a cubit; but they were divided by two veils, one from the extremity of the most holy place, another from the extremity of the holy, with a void space of a cubit. And so likewise was it, saith Josephus,* in the temple restored by Herod, in which there were two veils, one for the holy place, another for the adytum: this veil, saith the apostle, signifying, that the way into the holy of holies was not yet opened; Christ's death procuring a new and living way into it, (Heb. ix. 8.) and therefore, he having suffered, this veil is rent.

[16] Ver. 52. Καὶ πολλὰ σώματα τῶν κεκοιμημένων ἁγίων ἠγέρθη, And many bodies of the saints which slept arose, &c.] Here note,

First, That according to the opinion of the Jews, when their Messiah came, there should be a resurrection of some pious men. (Albo in libro Ikarim, par. iv. cap. 35.) Note,

* Παράδωσίς ἐστιν εἰς ἡμᾶς φθάνουσα ἐξ ἁγίων πατέρων ὅτι ὁ Ἀδαμ ἐκεῖ ἐτάφη. "Venit ad me traditio talis," Orig. hom. 35. in Matt. F. 87. F. Epiphanius Har. 46. §. 5. p. 394. Athanasius de Cruce et Pass. Domini, tom. i. p. 1003. Basilios Seleuc. Orat. 38. p. 199. Basil. M. hom. 5. in Isa. Ambros. lib. v. Ep. 19. Augustin. tom. x. hom. 71. de Tempore, p. 738.

* Τὸ δὲ ἐνδότατον μέρος διείργετο ὁμοίως καταπετάσματι πρὸς τὸ ἔξωθεν. De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 14. p. 918.

Secondly, That it is here expressly said, these saints arose out of their sepulchres μετὰ τὴν ἔγερσιν αὐτοῦ, after Christ's resurrection, he being the first-born from the dead: by this example Christ would confirm them in his great promise, that he would raise all that believed in him to eternal life. And* some say they were raised to live in Paradise with Enoch and Elias.

Thirdly, Who were the persons raised after this manner, it is not easy to conjecture. Ignatius† saith, they were the holy prophets, who were his disciples, and expected him, and who are said to enter into the kingdom of God, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. (Luke xiii. 28.) My conjecture is, they might be some of those who believed in Jesus, as old Simeon did, and died before his resurrection; for it is observable from St. John, that Christ not only promised a resurrection to all that believed on him, at the last day, but also said, The hour is coming, and now is, that the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of man. (John v. 25.) And that this resurrection was both a proper resurrection, and was to precede the general resurrection, is proved in the note on that place, and so could be no other than the resurrection mentioned here. Moreover, of these persons it is said, that they went into the holy city, and appeared to many: whence it is probable they were persons known to them to whom they did appear; and if so, they must be men who lived in the time of their knowledge.

[17] Ver. 54. Ἀληθῶς Θεοῦ υἱὸς ἦν οὗτος, Truly this was the Son of God.] It seems apparent from these words, that the Son of God did not always signify one that was so by virtue of an internal and eternal generation, but one that was his beloved and adopted Son; for what is here the Son of God, is in St. Luke xxiii. 47. this was a just man, and ver. 43. they spake thus, he trusted in God; let him deliver him, if he delighteth in him: for he said, I am the Son of God. The Jews knew very well from Psal. ii. that their Messiah was to be the Son of God; but that they did not know him to be so in this higher sense, seems evident, because they did not know how David could call him Lord, (xxii. 46.)

[19] Ver. 60. Καὶ ἔθηκεν αὐτὸ ἐν τῷ καινῷ αὐτοῦ μνημείῳ, And put it in his new tomb.] What follows here, tends highly to the confirmation of the truth of our Lord's resurrection; for his body being put into a tomb, in which no man had lain before, if any one rose from it, it must be our Lord. (2.) The tomb being hewed out of a rock, there could be no digging through it to convey Christ's body thence. (3.) There being a band of sixty soldiers placed there as a watch to preserve the body from being stolen, it is not to be supposed that the disciples should beat this band, and so there could be no ground of suspicion that our Lord was not truly risen.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. IN the [1] end of the sabbath, as it began [2] to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, (mentioned xxvii. 56.) to see the sepulchre, (having with them spices to embalm his body, Luke xxiv. 1. and about the sun-rising they got thither, Mark xvi. 2.)

2. And, behold (while they were consulting by the way who should roll away the great stone from the sepulchre, that they might get to him), there was (before they came thither) a great earthquake: for the (an) angel of the Lord (had) descended from heaven, and came and rolled (Gr. and coming rolled) back the stone from the door (of the sepulchre), and sat upon it.

3. (And) his countenance (or appearance) was like lightning, and his raiment (was) white as snow:

4. And for fear of him (and by reason of the earthquake) the keepers (of the sepulchre) did shake, and became as dead men.

5. And the angel answered (i. e. spake) and said to the (affrighted) women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified.

6. He is not here (where you expected to find his body): for he is risen, as he said (he would; and for your satisfaction that it is even so) come (nearer to the sepulchre, and) see the place where the Lord lay.

7. And go quickly, and tell his disciples (and Peter in particular) that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee, (as he said to you, Matt. xxvi. 32. Mark xiv. 28.) there shall you see him: lo, I have told you (the truth).

8. And they departed (Gr. departing) quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run (Gr. ran) to bring his disciples word (of what they had seen and heard).

9. And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail (i. e. be joyful). And they (when they were satisfied it was Jesus) came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

10. Then said Jesus to them, Be not afraid: (but) go, tell my brethren (i. e. my disciples) that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

11. Now when they were going (gone), behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed to the chief priests all the things that were done.

12. And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel (what was to be done to disguise the matter), they gave large (sums of) money to the soldiers (that watched),

13. Saying, (Having received this) say ye, [3] His disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept.

14. And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade (or pacify) him, and secure you (from harm).

15. So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

16. [4] Then (and) the eleven disciples went away (from Jerusalem) into Galilee, to a mountain where Jesus had appointed them (to meet him).

17. And when they saw him, they worshipped him; but some (of the company) doubted (whether it was he indeed, or not).

18. And Jesus came (nigh) and spake unto them, saying, [5] All power is given to me in heaven and in earth (and so you need not doubt of my protection and assistance).

19. [6] Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name (or into the belief) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Ὀψὲ δὲ σαββάτων, In the end of the sabbath.] Or rather, after the sabbath; so ὀψὲ τούτων, after these things, ὀψὲ νυκτὸς, after night; see many examples of this in Stephanus: and so this perfectly agrees with the other evangelists, who say, this was done, the sabbath being ended, Mark xvi. 1. or the first day of the week, Luke xxiv. 1. John xx. 1. And perhaps St. Matthew mentions sabbaths in the plural, because there were two sabbaths in that week, the paschal sabbath on Friday, and the ordinary sabbath on Saturday.

[2] Ἐπιφωσκούσῃ εἰς μίαν σαββάτων, when it began to dawn into the first day of the week.] i. e. To Sunday, or the Lord's day, for μία τῶν σαββάτων always signifies the first day of the week, or the Lord's day, or the day of his resurrection from the dead; and thus the word μία usually signifies in the Septuagint, when it is joined with days, weeks, or months; as the evening and the morning were ἡμέρα μία, the first day, Gen. i. 5. So ἡμέρα μία τοῦ μηνὸς, is the first day of the month, Exod. xl. 2. Ezra iii. 6. x. 17. And so is μία τοῦ μηνὸς, Lev. xxv. 24. Numb. i. 1. 18. xxix. 1. xxxiii. 38. Deut. i. 3. Ezek. xxvi. 1. xxxii. 1. xlv. 18. Hag. i. 1. ii. 1. (See note on 1 Cor. xvi. 2.) Upon this day in the evening Christ appeared to the twelve, John xx. 19. and again, ver. 26. and to the two disciples, Luke xxiv. 13. It is also reported of the Christians by Pliny,* that they used, "stato die ante lucem convenire," to meet upon a set day before it was light; and this day from the beginning was called ἡ κυριακὴ, the Lord's day, and was by Christians from the beginning employed in acts of religious worship. (See the former note.) So Ignatius† exhorts Christians not to sabbatize with the Jews, but to live κατὰ κυριακὴν, according to the Lord's day, in which our life arose with him. So the true Gnostic, saith Clemens of Alexandria,‡ κυριακὴν ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ποιεῖ, observes the Lord's day, glorifying in himself the resurrection of our Lord, when he casts away every evil thought, and receives the true knowledge. Irenæus§ saith, that τὸ ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ μὴ κλίνειν γόνυ, not to bend the knee on the Lord's day was a symbol of the resurrection. Melito Sardensis wrote a book περὶ κυριακῆς, of the Lord's day. See more largely the Divine original of the Lord's day vindicated, preface to the second part of Traditions. Of the following words to ver. 13. see the notes on Mark xvi.

[3] Ver. 13. Εἴπατε, ὅτι οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ νυκτὸς ἐλθόντες ἔκλεψαν αὐτὸν, ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων, Say, That his disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept.] If this history of the soldiers be true, it is the greatest confirmation of our Lord's resurrection; for then they must not only have been convinced of it by the earthquake, and the vision of the angel which struck them with the greatest terror, but must have told all these things that were done in the city, (ver. 11.) and so have raised all men's curiosity to go and see whether Christ's body was yet in the grave; besides, here the whole body of the Sanhedrin or elders of the Jews are charged with a most execrable fact, viz. the hiring the whole band of soldiers to tell a lie against their certain knowledge, and their former declaration made in the city; yea, to tell a senseless lie, viz. that the disciples stole away Christ's body while they slept: for if they were indeed asleep, they could not tell that his disciples came at all; if they were not asleep, they lied in saying that they were. Now is it easy to believe that the Sanhedrin, who had these men so oft before them, and under examination, for this very testimony, that Christ was then risen from the dead, should never say one word to vindicate themselves from this vile imputation, so expressly charged upon them, within eight years after the thing was done; or that money should so corrupt a band of soldiers, that not one of them should ever after this divulge the truth? Besides, how unlikely it was that the apostles either would attempt to steal away their Master's dead body, or having done this, to continue testifying that he was risen from the dead, or that they should succeed in this attempt, hath been already shewed in the general preface to this work.

[4] Ver. 16. Οἱ δὲ ἕνδεκα μαθηταὶ ἐπορεύθησαν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, &c. Then the eleven disciples went into Galilee, unto a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.] That Christ promised after his resurrection to go before them into Galilee, we read, xxvi. 32. thither the angel here, ver. 7. and Christ himself directs them to go to see him, ver. 10. but there is not the least mention of any mountain in Galilee to which he bade them go to see him; and therefore these words, where Christ had appointed them, refer not to the mountain, but to Galilee; but there being a mountain which Christ frequented, and on which he had been before transfigured, this moved the disciples to go to that mountain. Moreover it is observable, that they went not into Galilee till above eight days after Christ's resurrection; for Christ appeared to them at Jerusalem eight days after. (John xx. 19.) And when they went, doubtless they went not alone, but the curiosity of those that were with them (Luke xxiv. 9. 33.) would likely move them to go to the place where he had appointed to be seen; and they and the other disciples which were then in Galilee make up the five hundred brethren of which he was seen at once. (1 Cor. xv. 6.)

[5] Ver. 18. Ἐδόθη μοι πᾶσα ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, All power is given me in heaven and in earth.] That this power was given to Christ is, saith Woltzogenius, a certain argument that he is not God, for the most high God judgeth and commandeth by his own power, which he always had, received from none; whereas Christ received this power from his Father, and that in time, viz. after his resurrection.

Ans. To this I answer, That it is true that this power was given to Christ, because he was the Son of man, (John v. 27.) i. e. because he in his human nature had exercised the office of a prophet, and after of a priest; but then it was exercised by the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him. So all the blessings of the Jews are said to come out of Zion, or from the sanctuary, but they came thence because the Divine Majesty dwelt there; now the human nature of Christ is the temple of the Deity, or the tabernacle in which the λόγος dwells, and from it all the blessings are derived on the church by virtue of the Deity united to him. And this will be apparent from the concessions of Woltzogenius* § Fragm.

* "Christum illimitatum regnum atque imperium super omnes creaturas in cœlo here, that Christ hath obtained an unlimited empire over all things, a Divine power over the bodies and souls of men, and wisdom to discern their hearts and reins; for he to whom any office duly is committed, must have sufficient power and wisdom to discharge that office. Now to govern all things in heaven and earth, belongs only to him, who is the Lord and Maker of them; and therefore is known by this title both in Scripture and among the heathens. (See note on Rom. ix. 5. and Psal. xxxiii. 18. xcvii. 5. 9.) To have power over death, and to be able to raise the dead, is to have that power which is proper to God alone: (see note on Phil. iii. 20.) and to have power over the souls of men, and to have the knowledge of all hearts, belongs to God alone. (1 Kings viii. 39. Jer. xvii. 10.)

Obj. There was no need this power should be given to human nature, seeing he had received it by virtue of the hypostatic union.

Ans. He had before received the power by which he doth still exercise this dominion, but he could not exercise it whilst he was in the state of his humiliation, and in the form of a servant, as now he doth, being exalted in this nature to the right hand of Majesty, and placed on the throne of glory.

Obj. But Christ's human nature is no person, whereas to govern and judge are actions proper to a person.

Ans. So to eat, drink, and sleep, are in us personal actions, and yet they agreed only to Christ's human nature. To speak in the language of the schools, the principium quod of these actions is God and man, or Christus θεάνθρωπος, but the principium quo is sometimes the Divine, and sometimes the human nature of Christ; v. g. Christ walked upon the sea, i. e. he walked by virtue of his human nature, he sustained himself from sinking by the Divine, and he who thus walked was God and man.

[6] Ver. 19. Μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, Teach all nations.] Μαθητεύειν here is to preach the gospel to all nations, and to engage them to believe it in order to their profession of that faith by baptism; as seems apparent (1.) from the parallel commission, Mark xvi. 15. Go preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved. (2.) From the Scripture notion of a disciple, that being still the same as a believer: as in that question of the blind man, Will you also be his disciples? i. e. will you believe he is a prophet sent from God? and in the answer of the pharisees, We are the disciples of Moses, for we know that God spake by him, and therefore believe what he spake in the name of God. (John ix. 27—29.) Hence we find many, besides the twelve, who were called Christ's disciples, even as many as assented to his doctrine, and judged him a prophet sent from God. And we find many of his disciples murmuring and crying out, This is a hard saying, who can bear it? John vi. 60, 61. and many of his disciples departing from him, ver. 66. and many of his disciples going with him to the city of Nain, Luke vii. 11. though it is probable that these disciples did not yet believe that he was the Christ, the Son of the living God, as the twelve did. (John ix. 27.) And even the disciples of the Baptist are called disciples; i. e. professors to believe in that Christ, who came after John, though they had no knowledge of the Holy Ghost, nor had received Christian baptism. (Acts xix. 2. 6.) And in this sense the holy Jesus made many disciples, and by his apostles baptized them into the faith of the Messiah coming after John: (see the note on John iii. 22. and iv. 1, 2.) though he would not suffer his disciples to publish that he was the Christ, the Son of the living God, till after his resurrection: (Matt. xvi. 20.) after which time, all that believed on him had no other name for a season, but that of his disciples; (Acts ix. 1. 10. 19. 26. 38.) as when it is said, the disciples were multiplied, (Acts vi. 1, 2. 7.) though afterward at Antioch the disciples began to be called Christians. (Acts xi. 26.)

If here it should be said that I yield too much to the antipedobaptists, by saying, that to be made disciples here is to be taught to believe in Christ, that so they might be his disciples; I desire any one to tell me how the apostles could μαθητεύειν, make a disciple, of a heathen or unbelieving Jew, without being μαθηταὶ or teachers of them; whether they were not sent to preach to those that could hear, and to teach them to whom they preached that Jesus was the Christ; and only to baptize them when they did believe this? This is so absolutely necessary in the nature of the thing, till a Christian church among the heathens or the Jews was founded, and so expressly said by Justin Martyr* to have been the practice in the first ages of the church, that to deny what is confirmed by such evidence of reason and church-history, would be to prejudice a cause, which, in my poor judgment, needs not this interpretation of the word μαθητεύειν; nor needs it be asserted that infants are made disciples, any more than that they are made believers by baptism, but only that they are and ought to be admitted into the Christian church and kingdom of God, and into the new covenant, by baptism, if they be children of believing parents. Now against this I presume it is no objection, that the unbelieving Jews and gentiles were first to be taught and believe the Christian faith, before they were baptized, and could not be baptized without it, or that infants cannot be taught or believe whilst they continue such.

et terra existentes adeptom esse, etiam super mortem et diabolum, immo consecutam esse divinam sapientiam ut possit scrutari corda et renes." Apoc. ii. 23. A DISSERTATION

ADDED TO THE FOREGOING NOTE.

GO ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.] In the note here I have asserted, and I think proved, that μαθητεύειν here signifies to make disciples, by teaching the nations to believe in Christ, that so they might be his disciples. But then I took care to add, the cause of infant-baptism needed not this interpretation of the word μαθητεύειν· nor was it needful that infants be made disciples, any more than that they be made believers by baptism, but only that they be admitted, if they be children of believing parents, into the Christian church by

* "Ὅσοι ἂν πεισθῶσι, καὶ πιστεύουσιν ἀληθῆ ταῦτα, τὰ ἀφ' ἡμῶν διδασκόμενα, εἶναι, καὶ βιοῦν οὕτως δύνασθαι ὑπισχνοῦνται, ἄγονται ἀφ' ἡμῶν ἵνα ὕδωρ ἐστὶ; καὶ τρόπον ἀναγεννήσεως, ὃν καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ ἀναγεννήθημεν, ἀναγεννῶνται. par. ii. p. 93.

baptism; and that it was no objection against this admission, that infants, whilst they continue in their childhood, cannot be taught or believe the Christian faith. And to confirm these assertions, I shall endeavour to prove,

First, That there is nothing in this, or any other passages of Scripture, which proves that infants are incapable of Christian baptism.

Secondly, That this commission delivered to the apostles, is virtually a commission to baptize the children of believing parents, or of parents making a visible profession of the Christian faith.

My first assertion is, That there is nothing in this, or any other passages of Scripture, which proves that infants are incapable of Christian baptism. And,

To remove the arguments offered against the baptism of infants, from their supposed incapacity to be fit subjects of that ordinance, I assert,

Prop. I. That no argument taken from the baptism used by the Baptist, or our Lord's disciples, can be sufficient to prove that infants of believing parents are to be excluded from Christian baptism. First, Because neither of them by baptism admitted any persons into covenant with God, or into church-membership, but only called them of the Jewish nation by baptism to repentance, who were in covenant with God, and members of his church already. Secondly, Neither of them baptized in the name of Christ; not the Baptist, for had he done so, there would have been no question whether he himself were the Christ or not, as we find there was; (Luke iii. 15.) nor any occasion for that question, Why baptizest thou, if thou be not the Christ? (John i. 25.) he only called them to repentance for the remission of sins, and admonished them in general, that they should believe in him who was coming after him. (Acts xix. 4.) And the baptism of his disciples was not into this belief, that their Master was the Christ, for that he forbids them to divulge, till he was risen from the dead; (Matt. xvi. 20. xvii. 9.) and therefore hath not before allowed or authorized them to do it in that solemn manner: they therefore only did baptize as John had done, into the faith of the Messiah which was to come, and with that baptism of repentance which prepared the Jews for the reception of his kingdom; so that both of them baptized those who as yet believed not in Christ; whereas the baptism instituted by Christ was in his name, and belonged only to them who believed in him and to their children. It is not therefore to be wondered that they baptized not those infants who could not by an actual repentance prepare themselves for the coming of that Messiah, who was then at hand. Thirdly, John's baptism was begun and ended before the covenant of grace was by the death of our Mediator confirmed and ratified, and therefore cannot be reasonably thought so fully to seal that covenant, or to assure us of the blessings of it, as doth that of Christ; as many as are baptized into Christ being baptized into his death. (Rom. vi. 3.)

Prop. II. I add, That as the incapacity of an infant for doing that which is required of an adult person to salvation, cannot render an infant, dying so, incapable of salvation; so neither can it render him incapable of baptism, that he cannot do all that is required of an adult person, not yet owning Christ, in order to his baptism; for if that faith, repentance, and obedience, which is required of an adult person to his salvation, cannot be required of an infant in order to his salvation, so as that the necessary absence of it shall exclude him from a capacity of salvation, provided that he dieth in his infancy or his minority; then, by parity of reason, that faith and repentance which is required of an adult person in order to that baptism by which he is made a member of Christ, and is admitted as a subject of his kingdom, cannot be required of an infant in order to his being made a member of Christ, or his being admitted as a subject of his kingdom.

Vain therefore are all those arguments, which are taken from the examples in the Holy Scripture of adult persons baptized only upon their faith and repentance; v. g. St. Peter says to the Jews and proselytes who heard the apostles speak with tongues, and prophesy, Repent ye, and be baptized in the name of Christ Jesus for the remission of sins; and Ananias to Saul, Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. (Acts ii. 38. xxii. 16.) But to argue hence, that infants cannot be baptized, because they cannot repent or call upon the name of the Lord, is as if I should argue thus, The same apostle saith, Repent, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out; (Acts iii. 19.) therefore the sins of infants who cannot repent, cannot be blotted out: and St. Paul says, Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved; (Rom. x. 13.) therefore infants, who cannot do this, cannot be saved: Christ also saith to the same Jews to whom St. Peter said, Repent, and be baptized, Except ye repent, ye shall all perish; (Luke xiii. 3. 5.) and this repentance is styled repentance to life and to salvation, Acts xi. 18. 2 Cor. vii. 10. Must therefore infants perish or be incapable of salvation for want of that repentance, which to adult persons is the condition of life and salvation? if not, why are they thought incapable of baptism, because, whilst infants, they cannot repent?

When it is said by Mr. Tombs, That "from these words of Philip to the eunuch, Acts viii. 37. If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest be baptized; it appears necessary that the baptized person should declare his own faith;" it doth as much appear from those words of St. Paul, If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus Christ, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved, (Rom. x. 9.) that it is necessary for him that is saved, to confess with his mouth, and believe with his heart, the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ; and therefore to infer that no infant can be saved. Hence, therefore, it doth only follow that the baptized person, provided he be such as the eunuch was, a gentile, to whom the gospel was first preached to beget faith in him, must declare his faith, but not that infants of believing parents are to be excluded from baptism, for want of such a declaration of their faith.

When he argues thus, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; that is, he only, no other, not otherwise:" this gloss must damn all infants dying such; yea, it must damn them for not being baptized, that is, for not receiving the ordinance of which Christ himself, according to the doctrine of these men, hath declared them incapable. Moreover, to argue thus, an infant must believe before he be baptized, because believing in these words is set before baptizing, is no better than to argue thus: The infant that is saved must be baptized, because baptism is set before salvation.

When others argue thus, We are all made the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, (Gal. iii. 26.) and therefore infants cannot be made the sons of God by baptism, because they have no faith: they might as well argue thus; By grace we are saved through faith, (Eph. ii. 7.) but infants have no faith, therefore they cannot be saved: or thus, He that believeth not shall be damned; (Mark xvi. 16.) infants do not believe; ergo, all infants shall be damned. The apostle plainly speaks there of persons converted from heathenism to Christianity, who therefore were baptized, being adult persons: and so also he speaks to them in the Epistle to the Ephesians, and in the Gospel of St. Mark. This place therefore can with no more reason be applied to the case of infants, than the places cited from that Epistle, and from the Gospel of St. Mark.

Prop. III. A present incapacity as to some ends of baptism, cannot render the children of believing parents unfit for or incapable of baptism, provided they be capable of some other ends of that ordinance; this will be evident,

First, From the example of our Saviour repairing to the Baptist to receive his baptism, though he was incapable of the chief ends for which it was designed, with respect to others. For Christ being without sin, could neither repent, nor promise amendment of life; being the wisdom of the Father, he could be taught nothing; being the Christ, he could not profess to believe in him that was to come after the Baptist, that is, in himself; and yet he comes to baptism, to profess his willingness to fulfil all righteousness; and also that by this rite he might be initiated into his prophetic office, and consecrate himself to the service of his Father.

Secondly, From the example of circumcision among the Jews, which laid an obligation on all adult proselytes, as well as the Jews, to obey the whole law of Moses, (Gal. v. 2.) and to advance to the spiritual circumcision of their hearts, but could lay no such present obligation on their infants so to do. So likewise the same proselytes were first to be taught the precepts of the law; and then upon the profession of their faith, and their promise of conformity to them, were to be baptized; but this could not be required of their children, who notwithstanding were baptized with them. And therefore, to represent it as a thing repugnant to reason, that a Divine institution should belong to persons incapable of understanding the nature and ends of it, must highly reflect upon the wisdom of God, in appointing circumcision for children eight days old, they being then as incapable of understanding the ends of it, as our children are of understanding the ends of baptism.

Prop. IV. Infants are capable, whilst such, of some ends of baptism; as, first, of a solemn and obliging dedication to the service of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: for if parents, in circumcising of the male child, obliged him afterward to own the God of Israel, as his God in covenant, and yield obedience to his law; (Gal. v. 2.) if the vow of Samson's parents obliged him to be a Nazarite for ever; (Judg. xvi. 17.) if the vow of Hannah, to which her husband gave consent, that Samuel should be lent to the Lord for ever, devoted Samuel for ever to his service,—why should we think the dedication of the Christian parent insufficient to pass an obligation on his child, to serve that God, who made him; that Jesus, who redeemed him; and that good Spirit, by whom alone he can be sanctified? Why therefore might not God appoint this to be done for children, by that only rite which he had instituted under the new covenant, for entering any into the number of his federal servants? That they are capable by this rite of entering into covenant with God, so as to be enrolled in the number of his chosen generation, and peculiar people, and his holy nation, is evident; because the Jewish infants obtained this privilege by virtue of their circumcision on the eighth day; which therefore St. Paul reckoneth among their privileges. (Phil. iii. 5.) And hence, when by their parents this circumcision was neglected, they are said to have broken his covenant: (Gen. xvii. 14.) yea, that children are capable of entering into covenant with God, we learn from these words of Moses to all the people, Deut. xxix. 11. You stand this day before the Lord your God, you and your little ones, that thou shouldest enter into the covenant of the Lord thy God, that thou mayest be a people to him, and he may be thy God: and if exclusion from the covenant was a loss to the child, as is apparent from those words, The infant not circumcised shall be cut off from my people, which in the mildest sense must signify, that he shall not be owned as one of them; surely it must be a blessing to him to enter into this covenant. 2. As they are capable of obligation, by entering into covenant; so are they, by it, capable of those blessings, which they want whilst children. Christian baptism is appointed for an entrance into the kingdom of God; for without that (saith Christ) we cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John iii. 5.) By this we become members of his body, we being all baptized into one body; (1 Cor. xii. 13.) this is the laver of regeneration, by which we are born anew; (Tit. iii. 5.) this is the water instituted for the washing away of sin, and for procuring the remission of it: (Acts ii. 38. xxii. 18.) by this, lastly, we are put into a state of salvation, (Tit. iii. 5.) in the way to escape death, by the virtue of our interest in the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ: for, saith St. Peter, baptism answers to the ark of Noah, which saved him and his children, for it now saveth us from death, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Now either infants are made capable of those ends of baptism, or they are not; if they are not, they cannot, by the ordinary means appointed by God, be born again; and therefore cannot enter into the kingdom of God; they cannot be members of Christ's body, and so cannot be saved by him, who only is the Saviour of his body, or obtain remission of sins; they cannot be interested in Christ's death, and so can have no share in a happy resurrection from the dead. If they are capable of these blessings, it must be either by or without that baptism, which is by Christ appointed for the obtaining of these blessings; if only by baptism, the cause is gained; if without baptism, they who assert this must assign some other cause, which procures them a right to these blessings, which I believe they cannot do. Moreover, infants of believing parents, being all the offspring of Adam, and therefore all obnoxious to death by reason of his sin, (Rom. v. 12.) they being born of the flesh, and therefore flesh, (John iii. 6.) and wanting a new birth on that account, they being without Christ, and strangers to the covenant of promise, (Eph. ii. 12.) till they enter into covenant with God and Christ, they cannot be delivered from this death, be born anew, or be in Christ, but by the grace of God, which Christ hath purchased for and promised to them only who are made some way members of his body, and children of God. Why therefore should we not conceive they should obtain this favour by that means, which is alone appointed by Christ, for making any one a member of his body, and be born again by that water and Spirit, without which, saith our Lord, none can enter into the kingdom of God? In a word, seeing the infants of the Jewish parents were to be cut off from his people, and from a covenant-relation to God, for want of circumcision, why should we think the children of Christian parents should enjoy all, or any of the blessings of the new covenant, without baptism?

Prop. V. I add, that no objections can be valid against the right of infants born of Christian parents to Christian baptism, which do not equally destroy the right of Jewish infants to circumcision; because they, by Divine institution, had a right to circumcision. It is therefore no good argument against their right to baptism,

First, "That the end of baptism, viz. to be a visible sign of invisible grace, is wanting in the baptism of infants; baptism ceasing before the thing represented by water is signified to the infant:" for, according to this argument, circumcision could be no sacrament to a Jewish infant, dying before he could perceive the signification of it, or know it was a seal of the covenant. Secondly, Though I own that baptism by water, is baptism by a sign of some invisible grace, viz. the purifying of the soul from the guilt and pollution of sin; yet I deny that this is by Divine appointment, any end of baptism. Thirdly, It is not necessary, by virtue of this school definition of a sacrament, which is not founded upon Scripture, that a sacrament should, de præsenti, be a sign to the recipient; for so it would not be to the person circumcised on the eighth day: but only that it be a sign, or an assurance to the parents and congregation, of God's grace to, and favourable acceptance of, the child, and his admission into the flock of Christ, who, by appointing for them the outward sign, shews he is willing to confer upon them the grace of baptism.

When, secondly, it is said, That "except the person to be baptized must be a believer and a penitent, there can be no way to shew who is to be baptized or not, nor any reason to be given for the exclusion of any person whatsoever:" this also will be answered from the consideration of the practice and institution concerning circumcision; for that belonging to all children that were capable of that rite, baptism, by analogy, belongs to all children born of Christian parents, admitted into that covenant, where there is no difference of male and female, (Gal. iii. 28.) and are as capable of baptism, as the male children of the Jews were of circumcision; all born in holiness, i. e. seminally holy, as being the offspring of them who were equally a holy nation, a chosen generation, a peculiar people, (1 Pet. ii. 9.) and therefore as fit to be admitted into that covenant which made their parents so. Moreover, the practice of admitting proselytes to circumcision, from the first institution of it, seems to plead fairly for the admission of Christian infants to baptism. For as in the first institution of that rite, God commanded that he that was born in Abraham's house, or bought with his money, should be circumcised; not that he was to be compelled to it (seeing that would have been a profanation of that sacrament), but that Abraham was to persuade them to it; or if he could not do it, he was to dismiss them; so that no adult person was to be circumcised without his free consent, and his instruction in the nature of the covenant into which he entered; and yet upon his entrance into covenant by circumcision, his children also were to be circumcised; so may we reasonably conceive it is with reference to Christian baptism. Now hence it follows, that infants are not to be excluded from baptism,

First, By reason of their incapacity, whilst they continue infants, to understand the nature or the ends of baptism; the Jewish infants being as incapable, whilst they continued so, to understand the nature or the ends of circumcision. Or,

Secondly, Because they cannot enter into covenant by their own personal consent, nor promise sincere obedience to the laws of Christ; for the Jewish infants entered into covenant with God without their personal consent, and were obliged to obey the law of Moses without this promise.

Thirdly, When therefore the antipedobaptists argue thus, "That which makes baptism saving, is the stipulation of a good conscience towards God; (1 Pet. iii. 23.) therefore baptism cannot be salutary to infants, who cannot make this stipulation:" this is as if I should say, The true circumcision before God is not the outward circumcision of the flesh, but the inward circumcision of the heart and spirit; (Rom. ii. 29.) therefore the Jewish infants, for want of this, were not to be admitted into covenant with God by circumcision; for the argument is plainly parallel; the answer of a good conscience is required, that the baptism may be salutary, therefore they only are to be baptized who can make this answer; and the inward circumcision is required as the only acceptable circumcision in the sight of God, therefore they only are to be circumcised who have this inward circumcision of the heart.

Prop. VI. The institution of baptism delivered in these words, Go, teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. (Matt. xxvii. 19.) or those, He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved, (Mark xvi. 16.) doth not infer an indirect or consequential prohibition of infant-baptism; because these words were not intended to exclude them from their former right of being admitted into covenant with their parents, but only to declare what was required of their parents to obtain a right of baptism, both for themselves and for their children. For (1.) had the commission given to Christ's apostles run in these words, Go, teach all nations, circumcising them, would they have thought that infants of those nations had been excluded from circumcision by it, because they were incapable of being taught? could they especially have understood him thus, who knew their infants were circumcised at an age incapable of knowledge? Why therefore should we judge they thought infants excluded by these words, Go, teach (or proselyte) all nations, baptizing them, since it was equally the custom in making proselytes to their religion, to teach them the fundamentals of the Jewish law; and upon their profession of the belief of it, not only to baptize them, but their infants also? The gerberith, or proselyte of the covenant of justice, was first to be instructed in the fundamentals of the law, the weight or burden of it, the penalties and the rewards or blessings contained in it; and then to promise his submission to it; and yet none of these prerequisites excluded the infants of those proselytes, then born, from baptism or circumcision; why therefore should the like conditions required of the adult Christian proselyte exclude his children? Or, why should we imagine, that those apostles should so apprehend these words, who knew full well that these conditions were required of the Jewish proselyte adult; and yet that by the sentence of the Sanhedrin, they stood obliged to baptize his children, as having right to baptism, by his parents' faith? "Is it reasonable (saith Dr. Stillingfleet) to think that when our Saviour bade the apostles gather the Jews and gentiles into a church-state, they should imagine infants were to be excluded from it; when the only nation that was in such a state, and all that were at any time admitted to it, had their infants so solemnly admitted?" To this Mr. Tombs answers, (1.) "That they who were born of that nation, were by birth, not by circumcision, visible members of that church." Now, (1.) were this true, it would evidently prove, that the infants of Christians are also visible members of Christ's church, as having the same title to it as the Jewish infants had to be members of their church, to wit, that they are born of Christian parents; and why then are they admitted into that state by baptism, when they are adult? (2.) This is impertinent, it being certain that they could not continue members of that church without circumcision, since the want of it renders them violaters of God's covenant, and upon that account to be cut off by death, or by exclusion from that church. And (3.) this assertion contradicts both the words of the institution, and the constant opinion which the whole Jewish nation had of it; for the words of the institution ran thus, Gen. xvii. 11. This is my covenant; i. e. the rite by which you shall enter into covenant with me: Ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a sign of the covenant between me and you: and, ver. 13. The child of the house shall be circumcised, and my covenant shall be in your flesh. The syndic or sponsor who held the child in his arms till it was circumcised, was called Baalberith, the master of the covenant; and when the child was circumcised, the father said, Blessed be the Lord who hath commanded us to cause this child to enter into the covenant of Abraham: so certain it is that the whole Jewish nation thought they entered into covenant by this rite.

Mr. Tombs saith, "That our Saviour's words, Matt. xxviii. 19. are to be expounded not according to the apprehensions of the apostles at first, for they mistook him, Acts x. 14. but as the words did express his meaning."

Now I grant that the apostles mistook the meaning of those words, Go, teach all nations, baptizing them, thinking the former words related only to the teaching of the Jews dispersed through the world, and to the proselytes of all nations they had made. (Acts xi. 19.) But this is much to our advantage: for seeing they did this in compliance with the received tradition of their own nation, that it was unlawful to converse with the gentiles, as being uncircumcised and unclean, we may be more assured that they acted in baptizing them according to the received tradition of their nation, that rite being used by them to make the gentiles clean. 2. Our Lord was pleased to correct their error about the persons to be taught, by a miraculous vision vouchsafed to Peter: seeing then we read of nothing done to correct their other supposed error, we have no reason to believe it was an error, but rather to judge it a true interpretation of the extent of their commission. It being therefore unquestionable among those disciples to whom our Lord directed this commission, that the children of Jews and proselytes were admitted to enter into covenant by the same rite and ceremony by which their parents did so; though they were as incapable of understanding the ends of the institution, or doing what was required of the parents to fit them for the institution, as our children are; that being thought sufficient for their admission, "quod à parentibus eorum factum fuit," which the parents did by their own free choice and faith: it being also evident that our Lord chose that baptism for the admission of persons into his new covenant and church, by which their proselytes were cleansed and fitted to enter into the Jewish church; what cause have we to think either that Christ's disciples would not so understand his commission, as to extend it to the same persons who formerly were admitted by the same rite, or that Christ did not intend it so, as to include the infants of believing parents? And then the admission of them must not be thought an alteration of Christ's institution, or an addition to it; but only a right understanding of it, and as an institution of baptism, instead of that circumcision, which was to cease under the new covenant, it being only a rite appointed for the entrance into the old. In fine, suppose some persons sent to the Indians from churches which retain infant-baptism, with this commission, Go, teach the Indians, baptizing them; could they who were thus sent conceive the intent of this commission was to exclude the infants of believing Indians? If not, then must it not be thought our Saviour's purpose to exclude them by the like words spoken to them, who baptize the infants of believing parents, and which were necessary for such a commission as sent them to the unbelieving world. For though this commission, as Mr. Tombs says, "went from our Saviour, and not from the Jewish church;" yet since it was a commission given to persons, who, even after they had owned the true Messiah, and had received the Holy Ghost, were very tenacious of their Jewish rites: and since it concerned a rite of common use in their church, and by which they cleansed the infants of all those who came into covenant with God as proselytes, applying to them the same rite by which their parents were fitted to enter into covenant; our Lord in this his institution, expressing no dislike to that way, and saying nothing of the unsuitableness of it to a gospel-state, must in all reason be supposed to approve the doing of it after the manner of that church. And, lastly, this will farther be confirmed by returning a clear answer to the arguments produced to prove that infants are excluded by the words of this commission. As,

Arg. 1. "It is not lawful (saith Mr. Tombs), where Christ hath assigned the thing to be done, expressing the qualification of the person, to do it to others, or otherwise:"

I answer, Hence it only follows, that no heathens are to be baptized, till they be first taught to believe in Christ: extend it farther, and, (1.) it cuts off all the members of a Christian church from baptism: for the argument runs as strongly thus, Where Christ hath appointed the thing to be done, and expressed the qualification of the person, it is not lawful to do it to others; but the only persons assigned in this commission to be taught and baptized, are τὰ ἔθνη, the heathens or unbelieving gentiles; therefore it is not lawful to teach or baptize a Jew, or any persons who were never heathens: and so the quakers and Socinians, who deny water-baptism to be a standing ordinance, must be in the right. (2.) It was not lawful for the Jews either to baptize or circumcise a heathen till he was taught the fundamentals of the Jewish law; but will it hence follow, that it was unlawful either to baptize or circumcise their children before? And yet the case is parallel: for teaching was undoubtedly the qualification assigned for the adult heathen to be admitted a proselyte of justice, and therefore by this rule it was not lawful to admit his children.

Arg. 2. "They who are to be baptized, must be taught to observe all things which Christ commanded his apostles."

Ans. 1. The text doth not say they must be first taught all these things, but rather they must be first taught to believe in Christ, then baptized, and after taught to observe all Christ's commands; and this interpretation is certain from the practice of the apostles, who instantly baptized whole houses on the belief of some, or all of them, that Jesus was the Christ, without any farther teaching. 2. The heathen, who was to be admitted as a proselyte of justice, was to be first taught the fundamentals of the law of Moses, before he either was baptized or circumcised: but was it therefore requisite that his children should first be taught? Again, all that were born in Abraham's house, or bought with his money, being his own, are to be circumcised; as for those taken in war, Abraham was to persuade them to it; and if they would not be persuaded, to dismiss or sell them; if, being of age, they consented to be circumcised (for to compel them to receive circumcision, had been a profanation of that ordinance), must therefore their children be circumcised only when they could consent?

Arg. 3. "Go, teach all nations, baptizing them, cannot be meant of them whilst infidels, but when taught to believe, and so when made disciples."

Ans. It was as absolutely necessary that heathens should be first taught to renounce their idolatry, and to believe in Christ, before they were baptized in his name, as it was necessary for idolatrous heathens to own the true God, and to believe the law of Moses, before they were admitted proselytes of justice, and so baptized and circumcised: but as it was not therefore necessary that their children should so believe, that they might enter by the same rites into the same covenant; so neither is it necessary for children born of believing parents under the gospel-state.

Arg. 4. To be baptized in the name of Christ, is to own Christ, as it appears from the words of the apostle, Were you baptized in the name of Paul? (1 Cor. i. 13.)

Ans. 1. This argument is built upon a false, or, at the least, an unnecessary interpretation of the apostle's words, which may well bear this sense, Stand you obliged by baptism to have Paul for your master, to yield obedience to him, or Christ? And then, as the infant was obliged by circumcision to yield obedience to the law of Moses, so may the Christian infant be obliged by baptism to yield obedience to the laws of Christ.

Secondly, The apostle here plainly speaks of those he had converted from heathenism to the faith of Christ, and therefore must be obliged by their baptism to own Christ as their Saviour; but hence it will not follow, that their children may not be baptized till they could do so. The adult persons who were admitted as proselytes to the Jewish religion, were first obliged to own the God of Israel as the true God, and the law of Moses as derived from him; but yet when they had done this, their infants were admitted both to baptism and circumcision, though they could do neither of these things.

Prop. VII. Had Christ intended to exclude the infants of believing parents from this sacrament, there was great reason for his especial prohibition, but little indeed of his command upon his intention to admit them, or of express naming them in a commission to baptize, directed to the members of the Jewish church, to whom pedobaptism, saith Dr. Lightfoot, was so well known, usual and frequent in the admission of proselytes, that nothing almost was more known or frequent.

First, "There was no need (saith he) to strengthen it with any other precept than that which converted baptism into an evangelical sacrament; for Christ took baptism into his hands, and converted it into an evangelical precept, as he found it; this only added, that he might promote it to a more worthy end and nobler use. The whole nation knew well enough that little children used to be baptized, there was no need of an (express) precept, for that which had ever by common use prevailed. If a royal proclamation should now issue out in these words, Let every one on the Lord's day resort to the public assemblies in the church, would it be reasonable thence to argue, that prayer, hearing of sermons, singing of psalms, were not to be performed in the public on the Lord's day, because there was no mention of them in the proclamation? there being no need to make mention of the particular kinds of Divine worship to be celebrated there, when they were always and every where well known, and always in use before the proclamation. The case is the very same in baptism; Christ instituted it for an evangelical sacrament, whereby all should be admitted into the gospel-covenant, as heretofore it was used for admission of proselytes to the Jewish religion; the particulars belonging to it—as, the manner of baptizing, the age, the sex to be baptized, &c. had no need of a special rule, because they were by common use of them sufficiently known to the most ignorant men."

On the other hand, there was need of a plain and open prohibition that infants and little children should not be baptized, if Christ would not have them baptized; for since it was common before, for the whole nation of the Jews to baptize them, had Christ designed to have that custom abolished, "it is reasonable to presume he would have openly forbid it: therefore his silence, and the silence of the Scripture in this matter, is a confirmation of the received practice." This Mr. Tombs retorts thus, "If Christ had intended to continue infant-baptism, had there not been great reason he should have positively told us so?" But had he considered that Christ spake not to us, but to them who were Jews, and that he did this when he was giving this commission to them whom he found still very tenacious of their former rites, he would have seen it more reasonable to conceive, that had Christ intended a prohibition of that rite for the future, and by it so great an alteration of the state of infants in reference to their church-membership, he had far greater reason positively to say he intended that alteration of the state of infants, than by his silence tacitly to permit them to go on still in the observation of that rite: since they who were so unwilling to understand his plain commission of preaching to the gentiles contrary to their received traditions, would be more unlikely to understand his silence as a prohibition of the like tradition.

Prop. VIII. We have great reason to conceive that Christ and his apostles did admit of infants' baptism, and thought the practice of it lawful and suitable to the gospel-state: for, (1.) it is certain that our Lord's disciples thought Christ's command to teach all nations concerned only the Jews and proselytes of justice of all nations, for they still looked on all the gentiles as unclean, though they were proselytes of the gate, and deemed it unlawful to go in to, or converse with, the gentiles. (Acts x. 28. xi. 3.) And this opinion they held after they had baptized thousands; and could they then imagine that his commission excluded those who by the law of Moses were admitted to circumcision, and by their constant custom were baptized together with their proselyted and believing parents? Since, notwithstanding the teaching prerequisite to the admission of adult proselytes of justice, and their especial caveat "de iis non nisi sponte circumcidendis," of not circumcising them without their consent, they both baptized and circumcised their infants, must they not also be supposed to have dealt thus with the infants of their proselyted parents to Christianity? especially considering that they thought of nothing less than of the changing the customs and traditions then received among them: (Acts xx. 21.) among which this was one, That *he is no proselyte who is not baptized as well as circumcised, and that without this he is still a gentile, and unholy. (2.) That baptism is a rite of initiation to Christians, as circumcision was to the Jews, appears from the apostle's declaration, Col. ii. 12. That in Christ we are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, and consisting in the putting off the body of sin, we being buried with him in baptism, and thence concluding we do not need the circumcision of the flesh; whence it may justly be inferred, that baptism is Christ's ordinance for the admission of infants of believing parents into the church of Christ, as circumcision was of old for the admission of the infants of the Jews into his church and covenant: for if it had been otherwise, and the infants under Christianity had not been received by any federal rite into covenant with God, the objection of the necessity of circumcision as to them would have been still in force, they entering into covenant by no other rite, and so remaining strangers from the church, and as much aliens from the adoption, the covenant, and promises, as the gentiles were; which sure the Jews would have objected to the reproach of Christianity, if truly they could have done it; for the more averse to Christianity they were, the more ready would they be by such arguments as these to shew the imperfection of that institution, and the advantage of the Jew on this account above the Christian. For instance, it was hotly disputed, Acts xv. whether the believing gentiles were to be received into the church, by circumcision, or not; and this question, as far as it concerned the believing gentiles, was carried by the council in the negative: they then who were concerned for the affirmative, being Christians, must either think the children of such persons about whom they disputed, were to be admitted by some other way, or not; if so, what other way, besides that of baptism, can be imagined; if not, they must conclude them unclean, excluded from God's church and favour, and from all the blessings they ascribed to circumcision. The Christian institution therefore must, for the satisfaction of their believing parents, afford some way of sanctifying these infants, or of admitting them into the number of God's people; which being confessedly no other than that of baptism, it must be supposed to allow that to them; that by it, in the phrase of Irenæus, *infantes et parvuli renascantur in Deum; infants and little children may be regenerated.

In a word, infants are thought capable of the remission of sin, and therefore of that baptism which is instituted for the remission of sin; they being born of the flesh, are flesh, and therefore need some way or other to be born anew; and since they cannot be thus begotten by the word, what more likely way can be imagined than that this new birth should pass upon them by the laver of regeneration, (Tit. iii. 5.) or that they should be born again of water, and of the Holy Ghost, that they may be members of Christ's body, he being only the Saviour of his body, and therefore must be capable of that ordinance by which we are all baptized into one body? They are capable of entering into the kingdom of God, into which they cannot enter, saith our Lord, except they be born of water and the Holy Ghost; they may obtain a blessed resurrection, and therefore must be buried with Christ in baptism. Deny all, or any of these things to infants, and they are lost for ever. Christ must have died as to them in vain, they being yet in their sin, and without Christ, in their unregenerate estate, incapable of entering into the kingdom of God, and of a blessed resurrection; and so it must have been better for them, dying in their infancy, that they had never been. Christ must have no real kindness for them, and their condition must be far worse under the gospel, than it was under the law, when they had both the seal and promise given to them, that God would be their God. That they are capable of all these blessings, by virtue of their baptism, provided they be capable subjects of it, is evident from those Scriptures, which ascribe all these blessings to persons duly receiving baptism, and do not, by any unworthy act, render themselves unworthy of them.

Ver. 20. Ἐγὼ μεθ' ὑμῶν εἰμι πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας, ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, And, lo, I am with you always to the end of the world.] That these words contain a promise of Christ's presence with and assistance of the ministers of the gospel throughout all ages of the world, is evident from the words πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας, at all times (or always): or had our Lord made this promise with relation to the apostles only, he would have said πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας ὑμῶν, all your days: and it is still more evident from the following words, ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, for that they are duly rendered to the end of the world, is evident from the continual use of them elsewhere, especially in this evangelist, who in one chapter uses this phrase three times, concerning the general judgment, which is to be at the end of the world, viz. xiii. 39, 40. 49. and xxiv. 3. of that time which the Jews thought contemporary with the general resurrection, and so with the end of the world. For, as Dr. Lightfoot notes on the place, the Jews held, that at the coming of the Messiah, the whole world should be destroyed, and there should be a renovation of it. And (3.) this may be farther argued from the apparent falsehood of the new exposition of these words, Behold, I will be with you till the end of the Jewish age, or till the destruction of Jerusalem; seeing, according to this interpretation, Christ, sending servants to preach his gospel to all the heathen nations, doth only promise his presence with them till the Jewish church was subverted; but not when, after the subversion of it, the churches of the gentiles were chiefly to be erected: yea, then no person, no, not the evangelist St. John, had any commission from Christ to preach the gospel to the heathen nations any longer, nor any promise of Christ's assistance with them; which yet is plainly false, seeing the promise of Christ's miraculous assistance made in the parallel place, Mark xvi. 16. 18. continued sensibly till the beginning of the fourth century.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. II.

Concerning the import of that phrase, ἵνα πληρωθῇ, "That it might be fulfilled," &c.

HERE being many things said to be done, ἵνα or ὅπως πληρωθῇ, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, thus or thus; I think it needful to say something of the true import of that phrase, by way of inquiry, Whether it sometimes only notes that such an action may by accommodation be said to be the fulfilling of the words of the prophet cited; because they were more signally accomplished by that action than by the actions to which they in the prophet do relate, though no such thing was by the prophet, or by the Spirit of God, intended, when the words were spoken? Or, Whether it be necessary, by virtue of those words, to say the Holy Ghost intended that those words should be more signally accomplished by some actions or passages which were afterward to happen? In answer to which question I say;

First, That when the phrase runs thus, this was done ἵνα or ὅπως πληρωθῇ, i. e. to this end, that such or such a prophecy might be fulfilled; I think it necessary to say, that the very completion of it by that action should be intended by the Holy Ghost, since otherwise that action can, in no propriety of speech, be said to be performed for that end.

Obj. The only considerable instance to the contrary, is taken from those words of St. John, xii. 38, 39. But though he had done so many miracles among them, they believed not, ἵνα πληρωθῇ, that the saying of Isaiah might be fulfilled, viz. Who hath believed our report? &c. For seeing the prediction of the prophet could be no cause of their infidelity, it seems improper to affirm that they believed not that this prediction might be verified.

Ans. To this I answer, That in all predictions of evil actions to be performed by free agents, or agents capable of being diverted from them by providential actions, or strong impressions made upon their spirits, there is not only a foreknowledge that the action, if Providence interpose not, will be done, but a decree or declaration that Providence will not interpose to hinder them, but will permit such persons to act according to their evil inclinations. So that the import of these words may be only this: That God foreseeing the infidelity of the Jews, left them to the blindness and hardness of their own hearts, permitting them to continue in it; that the saying of Isaiah might be fulfilled. So that though the prediction was not the proper and internal cause of their infidelity, yet was the completion of it the final cause of the Divine permission; and therefore the action, though he be no way productive of it, or obliged to hinder it, yet being a permission by way of punishment of men's evil dispositions, in such cases is ascribed to God; as when God is said to send among men strong delusions to believe a lie, because they receive not the truth in the love of it, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. (2 Thess. ii. 10—12.)

Secondly, Of the places where this phrase ἵνα or ὅπως πληρωθῇ, that it might be fulfilled, occurs, I thus distinguish; that in some of them the Jews might know, before the doing of the action, that such a thing was by the prophet intended or designed to be fulfilled by the coming of their Messiah; as, v. g. that a virgin should conceive and bear a son, Isa. vii. 14. Matt. i. 23. that their Messiah was to die for the sins of the people, Isa. liii. 7, 8. Matt. xxvi. 54. that he should come riding on a colt, the foal of an ass, Zech. ix. 9. Matt. xxi. 4, 5. that his side should be pierced, Zech. xii. 10. John xix. 37. it being natural for the Jews to inquire touching such words as these, Of whom speaketh the prophet this? And hence we find their doctors by tradition did expound these words of the Messiah.

Moreover, it being so expressly foretold, and generally received among the Jews, that their Messiah was to be the Son of David, and therefore to resemble him, that nothing is more common in their writings than to apply to him the words of David, and even to call him David, after the example of the holy prophets, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. xxxvii. 24, 25. Hos. iii. 5. saying of their king Messiah, "David shemiah," David is his name: (see Dr. Pocock on Hos. iii. 5. and Pugio Fidei, par. ii. cap. 5. §. 8.) I say, this being so, it could not be difficult for them to believe or conceive the words spoken by or relating to David, might, by the intention of God, have a higher or more eminent completion in this second David their king; thus that, by his speaking in parables, (Matt. xiii. 35.) that of the Psalmist might be more eminently fulfilled, I will open my mouth in parables; (Psal. lxxviii. 2.) that by the providential preservation of his bones from being broken, that which the same Psalmist saith of the righteous man should be more eminently fulfilled in him, He keepeth all his bones, so that not one of them is broken; (Psal. xxxiv. 20.) that by the treachery of Judas in betraying his Master, (John xiii. 18.) that which was spoken of Ahithophel's counsel against David might have a more eminent completion in our Lord, viz. He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me. In all these things, I say, there could be nothing strange to the Jews, who, as their Targum on the Psalms demonstrates, do expound places more obscurely, if at all relating to him, of their king Messiah. And this they had greater reason to believe, when, by their own confession, the Psalm from which the words are cited, doth relate to Christ, and the words cited were not verified of David; as when, by the soldiers parting of Christ's garments, and casting lots for his coat that was without seam, John xix. 24. that of Psal. xxii. 19. is said to be fulfilled; They parted my garments among them, and for my vesture did they cast lots.

But then in other instances it was not necessary that the Jews should understand, nor is it easy to conceive how, without teaching, they could understand, they were to be accomplished in their Messiah; or by these actions done by him, to which they are applied by the evangelist; as, v. g. that the words of Hosea, xi. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my son, should be accomplished by God's calling his Son Christ out of Egypt; (Matt. ii. 15.) or how that which was said by the prophets, of Christ's being despised and rejected, should be made good by Christ's dwelling at Nazareth; (ver. 23.) or that by the coming of the Messiah to them, the land of Zabulon and Nephthalim should be enlightened; (Matt. iv. 15.) that by the doing of his miracles in such secrecy, and without contention, that of the prophet should be fulfilled, He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the streets: (Isa. xlii. 2.) all these, I say, are things the Jews could never know, unless they did receive it by tradition that they were things relating to the Messiah promised to them.

But then I add, that there was no necessity they should beforehand know that any of these things were thus intended by the prophets, they being not produced by the evangelists, to prove our Jesus must be the Messiah promised to the Jews, or to convince the infidel; but only as instances which they, by the same Spirit which spake by the prophets, were assured did belong unto him; and of this all the believing Jews and gentiles might be assured by the authority of the evangelists, whom they saw assisted by the same Spirit which moved the prophets, and thereby equally enabled to give us the true interpretation and intendment of them. From what is here laid down it follows,

First, That it is no sufficient objection against this assertion, that if these mystical senses were intended by the prophets, or by the Holy Ghost speaking by them, the Jews could never understand these prophecies before the event. For it was sufficient that they might be understood by them in the primary and literal sense of them before, and that after the event they might be understood by them in the mystical sense also, by virtue of that explication, which men, assisted by the same Spirit which did at first indite them, gave of them, or in which they averred they were again fulfilled. And I hope it is no objection against the predictions contained in the Revelation of St. John, that we do not at present understand them, it being sufficient that Christians shall understand them in those times in which they are to be fulfilled. Nor,

Secondly, Is it advisedly said, that the "authority of the apostles is not in these passages produced as that which added strength to their reasonings:" for in these passages they never do pretend to reason, but barely to assert; and surely the authority of men delivering these things by virtue of the Spirit sent down from heaven to teach them all things, and lead them into all truth, must be sufficient to prove the truth of what they say concerning all these places: now this authority the apostles and evangelists must ascribe to themselves in all these writings, or the whole church of Christ must be continually mistaken in receiving the Gospels written by them as the word of God, and the unquestionable rules of faith; for if you only have recourse to their honesty in relating things, you never will persuade men to believe, that by the strength of memory they could record, not only all they could have delivered of Christ's actions, but all his sermon on the mount, and his long discourses in St. John, especially chap. vi. and chap. xiii. to xvii. so exactly, as that we can be certain they did in nothing vary from the true meaning of the words of Christ; especially if the Gospel of St. John was written, as is supposed, almost seventy years after the words recorded in it had been spoken by our Lord. It therefore either must be said, that the Holy Spirit promised to them for that end did bring these things to their remembrance, and did enable them, by comparing spiritual things with spiritual, thus to apply these places to their particular events; or it must be owned that these Gospels, in which these passages are so applied, and all these long discourses are recited, are of no certainty, and so can be to us no rule of faith.

Moreover, let it be noted, that they neither did nor could they take it for granted, that any of these places should be so explained, by reason of any received tradition of the Jews; there being no such explication of them to be found in any of their Targums, or cited by those who have conversed most in the rabbinical and cabalistical expositions of the Jews. In a word, either these supposed traditionary expositions were intended by the Holy Ghost, or they were not; if they were, the apostles delivered a certain truth, when they said these things were done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets; if they were not, they must be guilty of a manifest untruth, in declaring they were done that the Scriptures, or the sayings of the prophets, might be fulfilled; when, by the doing of them, only the false and extravagant traditions of the Jews were accomplished, but nothing at all was done, which the Holy Ghost intended in the inditing of those Scriptures.

Thirdly, I add, that when the words run only thus, τότε ἐπληρώθη, then was fulfilled such a thing spoken by the prophets, though I see no necessity of so doing, we may admit of a completion by way of accommodation. That there is no necessity of granting this, I hope I have made appear in my notes on Matt. ii. 17. xxvii. 9. the only places where this phrase is used; yet, since the end of doing such an action is not here expressed, and therefore the same reason of any farther intention of the Holy Ghost doth not here obtain; I say, we may in these cases admit of an accommodation. And having thus said what doth sufficiently answer all that Mr. Clerc and Woltzogenius say on this subject; I proceed, with all due respect, both to the piety and learning of Mr. Dodwell, to consider what Mr. Clerc here citeth from him. And,

First, Whereas he supposes "God did intend the prophecies which were committed to writing, and enrolled in the public canon of the church, should be understood by the persons concerned in them:" I grant this, when they are concerned in them, i. e. when they are fulfilled by the event: but will any man hence infer that the Jews must rightly understand in every age the prophecies of Jacob, Gen. xlix. or the song of Moses, Deut. xxxiii. or Ezekiel's description of the temple, from chap. xl. to the end; or Daniel's prophecies, chap. ix. and xi. or that the Christians must in all ages understand the contents of the Revelations of St. John, which were to be sent to the churches, and which undoubtedly concern what should befal them? Old Jacob saith to his sons, Come, I will tell you what shall befal you in the last days, Gen. xlix. 1. then he prophesies of Simeon and Levi thus; I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel: of Judah, that he is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up, ver. 9.; that Issachar is a strong ass, couching down between two burdens, ver. 14.; that Dan should judge his people, viz. by Samson, of the tribe of Dan, ver. 16. and he should be a serpent in the way, and an adder in the path, &c. ver. 17.; of Gad, that a troop should invade him, i. e. the Ammonites and Moabites, and that he should overcome at the last, viz. by Jephthah, the Gileadite, ver. 19.; that Naphtali is a hind let loose, he giveth goodly words, ver. 21. Now what necessity is there, or what probability, that his sons, or the Jews, should presently understand the import of these mystical expressions, which were to be fulfilled by such persons as Samson and Jephthah, of whom they could have no knowledge; and by such providences as the choosing the tribe of Levi to be God's inheritance, and settling the sceptre in the line of David, of which they then knew nothing? These prophecies must therefore, many of them, be expounded only by the event.

Secondly, When he adds, "That prophecies committed to writing, and designedly propagated to future ages, must needs have been of a general and permanent concernment:" I beg leave to say, it is sufficient that they be of concernment to those ages in which they are to be fulfilled; for otherwise experience shews the Jews had no just notions of Ezekiel's visions, or of Daniel's prophecies, or the prophecies of Zechariah; nor have the Christians any certain interpretation of many prophecies contained in the Revelation. If indeed they be prophecies designed for the support and comfort of his people under their circumstances, as the prophecy of the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon, after seventy years; or prophecies containing any promise respecting the coming of the Messiah, and pointing out the time when they were to expect him, as that of their Messiah suddenly coming to his temple, Mal. iii. 1. and the Desire of all nations filling that house with glory, Hag. ii. 7. these being prophecies by which their faith was to be strengthened, and all their hopes erected, it may reasonably be expected that in such cases they should have some present knowledge of the import of them, though much inferior to that which the event and actual completion of them would afford. And, therefore, as many prophets and righteous men desired to see these things, and therefore understood the import of them, Matt. xiii. 17. so saith St. Peter, was it revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister these things. (1 Pet. i. 11, 12.) But then, when the predictions were of things merely typical, and related not to the literal and primary import of the words, but only to a mystical sense of them, to be accomplished by an event which afterward should happen, it is sufficient that they might know this mystical import of them by the event. So, v. g. when Jacob saith of Simeon and Levi, I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel, (Gen. xlix. 7.) it was sufficient that they then understood the meaning of these words, when it so fell out, that the posterity of Simeon had no separate inheritance by themselves, but only a portion in the midst of the tribe of Judah, (Josh. xix. 1. 9.) and when the tribe of Levi was dispersed among all the tribes; nor have we any reason to believe they understood this before.

Thirdly, When he adds, That "the church concerned in these prophecies cannot be only those ages which were to survive the accomplishment, but also those before, because the only momentous reason that must be conceived concerning these as well as other revelations, must be some duty which could not otherwise be known;" I desire him to shew upon what duty, which could not otherwise be known, depended the true interpretation of Ezekiel's visions, or Daniel's prophecies, or the words of Jacob now cited, or many passages in the Revelation which are yet mysterious: and why this postnate knowledge might not serve as to illustrate the Divine prescience, so to confirm the Christians in what they did believe already, and for the conviction both of Jews and infidels, when the event was, by men so miraculously assisted by the Holy Ghost, declared to be a completion of these prophecies; the author of the Revelation having said, that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, (Rev. xix. 10.) I do not understand.

And whereas he insists much on the word Revelations, which name he thinks these prophecies could not deserve, unless they could be understood by ordinary means without new revelations: I answer, that as the writings of Ezekiel and Daniel are never called revelations, but only visions, and those of the Revelation are so styled, not as made known, as to their import, to the churches, but as revealed to St. John; so it is evident from the New Testament, that there was need of a new spirit of prophecy to understand the mysteries of the Old Testament; and of a revelation or extraordinary assistance of the Holy Spirit, to know that such passages of the prophets belonged to such actions of our Lord, and such transactions relating to the propagation of the gospel; nor will any man be able to establish the application made of them to such passages on any other foot: and in like manner, when the fulness of the gentiles shall come in, and the body of the Jews shall be gathered to the Christian faith, I know not why a new effusion of the Spirit may not be expected.

In a word, when I shall see this learned person, by his skill in oneirocritics, expounding either Ezekiel's visions, or the Revelation of St. John, from chap. vi. to xx. then only shall I begin to think it not incredible, that skill in the art of oneirocritics was the means by God designed for the expounding those visions, prophecies, and revelations. (See Grotius on Matt. i. 22.)

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. V.

Relating to the question, viz.—"Whether the duties there enjoined by Christ did really belong to the scope and intention of the moral law, and rather were corrections of the misapprehensions of the scribes and pharisees about it, than additions to it; or were indeed precepts not contained in, but by himself superadded to the moral law?"

IN answer to this question, I say,

First, Whatsoever Christ doth here, it must be confessed, that elsewhere he hath added to the law of nature, or the moral law, viz. when he commands Christians to love one another, as he hath loved them; i. e. so as to lay down their lives for the brethren. (1 John iii. 16.) For I know no law of nature or of Moses that required this before, nor did the reason of it, viz. Christ's laying down his life for us, obtain before; and therefore this is styled his commandment by way of excellency, John xv. 12, 13. yea, his new commandment, John xiii. 34. 1 John ii. 8. (See the note there.)

Secondly, I grant that Christ hath added to the permissive laws of Moses, or rather hath restrained Christians from acting suitably to those permissions; v. g. whereas the law of Moses permitted a man to divorce his wife, if she found not favour in his eyes, by reason of some matter of uncleanness in her; (Deut. xxiv. 1.) that is, as the Jews interpret that clause, something that rendered her disgusted by and offensive to him: Christ plainly hath forbidden all divorces upon any other cause than that of fornication; but then he doth this, not by introducing a new law, but by reviving an old one, and shewing, that no man ought to put asunder those whom God, by his first institution of matrimony, had joined together and made one.

He hath also added to the law of retaliation; but then, according to the constant doctrine of the Jews, that law, though it bound the judge to execute it, when by the sufferer he was required so to do, yet it bound not the sufferer to require that execution; and therefore in respect of him, it only was permissive: and this permission, Christ seems to have restrained, not by imposing any new law, but by preferring to it the laws of charity and mercy, and of a peaceable disposition, under lesser and therefore tolerable injuries; which thing is suitable to the law of nature: and by restraining us from gratifying our revenge, or our displeasure against any person, or desiring his hurt, when we receive no benefit or advantage by it, and from resisting force by force to our greater damage; or going to law for lesser matters, to the scandal of our profession, or the impairing of brotherly charity and friendship.

Moreover, there seems to be even in the words of Christ, this signal difference betwixt his manner of speaking of the permissive laws of Moses and of the precepts of the decalogue; for treating of the latter, he still saith, Ye have heard it hath been said to them of old; but of the former he only saith, Ye have heard that it hath been said: (ver. 31. 38. 43.) which by the way shews that those words, Thou shalt hate thine enemy, are not preceptive, but permissive only; and that they contain a permission not given by God, but by the pharisees to do so. (See the note on ver. 43.)

Now this concession gives a sufficient answer to that objection, that Christ here doth not oppose the doctrine of the scribes and pharisees, but the permission of divorce and of retaliation, allowed by the law of Moses; it being granted that Christ hath given precepts transcending these permissive laws of Moses, occasioned by the stubbornness of the Jewish nation, and by the hardness of their hearts, and denied only that he hath added any thing to the true scope and intention of the moral law.

So also when it is added, that Christ gives such precepts of which we find no footsteps in the law of Moses, as those of not resisting evil, but rather turning the other cheek; and therefore in them seems not to explain the old, but to have given a new law:

It is granted, that in these words he gives a new law opposed to the positive permissive law of talio; but then it is denied, that he discoursing of the preceptive moral laws, hath added any thing to them, which was not virtually contained in them. And therefore,

Thirdly, I add, that according to all the rules given by divines for the interpretation of the decalogue, what our Lord adds unto the letter of the third, the sixth, and the seventh commandments, must be contained under the genuine import of those precepts: for these are two known rules relating to that subject, viz.

First, That where any vice is forbidden, that must be consequentially forbidden, which is a natural means, an ordinary occasion of a provocation, inducement, or temptation, to that sin; it being, say civilians, the property of a good law, non solum tollere vitia, sed etiam occasiones vitiorum: and this may be confirmed from the very nature of means; for they receive their name and their morality from the end we aim at; and so, if they be such as have a proper tendency to what is good, then are they styled good; but if they do thus tend to what is evil, they must be evil also.

Secondly, That when any evil is forbidden in the decalogue, the least degree of that evil action is forbidden; for gradus non mutat speciem: so that the least degree of sin is sin, and sin is the transgression of a law, and therefore of that law which doth forbid that kind of sin. Now hence it follows,

First, That vain swearing, or swearing in our ordinary discourse, must be forbidden in the command requiring us not to swear falsely, or take the name of God in vain. For (1.) the reason of the prohibition of false swearing is this, because it is a horrid profanation of the sacred name of God, as is apparent from those words, Lev. xix. 12. Thou shalt not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God. Now by swearing in our common discourse, we make the sacred name common, and therefore do profane it. (2.) Because this custom of swearing in our common discourse, doth naturally lead us to the sin of perjury: it being the observation both of Hierocles* a heathen, of Philo† a Jew, and St. Austin a Christian, that ἐκ πολυορκίας ψευδορκία, from the custom of swearing men quickly slide into perjury: and what can be expected from a common swearer, but that he sometimes should swear falsely, and as well violate as profane the oath of God, since by his frequent swearing he shews that he esteemeth not an oath as sacred, nor looks upon it with due reverence? And he that doth not reverence an oath, it is his chance and not his care is to be thanked, if he be not perjured. Moreover, not only Christians, but even Jews, have always thought that swearing lightly, or upon frivolous occasions, and without necessity, was here forbidden. Hence, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, is, saith the Septuagint, Thou shalt not use it ἐπὶ τῷ ματαίῳ; saith Aquila, εἰς εἰκῆ, vainly or rashly; Thou shalt not swear ῥᾳδίως, easily, saith Philo; not without cause, saith the Targum: nor is it reasonable to conceive God should permit the Jews to swear thus lightly by his name, seeing the heathens,* by the light of nature, did condemn this practice; and yet we find no precept in the law of Moses in which this practice is so likely to be forbidden as in this.

Secondly, Hence it doth also follow, that all causeless anger and rancour of spirit against others, and all the expressions of it, by provoking language and reviling censures, must be consequentially forbidden by those words, Thou shalt not kill, because they tend and do dispose us to those contentions which often end in blood; and to that contempt of others which makes us not to value their lives, and therefore not much fear the taking them away; and, lastly, to beget in us that hatred which in Divine construction is accounted murder; for, he that hateth his brother is a murderer. (1 John iii. 15.) And,

Thirdly, Hence it also follows, that all lustings of the heart after the forbidden enjoyment of a woman, and all such usage of the eye, the hand, or other senses, which naturally are incentives to any filthiness of the flesh, must be forbidden by those words, Thou shalt not commit adultery; the last, as being plain incentives to that uncleanness which is forbidden under that name; the first, as being a kind of adultery: for seeing out of the heart (saith Christ) come fornications and adulteries, (Matt. xv. 19.) they must be in it first; and in it they cannot be, but by the lusting of the heart towards these actions.

Here then is a plain demonstration, That Christ, in his discourse on these three precepts, hath made no addition to them; for what is certainly contained in these commandments and forbidden by them, can be no addition to them.

Secondly, Against these supposed additions to the moral law contained in the decalogue, I argue thus: Christ hath not added to the duties formerly belonging to the first or to the second table, therefore he hath not added to this law: to suppose that Christ hath added to the moral precept of the first table, is to suppose that he hath added to perfection; for that required the Jew to love his God with all his soul, mind, heart, and strength: (Deut. vi. 5.) and even the voice of nature will instruct us that he is worthy thus to be beloved. And is not this as much as Christ requireth of the Christians? Could the Jew comply with this precept in its greatest latitude, without exerting his utmost vigour in his service; and doth Christ require more? Will he not accept the engagement of our whole heart, mind, and spirit, in his service? Doth he require that our obedience should exceed our strength?

Nor can it reasonably be supposed that Christ hath added to the duties of the second table, since that requires us to love our neighbour as we do ourselves. (Matt. xix. 18, 19.) Now the apostle Paul assures us, that all the commandments of the second table, and every other precept relating to our duty to our neighbour, is comprised in that one word or precept, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself; (Rom. xiii. 9.) and that love worketh no evil to our neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law, (ver. 10. see the note there.) But against this it is objected,

First, That if Christ had intended in this discourse to have corrected the imperfect or false interpretations which the scribes and pharisees had made of these commandments, he would have named them, as you do in the interpretation of his words.

Ans. This he sufficiently hath done by saying, (ver. 10.) Except your righteousness (i. e. your obedience to the moral law) exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, you shall in no case enter into the kingdom of God; and then proceeding forthwith to shew, how and in what particulars we must exceed their righteousness. And, indeed, had our Lord designed to teach us, that in order to our entrance into his kingdom, we must exceed the righteousness prescribed in the moral law, why doth he only say, Except your righteousness exceed that of the scribes and pharisees, who did in many cases evacuate the law, and who are branded by him with hypocrisy for omitting the weightier matters of the law?

Obj. 2. It is objected, That had our Lord designed not to add any thing to the moral law, but only to expound it better than the scribes had done, he would not after the recital of the law have added, But I say unto you; but rather would have said, The law of Moses farther saith unto you.

Ans. To this I answer, That let our Saviour's preface to these expositions of the words cited by him be considered, and then we may discern sufficient reason for these words; for having said, ver. 17. I came not to destroy the law, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι, but to establish and confirm it, he, in the following instances, may rationally be supposed to shew how he did this, viz. by producing first the law, and then by adding, for the establishment and confirmation of the true import of it, But I say to you: and when he saith, ver. 19. that he that looseth one of the least of these commandments, and teacheth others so to do, shall be accounted least in the kingdom of heaven; he by the least of these commandments, seems not to understand any command expressly written in the decalogue, since none of them can be called little, but the lesser degrees of offence against them; and then by adding of these words, But I say unto you, he shews how we should teach men to observe them.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. VI. VER. 16.

IN this appendix I shall endeavour briefly, and I hope clearly, to state these two questions:—

* Πάντως μὲν δὴ καλὸν ἐπιτήδευμα θεῶν ὀνόματα μὴ χαίνειν ῥᾳδίως. Plato, de Legib. lib. xi. p. 966. "Nam et in totum jurare, nisi ubi necesse est, gravi viro parum convenit." Quintil. Instit. Orat. lib. ix. cap. 2. p. 419. Hierocles in Carm. Pythag. p. 33, 34.

First, Whether fasting be a duty now incumbent on Christians, or a thing left indifferent under the Christian institution?

Secondly, Whether it be any part of Divine worship or not?

In answer to the first inquiry, Whether fasting be a duty, or a thing indifferent under the Christian institution, I answer,

First, That as fasting signifies, in the grammatical import of the word, abstaining only for a time from the meat we ordinarily take at other times, it is undoubtedly a thing indifferent; for in this sense, if we eat not, we are not the better, for God accounts no man the better purely because his stomach is more empty: and if we eat somewhat even on our days of fasting, when the impotency or indisposition of our bodies doth require it, we are not the worse. But as it in the Scripture signifies a day or time set apart for the affliction of the soul, and calling it to an account for our past sins, in order to our godly sorrow for and reformation of them; or a day set apart for prayer, and humbling of ourselves, in order to the averting Divine judgments, or the obtaining any public or private blessings from God's hands; I think it continues a duty still, and a thing highly acceptable to God, when it sincerely is performed in prosecution of these ends.

Secondly, It is certain that under the old covenant public fasts were commanded by God, and one of them with that severity, that the punishment of him who did not then afflict his soul was excision: (Lev. xvi. 16.) and when any adversity befel them, which made this duty proper, not only pious kings, (2 Chron. xx. 3.) but God also by his holy prophets called upon them to sanctify a fast. (Joel i. 14. ii. 12. 15.) This also pious persons voluntarily did upon extraordinary occasions: I wept (saith David), and humbled myself with fasting: (Psal. lxix. 10. see Psal. xxxv. 13. cix. 24.) Nehemiah fasted when he heard of the affliction of the people at Jerusalem: (Nehem. i. 4.) so did Daniel, (ix. 3.) These fasts they sanctified,

(1.) To avert the impendent wrath of God, (Joel i. 14, 15. ii. 17.) and to render him propitious to them in their distress, that he might be jealous for his land, and pity his people. (Joel ii. 18.) Thus did the people of Israel fast, when they were twice smitten by the Benjamites; (Judg. xx. 26.) Jehoshaphat and his people, when distressed by the Ammonites; (2 Chron. xx. 3.) the Jews, when in danger of death from the contrivances of Haman. (Esth. iv. 16.)

(2.) To beg pardon for and reform their offences; as when they fasted for their idolatry at Mizpeh, and did put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and serve the Lord only, (1 Sam. vii. 5, 6.) and when they separated themselves from their strange wives. (Nehem. ix. 1.)

(3.) To beg especial mercies of God; as when Ezra and his company fasted to seek of God a right way: (Ezra viii. 21.) and all this they did with good success, and so as to obtain God's blessing. These fasts, when duly celebrated, are styled such fasts as God hath chosen, (Isa. lviii. 5, 6.) an acceptable day to the Lord, (ver. 5.) a sabbath, a day holy to the Lord, and honourable, (ver. 13.) and fasting thus was indeed fasting to the Lord. (Zech. vii. 5.)

And as for voluntary and private fasts, I have observed that pious persons still used them as occasion did require. Anna the prophetess fasted and prayed night and day, and served God, as well by fasting as by praying. (Luke ii. 37.) And in our Saviour's time the disciples of John and of the pharisees fasted often; and this was thought so necessary a piece of devotion, that they admire and look upon it as a great defect in Christ's disciples, that they did not the like. (Matt. ix. 14.)

Thirdly, Observe that Christ is so far from disapproving these times of fasting as unsuitable or unnecessary under the Christian dispensation, that he declares the time was coming when his disciples should fast, as well as others. (Matt. ix. 15.) He teacheth all Christians after what manner they ought to fast, that their fastings might be acceptable to God, promising a reward from God on them who do so, and being no less solicitous that they might fast than that they might pray, and do their alms, so as to be rewarded by God for them; (Matt. vi. 16.) and lets his disciples know, that their want of faith in casting out a devil, proceeded from their want of seeking it by prayer and fasting. (Matt. xvii. 21.) Now surely he who declares that his disciples should fast after he was taken from them, he who is solicitous they might perform this duty without hypocrisy, and who excites them to it by the promise of a reward from God, and who informs them that their want of faith proceeded from their want of fasting, sufficiently demonstrates he looked upon this as a duty to be performed by his disciples under the gospel dispensation. And, therefore,

Fourthly, That Christ's apostles and disciples did so esteem it, we learn sufficiently from their practice; they being in fastings often, (2 Cor. xi. 27.) and approving themselves as the ministers of God, by fastings, as well as other Christian duties: (2 Cor. vi. 4, 5.) this being also the usual preface to the imposition of hands, they doing this with prayer and fasting, (Acts xiv. 23.) and in commending the ministers of the gospel to the Lord for his assistance; (Acts xiii. 3.) and married Christians being permitted to separate from one another for a season, that they might give themselves to prayer and fasting. (1 Cor. vii. 5.) Note,

Lastly, That fasting is not a ceremonial precept, there being no command under the law for voluntary fasting, or public fastings on extraordinary occasions, but only for one stated fast on the day of expiation; it therefore must be ranked among those moral duties or precepts of the law of nature, which Christ came not to dissolve, but to fulfil. And this appears, because it was the practice not only of the Jews and devout proselytes, (Acts x. 30.) but even of the heathens also. These days of fasting to avert judgments, obtaining not only among the eastern nations, (Jonah iii. 5.) but among the Egyptians, the Greeks, and Romans, and being part of their sacred rites, at which times they were σίτων ἄμοιροι, or ἄγευστοι, that is, fasting. In a word, it is owned by them who contend fasting is a thing indifferent, that it is a help to the worship of God, and an instrument of piety. It is by Phavorinus defined to be the mother of health to the body, and the preservative of the soul; and surely that which is a help to devotion, and a means of promoting piety, must be as much required to those good ends, as are the helps and means of sober living required by the command of temperance.

That I may answer to the second question, I must premise the distinction so frequent in the schools, betwixt an imperate and an elicit act of worship. An elicit act of worship is an act which hath God for its immediate object, and solely is designed to do him honour, or to agnize some Divine excellency or perfections. Thus an act of faith is an elicit act of religious worship; because it doth, and is designed purely to acknowledge the Divine power and veracity; and prayer is an elicit act of Divine worship, because by it we do acknowledge the power, wisdom, and goodness of God. Whereas an imperate act of worship is that which hath another object besides God, and only hath relation to him because it is performed in obedience to his command: thus charity hath for its object our indigent or our afflicted brother, and only hath relation to God, as it is done to others in obedience to his command; and justice is an imperate act of worship only, because it immediately relateth to what belongeth to our brother, though we deal justly with him from the consideration of that God who is the avenger of those who do defraud or overreach their brother. Now to apply this distinction to our present purpose; they, who deny that fasting is an elicit act of worship, do freely grant it to be an imperate act of worship, as being serviceable to prayer, and that repentance towards God, which are immediate acts of worship. Here therefore note,

First, That even Mr. Dally grants, that fasting was a part of Divine worship under the old testament; whence we may gather that it must be so also under the New Testament, since under both it hath the same object, end, and reasons, and so must be as much an act of religious worship under the New Testament, as it was under the Old; where, to observe it, was to sanctify a fast, to keep a day holy and acceptable to the Lord, and as much λατρεύειν to serve God by fasting as by prayer. (Luke ii. 37.)

Secondly, It is confessed that fasting, considered as a help to prayer, repentance, or pious meditations, is only an imperate act of religion; but as it is an act of revenge upon ourselves for our offences done against the Divine Majesty, and an acknowledgment that we are by them become unworthy to receive from him our daily bread; and as it is a part of our time consecrated to the service of God, I see not why it should be less esteemed an act of religious worship, than the observation of a sabbath, or a day of thanksgiving.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XII.

Concerning the nature of the sin against the Holy Ghost, and the reason why it is said to be such as will never be forgiven.

FIRST, for explication of this subject I do not think it proper, with the learned Grotius, to mollify the severity of this sentence, by saying, that what is absolutely spoken by the Lord must be comparatively understood, and only intimates, that it is very difficult to obtain the pardon of this sin, not that it will admit of no forgiveness: for our Saviour says expressly of this sin, both negatively, that it shall never be forgiven, and affirmatively, that the person guilty of it shall be obnoxious to eternal judgment, and confirms all this with an asseveration, Verily I say unto you, He that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but ἔνοχός ἐστιν, is liable to eternal judgment. (Mark iii. 29.) Much less are we to admit of Dr. Hammond's descant on the words, that this sin shall not be pardoned but upon a particular repentance, for that is as true of every known and wilful sin, as of the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost; and therefore this interpretation makes no discrimination of this from any other wilful sin, which yet our Saviour plainly designed by those words to do. Moreover, against both these expositions it is observable, that our Lord saith expressly of all manner of other sins against the Son of man, or the Messiah, that they shall be forgiven; and yet, doubtless, men's blasphemies against the Saviour of the world, and other heinous crimes, will not be pardoned without particular repentance, and it is very difficult to bring such grievous sinners to repentance. Let it be noted,

Secondly, That from our Saviour's words it plainly seems to follow, that this sin consists, or is completed, not in our thoughts or in our works, but in our words, for it is he that speaketh, ver. 32. he that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, that shall not be forgiven. Simon, the magician, conceived as vilely of the Holy Ghost as we can well imagine, when he thought he might be purchased by money; (Acts viii. 18, 19.) for this was to conceive the Holy Ghost was given only by some higher art of magic than he had attained to; and yet St. Peter exhorts him to pray, that the thoughts of his heart might be forgiven; (ver. 22.) and they who, by uncleanness, fornication, and adultery, despised the commandments which God had given them by his apostles, to possess their vessels in sanctification and honour, are said to have despised not only man, but God, who also had given them the Holy Ghost; (1 Thess. iv. 8.) and yet St. Paul supposes such persons might repent of the uncleanness, fornication, and lasciviousness, they had committed. (2 Cor. xii. 21.) This sin must, therefore, be committed, not only by our evil thoughts and works, but also by our blasphemous words against the Holy Ghost.

Thirdly, Observe, that it is not any blasphemy against the Spirit in his miraculous operations, such as were casting out of devils, and healing of diseases, which is here styled the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, this being here done by the pharisees against the Son of man; for he declareth, ver. 28. that he did cast out devils by the Spirit of God: they therefore must blaspheme that Spirit by which our Saviour did this, by saying, he cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils; and yet our Saviour saith, that even this blasphemy against the Son of man should be forgiven, but it was properly the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. And therefore,

Fourthly, Let it be noted, that there is a plain difference in Scripture betwixt the operations of the Spirit and the gifts or distributions of the Holy Ghost; all the miraculous operations which were done upon others, viz. the casting out of devils, the healing of diseases, the curing of the lame, the blind, the dumb, the maimed, the raising of the dead, were the extraordinary operations of the Spirit; but all the inward gifts, by which the understanding was enlightened, and was enabled to perform things, which by nature it could not do without the immediate working of the Holy Spirit, are styled the gifts or distributions of the Holy Ghost; as, v. g. the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, prophecy, discerning of spirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them. That there is ground for this distinction will appear from these considerations:

(1.) Because our Saviour, whilst he was upon earth, gave to his apostles and the seventy disciples power to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, cast out devils, and to raise the dead; (Matt. x. 8. Luke x. 9.) and yet St. John informs us, that the Holy Ghost was not yet come, because that Jesus was not glorified: (vii. 39.) and Christ informed his disciples, that if he did not go away, the Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghost, would not come to them; but when I go (saith he), I will send him to you: (John xvi. 17. xiv. 16.) and St. Peter tells the Jews, that our Lord being exalted to the right hand of God, received the promise of the Holy Ghost, and sent him down upon his apostles. (Acts ii. 33.) The Holy Ghost must, therefore, signify something distinct from the power of working miracles.

(2.) The apostle John, producing his witnesses to prove that Jesus is the Son of God, saith thus, There are three that bear witness upon earth, the spirit, the water, and the blood; and there be three that bear witness from heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, (1 John v. 7, 8.) clearly distinguishing the witness of the Holy Ghost from the testimony of the Spirit.

(3.) Throughout the history of the Acts of the Apostles, where St. Luke hath occasion to mention the miracles which the apostles and other Christians did, he always useth the words τέρατα, σημεῖα, δυνάμεις, wonders, signs, and powers; but where he speaks of persons prophesying, or speaking with tongues, he doth as constantly ascribe this to the Holy Ghost descending on them.

And (lastly) where the Scripture mentions these things together, it puts a manifest distinction betwixt signs and wonders, and the gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost. Thus the apostle speaks of the things God had wrought by him, in the power of signs and wonders, and in the power of the Spirit of God, or of the Holy Ghost, as other copies read: (Rom. xv. 19.) and God, saith St. Paul, bare witness to the doctrine which the apostles preached by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost. (Heb. ii. 4.) Hence observe,

Fifthly, That this blasphemy of the Holy Ghost neither was nor could be then committed when our Saviour spake these words, or whilst he was upon earth, because the Holy Ghost was not yet come, saith the evangelist; (John vii. 39) nor was he to be sent till Jesus was glorified, i. e. till he was risen from the dead, and was exalted to the right hand of the Father. And therefore, after our Lord's resurrection, he breathes on the apostles, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; (John xx. 22.) and farther promises, at his ascension, that within a few days they should receive the power of the Holy Ghost descending down from heaven, to render them able witnesses of our Lord's resurrection; and that after his departure from them, the Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghost, should come, and should convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him, and of his righteousness, because he went unto the Father. (John xvi. 9, 10.) Though, therefore, our Saviour entered upon this discourse upon occasion of that saying of the pharisees, he casts out devils through Beelzebub, yet his design seems chiefly to be this, to terrify them from going on from the blaspheming the Son of man, and of that Spirit by which he wrought his miracles, to the blaspheming of the ensuing dispensation of the Holy Ghost, which was the last he ever would vouchsafe, to call them to that repentance which would procure the remission of their sins. These words may, therefore, be thus paraphrased:—You have represented me as a winebibber, and as a friend of publicans and sinners, and as one who casts out devils by Beelzebub; and you will still go on, after all the miracles which I have done among you, to represent me as a false prophet and a deceiver of the people; but, notwithstanding, all these grievous sins shall be forgiven you, if that last dispensation of the Holy Ghost, which I shall after my ascension send among you, shall prevail with you to believe in me: but if, when I have sent the Holy Ghost to testify the truth of my mission, and of my resurrection, you shall continue in your unbelief, and shall blaspheme the Holy Ghost, and represent him also as an evil spirit, your sin shall never be forgiven, nor shall there any thing be farther done to call you to repentance. That this is the true import of our Saviour's words is evident,

First, Because they still run in the future tense, respecting not what had been done already by the pharisees or others, but only what hereafter should be done; whosoever shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost. (Mark iii. 28. Luke xii. 10.)

Secondly, Because the blasphemy here mentioned in these words, He casteth out devils by Beelzebub, or by confederacy with Satan, was certainly a blasphemy against the Son of man; and therefore such to which the promise of forgiveness is here made, and could not be the blasphemy of the Holy Ghost, because he was not yet come. And,

Thirdly, Had the pharisees been guilty of this blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, by this saying of our Lord, he casts out devils by Beelzebub, our Saviour could not afterward have prayed for their forgiveness, or offered to them any farther terms of mercy or salvation; whereas he on the cross prays thus, after the pharisees and rulers had moved Pilate to crucify him, Father, forgive them; they know not what they do: (Luke xxiii. 34.) and in this very chapter he promiseth one farther sign for their conviction, even that of his death and resurrection the third day; and farther saith, that he would send the Holy Spirit to convince them of their sin, in that they believed not on him, and of his righteousness. St. Peter also saith, both of the people and the rulers, who so importunately sued to Pilate that he might be crucified, I know ye did it ignorantly, as did also your rulers. (Acts iii. 17. 19.) And then he calls upon them to repent, and be converted, that their sins may be blotted out; thereby clearly insinuating they had not yet committed that offence, which could not be forgiven. And St. Paul in the thirteenth chapter of the Acts tells them, he preached the gospel, and offered remission of sins to all among them that would believe, (ver. 32. 39. 46.)

And having thus considered the nature of this sin, I proceed to shew the difference betwixt it, and all the blasphemies which the Jews vented against our blessed Lord whilst he was here on earth, and why they were all pardonable, or such as might be forgiven unto men; whereas the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost is here pronounced such as should never be forgiven.

It is therefore to be observed, that though the Jews still represented the blessed Jesus as a winebibber and a glutton, because he used not that abstinence, and severe diet, and those frequent fasts, which John and his disciples did; though they styled him a friend of publicans and sinners, because he freely did converse with them for their good; though they styled him a blasphemer, because he called himself the Son of God; though, lastly, they crucified him, and pronounced him worthy of death, as a false prophet, and deceiver of the people: our Saviour not only promises pardon of these things to them who should believe after his resurrection, but even prays for them upon the cross, saying, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. Now this he did upon these two considerations:

First, Because the meanness of his birth and education, state and condition upon earth, caused many to be offended at him, and indisposed them to believe such high things of him as that he was the Son of God, and was to be the King of Israel. Thus, when they were amazed at the Divine doctrine which he taught, and the mighty miracles by which he had confirmed it, and thereupon inquire, Whence is this wisdom given to him, and these mighty works done by him? the thought that he was the son of a carpenter, and of a poor woman called Mary, caused them to be offended at him: and when he represents himself as a person coming down from heaven, they do not believe him on the same account, but say, Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph? Know we not his father and his mother? how therefore saith he, that I came down from heaven? (John vi. 42.) This, therefore, being so specious a pretence for their rejecting of and not believing on him, our Saviour promiseth the pardon of their infidelity, till, by his resurrection, and the mission of the Holy Ghost, he had quite taken off the force of the objection, and shewed by his return unto the Father, and his sitting down at the right hand of God, and sending of the Holy Ghost from heaven, that he was indeed the Son of God. Hence is he said to be declared the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead, (Rom. i. 4.) of which, saith the apostle Peter, we are witnesses; and so is also the Holy Ghost, which he hath given to them that believe: (Acts v. 32.) and Christ himself declares, that when this Holy Ghost was by him sent from heaven, he should convince the world of their sin, who believed not in him, and of his righteousness, because he went unto the Father. (John xvi. 8, 9.)

Secondly, Christ thought their case more pitiable, till after his resurrection and ascension, and till this mission of the Holy Ghost, by reason of those prejudices which their whole nation had entertained against his person and his doctrine, and which were not entirely removed, till he had thus ascended: now they were such as these, (1.) That they were very well acquainted with his birth and parentage; but when Christ cometh, no man can know (saith their tradition) whence he is. John vii. 27. (2.) That Elias did not come in person to usher in his advent, according as it was foretold by Malachi, iv. 5. Thus when a voice from heaven had declared him to be the Son of God, in the audience of St. Peter, James, and John, they still object against it, the tradition of the scribes, that Elias must first come. (Matt. xvii. 10.) And, (3.) that they had got a general tradition that their Messiah was to abide for ever, (John xii. 34.) whereas Christ still declared, he was to be lifted up, and die an ignominious death; a doctrine so distasteful to his own disciples, that Peter, after his confession that he was the Christ, rebukes our Saviour for it, saying, Far be it from thee; this shall not happen unto thee. (Matt. xvi. 22.) And though he very frequently and plainly told them that he was to suffer, yet do St. Mark and St. Luke inform us, that they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them; (Luke ix. 45.) yea, that they understood not these things, nor knew they what was said: (xviii. 34.) and yet Christ's words were plain enough, only they could not reconcile them with their tradition, that the Messiah was to abide for ever, and set up a temporal kingdom among them. For (4.) this was the great prejudice their whole nation laboured under, that their Messiah was to come in a triumphant manner, to subdue nations under them, and make the Jews to lord it over all their enemies, and to continue this his kingdom over them for ever; their prophets having still represented him as a great King over all nations: his own disciples were so fully possessed with this opinion, that after our Lord's resurrection they presently inquire, Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? (Acts i. 6.) It is not therefore to be wondered, that this so strong and pleasing apprehension should prejudice their minds against a person seemingly so mean and despicable, who spake so often of his sufferings, declared that his kingdom was not of this world, and that he came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Now by our Saviour's resurrection, ascension, and sending of the Holy Ghost, all these objections were fully solved, and all these prejudices were removed. For when our Lord was thus declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead, then must they be convinced, that besides that human nature, which he received from his parents, he had another, according to which they knew not whence he was, and neither knew him nor his Father. (John viii. 14. 19.) When at his ascension all power in heaven and in earth was given to him, and he was there to reign till all his enemies were made his footstool; then might they easily perceive, how this Messiah was to abide for ever, and to reign over the house of Jacob for ever. (Luke i. 33.) Hence, from this exaltation to the right hand of Power, St. Peter makes this inference, Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made this Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ. (Acts ii. 36.) They from his resurrection were assured his former sufferings were well consistent with his kingdom; and from his ascension into heaven, that his kingdom was not to be a temporal kingdom upon earth, but a spiritual and heavenly kingdom, and that he was to rule not over men's bodies, but their souls and consciences; and when they saw this kingdom so powerfully erected by the Holy Ghost assisting the apostles in the preaching of the gospel, and making numerous converts throughout the heathen world, they could not but discern how it was foretold by the holy prophets, that he should reign over all nations: or how John the Baptist, who had pointed him out, and said, Behold, the Lamb of God, and Saviour of the world, and had foretold he should baptize them with the Holy Ghost, was that Elias, which was to come as his forerunner. And thus you see why our Saviour puts this distinction betwixt the blasphemies committed against him in this state of humiliation, and the blasphemies committed against the Holy Ghost he promised to send down from heaven, after his exaltation to the right hand of Majesty in the heavens.

It remains to shew how the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost becomes unpardonable, and why it was so rather than any sin committed against Christ whilst in the state of his humiliation: now this it was upon several accounts;

First, Because this was the last and chiefest evidence which God designed to make use of, to cure the infidelity of that perverse and stubborn generation, or to prevail upon them, and upon other nations, to believe in Christ: in all the other evidences, which came before to win men to that faith in Christ, on which the pardon of their sins depended, God had still a reserve, and resolved upon some farther means when they had proved ineffectual. If the testimony of John the Baptist that he was the Christ, if the innocency of our Saviour's life, if the wisdom of his words, the heavenly nature of his doctrine, and all the miracles by which it was confirmed, proved ineffectual to persuade that perverse generation to receive and own him as their promised Messiah; God still resolveth, yea, he had promised to send this Holy Ghost, as a more powerful evidence to convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him, and of the righteousness of him whom they had hitherto rejected. Hence, when the Holy Ghost in this miraculous manner had fallen down on the apostles, and enabled them to speak with tongues, and prophesy; this is that (saith St. Peter) which was spoken by God in those words of Joel; In the latter days I will pour my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy. (Acts ii. 16, 17.) And again, (ver. 38, 39.) Repent, and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost: for the promise is to you and to your children. When therefore the apostles, being endued with this power from on high, had been Christ's witnesses, throughout Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth, God had done all that he designed to bring men to the faith of Christ; so that when many would not be persuaded by it, but, instead of being convinced and reclaimed, proceeded to slight and despise, yea, to revile and blaspheme it; God was unalterably resolved to strive no more with them, but to let them die in their sins: and therefore it is observable, that when the Jews had thus resisted the Holy Ghost, contradicting and blaspheming that Holy Spirit by which they preached unto them, (Acts xiii. 45.) they give them over as desperate, and persons in whom that of the prophet was fulfilled, Behold, ye despisers, and perish, (ver. 41.) and therefore turn unto the gentiles: (ver. 46. xxviii. 28.) and St. Paul represents them as persons given up to a spirit of slumber, and judicial blindness; (Rom. xi. 8, 9.) and so rejected from being any more God's church and people.

And as this was the last, so was it the most powerful evidence: as for the working of miracles and casting out of devils, the heathen priests and exorcists, and many of the Jews, pretended to them; our Saviour also foretold of the false Christs and false prophets, that they should work signs and miracles sufficient to seduce, if it were possible, the very elect; (Matt. xxiv. 24.) and the apostle, that Satan should come among those, who received not the truth in the love of it, with strong delusions, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, with all power, signs, and lying wonders. (2 Thess. ii. 8—10.) But yet none ever did or could pretend unto these inward gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, such as enabled the illiterate to speak with all kind of unknown tongues, and to interpret the tongues of others, and to discern the secrets of men's hearts, and understand all mysteries, by an internal inspiration and illumination; and much less to confer gifts on others by imposition of their hands, as the apostles did: when, therefore, Christians saw those gifts exercised continually in their assemblies, and daily conferred on persons at their baptism, they could scarce have a stronger evidence of the truth of the Christian faith, and therefore could not blaspheme those gifts by which it was so wonderfully confirmed, without the utmost degree of infidelity. And therefore,

Secondly, This sin is represented as unpardonable; because the faith of such perverse and stubborn persons is impossible, they having rejected all the evidence that can be offered for their conviction, and all the motives that can be rendered to provoke them to repent of their infidelity. So St. Paul speaks in case of those, who, living under this dispensation of the Holy Ghost, did yet apostatize from Christianity to Judaism, or heathenism; Let us not go about to lay again the foundation of repentance and faith towards God, which were the doctrines they first preached to Jew and gentile; of baptism, by which believing they made profession of the Christian faith, and covenanted to perform the duties it required of them; of imposition of hands of the apostles, by which they after baptism received the Holy Ghost; of the resurrection of the dead, which was the glorious promise by which all Christians were encouraged to be steadfast, immoveable, and always abounding in the work of the Lord; and of a future judgment, by which they were terrified and affrighted from falling off from that obedience: for it is impossible (saith the apostle) for them who have been once enlightened, as Christians were in baptism (which therefore, from the beginning of Christianity, was called illumination, as appears from the testimonies of Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and Clemens of Alexandria), and who have tasted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, which they received by the imposition of hands, and who have tasted of the good word of God, i. e. have been acquainted with that gospel, which affords the promise of remission of sins and of justification here, and of a resurrection to eternal life hereafter, and have felt the powers of the world to come, i. e. the powerful persuasions which the doctrine of a future judgment administers to repentance, a new life, and steadfast perseverance in the Christian faith; and after all these engagements to persevere in the profession of it, fall away from it by apostacy to Judaism, or to heathenism—to renew them to repentance: (Heb. vi. 2—7.) because you cannot lay again any other motive or foundation to it, than hath been already laid; you cannot call upon them to repentance, and to faith in God, by any other arguments than by those miracles by which they were at first induced to believe; you cannot incite them to be true to their profession by any other engagements than those which they had made in baptism; you cannot give them any higher evidence of the truth of Christianity, than that of their participation of the Holy Ghost; no greater motive to continue steadfast in the Christian faith, than is the promise of a happy resurrection to eternal life; nor propose any thing more dreadful to affright them from apostacy, than are the terrors of a future judgment; and so you can do nothing to renew them to repentance, which hath not been already ineffectually performed in order to that end.

FIRST APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XXIV.

GROTIUS, in his notes on the third verse of this chapter, makes these three questions to refer to three several epochas; viz.

1. The question, When shall these things be? to the time of the destruction of the temple: and this, saith he, our Saviour answers to, ver. 23.

2. The question concerning his παρουσία, or advent, to set up his kingdom, he refers to the time of Constantine; but others, to the time of the general conversion of the Jews and the millennium; and of this time, say they, Christ speaks from the twenty-third to the thirtieth verse.

3. The question concerning the end of the world; and of this, saith he, Christ speaks from the thirtieth verse to the end of the chapter.

I on the contrary do assert, that at least to the thirty-fourth verse, Christ speaks only of the destruction of the temple, the city, and people of Jerusalem, and of the Jewish nation.

Now, that the παρουσία, or advent of the Son of man, belongs not to his coming to destroy Jerusalem, but to another coming of this Son of man to set up his kingdom, he proves; because the words here, from ver. 22. to 27. are like those in which our Lord speaks of his kingdom, Luke xvii. 22. to the end: but that Christ there, from ver. 22. to the end, is speaking of the time when the Jews should be in great distress by the Roman army, and should perish by it, and when Christ should come to execute his vengeance on them, is exceeding evident from the words, and is there also confessed by Grotius. For, say St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, When you shall see Jerusalem compassed about with armies, let him that is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house; nor let him that is in the field, &c. for these are the days of vengeance. And the words of the same St. Luke, xvii. 31. run thus; On that day, he that is on the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and likewise he that is in the field. Who sees not now, that that day, Luke xvii. is the same with the days of vengeance, chap. xxi.? Now this one observation confounds all these several epochas, into which some have divided this chapter. For,

First, Hence it appears, that the time when they should say, See here, and see there is the Son of man, Luke xvii. 22, 23. viz. he that is to deliver Israel, Luke xxiv. 21. to save them from their enemies, Luke i. 71. 74. is the very time preceding the destruction of the Jewish nation. For, when those days of tribulation come upon them, saith St. Mark, xiii. 19. 21. St. Matthew, xxiv. 21. 23. 26. then shall they say to you, Lo, here is Christ, and there is Christ. And this is still more evident from Matt. xxiv. 26. when they shall say, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: for this they often said before their destruction. (See the note there.)

Secondly, Hence it must follow, that the false Christs and false prophets mentioned Matt. xxiv. 24. must also be contemporary with the times of tribulation preceding that destruction, and that they must rise up as false Christs, by pretending to deliver Israel; and as false prophets, by declaring to them salvation as from God; for the appearance of these very persons to deceive, is given as the reason why they should not follow, or believe them, who said, Lo, Christ is here; or, Lo, he is there. (Matt. xxiv. 23, 24. Mark xiii. 21, 22.)

Thirdly, Hence it appears, that the παρουσία, coming of the Son of man like lightning, must be at the same time; not only because it is given in St. Matthew as a reason why Christ was not then to be looked for in deserts, or in secret chambers; and, Luke xvii. 24. as a reason why they should not follow them, who would then say, See, he is here; or, See, he is there; but also, because St. Matthew assigns this as the reason of that conspicuous appearance, that wherever the body (of the Jews, the carcass) is, there would the eagles (i. e. the Roman army) be gathered together, to prey upon and to destroy them.

Fourthly, Hence it appears, that when it is said, Matt. xxiv. 37—39. As it was in the days of Noe, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be: this also must refer to the same time, though these words may also refer to the day of judgment, and be then accomplished; for the same words, Luke xvii. 26, 27. are mentioned by Christ; and then it follows, In that day (viz. of his coming) he that is on the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; which, as we have proved, respects the time preceding the destruction of Jerusalem.

Fifthly, Hence it appears, that the words following in St. Matthew, ver. 40, 41. Then shall two be in the field, two grinding in the mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left, refer to the same time also, as well as to the day of judgment: for when Christ had said these words to his disciples, Luke xvii. 35, 36. they inquire, Where, Lord, shall this be? And he answers, That wherever the body is, thither shall the eagles be gathered together, which, as is proved already, refers to the same time.

Hence then it is manifest, there can be no such interval in this prophecy as some imagine, viz. an interval of above seventeen hundred years betwixt what is spoken of the destruction of Jerusalem; to ver. 23. and what is spoken of the millennium from thence to ver. 30.

Arg. 2. Moreover, that what is assigned as a second epocha to follow the first, according to Grotius, three or four hundred years after; and, according to others, almost seventeen hundred years after, was indeed to happen in, or about the first period, is evident from most passages recorded from ver. 23. to 34. Of the twenty-third, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth verses, this hath been proved already.

That these words, ver. 24. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, belong to the same period, as it hath been proved already from the connective particle, for; which shews this verse is introduced as a reason of what was said in the foregoing verse: so also is it proved from the words following, ver. 25. Behold, I have told you before, viz. ver. 5. by saying, Many shall come in my name (i. e. as false pretenders to be the Christ, and that Prophet which should come into the world), and shall deceive many;

which words undoubtedly belong to the first interval. So when St. Mark had introduced Christ speaking the same words, ver. 22. he adds, ver. 23. See to it; behold, I have foretold you all things, viz. all that related to these persons, ver. 6. and therefore St. Luke having given us Christ's word thus, xxi. 8. Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and the time draweth near; he adds those words, Go not after them: which are the same in sense with those that go before, and follow in St. Matthew, Believe them not; and upon that account he doth not at all repeat those words, as do St. Matthew and St. Mark.

Secondly, St. Mark saith, ver. 24. in those days, after this tribulation, (mentioned ver. 19.) the sun shall be darkened; it shall be thus immediately after this tribulation, saith St. Matthew, ver. 29. Now, can that which was not to happen till seventeen hundred years after this tribulation, be said to happen either immediately after that tribulation, or in those days?

Thirdly, They both go on, and say, And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man coming in the clouds, viz. in those days, and immediately after that tribulation; Matt. xxiv. 30. Then shall they see the Son of man coming in clouds with power and great glory, surely not seventeen hundred years after the destruction of Jerusalem: for, why then did our Saviour say to them that crucified him ἀπ' ἄρτι, Within a little while shall ye see the Son of man coming in the clouds? (Matt. xxvi. 64.)

Fourthly, The thirty-first verse following thus in St. Matthew, And he shall send; and in St. Mark thus, καὶ τότε, And then he shall send his angels, and shall gather his elect; shew evidently, that the gathering of the elect there mentioned must happen then.

Fifthly, The thirty-third verse follows thus, When all these things shall come to pass, then know ye ὅτι ἐγγύς ἐστι, that it is near. Now these words, if they be rightly rendered by our translation, it is near, do necessarily refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, mentioned Luke xxi. If they refer to the coming of the Son of man, as is more probable from the words of St. Paul, Phil. iv. 5. ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς, The Lord is at hand; and of St. James, v. 7—9. The coming of the Lord ἤγγικε, is at hand, and the Judge standeth at the door; they also must refer to the coming of the Son of man to the destruction of Jerusalem, as they do in St. James, v. 7. (see the note there); and as we have proved the coming of the Son of man doth in the foregoing places of this chapter, and in St. Luke, chap. xvii. And this is still more evident from the variation of the phrase in St. Luke, Lift up your heads, for the kingdom of God draweth nigh; for as this, being given as an encouragement to Christ's disciples then to persevere under these tribulations, and to possess their souls in patience, must respect those of that generation, and not those Christians which were to live above seventeen hundred years after; so the kingdom of God, mentioned by St. Luke, enforceth the same sense, since Christ, in all these three evangelists, had told them, There were some then alive that should not taste of death till they saw the Son of man coming in his kingdom; (Matt. xvi. 28.) or, till they saw the kingdom of God coming in power. (Mark ix. 1. Luke ix. 27.)

Lastly, Our Saviour adds, ver. 34. This generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled; which shews that this relates to that which was to be done in that age: for this generation, saith Grotius, is "ejus ætatis homines," the men of his age, as hath been fully proved there; and this, saith he, Christ spake, "Templum ostendens," shewing them the temple; and surely then he spake this of the destruction of the temple.

Obj. 1. But against this opinion it is objected, first, That these words of St. Matthew, Then shall all the tribes of the earth (or land) mourn, and then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, cannot relate to the destruction of Jerusalem, because St. John, who writ his prophecy long after the destruction of Jerusalem, saith thus, Rev. i. 7. Behold, he comes with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they who pierced him: and all the tribes of the earth shall weep because of him.

Ans But to this objection Grotius himself gives a sufficient answer, by saying, "Novum non est eadem verba, præsertim ex prophetis petita, diversis rebus aptari;" It is no unusual thing to adapt the same words taken from the prophets, as these are from Zech. xii. 12. to divers events, especially when they respect the same subject, and relate to the same people. Now, after the destruction of Jerusalem, in the eighteenth of Trajan, the Jews became seditious again in Libya, Cyrene, Egypt, Alexandria, Mesopotamia, and that war extinguished πολλὰς μυριάδας Ἰουδαίων, many myriads of Jews: (Euseb. H. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 12.) and after that, from the sixteenth to the eighteenth of Hadrian, they rebel again; and then an innumerable multitude of men, women, and children, perished with Barchochebas their leader; and they are utterly suppressed, and from thenceforth not permitted to see Jerusalem, (cap. 6.) And had not St. John, seeing these things by the spirit of prophecy, sufficient occasion, upon these accounts, to adapt these words of Zachary to the like calamities befalling the same persons?

Obj. 2. St. Matthew and St. Mark say, Of that day and hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only: (Matt. xxiv. 36. Mark xiii. 32.) which seems not to be true of the destruction of Jerusalem, foretold so punctually by Daniel, but only of the day of judgment, of which the ancients did generally interpret these words.

Ans. About the time to which these words refer, I shall not much contend; for the preceding words being these, heaven and earth shall pass away, these words may bear this sense, But of the time when heaven and earth shall pass away, knoweth no man: and therefore in the paraphrase I have so interpreted the following words, as to relate to both these times; the destruction of the Jewish nation being an argument and a symbol of the general judgment.

APPENDIX

IN ANSWER TO MR. WHISTON'S DISSERTATION ON MATTHEW XXIV.

MY notes upon the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew, and my appendix to that chapter, seem to me to depend upon such solid and strong reasons, that Mr. Whiston durst not formally attack, and so they need no defence against his dissertation on that subject; yet, because he seems to have made a shift to evade some few things there said, I shall first propound the difference in this matter betwixt his sentiments and mine, and then consider his several observations, and shew there is no strength in them, either to confirm his own opinion, or to invalidate the arguments which I and Dr. Hammond have produced against it. And,

First, He delivers his opinion thus: "That the question which gave occasion to this discourse is double, or really two distinct questions; viz. the one, When these brave buildings of the temple were to be destroyed? the second, What should be the sign of his coming to judgment, and of the end of the world?" I, on the contrary, have asserted, and proved by three arguments, that the question is indeed but one, and concerns only the destruction of the people, and the temple, and the polity of the Jews, and the signs when this was to happen.

That two distinct questions are offered to our Saviour, he proves from the account given of them by St. Matthew, whose first question, Tell us when these things shall be? relates to the destruction of the buildings of the temple; his second, What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age? relates, as Mr. Whiston thinks, to the signs and tokens of Christ's coming to judgment, and of the end of the world. To which I answer, That there be indeed two questions in St. Matthew, but then they both relate to the same thing; viz. when these things should happen to the people and temple of the Jews, (Luke xiii. 34, 35. xix. 43, 44.) and what signs should precede or accompany that desolation: for,

Arg. 1. First, though the words of St. Matthew are larger than the words of the other evangelists, yet, being all inspired persons, they cannot contradict or thwart each other. Now St. Luke saith expressly, xxi. 7. that the question of the disciples were these two; When shall these things be, and what is the sign when they shall come to pass? St. Mark, xiii. 4. saith as expressly they were these; Tell us when these things shall be, καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον ὅταν μέλλῃ πάντα ταῦτα συντελεῖσθαι, and what is the sign when all these things shall come to pass? Seeing then that Mr. Whiston* grants, that ταῦτα, ταῦτα πάντα, these things, and all these things, refer particularly to the buildings of the temple, which are to be destroyed in that age, without any relation to the day of judgment, and the signs thereof: and seeing both St. Mark and St. Luke expressly say, that the second inquiry was when πάντα ταῦτα, all these things were to come to pass, or συντελεῖσθαι, to be consummated, it is evident they must either contradict St. Matthew, in saying this was the second inquiry of the disciples, or else their second inquiry in St. Matthew must relate to the same thing, to wit, to the destruction of the people and the temple of the Jews.

Arg. 2. My second argument, for confirmation of my opinion, is this: Christ so answers to the questions, touching the signs of his coming, as manifestly to shew they were contemporary with the desolation of the people, polity, and temple of Jerusalem, saying, ver. 27. As the lightning cometh from the east and shineth to the west, so shall ἡ παρουσία the coming of the Son of man be, Matt. xxiv. 27. for, ver. 28. where the carcass (i. e. the Jewish people) is, there shall the eagles be gathered together; i. e. the Roman army, whose ensign is the eagle: so that the coming of that army to destroy them, and the coming of the Son of man, must be contemporary. And again, ver. 37—39. As it was in the days of Noe, so shall ἡ παρουσία the coming of the Son of man be: for two shall be in the field, two grinding in the mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left, ver. 40, 41. which words are followed in St. Luke with these, Where the carcass is, there shall the eagles be gathered together, xvii. 34.

Now to this Mr. Whiston replies only by this sorry shift, that the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth verses in St. Matthew are misplaced, and belong to their fellows, ver. 37. of the same chapter; which if men may say at pleasure, all certainty from the connexion of the words in Scripture is destroyed.

Secondly, Why doth he say that they are placed here here without any visible connexion? when the connexion runs so clearly thus, Hearken not to them who say that Christ is in the secret chambers, for the coming of the Son of man will not be secret and obscure, but bright as the lightning, &c.

Thirdly, The same words in St. Matthew follow the same words, Luke xvii. 27. as will be evident by comparing Matt. xxiv. 23. with Luke xvii. 23. and μὴ ἐξέλθητε, Matt. xxiv. 26. with μὴ ἀπέλθητε, Luke xvii. 23. so that if the words of Christ be not misplaced there, they cannot be misplaced here.

And, fourthly, place them where you will, the argument hath still the same force to prove that the coming of the Son of man must be contemporary with the coming of the Roman army to destroy the people of Jerusalem; this being given as the reason why the coming of the Son of man should be so conspicuous, that where the Jews were, there should the Roman army be gathered together to destroy them.

Arg. 3. My third argument is this: By comparing the words of Christ elsewhere, with those contained in these three evangelists, this will be farther evident; for Christ saith, Mark ix. 7. There be some standing here, who shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom; and, Matt. xxvi. 62. Within a while ye shall see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. When therefore it is said, Matt. xxiv. 30. Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 27. Ye shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with great power and glory; this advent must be whilst some were living that then stood by Christ, and within a while, and so not at the end of the world.

Now in reply to this, behold a notable criticism, viz. the word in all these places is not παρὼν, but ἐρχόμενος, not present, but coming; and what then? Will he not be παρὼν present, when he is come in his kingdom? Will not his παρέλευσις be παρουσία, his advent be his coming? But, saith Mr. Whiston, no example can be given out of this discourse, of the using the word παρουσία in any other sense, but of the presence and appearance of Christ at the last day. I answer, the clouds of heaven in power and great glory; and I will undertake to prove his παρουσία used in another sense elsewhere.

First, Let him produce examples of Christ's coming in

Secondly, I have proved already, that it is used of Christ's coming to destroy the people of the Jews, Matt. xxiv. 27. Luke xvii. 24. I have proved also, that it must bear this sense, when St. James speaks twice of the παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου, coming of the Lord, v. 7, 8.* And when I come to vindicate my interpretation of 2 Thess. ii. I shall prove that it bears the same sense there, ver. 8. And, Thirdly, St. Mark, ix. 1. brings in Christ speaking thus: Verily, I say unto you, There be some standing here, who shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come in power; and St. Luke, ix. 27. I say to you of a truth, There be some standing here, who shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come. Whence it is evident, that kingdom must come, while some of that age were living: when then the same St. Luke saith, xxi. 34. When you see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is near; if he speaks of the same kingdom of God, then must that also come in the same age; if of the day of judgment, why doth he immediately add, Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled? which words, saith Mr. Whiston, have no relation to the day of judgment, p. 292.

That συντέλεια τοῦ αἰῶνος signifies the end of the world, he attempts to prove from the signification of the word. But,

First, It appears from St. Mark, that what in St. Matthew is σημεῖον συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, the sign of the end of the age, is the same with what is the sign, ὅταν μέλλῃ πάντα ταῦτα συντελεῖσθαι, when all these things shall be accomplished: and that it is the same with the end of the Jewish state, appears from the whole thread of our Lord's answer. For to this inquiry he answers, Matt. xxiv. 6. Mark xiii. 7. Luke xxi. 9. You shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, ἀλλ' οὔπω ἐστὶ τὸ τέλος, but the end (you inquire after) is not yet; and, ver. 13. he that endureth, εἰς τέλος, to the end shall be saved; and, ver. 14. the gospel shall be preached, ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ, through the whole Roman empire, καὶ τότε ἥξει τὸ τέλος, and then shall the end come; that is, ἡ ἐρήμωσις αὐτῆς, the desolation of Jerusalem. (Luke xxi. 20.) Now the gospel was preached thus throughout the world, saith St. Paul, Col. i. 6. 23. about eight years before the destruction of Jerusalem. Till, then, Mr. Whiston can find any other end mentioned by the apostles, to which our Lord returns this answer, he must be forced to grant, that this is an answer to their question, περὶ τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, i. e. concerning the end of the age they inquired after. Moreover, when the apostle says, that Christ appeared, ἐπὶ τῇ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, at the consummation of ages, to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself, Heb. ix. 26. and then adds, that he shall come, ἐκ δευτέρου, a second time without a sacrifice for sin, for the salvation of them that expect him: must not the συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, at the end of ages, signify a time as distinct from the day of judgment, as was our Lord's passion from that day which is yet to come? and, lastly, why is he thus confident, when he hath not returned one word of answer, either to Dr. Hammond, on this chapter, note,† or to Dr. Lightfoot, on the place?

Secondly, Moreover, Mr. Whiston owns that "the apostles looked upon these two questions as belonging to the same time; and imagined that our Saviour would not destroy Jerusalem, and its temple, till he came to put an end to the present state of the world, at the day of judgment: and this (saith he) appears by the words of the question, set down in St. Mark and St. Luke, which evidently shew, that they did not distinguish them in their own thoughts, but looked upon them as coincident." Now though it doth not follow hence, that these things really were coincident; yet it doth follow that, to inform them of the time and signs of the destruction of Jerusalem, was all our Saviour had to say, in satisfaction to their question; for surely he answers fully, who answers to all that they intended to inquire after. Add to this, that it neither is nor can be proved, that Christ in these three chapters gives any one sign of the coming of the day of judgment; for the signs he mentions, evidently relate to the θλῖψις, or affliction of the Jews, and are immediately connected with them, as will instantly be proved: it is therefore certain, that in these chapters Christ doth not answer to this question, What is the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age, in Mr. Whiston's sense.

Thirdly, Though he is very confident that the Jews had no notion of any age to succeed after that of the destruction of Jerusalem; yet, seeing their evangelical prophet speaketh of Christ as of the father, τοῦ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, of the age to come, Isa. ix. 7.: seeing St. Paul, in his Epistle to them, speaketh of an οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, a world to come, ii. 5.: seeing the prediction of their renowned Elias runneth thus, That as there were two thousand years, to-hu, or before the law, so should there be two thousand years of continuance of the law, and two thousand years of the Messiah; and St. Paul saith, in allusion to these three ages, That upon the Christians of his time were come, τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων, the end of the ages; (1 Cor. x. 11.) and that Christ had appeared ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, at the end of the ages, to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself: (Heb. ix. 26.) and seeing the Jewish writers spake so frequently of a holam habba, and vetter, or an age future and to come in the days of the Messiah;—why might not the apostles speak in their own phrase of the consummation of the Jewish age?

The second thing in which we differ is this, That he asserts that only what occurs in this chapter, from the fourth to the twenty-eighth verse, is to be expounded of the destruction of Jerusalem; whereas I assert, that from thence to the thirty-fifth, and probably to the forty-third verse, all is to be expounded of the destruction of the temple, polity, and people of the Jews, and of the signs and occurrences relating to that destruction.

Now here let it be noted, that if the discourse in St. Matthew concerning the destruction of Jerusalem ends at the twenty-eighth verse, it must end in St. Mark at the twenty-third, and in St. Luke at the twenty-fourth verse; because the twenty-fifth verse in St. Luke, and the twenty-fourth in St. Mark, answer directly to the twenty-ninth in St. Matthew. Now against this I have made a particular dissertation in my appendix to Matt. xxiv. to which Mr. Whiston hath not returned one word of answer: to which I add, that the arguments produced against his opinion in the notes on that chapter, seem to be demonstrative, especially these two.

First, The argument taken from the plain connexion of the words following, ver. 29. with the words preceding, which, saith Mr. Whiston, every body will allow are to be expounded of the destruction of Jerusalem: for St. Matthew having said, ver. 21. that then there shall be θλῖψις μεγάλη, great tribulation; adds, ver. 39. that εὐθέως μετὰ τὴν θλῖψιν τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐκείνων, immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened, &c. And St. Mark, having spoken of this θλῖψις, tribulation, that should happen in those days, ver. 19. saith, ver. 24. that ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις, in those days, after this tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, &c. St. Luke saith, ver. 23. Woe to them that are with child, and give suck in those days; for (in those days) there shall be great affliction and wrath upon that people; and they shall fall by the edge of the sword. And, ver. 25. (In those days) there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, &c. St. Matthew goes on, and says, ver. 30. καὶ τότε, and then (i. e. immediately after that affliction) the Son of man shall appear in the heavens. St. Mark says, ver. 26. καὶ τότε, and then (in those days of tribulation) shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with power and great glory. St. Luke, ver. 27. saith, that τότε then shall they see the Son of man coming, &c. Is it not therefore evident to a demonstration, that all these things which Mr. Whiston refers to the day of judgment, were to happen immediately after that tribulation, and not almost two thousand years after it? St. Mark adds, ver. 27. τότε ἀποστελεῖ, then shall he send his angels to gather his elect, &c. plainly connecting the sending of them with that time, and so demonstrating that the same words, Matt. xxiv. 31. must belong also to that time. Moreover, our blessed Saviour saith to the Jewish Sanhedrin, Matt. xxvi. 64. ἀπ' ἄρτι, within a while: and in St. Luke, xxii. 69. ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, from this time shall ye see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven; which assures us that the like words mentioned in all these chapters of the three evangelists, cannot relate to his coming at the day of judgment, but only to his coming at or about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. Now from these things we may easily discern the inconsistency of Mr. Whiston's sense of the words of St. Luke, xxi. 24. Jerusalem shall be trodden down till the times of the gentiles be fulfilled, καὶ ἔσται σημεῖα, and there shall be signs in the sun; viz. that the fulness of the gentiles was to come in before these things should happen: for he doth not say, that μετὰ τὴν πλήρωσιν τῶν ἐθνῶν, after the fulness of the gentiles is come in, there shall be signs; but, that there shall be in those days signs; and that then shall they see the coming of the Son of man in the clouds; which, as it is proved, cannot relate unto Christ's second coming.

Secondly, My second argument is this, That after our Lord had spoken of all those things, which, Mr. Whiston saith, relate unto the day of judgment, he adds these words, ver. 34. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all these things (beforementioned) be fulfilled. Where it is observable, that these words, in all the three evangelists, follow the words, which, Mr. Whiston saith, are spoken of the day of judgment: whence it is evident, that they cannot relate only to the destruction of Jerusalem, unless all the things mentioned before relate to that period, or to some season, which was to follow in that very age; for otherwise, to make our Saviour, after he had said so many things relating to the day of judgment, add with an asseveration, Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all these things are fulfilled, is to make him aver, with an asseveration, a manifest untruth; and surely that interpretation must be false, which gives the lie unto our Saviour. And, indeed, his paraphrase on these words,* "I have given you the signs of the desolation of Jerusalem; but as for your other question about the time and signs of the great and general judgment, do not think to confound them with the other:" that I confidently say is not a paraphrase upon any words of the evangelists, but a plain addition to the text, and the pure invention of the brain. I proceed now to answer what Mr. Whiston offers to the contrary. And,

First, Whereas he observes,† "That in that part of the discourse which belongs to the destruction of Jerusalem, our Lord still speaks in the plural; but in that part of it which directly belongs to the day of judgment, the second person plural is not once used:"

The falsehood of this observation appears from Matt. xxiv. 32. ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς συκῆς μάθετε, learn a parable from the fig-tree: and, ver. 33. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, even so ye: so Mark xiii. 28, 29. and Luke xxi. after the evangelist had said, ver. 27. Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds; he adds, and when these things come to pass, ἀνακύψατε, καὶ ἐπάρατε τὰς κεφαλὰς ὑμῶν, look up, and lift up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh: and then follows the parable of the fig-tree in the plural number. But, saith Mr. Whiston here, our Saviour returns to caution them about the observation of the signs before the destruction of Jerusalem; so apparently doth he beg the question, that between him and us being only this, Whether our Lord, in the intermediate words, from ver. 28. to 33. speaks of the day of judgment, or of the destruction of Jerusalem; and so indecently doth he make our Saviour, without any intimation, leap from one thing to another. In fine, if the preceding words relate to the day of judgment, the parable of the fig-tree must relate to the same time, as the connexion shews: for both in St. Matthew and St. Mark, after these words, Then shall he send his angels, and gather his elect from the four winds, which are the words most likely to refer to the day of judgment; immediately follow these words, ἀπὸ δὲ συκῆς, therefore from the fig-tree learn a parable. Indeed the whole of this doughty observation comes at last only to this; That there be three verses in which Christ speaks not in the plural number, from ver. 28. to 32. exclusively. And for this rare invention I return him this; That there be five verses, viz. from 9. to 15. in which he doth the like: Mr. Whiston, therefore, hath only the glory of being an inventor of an observation manifestly false, and not worth a rush were it as true as the gospel.

His second observation is like unto the first; viz. "That in all this discourse our Saviour useth different numbers of the nouns, when he speaks of the desolation of Jerusalem, and of the miseries of the Jews, either antecedent or consequent, and when he speaketh of the day of judgment. In the former case, he always styles them the days of vengeance, in the plural; but in the latter, he speaks only of one great day, and one great hour, which in the phrase of the Jews, and ours ever since, have been confined to the end of the world and the day of judgment."

Ans. I am not willing to spoil the good man's observations; yet, first, I must tell him, that I doubt the truth of his first observation, that the great day and hour, both in the phrase of the Jews, and of us Christians, have been still confined to the end of the world and the day of judgment. For, Joel ii. 31. ἡμέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡ μεγάλη καὶ ἐπιφανὴς, the great and terrible day of the Lord is mentioned; and this St. Peter plainly interprets of the day of Christ's first coming, Acts ii. 20. The prophet Malachi, iii. 1. speaks of a messenger to be sent to prepare the way of the Lord, and of the Lord's coming after him to his temple; and then inquires, ver. 2. Who shall abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth? Which verse, saith Dr. Pocock, relates to the destruction of the country, city, and temple of Jerusalem by the Romans, about the seventieth year of Christ: and, iv. 5. he adds, Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, πρὶν ἐλθεῖν τὴν ἡμέραν Κυρίου τὴν μεγάλην καὶ ἐπιφανῆ, before the great and terrible day of the Lord cometh: which, again, the doctor understands of that coming of Christ against the nation of the Jews, which ended in the destruction of the unbelievers among them: and, ver. 1. Behold (saith he), the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be as the stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up: which, saith Dr. Pocock, is a description of the final judgment of the Jews, and can be applied to the day of judgment only by way of accommodation. For, to the nation of the Jews did Malachi then speak, as a messenger peculiarly sent to them, to reprove them for their sins, and to declare to them such things as concerned them, and not immediately such things as were common to the whole world.

And this, I hope, may be sufficient to shew him that, in the phrase of the Jews, one day, even of the Lord's coming, is not confined to the end of the world and the day of judgment. Nor,

Secondly, Is it so in the New Testament: for thus our Saviour speaks; Verily I say unto you, That the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live: for that those words cannot be meant of the day of judgment, is proved in the note there. So Rom. xiii. 11. This do, εἰδότες ὅτι ὥρα, knowing that now is the hour to awake out of our sleep; which I suppose Mr. Whiston does not interpret thus, knowing now is the day of judgment.

Again; It is not true, that when Christ speaks of the destruction of Jerusalem, he always speaks of it in the plural number; for he speaks twice of it in the singular number, Luke xvii. 24. So also shall be the coming of the Son of man in his day; ver. 30. So shall it be, ἐν ᾗ ἡμέρᾳ, in that day, when the Son of man is revealed; and, ver. 31. ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, in that day, he that is upon the house, and hath his stuff in his house, let him not descend to take it away: which words answer to Matt. xxiv. 17, 18. and therefore by Mr. Whiston's confession must relate to the destruction of Jerusalem.

Lastly, It is not true, according to Mr. Whiston's opinion, that our Lord always speaks of the day of judgment in the singular number. For St. Luke saith, xvii. 26. As it was in the days of Noe so shall it be, ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις, in the days of the Son of man; which words exactly answer to those in Matt. xxiv. 37. As it was in the days of Noe, οὕτως ἔσται ἡ παρουσία, so shall be the coming of the Son of man; which, saith Mr. Whiston, must be spoken of the day of judgment: and, Mark xiii. 24. ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις, In those days shall the sun be darkened, &c. which words, saith he,* I do interpret of the day of judgment; though indeed he doth it without the least shadow of reason: for the same or more tragical expressions being used of the destruction of the land of Babylon, Isa. xiii. 9, 10. of the Idumeans, Isa. xxxiv. 3, 4. of Sennacherib and his people, Isa. li. 6. of the destruction of Egypt, Ezek. xxxvii. 7. and that in words as plain, and free from mystical expressions, as the words of Christ; and this very destruction being foretold by Joel, in the very words of Christ, ii. 31. iii. 15. why should not that tribulation, which, saith our Lord, was such as was not from the beginning of the world to that time, nor ever should be after, (Matt. xxiv. 21.) be represented in the like tragical expressions? In fine, his observation is also on this account impertinent; that where that day and hour occur, we allow that the words may be interpreted of the day of judgment; though whosoever seriously considers Matt. xxiv. from ver. 37. to 42. and Luke xxi. 34—36. will see cause to think, that they primarily refer to the desolation of the Jewish nation.

We also grant, that the latter part of the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew, and the whole twenty-fifth, belong to the day of judgment. But then note,

First, That Dr. Lightfoot very probably conjectures, that the discourse of Christ upon this subject ended at ver. 42. or 44. as in St. Mark and St. Luke it doth; and that the words following were, as St. Luke places them, xii. 29. spoken at another time, and upon another occasion, though, because they also well accord with this place and this occasion, and do there, as well as here, follow the exhortation given ver. 43. St. Matthew hath added them to this chapter.

Secondly, This dreadful judgment of God upon the wicked, unbelieving, and impenitent Jews, being the most signal preludium to, and lively emblem and example of, God's dealing with the like sinners at the great day, and a full proof of that final judgment which shall be upon all the enemies of Christ's kingdom; it is no wonder, that our Lord immediately passes from it to a discourse on that day; it being his usual manner, upon occasion offered, to advance to a discourse on matters of the highest moment.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XXVI.

In answer to an objection of Crellius against Christ's satisfaction.

THE great objection which Crellius makes against Christ's satisfaction, is to this effect, That the death Christ suffered for our sins, was only temporal; the punishment we deserved, and therefore should have suffered in our persons for them, was eternal death: Christ therefore did not suffer the punishment of our iniquities, because he did not suffer an eternal punishment. To this I answer,

Ans. 1. By confession, that our Lord did not suffer the torments which the damned shall hereafter suffer; for that in the midst of all his agonies, he lay not under any desperation, or under any sense of the anger or indignation of God against him, is evident from what hath been discoursed on ver. 38. of this chapter.

2. It also is confessed, that he could not suffer death eternal, or eternal punishments; for his sufferings and death lasted not three days: to say, he suffered these punishments intensively, is (1.) to speak improperly, seeing eternity applied to punishments plainly respecteth the duration, not the intention of them. (2.) It is certain, our Lord suffered only in his human nature; now that was not capable of such intensive punishments as could be equal to the eternal punishment of the whole world, for which he died: nor can the dignity of the person be considered here; for though that makes the sufferings more valuable, it doth not make them either more durable, or more intense; seeing a peasant suffers as much, and as long, by hanging on a cross, as doth a prince. And (3.) wherein did he suffer such intensive punishments as could be any way equivalent to the eternal torments of the damned? Not in his soul; for, could that soul which knew no sin, lie under remorse of conscience for any thing that he had done? Could the worm that never dies, lodge in his sacred breast? Could he who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, lie under any sense of God's unchangeable displeasure? Under an absolute despair of any better state? Could he, who knew his soul should not be left in hades, nor should his body see corruption, lie under any apprehension of an unavoidable pain, or of no release from what he was to suffer? Now in these things consist the miseries and torments of the damned spirits; and, since it was impossible the holy Jesus should thus suffer in his innocent and spotless soul, it was impossible that he should suffer in his soul those punishments, which are equivalent to the punishments of damned spirits; nor could he suffer these eternal punishments in his body, for that could only die, by what he suffered on the cross.

Again, as it was impossible that Christ should suffer death eternal, so was it unnecessary that he should do it. It was unnecessary that he should do it for the sake of the impenitent and unbelievers; for they in their own persons are, by the order and decree of God, to suffer an eternal death; and why should our Lord suffer that for them, which, notwithstanding all that he had suffered, they must in their own persons actually suffer? No sacrifice for sin, not even that of our blessed Lord, can avail any thing for the impenitent and the ungodly; because it cannot, merely as being offered, render them pure from habitual sin, it cannot create in them the clean heart, it cannot give them a Divine nature, or a likeness to God, and so it cannot fit them for a state of happiness, or exempt them from being everlastingly excluded from the face of God, and so for ever miserable. Why therefore should our Saviour suffer such direful punishments for them, who could receive no benefit from what he suffered? As for true penitent believers, Christ came to save them from the wrath to come, by suffering, to obtain grace and mercy for them in the pardon of their sins, and to establish that new covenant in his blood, in which God promised to be merciful to their iniquities, and to remember their sins no more, and to justify them freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus. Now, had Christ suffered for them death eternal, or all that justice could demand by way of punishment, for them in whose stead he suffered, what need had he to suffer to procure this rich grace and mercy, in the pardon of those sins for which he had already paid the utmost farthing? Or, how then did he establish a new and better covenant of his blood, seeing no covenant did or could require more than the full punishment, which our sins deserved? Or, how was this a covenant, to be merciful to our iniquities? Where, lastly, is the grace and freeness of that justification, which, after a full payment, imputeth only to me nothing of that debt, which is entirely discharged?

Ans. 2. I shall not insist upon it, though it be very true, that the words death eternal are never mentioned in the Old or the New Testament; but only shall observe from Covarruvias, and others, that to a surrogation in the case of punishment, it is not requisite the substitute should suffer what is accidental, but only that which is essential to the punishment. Now to apply this to our purpose, let it be noted,

First, That death is accidentally to us eternal, because we have no power, being dead, to raise our bodies unto life; nor have we any promise, that our dying bodies shall not see corruption; or, because sin had given Satan a power to detain us in that state till Christ had made satisfaction for it, death neither was nor could be so to Christ, who knew no sin, because he had this power to reassume his life, and had a promise that his body should not see corruption; but still his death was both as truly, and as much death, as that which sinners suffer in the body; because it was as much the dissolution of the soul and body, and the cessation of the functions of human life in Christ, as it is in them: that therefore our Lord Jesus should redeem us from eternal death, it was not necessary that he should suffer the same death, but only that he should atone for that sin which made us subject to death, and procure for us a blessed resurrection by his death, which he hath done: For as by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead: and as in Adam all men die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. (1 Cor. xv. 21. 22.)

Secondly, Most of the evils which the soul suffers after death, are also accidental, and may more properly be styled the necessary consequents, than the formal and positive punishments of sin. For instance, that souls departed are deprived of the love of God, are objects of his wrath, and are excluded from his presence, is not merely because they are souls separated from the body; for pious souls, when separated from the body, are entirely exempted from these evils; but this ariseth from the natural purity and holiness of God, and the defilement and impurity which these unhappy souls lie under; it is, because God is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, neither shall evil dwell with him; there being no communion betwixt light and darkness; and because nothing which is defiled or unclean can enter into the New Jerusalem, or be capable of enjoying happiness from God. The worm of conscience, the despair, and direful expectations, which follow this sense of loss, and the exclusion from God's presence, are also natural results of the soul's separation in an impenitent state, and an unsanctified condition, and of its being conscious of its own doom, and of those wilful follies, which did subject it to that doom: Christ being then the Lamb of God, not having spot or blemish, he being such a high-priest who was holy, harmless, separate from sinners, he could not be exposed to the evils consequent to the separation of unholy souls. And that his members might also be exempted from them, he was not only to suffer for them, since, as I have observed, the sufferings of another for us, can never of themselves render us holy, renew our natures, and make us like to God; but he was also to make them holy by his word and Spirit, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; whence we are said to be justified by the name of the Lord Jesus, but to be sanctified by the Holy Spirit of God. (1 Cor. vi. 11.) And upon this sanctification depends our interest in the blood of Christ; for if we walk in the light, as God is in the light, we have communion with him, and the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin. (1 John i. 7.) And though Christ doubtless suffered to redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works; yet is it said, that he gave himself to the death for us, that he might cleanse us by the washing of water and the word. (Eph. v. 26.) His death is indeed a most powerful motive to holiness of life, but yet it is the immediate fruit of his Holy Spirit, and his word. It was also necessary for this end, that he should purchase for us an entrance into the holy of holies, that he should there appear before God with it: for by this, saith the apostle, we obtain a liberty of entrance into the holy place. (Heb. x. 19.)

Thirdly, The resurrection of the bodies, and union of the souls of wicked men to them, is the natural result of that impartial justice, which will render to every man according to what he hath done in the flesh: that being raised, and sentenced to condemnation, and punished with everlasting separation from the presence of the Lord, they are tormented in the flames, which will then seize upon that world which is reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, (2 Pet. iii. 5.) happeneth, because they are not able to convey themselves out of those flames, and are not worthy to be snatched up to heaven, and live for ever with the Lord. That then Christ might exempt the members of his body from these punishments, it was not necessary that he should descend to hell, or be cast into those flames; but only that he should free them from condemnation at that day, as he most certainly hath done, there being no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus; and that they should be caught up by him into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so to be for ever with him, as the apostle saith they will. (1 Thess. iv. 17.)

Ans. 3. I add, that though Christ did not undergo eternal punishments, yet he did suffer such evils as contained some analogy, and bore some resemblance to those which sinners do, or are to suffer; and which he would not otherwise have suffered, had he not been punished for our sins. For,

First, As the sinner lieth under the sentence of condemnation, and is sure to find a public exemplary judgment; so was our Saviour solemnly condemned, and sentenced as a malefactor, not without semblance of justice, and of law, to warrant their proceedings: for we, say the Jewish doctors, would not deliver up this Jesus, were he not a notorious malefactor. They lay upon him the imputations of an impostor, a seditious person, a perverter of the nation, a rebel unto Cæsar, and a blasphemer against God, pretending to desire his execution out of pure zeal unto their law; for by our law (say they) he ought to die, because he maketh himself the Son of God: thus was he numbered with the transgressors.

Secondly, As sinners will be exposed to shame and ignominy at the great day of judgment, before men and angels, so did Christ suffer a very ignominious and shameful death; the punishment he endured, was servile supplicium, that punishment which only slaves did suffer by the Roman law;* it was attended with all the mockeries and flouts, affronts and obloquies, his enemies could cast upon him; as for the rulers, ἐξεμυκτήριζον, they reviled, and snuffed up their noses at him, and they that went by, ἐβλασφήμουν, wagged their heads, and with their tongues vented their blasphemies against him. (Luke xxiii. 35, 36.) He himself declares to his disciples, that he ought to suffer these indignities, that he ought ἀποδοκιμασθῆναι, to be reprobated by the chief priests and elders of the Jews, (Luke ix. 22.) ἐξουδενοῦσθαι, to be vilified and set at nought by them. (Mark ix. 12.) This condemnation, and this shame, was therefore part of what he was designed to suffer for us. And,

Thirdly, Whereas sinners are obnoxious to sufferings in their bodies, he suffered in his body a death so painful, that the most exquisite afflicting torments are styled cruciatus, from the cross. And surely, he must suffer sharp and pungent grief, when his hands were pierced and nailed to the cross, sustaining thus the weight of his whole body; and, by that burden, suffering a continual rack and torture, when all his bones were out of joint, by being stretched upon the cross; when he, being stretched out thus, was nailed to it, and left to die no other death, but what the sharpness of his pains and the excess of torments would produce.

Fourthly, He suffered in his soul most dreadful agonies; for he himself declares that he was troubled in spirit, (John xii. 27. xiii. 21.) at what he was to suffer; and that his soul was full of deadly sorrow. (Matt. xxvi. 38. See the note there.) This we may learn from those strong, earnest, and repeated cries he uttered, to be delivered from this bitter cup; for being heard in what he feared, (Heb. v. 7.) and yet not freed from suffering death, we may imagine, that his fears were greater than the impressions of mere death could make upon him.

Lastly, Are sinners then to suffer from the hand of God? So do the Scriptures teach us, that our Saviour suffered from his hand, that he delivered him up for us all, (Rom. viii. 32.) and that he made him sin for us, who knew no sin; (2 Cor. v. 21.) that is, he in his providence ordered, that he should be dealt with as a criminal, or sinful person, for our sakes, who in himself was wholly innocent: it was by men who acted in his name, and claimed his authority, that he was sentenced to death; it was by them who sat in Moses's chair, that he was judged worthy of death, and by his vicegerents that he was delivered up to be crucified; and therefore he tells Pilate, He could have no power over him, had it not been given him from above. (John xix. 11.) It pleased the Lord to bruise him (saith the prophet) and to put him to grief, and to make our sins to meet upon him; and what men did against him, was only that which God's hand and council determined before to be done. (Acts iv. 28.) So that, although I dare not say, that he was smitten by the immediate hand of God, yet do these Scriptures seem to teach, that what he suffered from the hand of man, befel him by the overruling providence of him who orders all things according to the counsel of his will. Now from this fair resemblance betwixt what our Lord actually suffered, and what sinners had deserved to suffer, there seems sufficient ground to say, he bore the punishment of our iniquities, and suffered in our stead, although he did not undergo what accidentally the sinner was to suffer, and what it was impossible for him to suffer, being innocent and perfectly holy: had not our Lord been holy in perfection, and separate from sinners, he must have suffered for his own sins; and so he could have been no Saviour to us, by his sufferings; and being thus holy, he could not be obnoxious to the punishments I say he did not suffer. Now, is it not unreasonable to say, Christ could not suffer in our stead, or for our sins, unless he suffered that eternal death we had deserved? since, this is plainly to affirm, he could not suffer in our stead, had he not been a sinner as we were; i. e. had he not been incapable of suffering for us, and liable to suffer for his own offences.

THE GOSPEL OF ST. MARK.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

IN confirmation of the authority of these two ensuing Gospels, let it be considered, first, That two things have been already proved in the general preface to the Gospels; viz. (1.) That all the four Gospels were received from the beginning, by the whole church of Christ, as genuine, and never questioned by any besides heretics. (2.) That they were owned as their rule of faith, and writings of Divine inspiration: and that therefore * copies of these Gospels were carried by the disciples of the apostles, or apostolic men, into all countries whither they went to build up the churches planted by their hands.

Secondly, Eusebius† farther adds, that it was related, That the three other Gospels being come to the knowledge of all men, and so to St. John's knowledge, he approved of them, and gave in his testimony to the truth of them.

Thirdly, concerning this Gospel of St. Mark in particular, Eusebius‡ informs us from Clemens of Alexandria, and Papias, That when it was indited by him, St. Peter being informed of the writing it by the revelation of the Holy Ghost, confirmed it as a writing to be read in the churches; which sure he would not have done, had he not found it an exactly true and authentic record of the things related in it. And as for the Gospel of St. Luke, Origen§ declares, That it was τὸ ὑπὸ Παύλου ἐπαινούμενον εὐαγγέλιον, the Gospel praised by St. Paul, plainly referring to those words of the apostle, (2 Cor. viii. 18.) The brother, οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches.

Now if these things be true, we must allow the truth of what Tertullian * saith, That these apostolical men wrote these Gospels, sed non soli, sed cum apostolis; but this they did not alone, but with the apostles; and that the Gospel of St. Mark, Petri adfirmetur, might be styled the Gospel of St. Peter; and that of St. Luke, quod Paulo adscribere solent, which the ancients ascribed to St. Paul, might truly bear those titles; not as being dictated by, or being any extract or compendium of, the doctrine which they preached to the churches, but as being approved by them; and then the authority of St. Mark's Gospel depends on the authority of St. Peter, and the authenticness of St. Luke's on the authority of St. Paul, and both upon the approbation of the apostle John. As then this axiom obtained among the Jews as an unquestionable rule, that he is to be admitted as a prophet whose prophecy is confirmed by the testimony of an undoubted prophet; so by parity of reason, he must be admitted as a true evangelist, whose gospel is approved by an apostle of whose authority to indite a gospel there is no doubt; which is, according to these testimonies, the case as to the Gospels of St. Mark and Luke. But I confess, I cannot fully acquiesce in this last ground of the canonical authority of these two evangelists, for reasons which will do nobody any good, therefore shall do nobody any hurt; and upon this account I shall endeavour, in the preface to St. Luke's Gospel, to found the authority of these two evangelists on principles which to me seem more certain.

As for the time and place when and where this Gospel was indited, we are wholly in the dark: for all that Theo-phylact saith of this Gospel, that it was written ἐν Ῥώμῃ μετὰ δέκα ἔτη τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀναλήψεως, in Rome ten years after our Lord's ascension, is certainly a mistake, and inconsistent with all the accounts the church historians give us, that it was written at the desire of the Roman converts, as an extract of what St. Peter had preached there; it being certain, that St. Peter never came to Rome till some years after. (See the preface to the Epistle to the Romans, and note on i. 15.) If he died in the eighth of Nero, as St. Jerome, Doritheus, and Theophylact affirm, Irenæus * must mistake in saying, that he writ his Gospel after the death of Peter, who suffered only in the thirteenth or fourteenth year of that emperor; or μετὰ τὴν ἔξοδον, after the departure of St. Peter and St. Paul from Rome, seeing St. Paul went not thence till the ninth of Nero; I therefore leave this matter uncertain, as I find it, inclining to the opinion of Valesius,† that we have nothing certain touching the Gospels from the ancients, but that they were four, and were written by those authors whose names they bear, quo autem tempore, et quam ob causam scripta sunt, parum constat; but at what time, and upon what occasion they were written, it doth not appear.

CHAP. I.

1. THE [1] beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, (was from the preaching of John the Baptist, Luke xvi. 16.)

2. As it is written in the [2] prophets, (Malachi, saying, iii. 1.) Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare thy way before thee, (and Isaiah, saying, xl. 2, 3. that when the Messiah was about to come to save his people from their sins, there should be)

3. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, [3] Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight: (and accordingly)

4. John (who was the very person spoken of by those prophets, being sent of God for that end) did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the [4] baptism of repentance for the remission of sins (and so endeavoured to prepare men for the coming of that Messiah, who was to save his people from their sins).

5. And (so disposed were the people to receive his baptism, that) there went out to him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, (and all the region round about Jordan, Matt. iii. 5.) and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.

6. And (this) John (being a preacher of repentance, and coming in the power and spirit of Elias, Luke i. 17. resembled him in habit, 2 Kings i. 8. for he) was clothed with (a garment of) camel's hair, and with a girdle of a (leathern) skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey:

7. And (he) preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose (i. e. whose servant I am not worthy to be).

8. I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the [5] Holy Ghost, (sent down from heaven, the promise of him being made to you and to your children, Acts ii. 39.)

9. And it came to pass in those days (of John's baptism at the river of Jordan), that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the (Holy) Spirit descending upon him like a dove (i. e. in that hovering manner which a dove useth when she descends or rests upon any thing):

11. And (then) there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

12. And immediately the Spirit [6] driveth (leadeth, Luke iv. 1.) him into the wilderness.

13. And he was there in the wilderness [7] forty days, (which being ended, he was visibly) tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and (when Satan had ended his temptation, Matt. iv. 3. 11.) the angels ministered to him.

14. Now after that John was put in prison (by Herod), Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God.

15. And saying, The time (foretold for the coming of the Messiah) is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye (therefore), and believe the gospel.

16. Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother, (going out of their ship, and) casting a net into the sea, (to wash it, Luke v. 2.) for they were fishers.

17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men (i. e. I will enable you to draw them into the net of the gospel).

18. And straightway (upon his call) they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19. And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were (now) in the ship mending their nets, (which they had washed; see Luke v. 2.)

20. And straightway he called them: and they (upon his call) left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

21. And they went into Capernaum; and straightway on the sabbath-day he entered into the synagogue, and taught (them).

22. And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one who had authority (from God to do so), and not as the scribes (who only told them what were the traditions of their fathers).

23. And there was in their synagogue a man (possessed) with an unclean spirit; and he (the evil spirit) cried out,

24. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us (before the time appointed for our punishment)? I know thee who thou art, (to wit) the Holy One of God.

25. And Jesus (being not willing to receive testimony from Satan, ver. 34.) rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26. And when the unclean spirit had torn (Gr. and the unclean spirit shaking or moving) him, (see note on ix. 18. so that he fell down, Luke iv. 35.) and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What (strange) thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority com-mandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they obey him (which is an indication that his doctrine is attended with a more than ordinary power).

28. And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29. And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30. But (Gr. and) Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon (i. e. presently) they tell him of her (condition).

31. And (or then) he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she (being recovered) ministered to them.

32. And at even, when the sun did set (and the sabbath was ended), they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33. And all the city was gathered together at the door (of Simon's house).

34. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and [8] cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.

35. And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

36. And Simon and they that were with (i. e. belonged to) him [9] followed after him.

37. And when they had found him, they said to him, All men seek for thee.

38. And he said unto them, Let us go into [10] the next towns, that I may preach there also: [11] for therefore came I forth, (from this house, being sent by my Father to preach to them also, Luke iv. 43.)

39. And he preached in their synagogues, throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

40. And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying to him, If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

41. And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

42. And as soon as he had spoken (this), immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43. And he straitly charged him, (Gr. and being earnest with him to repair instantly to the priest, he) forthwith sent him away;

44. And said unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony to them (that thou art cleansed).

45. But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was (forced to be) without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. ΑΡΧΗ᾽ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, The beginning of the gospel, &c.] So saith St. Mark, beginning his history from John the Baptist, by the fathers styled the beginning of the gospel; because he began his office by preaching repentance as the preparation to receive it, and faith in the Messiah the subject of it; so Christ himself plainly testifies, by saying, The law and the prophets were until John, from thence the kingdom of God εὐαγγελίζεται is preached. (Luke xvi. 16.) This gospel he styles the gospel of the Son of God, who was or is in the bosom of the Father, (John i. 18.) and came down from heaven, (John iii. 13.) to reveal his Father's will unto us, that so we might have worthy thoughts both of the gospel, as being the revelation of it, and of the author, as being so intimate with and so nearly related to the Father.

[2] Ver. 2. Ὡς γέγραπται ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, As it is written in the prophets.] Other copies read ἐν Ἡσαΐᾳ τῷ προφήτῃ, In Isaiah the prophet; so do Iren. lib. iii. cap. 11. p. 259. Orig. in Cels. p. 60. and in John, p. 14. But then it is to be noted, that the former reading is in Irenæus twice before in the same chapter thus; Marcus initium evangelicæ conscriptionis fecit, sic initium evangelii Jesu Christi Filii Dei quemadmodum dictum est in prophetis, p. 256. and after, Marcus ait, initium, quemadmodum scriptum est in prophetis, &c. 18. So reads the Arabic, so the Alexandrian copy, so most MSS. so Theophylact; and this reading is to be preferred, (1.) because it is not so proper to say, As it is written in Isaiah the prophet, when the citation immediately following is not in Isaiah, but in Malachi; nor is there one instance of any thing so cited in the New Testament. (2.) It is the common phrase among the Jews, when they cite many passages of the prophets, to say, As it is written in the prophets: but it is without all example, when two testimonies are taken from two prophets, to cite only the last. And hence St. Jerome saith, Nomen Esaiæ putamus additum scriptorum vitio. (Com. in Matt. iii.)

Obj. But Grotius objects, That if this had been the true reading, there can be imagined no reason for the alteration of it; whereas if the other were so, the reason of the change is manifest, viz. because St. Mark cites testimonies out of the prophets.

Ans. The reason of the change seems very manifest, it being done in compliance with Matt. iii. 3. Luke iii. 4. John i. 23. for all these evangelists citing expressly what is written in Isaiah the prophet, they would have had St. Mark do so also.

[4] Ver. 4. Βάπτισμα μετανοίας, The baptism of repentance.] This baptism, saith Dr. Lightfoot, may belong to children, though it be the baptism of repentance, and they know not what repentance means; for it requireth not their repentance at the receiving of this sacrament, but it engageth them to it for the time to come, viz. when they shall come to the use of reason, and the knowledge of the engagement. And so was it with the children that were circumcised, for they by that sacrament became debtors to observe the whole law, (Gal. v. 3.) when they knew not what obedience or the law meant, but that bound them to it when they came to years of knowledge and discretion.

[5] Ver. 8. Βαπτίσει ὑμᾶς ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.] Καὶ πυρὶ, and with fire, Matt. iii. 11. Luke iii. 16. i. e. whose symbol is fire or flame: so he descended on the apostles, Acts ii. 3. so Justin Martyr saith, that when Christ was baptized, πῦρ ἀνήφθη ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ, a fire was kindled in Jordan; and the gospel of the Nazarenes, and the liturgy of the Syrians, that περιέλαμψε τὸν τόπον φῶς μέγα, a great light shone round the place.

[6] Ver. 12. Τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτὸν ἐκβαλλει, The Spirit driveth him out.] Ἤγετο, he was moved by the Spirit inwardly to go into the wilderness; so Luke iv. 1. ἀνήχθη, he was led up from the plains of Jordan by the Spirit into the mountains of the wilderness; so Matt. iv. 1. the Spirit ἐκβάλλει, sends him away into the wilderness; so the word signifies, ver. 43. Jesus ἐξέβαλεν αὐτὸν, sent him away. (See Matt. ix. 38. xii. 35. xiii. 52.)

[7] Ver. 13. Ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα, πειραζόμενος, Being forty days tempted of Satan,—and the angels ministered to him.] These forty days, saith Dr. Lightfoot, the holy angels ministered to Christ visibly, and Satan tempted him invisibly; at the end of them Satan puts on the appearance of an angel of light, and pretends to wait on him, as they did.

Ver. 14. Now after that John was put into prison, Jesus came to Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God; Ver. 15. and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand.] So Matt. iv. 12. When Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee; and, ver. 17. From that time he began to preach, and to say, Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand: till that time, say the fathers and the scholiasts, ἀνέμεινε αὐτὸν μαρτυρῆσαι περὶ αὐτοῦ, he waited for John's testimony concerning him. Accordingly St. Peter represents Christ as beginning thus to preach from Galilee, μετὰ τὸ βάπτισμα ὃ ἐκήρυξεν ὁ Ἰωάννης, after the baptism which John preached was ended. (Acts x. 37.) Now hence is it evident, that his coming into Galilee, mentioned Luke iv. 14. must refer to the same time, that so all the evangelists may accord together, as appears farther from the following words, ver. 15. He taught in the synagogues, and was glorified of all; and, ver. 31. He went into Capernaum, and was teaching in their synagogues on the sabbath-day. For we learn from Mark i. 21, 22. that this was done after that John was put in prison, ver. 14. and also from the words of St. Luke, which say, ver. 14. That a fame went out through the whole region concerning him; for we are assured, from Matt. iv. 12. 14. that this also followed St. John's being cast into prison.

[8] Ver. 34. He healed many that were sick, and cast out many devils.] Hence it is evident that the devils cast out were not diseases; as also appears from iii. 11. 15. v. 12. vi. 12. (See note on Matt. viii. 28.)

[9] Ver. 36. Καὶ κατεδίωξαν αὐτὸν, And Simon and they that were with him followed him.] Here the critics note, that τὸ διώκειν, when it respects persons, is usually to pursue in a hostile manner, (except here and Luke xvii. 23.) but when it respects things, it is to prosecute with a desire to obtain them; as when we are bid to follow after charity and hospitality, Rom. xii. 13. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 1. Phil. iii. 12. 14. 1 Thess. v. 15. 1 Tim. vi. 11. Heb. xii. 14. 1 Pet. iii. 11.

[10] Ver. 38. Εἰς ἐχομένας κωμοπόλεις, To the adjoining towns.] Κωμοπόλεις, Towns, saith Dr. Lightfoot, are villages which had a synagogue in them; κώμαι, villages which had none; πόλεις, towns girt about with walls.

[11] Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἐξελήλυθα, For therefore came I forth.] Εἰς τοῦτο ἐπέσταλμαι, Luke iv. 43. For therefore was I sent. Whence it may be granted, that going forth, and being sent to preach the gospel, are the same thing; but not when it is said of Christ, ἐξελήλυθα, I came forth from God, and return to God. (See the paraphrase.)

CHAP. II.

1. AND again he entered into Capernaum [1] after some days; and it was noised (reported) that he was in the house (of Simon, i. 29.)

2. And straightway many were gathered together (about it), insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door, and he preached the word unto them.

3. And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy (in a bed), which was borne of four (men).

4. And when they could not come nigh to him for the press, they [2] uncovered the roof (of the upper chamber, see the note,) where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down (to him) the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5. When Jesus (by this instance) saw their faith, he said to the (man) sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins (which brought this disease upon thee) be forgiven thee, (as to the temporal punishment of them; see note on Matt. ix. 2.)

6. But (and) there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and (upon occasion of these words, thus) reasoning in their hearts,

7. Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies, (ascribing that to himself which is proper to God alone? for) who can forgive sins but God only?

8. And immediately when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9. (For) whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins (as to their temporal punishment) be forgiven thee; or to say (effectually, that which is a certain indication of it), Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10. But (I choose to say the first), that ye may know that the Son of man hath power (even whilst he is) on earth (thus) to forgive sins; (and then) he saith to the sick of the palsy,

11. I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12. And immediately he arose, took up the bed (on which he lay), and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion (before).

13. And he went forth again by the sea-side; and all the multitude resorted to him, and he taught them.

14. And as he passed by (from thence, Matt. ix. 9.) he saw Levi the son of Alpheus sitting at the receipt of custom, and (he) said to him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15. And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many (of them), and they followed him.

16. And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they (judging them unworthy to be conversed with, and a defilement to those who did so) said to his disciples, [3] How is it that he (your Master, who professeth himself a prophet and a holy man), eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17. When Jesus heard (the pharisees speak thus), he saith unto them, (These it is most necessary to converse with, for) they that are whole have no need of the (spiritual) physician, but they that are sick; (and this is more especially the business of my prophetic office, for) I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

18. And (then) the disciples of John and of the pharisees used to fast (Gr. were fasting): and they (the disciples of John, Matt. ix. 14.) come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and of the pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19. And Jesus said unto them, [4] Can (it be fit for) the children of the bridechamber (to) fast, while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot (decently) fast.

20. But the days will come, when (I) the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they (have occasion to) fast in those days.

21. (And he said also by way of parable, Luke v. 36.) No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old (this being tender and that strong), and (so) the rent is made worse (i. e. greater).

22. And no (skilful) man putteth new wine into old (i. e. weak) bottles: else the new wine (fermenting) doth burst the bottles, and (so) the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred (broken or rent): but new wine must be put into new bottles. (See Matt. ix. 16, 17.)

23. And it came to pass, that he went throughout the corn fields on the (first) sabbath-day (after the Passover, Luke vi. 1.) and his disciples [5] began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn, (and, rubbing them in their hands, to eat of the corn, ibid.)

24. And the pharisees (seeing this) said unto him, Behold, why do they (by thy permission) on the sabbath-day that which (according to our traditions) is not lawful (to be done upon that day)?

25. And he said unto them, Have ye never read what (is sufficient to justify that action of theirs, viz. that which) David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he, and they that were with him?

26. How he went into the house of God in the [6] days of Abiathar the high-priest (see the note), and did eat the shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests (i. e. of which it is not lawful for any but the priests to eat), and gave also (of it) to them that were with him?

27. And he said (moreover) to them, The sabbath was made for (the sake of) man, and not man for the sabbath (now that which was instituted for the sake of another thing, must yield to the good of that for whose sake it was instituted):

28. Therefore (ὥστε, so that) the Son of man (who came to save men's lives, and promote their good) is (doubtless so far) Lord also of the sabbath (as to dispense with the strict rest of it, when he sees it necessary for their good).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. Δι' ἡμερῶν, After some days.] So Theophylact, δι' ἡμερῶν, ἀντὶ τοῦ, διελθούσων ἡμερῶν τινῶν, after days, that is, when some days were passed. So Gen. iv. 3. in process of time, μεθ' ἡμέρας, after days it came to pass.

[2] Ver. 4. Ἀπεστέγασαν τὴν στέγην ὅπου ἦν, They uncovered the roof where he was.] Dr. Lightfoot upon the place shews, that there was a door in every roof by which they went from the ὑπερῷον, or upper chamber upon the roof; now these men, knowing that it was this upper chamber to which the Jews customarily went up when they discoursed of the law, or religious things, ascend by stairs or ladders to this roof; and not finding the door wide enough for the man's bed to go down at, they widen it, by loosening some stones about, and so let down the paralytic.

Ver. 7. The reading εἷς ὁ θεὸς, and, ver. 15. ἁμαρτωλοὶ, are defended, Examen Millii ibid.

[3] Ver. 16. Τί ὅτι; How is it that he eateth? &c.] Τὶ for διά τι; why is it? or, wherefore is it? is very frequent both in the Old and New Testament; examples from the Old are numerous: see Gen. xxi. 29. xxxviii. 29. Exod. xiv. 15. xvii. 2. Josh. vii. 25. Judg. viii. 1. 2 Kings vi. 33. vii. 3. Isa. i. 11. iii. 15. Lam. iii. 39. In the New, see Matt. viii. 26. xix. 17. xxii. 18. Mark ii. 24. viii. 17. x. 18. xii. 15. Luke ii. 48, 49. vi. 41. 46. xxii. 46. John i. 25. vii. 19. ix. 27. x. 20. xiv. 22. xviii. 21. 23. xx. 13.

[4] Ver. 19. Μὴ δύνανται; Can the children of the bridechamber fast?] Because there is little to be observed in this chapter which hath not been explained already, till we come to the twenty-sixth verse, I shall here observe the various acceptations of the phrase μὴ δύνανται.

And (1.) it signifies that which is unfit, incongruous, or inconvenient to be done, as not suiting with the rules of decency; as when Moses says, Exod. viii. 26. οὐ δυνατὸν, it is not meet to do so; so Luke xi. 7. οὐ δύναμαι, I cannot rise, and give thee; and, vi. 42. πῶς δύνασαι λέγειν; how canst thou say to thy brother, Let me cast out the mote out of thine eye?

(2.) That which cannot justly, or without violation of some law or rule of equity and justice, be performed. So Deut. xii. 17. οὐ δυνήσῃ φαγεῖν, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn: so Acts x. 47. μετὶ τὸ ὕδωρ κωλῦσαι δύναταί τις; Can any hinder water that these should not be baptized? 1 Cor. x. 21. οὐ δύνασθε, Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; 2 Cor. xiii. 8. οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθα, For we can do nothing against the truth.

(3.) That which is not agreeable to the Divine economy, counsel, or will. So Gen. xix. 22. οὐ γὰρ δυνήσομαι, For I can do nothing till thou be come thither: Matt. xxvi. 42. εἰ οὐ δύναται, If this cup cannot pass from me, unless I drink it; and in this sense Christ often saith, οὐ δύναται ὁ υἱὸς, The Son cannot of himself do any thing, but what he sees the Father do. (John v. 19. 30.)

(4.) That which we cannot do by reason of the trouble of it, or because of some other employment which interferes with it; so the children of Jacob say to Joseph, οὐ δυνησεται τὸ παιδίον, The lad cannot leave his father, Gen. xliv. 22. and to Jacob, οὐ δυνησόμεθα καταβαίνειν, We cannot go down without our brother: so we read of Christ, μηκέτι δύνασθαι αὐτὸν, That he could not openly enter into the city, Mark i. 45. and of his disciples, μὴ δύνασθαι αὐτοὺς, That they could not eat bread, (iii. 20.) i. e. they had no opportunity to do it: of Herod, that he would have killed John, καὶ οὐκ ἠδύνατο, and he could not do it for fear of the people, Mark vi. 19, 20. so, I have married a wife, and therefore, οὐ δύναμαι ἐλθεῖν, I cannot come, Luke xiv. 20.

(5.) That which cannot be done, not for want of power in the agent, but upon account of some defect or fault in the patient; so Christ οὐκ ἠδύνατο, could do no mighty works, because of their unbelief, Mark vi. 5, 6.: so Luke xvi. 2. οὐ δύνῃ, Thou canst be no longer steward: so Christ spake to the Jews, καθὼς ἠδύναντο ἀκούειν, as they were able to hear him, Mark iv. 33. And in this sense Christ inquires, πῶς δύνασθε; How can you believe, who receive honour one of another? John v. 44.

(6.) That which cannot be done by reason of some disposition in us which renders us averse to, and unwilling to do any thing, till it be removed. So Joseph's brethren οὐκ ἠδύναντο, could not speak peaceably to him, Gen. xxxvii. 4. Behold, their ears are uncircumcised, and οὐ δυνήσονται ἀκούειν, they cannot hear, Jer. vi. 16. So πῶς δύνασθε; How can you, being evil, speak good things? Matt. xii. 34. οὐ δύναται, The world cannot hate you, John vii. 7. οὐ δύνασθε, You cannot hear my word, John viii. 43. οὐκ ἠδύναντο, therefore they could not believe, John xii. 39. The world οὐ δύναται, cannot receive the Spirit, John xiv. 17. They that are in the flesh, οὐ δύνανται, cannot please God, Rom. viii. 8. And so concerning a good disposition we read, that a good tree οὐ δύναται, cannot bring forth evil fruit, Matt. vii. 16. of the disciples, οὐ δυνάμεθα, we cannot but speak the things which we have heard, Acts iv. 20. of him that is born of God, that οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτάνειν, he cannot sin, 1 John iii. 9. and Christ saith of the church of Ephesus, οὐ δύνῃ, thou canst not bear them that are evil, Rev. ii. 2.

Ver. 23. Ἤρξαντο, Began.] That in the Hebrew phrase to begin to do a thing, and to do it, is the same, see the note on Acts i. 1. though I do not think that ἄρχομαι is wholly an expletive in this and other places, but it signifies to desire, to be willing, to covet, or be pleased with a thing; and answers to the Hebrew וַיֹּאֶל. So Josh. xvii. 12. ἤρξαντο ὁ Χαναναῖος κατοικεῖν ἐν τῇ γῇ, the Canaanite would dwell in the land: so when Micah had promised the Levite a salary, ἤρξατο παροικεῖν, he was willing to dwell with him, Judg. xvii. 11. so 2 Sam. vii. 29. and now ἄρξον καὶ εὐλόγησον, let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant: so also 1 Chron. xvii. 27. and Hos. v. 11. ἤρξατο πορεύεσθαι, he willingly walked after vain things; and, Judg. i. 35. ἤρξατο ὁ Χαναναῖος, the Canaanite would dwell in the mountain, i. e. the mountain of the Amorites, near the tribe of Dan, of which tribe was Samson, Judg. xiii. 2. Note also, that the reading of the Septuagint here, gives us an answer to the inquiry where Samson had his foxes; even from this mountain, ἐν ᾧ ἀλώπεκες, in which (say they) were foxes, they reading perhaps שעלים not שעלכים as we now read.

[6] Ver. 26. Ἐπὶ Ἀβιάθαρ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, In the days of Abiathar the high-priest.] That Ahimelech was then high-priest seems evident, (1.) because Abiathar, who succeeded him, was, and is here styled high-priest; for he being the father, and Abiathar his son, (1 Sam. xxi. 20. 22. xxii. 6.) if Ahimelech had been only an ordinary priest, his son Abiathar could not have been high-priest, that office then succeeding orderly from father to son. It is indeed by Mr. Whiston said, that that Abiathar that escaped from Doeg, never was high-priest: but he is so called, first, by the Septuagint, saying, that Solomon made Zadok εἰρέα πρῶτον ἀντὶ Ἀβιάθαρ, high-priest in the room of Abiathar, even of that Abiathar who bare the ark of the Lord before David, and who was afflicted with him in all things, 1 Kings ii. 26. 35. Secondly, He is so called thrice by Josephus,* who says, they had the catalogue of their high-priests preserved from two thousand years. (2.) Because Ahimelech his father is accused by Doeg of inquiring of the Lord for David, 1 Sam. xxii. 10. and he himself seems to confess, ver. 15. that he had often done the same thing before without blame; whereas the high-priest alone having on the ephod of judgment, had not Ahimelech been the high-priest, he could neither have done this, nor reasonably been accused of doing it. To this it is said, that Ahimelech might assist David in inquiring of the Lord, but not by urim. I answer, that I find no way of inquiring of the Lord but by a prophet, or by a high-priest wearing the ephod in which was the urim, or by a dream, of which we read nothing here. Moreover, that the ephod was then with him, is certain, because when Ahimelech was slain, Abiathar went down to David with the ephod in his hand, 1 Sam. xxiii. 6. And that he speaks of the high-priest's ephod is manifest, because he doth not call it a linen ephod, such as the priests wore, but the ephod; and because David inquires by it, ver. 9. xxx. 7. which shews it was the high-priest's ephod in which was the urim and the thummim, which by express precept was never to be separated from the ephod; since otherwise no inquiry could have been made by it. Thirdly, Because he is styled Ahimelech the priest; for it is a certain truth, though not observed by many, that from the end of the book of Deuteronomy to the end of the book of Chronicles, not one person is by name styled N. N. the priest who was not a high-priest; and though Jehoiada is called the high-priest where he is not named, viz. 2 Kings xii. 10. 2 Chron. xxiv. 11. yet is Hilkiah alone styled Hilkiah the high-priest, during that long interval. Now what reason is there to deny that Ahimelech hachoen signifies here, as in like case it always did before from the days of Eleazar hachoen, the high-priest? Lastly, Because Josephus, who being a Jew and a priest, must be supposed a competent witness in this case, calls him six times high-priest, viz. lib. vi. cap. 14. p. 196. B. C. F. 197. A. G.

The ancient solutions of the fathers are summed up by Theophylact thus: We must say therefore either that Abiathar had two names, being called also Ahimelech; or that Abiathar was then with Ahimelech; or that τοῦ υἱοῦ is to be understood, and the words to be read thus, ἐπὶ Ἀβιάθαρ τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, in the days of Abiathar the son of the high-priest; or that Abiathar is mentioned ὡς ἐπισημότερος, as most celebrated in the days of David. The second of these opinions, viz. That Abiathar being there with him, and made high-priest by the death of his father but a few days after this action, it might well be said to be done in the days of Abiathar the high-priest, though he was not then actually so, is embraced by the learned Bishop of Ely on 1 Sam. xxi. 6. this being said to be done in his days, as things may be said to have been done in the days of Henry the Eighth, or any other king of England, which came to pass but a little before he began to reign; to which may be added the criticism of Dr. Hammond, that ἐπὶ is to be rendered before, so ἐπὶ μετοικεσίας must be rendered before the captivity, Matt. i. 11. Jechonias and his brethren being begotten not under, but before the captivity. Dr. Lightfoot falls in with the two last solutions, rendering the words in the days of Abiathar the son of the high-priest, as τοῦ Ἠλὶ is the son of Eli, Luke iii. 23. and so on to the end of the chapter; and saying, that he therefore is named, rather than Ahimelech, because he brought the ephod to David, 1 Sam. xxii. 6. and by him inquiry was made by urim and thummim, 1 Sam. xxi. 2. 4. 9. 11, 12. xxx. 7, 8. 2 Sam. ii. 1. 5. xix. 21. whence it was usual, saith he, for the Jews by Abiathar to understand the urim and the thummim; this therefore seems to give some advantage to this instance, to say it was done under that Abiathar who had the ordering of that Divine oracle, and so might be supposed to do this by Divine direction. But because this also is very rare, I offer, thirdly, that interpretation which saith, that by the high-priest here we are to understand, not him who was strictly so called, but one who was an eminent man of that order, this being the import of the word,

1. When mention is made of power given ἀπὸ or περὶ τῶν ἀρχιερέων, from or by the high-priests, Acts ix. 14. xxvi. 10. 12.

2. Of high-priests gathered together, Matt. ii. 4. xxvi. 3. xxvii. 62. John xi. 47. xii. 10.

3. Of the chief priests coming to Jesus, Matt. xxi. 15. 23. 45. and that Christ ought to suffer by the chief priests, Matt. xvi. 21.

4. Of Judas coming to the chief priests, Matt. xxvi. 14. 47. Mark xiv. 10. 43. Matt. x xvii.3.6. 12. 20. 41. John xviii. 3.

5. Of the chief priests and scribes, Mark viii. 21. x. 33. xi. 18. xiv. 1. xv. 1.

6. Of the chief priests and elders, John vii. 32. Acts iv. 23. xxv. 15.

7. Of all the high-priests, Matt. xxvii. 1. Mark xiv. 53. See the like expressions, Mark xiv. 1. xv. 3. 10, 11. 31. Luke xxiii. 4. 13. 23. xxiv. 20. John xviii. 35. xix. 6. 15. 21. Acts v. 24. ix. 21. xxii. 30. xxiii. 14.

Ἐπὶ Ἀβιαθὰρ τοῦ Ἀρχιερέως, In the days of Abiathar the high-priest.] Good Mr. Whiston has given us an ingenious treatise upon this place, in which he attempts to shew that neither the Ahimelech nor the Abiathar mentioned in the history of David's eating the shew-bread, was high-priest at all; but another Abiathar, not mentioned at all there, but 2 Sam. xiv. 3. was then high-priest: and I, who never am backward to yield to evidence, will give him the honour of having found out the best solution of this difficulty that I have yet seen, when he hath answered these ensuing arguments.

Arg. 1. That Josephus, who, being a Jew and a priest, and who mentions the genealogy of their high-priests carefully preserved to his days, and so must be supposed a competent witness in this case, styles that very Ahimelech, who gave David the shew-bread, and who was slain by Doeg, six times Ahimelech the high-priest. Abiathar his son is also several times styled the high-priest by the same Josephus. It is no sufficient answer to this, to say, as Mr. Whiston doth, that neither Ahimelech nor Abiathar is styled high-priest; but the one is Ahimelech the priest, the other Abiathar the priest. For it is a certain truth, that from Eleazar the son of Aaron, in the book of Deuteronomy, to Hilkiah, in the close of the book of Chronicles, not one person is by name styled N. N. the high-priest, though there was all that while a high-priest in being. Now what reason is there to deny that Ahimelech hachoen signifies Ahimelech the high-priest, when no other name is given to any high-priest in Scripture, for above four hundred years? Of less importance is it to say, that we read not that either of them officiated as high-priest, in the great day of expiation, when we read not of any one that did so in the books of Samuel, Kings, or Chronicles.

Arg. 2. That Ahimelech was high-priest, is proved from the accusation which Doeg lays against him, that he inquired of the Lord for David, 1 Sam. xxii. 10. and from Ahimelech's own confession, that he had done the same thing before, ver. 15. and by the testimony of Josephus,* saying, that he did, πολλάκις προφητεῦσαι, oft consult the oracle for him: whereas the high-priest alone having on the ephod of judgment, had not Ahimelech been high-priest, he neither could have done so, nor could he reasonably have been accused of doing it.

To this it is answered, That Ahimelech prayed, or inquired of God for David; but no circumstances being mentioned, it does not appear whether it was any thing more than affording David a place in the public prayers of the tabernacle, or the lending him the sacred garments, and giving him proper opportunities for his own inquiries (as a prophet) of the Almighty.

But sure it is better to say nothing, than to use such sorry shifts as these; he inquired of the Lord for him; that is, he prayed for him, or gave him a place in the public prayers of the tabernacle, or he lent him a linen ephod to inquire in. Let him shew one instance of any priest that is ever said to inquire of the Lord besides the high-priest, and he will say something to lessen the force of this argument, which is yet left in its full strength; let him shew one of the consecrated ephods that was lent to a layman, or where lending one an ephod, or giving him a place in the public prayers of the tabernacle (if then there were any such prayers, or any such usage), signifieth Shaal lo bejehovah, i. e. to inquire for him from Jehovah, and he will say something pertinent to this objection. As for Rebecca, she inquired not of a priest, but, say the Jews, of a prophet; and this she did long before there was any high-priest wearing an ephod, by God appointed for this very end. And, saith the Bishop of Ely, it is most reasonable to think, that she went herself, and inquired at the Schechinah, or a place of the Divine presence, and the Lord answered her by an angel. (Gen. xxv. 23.)

Arg. 3. That Ahimelech had then the ephod to inquire by, is evident, because when Abiathar his son fled thence to David, he carried the ephod in his hand; he went down, saith the Septuagint, ἔχων ἐφοὺδ ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, having the ephod in his hand; and that this was the very ephod to which the breast-plate was annexed, the Bishop of Ely proves; (1.) because it is not styled a linen ephod, such as the priests used, but emphatically the ephod. (2.) Because when David was about to inquire of the Lord, he speaks twice to Abiathar thus, Bring hither the ephod: (1 Sam.

* Antiq. lib. vi. cap. 14. p. 196.

xxiii. 9. xxx. 7.) whereas, had it been only a linen ephod, it could have done him no service in his inquiries. This being so, if David himself inquired of the Lord by this ephod, he invaded on the priest's office, and so was guilty of the highest sacrilege; but if he made this inquiry by the mouth of Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, who was slain at Nob, then was Abiathar high-priest, and so Mr. Whiston's scheme is overthrown. Some think, saith the Bishop of Ely, that David put on the ephod, and then asked the Lord's advice; but that is a great mistake: for the high-priest was the person appointed by God to ask counsel of him for the supreme governor, (Numb. xxvii. 21.) therefore David spake these words by the mouth of Abiathar. When therefore it is said that David inquired of the Lord, it is reasonable to conceive, that he did this both in the places mentioned, and 2 Sam. ii. 1. 5. 19. by the person appointed by God to ask counsel for him, i. e. by Abiathar the high-priest; these being cases all concerning war, in which the ordinance of God appointed the chief governor to ask counsel of him; (Josh. xxvii. 20, 21.) and hence this very phrase is used, when other men asked counsel of the Lord in the like case: so Judg. i. 1. The children of Israel asked counsel of the Lord, Who shall go up for us against the Canaanites? and, xx. 18. They arose, and went up to the house of God, and asked counsel of God, saying, Who shall go up first to the battle against Benjamin? and again, ver. 23. But that they did this by Phinehas the high-priest, is evident from these words, ver. 27, 28. And the children of Israel inquired of the Lord, for the ark of the covenant was there in those days; and Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days. So Saul asked counsel of the Lord, 1 Sam. xiv. 37. but this he did by Ahijah the high-priest, ver. 36. (See ver. 18.)

Obj. But, saith Mr. Whiston, "The high-priest in the latter end of Saul's reign, was with Saul and not with David: for Saul, a little before his death, inquired of the Lord, and the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by urim, nor by prophets, (1 Sam. xxviii. 6.) which words surely imply, that Saul had caused inquiry to be made by urim, which, being peculiar to the high-priest, doth shew that the Jewish high-priest was then with Saul, which we know Abiathar the son of Ahimelech was not."

Ans. This is a considerable objection; to which I shall not answer, as some do, that Saul had caused another ephod to be made, or that he sent to David to inquire of Abiathar in his behalf; for there is no evidence for the second, and the first could do him no service, he having no high-priest to inquire by. But I answer, That though it be said that God answered not Saul by urim, that only is put in because it was one usual way of answering, not because Saul had tried that way; for he himself speaketh to Samuel thus, God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams, ver. 15. making no mention at all of his not answering by urim. And David observes, 1 Chron. xiii. 3. that Saul, after the evil spirit came upon him, inquired not at the ark, as formerly he had done: (1 Sam. xiv. 18.) so that this passage, as it is translated, seems only to say, that God gave him no answer at all by any of the usual ways: not by dreams, because the Spirit of the Lord was long since departed from him; (1 Sam. xvi. 14.) not by any direction of his prophets, because he had slain the Lord's prophets; not by urim, because he neither had the breast-plate of urim, nor a high-priest to consult; and lastly, translate the words thus, Saul feared ve jescheal, for he had inquired of the Lord, viz. since the time of his being rejected of God, and the Lord had not answered him by any of these ways, and then this text is impertinent: and of such translations of the Hebrew the instances are very many. (See Glassius de verbo, lib. iii. tr. 3. canon 46.)

Arg. 4. That Abiathar the son of Ahimelech, who was slain at Nob, was high-priest, is proved, first, because Josephus three times calls him so, viz. lib. vi. cap. ult. p. 207. lib. vii. cap. 11. p. 247, 248. Secondly, Because he who was removed by Solomon from the high-priesthood was the same Abiathar who was with David in his exile; for he was that Abiathar, who bore the ark before David, and who was afflicted in all the things in which David was afflicted, (1 Kings ii. 26.) which agrees only to that Abiathar who was the son of Ahimelech slain at Nob.

To this Mr. Whiston answers, "That there was an Abiathar who was the son of Ahijah, who was high-priest in the days of Saul, when David and his men did eat the shew-bread: that he had a son named Ahimelech, who was high-priest in the days of David, and this is the Ahimelech mentioned, 2 Sam. viii. 17. in these words, And Zadok the son of Ahitub and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar were priests; and this Ahimelech had a son named Abiathar, who was high-priest after him, and this was the Abiathar removed by Solomon, and not Abiathar the son of Ahimelech of Nob."

Now to this I reply, that he offers no proof that his first Abiathar was the son of Ahijah, or that his Ahimelech had a son named Abiathar, or that either of the three was high-priest. The text now cited saith, that Zadok and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar were priests, but that cannot signify that they were high-priests, because there could not be two high-priests together; and therefore the Bishop of Ely and the generality of commentators say, these two were the chief of the family of the priests, next to the high-priest, which was Abiathar, and who were called secondary priests. (2 Kings xxv. 18.) And whereas Mr. Whiston saith of his supposed Abiathar, that he was afflicted with David, by undergoing the peril of a spy in the time that Absalom was in Jerusalem, and David was fled from him; let any reasonable person judge, whether, on the account of the peril of so few days, if indeed he lay under any peril, he could have been said to have been afflicted, Beeol, in all the things in which David had been afflicted. Sure the words of the Bishop of Ely here are much more agreeable to the history, viz. that this Abiathar underwent all the hardships which David endured in his exile.

But, saith Mr. Whiston, "If that Abiathar who was deprived by Solomon was the Abiathar of the family of Ithamar, and son of Ahimelech of Nob, supposing that he began his office at thirty, as the priests did, and continued with David forty years, he must be a very old man, almost eighty years old before he died; whereas this contradicts God's threat against the family of Eli, that all the increase of his house should die in the flower of their age, and that there should not be an old man in his house for ever." (1 Sam. ii. 33.)

Now to this I answer, first, in the words of the Bishop of Ely on 1 Sam. ii. 33. That this threat did not belong to all the family of Ithamar, but only to the family of Eli. Secondly, Seeing king David died when he was seventy years old, (2 Sam. v. 4.) and seeing there could be no age set for the high-priest's entrance on his office, that depending on the death of his father, Ahimelech coming to an untimely end, Abiathar might be very young when he first entered upon his office, and begin it as priests after did at twenty, and so be not much above sixty when David died: and, lastly, when that threat had been executed in such a dreadful manner by the slaughter of the priests at Nob, we may reasonably conceive that one single person, made an exile, and afflicted in all that David was, might, for the service he had done to that good king, and the affliction he had already suffered, have his life prolonged above sixty or seventy years.

CHAP. III.

1. AND he entered again into the synagogue (of Capernaum, i. 21.) and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2. And they (asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day? Matt. xii. 19. and) watched him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath-day, that (if he did so) they might accuse him (as one that profaneth the sabbath).

3. And he said to the man who had the withered hand, Stand forth (in the sight of the synagogue).

4. And (then) he saith unto them, [1] Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill, (by refusing to preserve it on that day? And this question he put to them by way of answer to their question,) but they held their peace.

5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, [2] being grieved for the hardness of their hearts (which would not yield to all the conviction he had given them, that it was lawful to do good on the sabbath-day), he saith to the man (who had the withered hand), Stretch forth thy hand. And he stretched it out; and his hand was restored whole as the other (was).

6. And (this being done) the pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

7. But [3] Jesus (his time of suffering being not yet come) withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea; and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea,

8. And from Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, (I say) a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9. And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10. For he had healed many; [4] insomuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11. And unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

12. And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

13. And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth to him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him (as his attendants), and that he might send them forth to preach.

15. And (preaching in his name) to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

16. And (they were) Simon, (whom) he surnamed Peter;

17. And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them [5] Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder.

18. And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alpheus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite,

19. And [6] Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: and they went into a house (in Capernaum, ii. 1.)

20. And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as (have leisure to) eat bread.

21. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is [7] beside himself (Gr. he is faint by spending his spirits).

22. And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23. And he called them unto him, and said unto them in (two) parables, (first,) How can Satan cast out Satan?

24. And (for) if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26. And if (then) Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but (his kingdom) hath an end.

27. (And again in another parable he said,) No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will (be able to) spoil his house.

28. (Then he added these words), Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and the blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme (me upon earth):

29. But he that shall blaspheme against (the following dispensation of) the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of (Gr. obnoxious to) eternal damnation:

30. (And thus he spake) because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.

31. There came then his brethren and [8] his mother (to the place where he was), and (they), standing without, sent unto him, calling him (to them).

32. And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee.

33. And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34. And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and (pointing to his disciples, he) said, Behold my mother and my brethren!

35. For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is (by me valued as dearly as) my brother, and my sister, and mother.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 4. Ἔξεστι τοῖς σάββασιν ἀγαθοποιῆσαι, ἢ κακοποιῆσαι; &c. Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill?] Hence it seems to follow, that he who doth not do good to his neighbour when he can, doth evil to him; it being a want of charity, and therefore evil, to neglect any opportunity of doing good, or shewing kindness to any man in misery; and that not to preserve his life when it is in danger, is to transgress that precept which saith, Thou shalt not kill; because, by this delay, so much is taken from the pleasure of his life; and, saith the aphorism, non est vivere sed valere, vita. Hence the tradition of the Jews informs us, The hands of Moses were heavy, because when Amalek came against them he deferred their deliverance till the morrow, (Exod. xvii. 9.) and was not ready on that very day to give redemption to Israel. (B. Uziel. in Exod. xvii. 12.)

[5] Ver. 5. Καὶ περιβλεψάμενος αὐτοὺς μετ' ὀργῆς, And looking on them with anger.] Hence we learn that anger is not always sinful; this passion being found in him in whom was no sin. But then it must be noted, that anger is not properly defined by philosophers, ὄρεξις ἀντιλυπήσεως, a desire of revenge, or causing grief to him who hath provoked or hath grieved us: for this desire of revenge is always evil; and though our Saviour was angry with the pharisees, for the hardness of their hearts, yet had he no desire to revenge this sin upon them, but had a great compassion for them, and a desire to remove this evil. Anger is rather an inward motion and serious displeasure of the mind, arising from the apprehension of some injury done or intended to ourselves, or others for whom we are concerned, with a desire to remove the injury. (See note on Matt. v. 22.)

[3] Ver. 7. Καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνεχώρησε, And Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea.] When Christ by his doctrine and miracles could do no good upon men, by reason of the hardness of their hearts, ver. 5. but they consult how they may destroy him, ver. 6. he usually departs and conceals himself, that he may give place to their wrath, and secure himself from their malice. (See Matt. xii. 15. John viii. 59.) Whence we learn, not only that in such cases it is lawful thus to consult our safety, but that when men are so perverse, we, by concealing of the truth, do not betray it, but rather do comply with our Lord's precept, not to cast pearl before swine. (Matt. vii. 6.)

[4] Ver. 10. Ὥστε ἐπιπίπτειν αὐτῷ, Insomuch that they pressed upon him.] Dr. Hammond says, They fell down before his feet, requesting that they might touch him, or in order to the touching of him, as they did, vi. 56. But the pressing on him seems more agreeable to the reason why he desired a ship, viz. that they might not throng him.

[5] Ver. 17. Καὶ ἐπέθηκεν αὐτοῖς ὀνόματα Βοανεργὲς, And he named them Boanerges, which is, Sons of thunder.] Concerning the derivation of this word, see Dr. Lightfoot and Grotius. Christ seems to have given them this name from a foresight of the heat and zeal of their temper, of which they quickly gave an instance in their desire to call down fire from heaven, or thunder and lightning to consume the Samaritans: (Luke ix. 54.) and John also shewed his zeal, in forbidding him that cast out devils in Christ's name, because he followed not them. Hence we find in the Acts of the Apostles, Peter and John are the chief speakers and actors in the defence and propagation of the gospel: and the zeal of James and Peter, seems to be the reason why the one was slain by Herod, and the other imprisoned in order to the like execution.

[6] Ver. 19. Ἰούδαν Ἰσκαριώτην, And Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.] The wisdom of Christ saw fit to admit Judas amongst his disciples, that by him the counsel of God in giving up his Son to the death, and the Scriptures might be fulfilled. (Acts i. 16.) And he is by him sent to preach, to cure diseases, and to cast out devils, who had himself a devil, (John vi. 70.) to teach us, that the mission of a person may be valid, though he be not sanctified; and that we should hearken to, and, in things belonging to their ministerial office, should obey even such persons. Origen,* indeed, declares his belief that Judas γνησίως πότε ἐπεπιστεύκει, was once a sincere believer: for, saith he, had Christ found him at the first to have been a thief, he would not have committed the bag to him, when he had found him so to be, and his apostleship, even after he had pronounced him a devil, (John vi. 70.) for he fell from it only by his transgression in betraying his Master. (Acts i. 25.) I see no necessary reason why he might not appoint him the bag, even though he knew he was addicted to theft. Secondly, He also argues thus—Christ sent him as he did the rest of the apostles, attended with the power of miracles, and with commission to say to any city where he came, Peace be to this city; and with a promise, that if a son of peace was there, that peace should rest upon him; if not, it should return into their bosom; which, saith he, Christ would not have done, had not Judas then been a son of peace. But, (1.) Christ hath informed us that miracles might be done even by the workers of iniquity, Matt. vii. 22, 23. (2.) The twelve disciples were sent by two and two, Mark vi. 7. and so one of them being sincere, and a keeper of the word of God, (John xvii. 6.) this prayer for peace might come upon them that were worthy for his sake, rather than for the sake of Judas. This opinion therefore of Origen, as it is not certainly true, so neither can it certainly be disproved.

[7] Ver. 21. Ἔλεγον γὰρ, ὅτι ἐξέστη, And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him; for they said, He is beside himself.] This is spoken upon occasion of the multitude's coming so fast upon him, as that he had not time to take any food to recreate his weary spirits; and so that interpretation which renders the words thus, They said, He is fainty, or, may fall into a deliquium by spending thus his spirits, hath nothing I can see to render it improbable; this being frequently the import of the word in the Old Testament. So when the brethren of Joseph told Jacob that his son was living, ἐξέστη τῇ διανοίᾳ, Jacob's heart fainted, (Gen. xlv. 26.) and afterward his spirit revived: (ver. 27.) so Rahab saith, When we heard that God had dried up the Red Sea for you, ἐξέστημεν τῇ καρδίᾳ ἡμῶν, our hearts fainted, nor did there remain any breath in us: (Josh. ii. 11.) so when the kings of Syria and Israel conspired against Ahaz king of Judah, ἐξέστη ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ, his heart fainted, and the heart of his people: (Isa. vii. see xxxiii. 3.) and of Emath and Arphad, Jeremiah saith, xlix. 23. ὅτι ἤκουσαν ἀκοὴν πονηρὰν, ἐξέστησαν, when they heard evil tidings, their heart fainted. (See also Gen. xlii. 28.) This interpretation I like best; because it is absurd to say, that Christ did, either in his gesture or his actions, shew any symptoms of transportation, or excess of mind: nor could his kindred have any reason to conceive thus of him, who had never given the least symptoms of any such excess, though they of them who believed not in him (John vii. 4.) might have such unworthy thoughts of him.

[8] Ver. 31. Ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ, And his mother.] Hence Theophylact taxes her, κενοδοξίας, of vain-glory and of guilt, in endeavouring to draw him, ἀπὸ τῆς διδασκαλίας, from teaching the word: Tertullian* pronounceth her guilty of incredulity: Chrysostom, of vain-glory, infirmity, and madness, for this very thing. (Hom. 27. in Matt. tom. ii. p. 191.)

CHAP. IV.

1. AND he began again to teach by the sea-side: and there was gathered to him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and [1] sat in (it on) the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea (side) on the land.

2. And he taught them many things by parables, and said to them in his doctrine,

3. Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4. And it came to pass, as he sowed, some (seed) fell by the way-side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5. And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth (and so could not be long covered by it):

6. But (and) when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no (deep) root, it withered away.

7. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8. And other (seed) fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, [2] some thirty, and some sixty, and some a hundred (fold increase).

9. And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10. And when he was alone (i. e. retired from the multitude), they that were about him with the twelve asked him (the meaning of) the parable.

11. And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God (the effect and progress it will have among men): but [3] unto them that are without (and not prepared to receive the doctrine of this kingdom) all (these) things are done in parables: (they having shut their eyes, and hardened their hearts, Matt. xiii. 15.)

12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13. And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? [4] and how then will ye know all parables? (as might be reasonably expected from you, who should have ears to hear, i. e. discerning spirits in such things.

14. Take then the sense of this parable thus:) The sower (is he who) soweth the word.

15. And these are they (who are represented by the seed sown) by the way-side, where (among whom) the word is sown; but when they have heard (it), [5] Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16. And these are they likewise which are (represented by the seed) sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17. And (yet) have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time; (and) afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18. And these are they which are (represented by seed) sown among thorns; (to wit,) such as hear the word,

19. And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts (or desires) of other things entering in (to the heart), choke the word, and (so) it becometh unfruitful.

20. And these are they which are (represented by the seed) sown on [6] good ground; (to wit,) such as hear the word and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some a hundred.

21. [7] And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed? and not (rather) to be set on a candlestick? (i. e. Do I give you this light into my doctrine, that you may conceal it? Surely, no.)

22. For there is nothing hid (as being spoken by me in obscure parables), which shall (should) not be manifested; neither was any thing kept (Gr. made) secret (by me), but that it should come abroad.

23. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear (i. e. let these things be duly understood, and accordingly performed by you).

24. And he said unto them, [8] Take heed what (i. e. how you attend to what) you hear; (for) with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you: and to you that hear shall more be given (i. e. according to your proficiency in hearing, will the word be dispensed to you).

25. For he that (improveth what he) hath, to him shall be given (more); and he that hath not (improved his present knowledge), from him shall be taken even that (knowledge which) he hath.

26. And he said, [9] So is (it with the doctrine of) the kingdom of God (received into a good heart), as if a man should cast (good) seed into the ground;

27. And (having done so) should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how (as indeed it is with respect to the seed sown in the earth).

28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29. But when the fruit is brought forth (to maturity), immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come: (so when, by the preaching of the word, men are made ripe for the harvest, i. e. prepared to receive the gospel, the apostles will come and gather them into my kingdom.)

30. And he said (also), Whereunto shall we liken the (doctrine of the) kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31. [10] It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32. But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it: (even so the kingdom of the Messiah, before his death and burial in the earth, will have only a small and insensible increase, but after his resurrection it will spring up, and become the greatest of all kingdoms.)

* De carne Christ. cap. 7.

33. And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it (without offence).

34. But without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things (which he thus spake) to his disciples.

35. And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over to the other side (of the lake).

36. And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him (along with them) even as he was (sleeping) in the ship; (for he went first into the ship, and his disciples after him, Matt. viii. 22.) and there were also with him other little ships.

37. And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38. And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39. And (then) he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And (instantly) the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40. And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith? (and this he had cause to say,) [11] for they feared exceedingly (though he was present with them, and they had such experience of his power).

41. And (seeing that the wind ceased at his word, they) said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΘΗ ΣΘΑΙ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, Sat in the sea.] That is, in a boat upon the sea, at a little distance from the shore.

[2] Ver. 8. Ἓν τριάκοντα, καὶ ἓν ἑξήκοντα, καὶ ἓν ἑκατὸν, Some thirty, some sixty, and some a hundred.] The fathers of the fourth and fifth centuries were superstitious admirers of virginity, and so allotted here the hundred-fold increase to virgins; the sixty-fold, to widows that married not again; the thirty-fold, to those who lived in wedlock: so Athanasius, Ep. ad Ammun. St. Jerome, in locum, et lib. i. adv. Jovin. lit. K. et Apol. ad Pammachium, f. 37. lit. G. This did St. Jerome, saith Erasmus, durior in nuptias; and others, iniquiores nuptiis.

[3] Ver. 11. Τοῖς ἔξω· To them that are without.] It was customary for the Jews to give this title to the heathens; our Saviour therefore, by applying it to them, seems to hint to them, That in a short time the kingdom of God would be taken from them, and they themselves would be οἱ ἔξω, them that were without. (Matt. viii. 12. Luke xiii. 25. 28. see note on Luke viii. 10.)

[4] Ver. 13. Καὶ πῶς; How then?] For καὶ here is not only copulative, but illative; and so the words are to be rendered, How then? or, How therefore? So Psal. ii. 10. καὶ νῦν, Now therefore ye kings, be wise; Psal. vii. 7. καὶ ὑπὲρ ταύτης, For their sakes therefore return on high; Psal. xviii. 42. καὶ λεπτυνῶ, Then did I beat them as small as the dust. This sense it bears in the Septuagint, Gen. xiii. 16. xxiv. 41. xxviii. 21. xxxi. 8. xlii. 34. 38. Exod. vi. 1. vii. 9. 11. Lev. iv. 3. 14. 23. 28. v. 5. vi. 4. Numb. v. 15. 21. Deut. vi. 21. viii. 10. Josh. i. 15. xxiv. 20. 1 Sam. i. 11. vi. 9. Joel ii. 18. Micah vii. 9. Mal. ii. 2. and in the New Testament, Mark x. 26. καὶ τίς; Who then can be saved? Luke ii. 15. When the angels were gone up to heaven, καὶ, then the shepherds said, Luke xii. 29. Seek ye not therefore what ye shall eat; 1 Cor. v. 13. καὶ ἐξαρεῖτε, Therefore put away the evil person.

[5] Ver. 15. Ἔρχεται ὁ Σατανᾶς, Satan cometh.] The birds of the air, ver. 4. Τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, οἱ Δαίμονες οἱ τὸν ἀέρα κατέχοντες, The birds of the air represent Satan, because his habitation is in the air. (Theoph.)

[7] Ver. 21, 22. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς· μήτι ὁ λύχνος ἔρχεται, &c. And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, &c.] These words being only spoken to Christ's disciples, when he was alone with them, and both here and in Luke viii. 16, 17. subjoined to the explication of this parable, I think it best to explain them accordingly; as if Christ had said, "I give you a clear light, by which you may discern the import of this and other parables; but this I do, not that you may keep it to yourselves, and hide it from others, but that it may be beneficial to you, and by you be made beneficial to others; and that having thus learned, you may instruct them how they ought to hear, and to receive the word heard in good and honest hearts, (ver. 20.) And though I give you the knowledge of these mysteries of the kingdom of God, καταμόνας, privately, I do it not that you may keep them so; for there is nothing (thus) hid which should not be made manifest, neither was any thing made secret (by me) but that it should (afterward) come abroad."

Hence also observe, that had Christ's apostles so obscurely delivered or writ the Gospels, and those other scriptures which contain the rule of faith even in things necessary to be believed or done unto salvation, as the Romanists pretend they did, they must have hid the candle under a bushel, and not have manifested it to the world, as Christ here requires them to do.

[8] Ver. 24. Βλέπετε τί. Luke viii. 18. Βλέπετε οὖν πῶς ἀκούετε, Take heed what (Luke, how) you hear: for with what measure you mete, &c.] I think these words are well paraphrased by Theophylact thus,—Let not any thing you have heard slip from you, but lay it up in your heart; for according to that measure of attention and readiness of mind you use in hearing of the word, and your diligence in pondering it, and care to practise suitably to what you know already, will be your farther proficiency in knowledge: and he that hath προθυμίαν καὶ σπουδὴν, δωθήσεται αὐτῷ καὶ ὠφελεία, this readiness and care, shall profit by it: that τί signifies πῶς, we learn from these words, τί γὰρ οἶδας, How knowest thou, O husband, or, O wife? 1 Cor. vii. 16.

Ver. 24, 25.] Moreover, what can be more evident than this inference from these verses, That the word of God read and preached being the ordinary instrument of our conversion, and a savour either of life unto life, or of death unto death, conversion must depend partly on our attention to it, our care to meditate upon it, and fix it in our hearts, and to act suitably to it in our lives; and that Christ, by adding these words as a motive to take heed to what we hear, that to them that thus hear shall more be given, doth plainly teach us that the salutary efficacy of the word of life depends partly on our affection to and our improvement of what we have heard, and partly on the disposition of the hearer; to wit, his freedom from a prevailing love to those enjoyments and pleasures of the world, which avert our thoughts from this attention, and so choke the influence of the word, and hinder our reception of it into good and honest hearts: and also that our neglect so to improve it, is our own wilful fault, or our neglect to do that which God hath enabled us, or would upon this care enable us to do; and therefore is thus threatened with the removal of those means of grace we so unprofitably do enjoy. (See the note on Matt. xiii. 19.)

[9] Ver. 26. Καὶ ἔλεγεν, οὕτως ἐστὶν ἡ Βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, And he said, So is the kingdom of God.] This parable is mentioned only by St. Mark, and it seems to me to relate to the good ground; for that only brought forth ripe fruit, or fruit unto perfection: I therefore paraphrase it thus, "What I said of the seed sown upon good ground, may be illustrated by this parable, That the doctrine of the kingdom of God, received into a good and honest heart, is like seed sown by a man in his ground, manured and tilled, and so prepared to receive it; for when he hath sown it, he sleeps and wakes day after day; and looking on it, he sees it spring and grow up through the virtue of the earth in which it is sown, though he knows not how it doth so; and when he finds it ripe, he reaps it, and so receives the benefit of the seed sown: so is it here; the seed sown in the good and honest heart brings forth fruit with patience, and this fruit daily increaseth, though we know not how the word and Spirit work that increase; and then Christ, the husbandman, who sows this seed, at the time of the harvest sends forth the angels, his reapers, and gathers this good seed, i. e. the sons of the kingdom represented by it, into his celestial mansions." (See Matt. xiii. 38. 43.) I see no necessity of inquiring here how Christ may be said to sleep and rise day and night; Christ being like to this husbandman only in sowing and reaping of his seed; nor can it be said of him, his seed grows up he knows not how; nor yet would I depend much on that remark of the fathers, that here is a proof of man's free-will and power to do good of himself, the seed being only sown, and no farther care taken of it: for as seed sown in the earth is only fruitful by being watered from heaven and ripened by the sun, so a like influence of the word and Spirit upon the heart of man, seems requisite to bring the seed sown in it to perfection.

[10] Ver. 31. Ὡς κόκκῳ σινάπεως, The kingdom of God is like to a grain of mustard-seed.] i. e. The kingdom of the Messiah may fitly be compared to a grain of mustard-seed, which, before it is cast into the earth, is the least of all seeds, but being sown in it, it groweth up, and becomes the greatest of herbs: (see note on Matt. xiii. 31.) so this kingdom of the Messiah before his death and burial in the earth, which is called the sowing the body in the earth, (1 Cor. xv. 42, 43.) will have only a small and insensible increase, but will afterward spring up and become the greatest of all kingdoms, for being lifted up, he will draw all men after him.

[11] Ver. 40. Καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν φόβον μέγαν.] These words I would join to the former, thus, He said to them, Why are you so fearful? &c. for they feared exceedingly; and begin the last verse thus, And they said one to another, What manner of man is this? &c. for this accords best with Matt. viii. 27. Luke viii. 25.

CHAP. V.

1. AND they came over unto the other side of the sea, to the country of the [1] Gadarenes.

2. And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him (coming) out of the tombs a [2] man with an unclean spirit,

3. Who had his dwelling among the tombs: and no man could (effectually) bind him, no, not with chains:

4. Because that he had often been bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5. And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying (out), and cutting himself with stones.

6. But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran (to him) and worshipped him,

7. And (the unclean spirit in him) cried with a loud voice, and said, [3] What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8. For he (Jesus had) said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit (and this made him fear that Christ might torment him).

9. And he (Christ) asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion (a name of multitude): for we are many.

10. And he besought him much [4] that he would not send them away out of the country.

11. Now there was there nigh to the mountains a great herd of swine feeding.

12. And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the herd of swine, that (by thy permission) we may enter into them.

13. And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And (then) the unclean spirits (of the man) went out (of him), and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea (they were about two thousand), and were choked in the sea.

14. And they that fed the swine fled, and told it (i. e. what was done) in the city, and in the [5] country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15. And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid (what one of so great power might farther do).

16. And they that saw it told them how it befel to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17. And they (being troubled for the loss of them) began to pray him to depart out of their coasts.

18. And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him.

19. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith to him,

Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and (how he) hath had compassion on thee.

20. And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

21. And when Jesus was passed over again by ship to the other side, much people gathered to him: and he was nigh to the sea.

22. And, behold, there cometh [6] one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him (Christ), he fell at his feet,

23. And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: (I pray thee) [7] come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and (I am confident if thou doest this) she shall live.

24. And Jesus went with him; and much people followed him (Jesus), and thronged him.

25. And a certain woman, which had an issue (a flux) of blood twelve years,

26. And had suffered many things of many physicians, and [8] had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse,

27. When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment.

28. For she said (in her heart), If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.

29. And straightway (upon this touch) the fountain of her blood was dried up: and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague (i. e. disease).

30. And Jesus, immediately [9] knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned (himself) about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?

31. And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32. And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33. But (then) the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34. And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be (still) whole of thy plague.

35. While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house (certain persons) which said, Thy daughter is dead, why troublest thou the Master any farther?

36. As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith to the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

37. And he suffered no man to follow him (into the place where the daughter was), save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James, (and her father and mother, Luke viii. 51.)

38. And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and [10] wailed greatly.

39. And when he was come in, he saith to them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not (so) dead, but (that she shall presently arise from her bed, as one that) sleepeth.

40. And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he [11] taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, (see ver. 37.) and entered in where the damsel was lying.

41. And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise.

42. And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

43. And he charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat (to shew, saith Theophylact, that she was really alive).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. Ε'ΙΣ τὴν χώραν τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν, Into the country of the Gadarenes.] Theophylact here saith, τὰ ἀκριβέστερα τῶν ἀντιγράφων εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γεργεσηνῶν; the exactest copies read Gergesenes, as St. Matthew doth, viii. 28. But both St. Mark here, and St. Luke viii. 26. read the Gadarenes; and therefore it is better answered by Dr. Lightfoot, that both say true, for the region of the Gergesenes was of broader extent than that of the Gadarenes, and the region of the Gadarenes was included in it.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἄνθρωπος ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ, Luke viii. 27. ἀνήρ τις, A man with an unclean spirit.] St. Matthew saith there were δύο δαιμονιζόμενοι, two possessed with the devil, viii. 28. which difference, saith the reverend Dr. Hammond, hath nothing of weight in it; for Matthew, which names two, saying the truth, the other evangelists, who name but one, not denying there were more, must necessarily say the truth also. Yet curiosity will not rest here, but will inquire, why, there being two, and both λίαν χαλεποὶ, very fierce, St. Mark and St. Luke name only one? Dr. Lightfoot ingeniously conjectures, that one of these two was a Gergesene, and a Jew; and so, in casting the devil out of him, our Lord did only what he frequently had done in Judea; but the other was a Gadarene, i. e. one of a heathen city, as Josephus testifies, and as may be collected from the swine they kept, it being, by the Jewish constitution, an unlawful thing for any Jew to keep swine. (See Dr. Lightfoot Harm. p. 32.) Now of this one, St. Mark and Luke chiefly take notice, as being a more remarkable and rare instance; this and that of the Syrophœnician woman being the only instances of cures wrought upon the heathens: that he was a heathen he probably conjectures, (1.) from the city he inhabited, (2.) because the devils request, both that he would not torment them, and that he would not send them out of the country (which elsewhere they do not); for being among heathens, they thought they were among their own, and not in Christ's jurisdiction, as being not among his people. But (3.) the text yields a more certain answer, viz. that of these two, one only was ἄνθρωπος ἐν ἀκαθάρτῳ πνεύματι, a man possessed with an unclean spirit. (4.) He was the man whom the inhabitants oft attempted to bind, but could not effectually do it, he breaking all the bands and chains that they could lay upon him, (ver. 3, 4. Luke viii. 29.) Of these two remarkable circumstances, and of his being unclothed, and cutting himself with stones, St. Matthew makes no mention; and therefore Mark and Luke give us the history of him more largely, omitting the other, in whom there was nothing so remarkable.

[3] Ver. 7. Τί ἐμοὶ καί σοι; What have I to do with thee?] This is not a Hebraism, as some think, from 2 Kings iii. 13, &c. but a form of speaking used in the Greek tongue. So Arrian in Epictetus,* τι ἡμῖν καὶ αὐτῷ, what have we to do with him? (See more instances in Schmid. on Matt. viii. 29.)

[4] Ver. 10. Ἵνα μὴ αὐτοὺς ἀποστείλῃ ἔξω τῆς χώρας, That he would not send them away out of the country.] It is observed by Grotius here, that in this country there were many apostates from the Jewish faith, over whom the devils exercised their power; as under the Christian economy they became subject to the power and chastisement of Satan, who either denied the fundamentals of, or by their wicked deeds became a scandal to, the Christian faith. (1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Tim. i. 20. Vide Tertul. de Spectaculis, cap. 26. Cyprian de Lapsis. ed. Ox. p. 132, 133.)

[5] Ver. 14. Καὶ εἰς τοὺς ἀγρούς, Told it in the city, and in the country.] Or rather in the little villages, where the houses were few and apart. See vi. 36. Send them away that they may go into the country and villages, and market-towns, and buy bread. So again, ver. 56.

Many here are the practical observations of Theophylact upon this history, which I will briefly represent. As, (1.) From the devil's asking leave to go into the swine, he observes, that they could not hurt them, much less can they hurt man, without the Divine permission. (2.) That as having leave they instantly hurry these swine to destruction, so much more would they deal with men, did not the hand of Providence restrain them. (3.) That he who had been possessed with the devil, desired to be with Christ, as fearing lest at his departure the devil might seize on him again; and that Christ permitted him not, partly to avoid the suspicion of vain-glory, of which he might have given some umbrage, had he carried about with him those upon whom his greatest miracles were wrought; and partly to shew that in his absence he was able to protect those that believe and trust in him, from the malice of all evil spirits. (4.) From those words of our Saviour, Go, tell what great things the Lord hath done to thee, we learn, saith he, from Christ's example, when we do any good not to ascribe it to ourselves, but give God the glory of it. Note, lastly, that Dr. Hammond in his paraphrase gives three reasons why our Saviour permitted the devils to enter into the swine; (1.) That the people might see the virulency of these devils, if not restrained by him, and so the mercy done to those that were possessed. (2.) The mercy now approaching to their country by the coming of Christ, if they would accept of it. And (3.) to try whether their love to their swine was greater than that to their own souls.

[6] Ver. 22. Εἷς τῶν ἀρχισυναγώγων, One of the rulers of the synagogue.] The word ἀρχισυνάγωγος, or ruler of the synagogue, is mentioned both in the Scriptures, the Jewish writers, and the Imperial Constitutions; in which sense it appears from Scripture, that the rulers of the synagogue were more than one, as may be gathered (1.) from these words, one of the rulers of the synagogue, to wit, at Capernaum; for that in Capernaum there was but one synagogue is probably collected from the words of St. John, vi. 56. These things spake Jesus in the synagogue, teaching in Capernaum. (2.) From the express words of St. Luke, who when Paul and Barnabas were entered into the synagogue at Antioch, οἱ ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, the rulers of the synagogue said to them, If ye have any word of exhortation to the people, speak: (Acts xiii. 15.) and also from the mention of Crispus and Sosthenes, as ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, rulers of the synagogue at Corinth: (Acts xviii. 1. 17.) or else more strictly to import the person who was the president, the head, or the master of the synagogue; and in this sense he was but one, as when St. Luke saith, xiii. 14. ὁ ἀρχισυνάγωγος, the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation. (See this more fully in Capeg. Vitringa de Regim. Synag. lib. ii. cap. 11.) But, whereas some learned men conceive that the word synagogue here signifies, not the house of prayer, or of reading and expounding the law, but the consistory of twenty-three, appointed in every city, who were able to punish offences not capital, to scourge, &c. because our Saviour says, they shall deliver you up, εἰς συνήδρια, to the councils, and they shall scourge you in the synagogues: (Matt. x. 17. xxiii. 34.) Behold, I send to you prophets and wise men, and some of them ye shall kill, and some ye shall chastise in your synagogues; this I think is a mistake: for, (1.) in the tenth chapter our Saviour mentions the synagogues, in which the Christians were to be scourged, as distinct places from the synedria, or councils to which they were to be delivered. And (2.) St. Paul declares once and again, that he did beat the Christians in their synagogues, (Acts xxii. 19.) that he punished them throughout all the synagogues, (xxvi. 11.) and that this flagellation, and the rebels' beating, were used in the synagogues, is fully proved by Campeg. Vitringa de Regim. Syn. Vet. lib. iii. par. i. cap. 11. p. 774.

[7] Ver. 23. Λέγων—ἵνα ἐλθὼν ἐπιθῇς, Saying, Come and lay thy hands on her.] It is observable that there is frequently an ellipsis of some verb or sentence before the particle ἵνα, as here δέομαι, I pray thee, is wanting: so chap. xiv. 49. ἀλλ' ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν, but τοῦτο ἐγίνετο, this was done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled: so 1 John ii. 19. ἀλλ' ἵνα φανερωθῶσιν, but this was done that they might appear not to be of us: Eph. v. 33. ἡδὲ γυνὴ ἵνα, "Uxor autem videat, sive det operam," Let the wife see that she reverence her husband.

[8] Ver. 26. Καὶ δαπανήσασα τὰ παρ' ἑαυτῆς πάντα, And had spent all that she had.] Here comes to be considered a story introduced by Eusebius* with an ἔλεγον, it is reported, "That by the gate of this woman's house was erected a brass statue, bearing the effigies of this woman upon her knees in the posture of a supplicant; and, opposite to her, the effigies of a man in brass, resembling Jesus stretching out his hand to the woman; and that at the feet of it an unknown plant sprung up, which, reaching to the borders of his brass doublet, or coat, became a present remedy against all manner of diseases." And therefore Asterius, in his homily upon this woman, declares that Maximinus, ἀνβίλετο τῆς πολίκνης τὸ κάλκον, took away this brazen statue from that city. (Cod. 271. p. 1508.) Now that there might be two brass statues in that city, built according to the heathenish custom, I deny not; but that they were either erected by this woman, or contained the resemblance of Christ, or that any such herbs growing thus up, became a present remedy to all diseases, I find cause, with Charlemain, to say, si tamen facta est, that is, to doubt the truth of the relation: for, not to insist on the silence of all the three evangelists, who mention this woman, and could not be ignorant of a thing so famous, or silent in a matter which so much tended to the confirmation of the Christian faith; not to insist upon it, that neither Justin Martyr, who was born in Palestine, where Paneas or Cæsarea Philippi was; nor Origen, who conversed many years at Tyre near this place; nor Irenæus or Tertullian, who speak of this very woman, makes the least mention of this brazen statue, or this miraculous herb; nor, thirdly, that this herb having then only its miraculous effects when it touched the border of our Saviour's garment, smells rank of the superstition of the latter times: to omit, I say, all these things, how should a woman who, as all these evangelists inform us, had spent all that she had, be able to erect two such costly statues as were sufficient to exhaust the fortunes even of wealthy persons? or how can we imagine that the Jews, in all their wars, and the gentiles, both bitter enemies to Christianity, should suffer such a confirmation of it to remain even to the days of Eusebius?

[9] Ver. 30. Καὶ Ἰησοῦς ἐπιγνοὺς ἐν ἑαυτῷ τὴν δύναμιν ἐξελθοῦσαν, And Jesus knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him.] From these and the like words, that δύναμις παρ' αὐτοῦ, virtue with him, went out, and healed them all, (Luke vi. 19.) it is evident that the virtue which did these miraculous cures resided in Jesus, which is never said of any of the prophets or apostles; the Divine virtue by which these prophets and apostles did their miraculous cures is ascribed to God; as in these words, δυνάμεις τε οὐ τὰς τυχούσας ἐποίει ὁ Θεὸς, and God did special miracles by the hands of Paul; (Acts xix. 11, 12.) but the miracles done by Christ, to the Divine virtue dwelling in him; whence he so often declares, that the Father abiding in him did the works. (John xiv. 10.)

[10] Ver. 38. Κλαίοντας καὶ ἀλαλάζοντας πολλά, He sees the multitude weeping and wailing greatly.] Ἀλαλάζειν ordinarily signifies to make a joyful sound; but it is often used by the Septuagint to signify the voice of lamentation; as when the prophet Jeremy says, xxv. 34. ἀλαλάξατε οἱ ποιμένες, Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow yourselves in ashes, ye principal of the flock; and, ver. 36. A voice of the cry of the shepherds, καὶ ἀλαλαγμὸς, and a howling of the rams of the flock shall be heard; and the prophet Ezekiel, xxvii. 30. ἀλαλάζουσιν ἐπί σε, They shall cause their voice to be heard against thee, and shall cry bitterly: so also, Jer. iv. 8. xlvii. 2. and these two senses hath the Hebrew halal, from which it seems to be derived.

[11] Ver. 40. Παραλαμβάνει τὸν πατέρα καὶ μητέρα· He taketh with him the father and the mother, &c.] i. e. As many witnesses as were sufficient to confirm the fact, and no more, lest he should seem to be desirous of vain-glory.

CHAP. VI.

1. AND he went out from thence (i. e. from Capernaum), and came into his own country (Nazareth, Luke iv. 16.) and his disciples follow him.

2. And when the sabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing were astonished (at his words), saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what (kind of) wisdom is this which is given to him, (and how is it) that even (Gr. also) such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3. Is not [1] this the carpenter, the son of (Joseph and) Mary? (Is he not) the brother of James and Joses, and of Juda and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us (in all whom we find no such marks of power or wisdom)? And (by reason of his mean alliance) they were offended at him.

4. But (then) Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, but (Gr. is not despised, save) in (and for) his own country (Galilee, John vii. 52.) and among his own kin, and in his own house (or for them).

5. And he [2] could do there no mighty work (because of their unbelief), save that he laid his hands on a few sick folk, and healed them.

6. [3] And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And (leaving them) he went round about the villages teaching.

7. And he calleth to him the twelve (apostles), and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits;

8. And (he) commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save [4] a staff only; (viz.) no scrip, no bread (for victuals), no money in their purse (to buy it):

9. But (that they should) be shod with sandals; and not put on two coats.

10. And he said to them, In what place soever ye enter into a house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you when ye depart (Gr. departing) thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them, (that you count them as unclean; and) verily I say to you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.

12. And they went out, and preached that men should repent.

13. And they cast out many devils, and [5] anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.

14. And king Herod heard of him, for his name was spread abroad; and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

15. Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is [6] a prophet (raised from the dead), or as one of the (old) prophets.

16. But when Herod heard thereof (i. e. of his fame), he said, It is (that) John whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

17. For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her (his brother being yet living).

18. For John had said to Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19. Therefore Herodias [7] had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not (prevail with Herod so to do).

20. For Herod feared (to take away) John, knowing that he was a just man and a holy (person), and he [8] observed (συνετήρει he kept) him (from the malice of He- rodias; or, he was formerly observant of him); and when he heard of him, he did many things (which John taught), and heard him gladly.

21. And (but) when a convenient day was come (for her malicious purpose, viz. the day) that Herod (celebrating) his birthday, made a supper to (for) his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

22. And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod (Gr. coming in, dancing and pleasing Herod), and them that sat with him, the king said to the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23. And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24. And (then) she went forth, and said (Gr. going forth said) to her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, (Ask) the head of John the Baptist.

25. And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist.

26. And (then) the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for the sake of them that sat with him, he would not reject her.

27. And (so) immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he (the executioner) went and beheaded him (John) in the prison,

28. And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29. And when his disciples heard of it (i. e. of his death), they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

30. And (about that time) the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught (in pursuance of the commission he had given them).

31. And he said to them, (After such a long and laborious journey) come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32. And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33. And the people saw them departing, and many (of them) knew him (and whither he was going), and (so they) ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them (viz. Christ and his disciples), and came together to him.

34. And Jesus, when he came out (of the ship), saw much people, and was moved with compassion towards them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd (to lead them into wholesome pastures): and he began to teach them many things.

35. And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came to him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time (of the day) is far passed:

36. Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have (here) nothing to eat.

37. (But) he answered and said to them, Give ye them to eat. And they said to him, (How shall we do this?) Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

38. He saith to them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

39. And he commanded them to make all (the people) sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40. And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties.

41. And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and blessed (God, see note on Matt. xiv. 19.) and (then) brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42. And they did all eat, and were filled.

43. And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments (of the bread), and of the fishes.

44. And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

45. And straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go (from the desert on the east side of the sea of Galilee) to the other side (of that sea) before (him) to Bethsaida, while he sent away the people; (though the contrary winds made them land at Capernaum, ver. 53.)

46. And when he had sent them away, he departed to a mountain to pray.

47. And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he (was) alone on the land.

48. And he saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary to them: and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh to them, walking on the sea, and (continued walking so as if he) would have passed by them.

49. But when they saw him walking on the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out (for fear):

50. For they all saw him, and were troubled. And immediately he talked with them, and saith to them, Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

51. And he went up to them into the ship; and the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52. For they considered not the miracle of the loaves (which was done now before their eyes, and was sufficient to convince them, the same power might enable him to walk on the sea, and to calm the wind): for their heart was hardened, (i. e. through incogitance was not convinced by sufficient evidence; see viii. 17.)

53. And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew (the ship) to the shore (of Capernaum, John vi. 13.)

54. And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they (of that country) knew him.

55. And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was.

56. And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country (towns), they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him, that they might touch [9] if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched (it) were made whole.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 3. Ο'ΥΧ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τέκτων; Is not this the carpenter?] So Justin Martyr,* not only speaks of him as the son of a carpenter, καὶ τέκτονος νομιζομένου, and reckoned as a carpenter, but saith, ταῦτα γὰρ τὰ τεκτονικὰ ἔργα εἰργάζετο

ἐν ἀνθρώποις, ὧν ἄροτρα καὶ ζυγά, *that being among men, he made rakes and yokes, which were the works of carpenters. Origen therefore seems to have forgot himself when he so positively says, Ὅτι οὐδαμοῦ τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις φερομήνων εὐαγγελίων τέκτων αὐτὸς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀναγέγραπται, That it was not written in any of the Gospels which the church received, that Jesus was a carpenter. It seems not only true, but even requisite, that he should be of some trade, since by the Jewish canons all fathers were bound to teach their children some trade; and their most celebrated rabbins thought it a great reproach not to be of some trade; and also, that he might give no example of idleness, and take off all suspicion of being bred up in curious arts.

[2] Ver. 5. Καὶ οὐκ ἠδύνατο, &c. And he could do there no mighty works, because of their unbelief.] For Christ still requiring faith in the patient, in order to his cures, where this was wanting, he could do no mighty works; not that he wanted power to do them, but that they wanted that condition which only made it fit that he should do them. So God saith, Jer. xv. 1. My mind cannot be towards this people, not for want of kindness or good-will in him, but for want of those dispositions in them which might render them fit objects of his favour.

[3] Ver. 6. Ἐθαύμασε διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν, And he wondered because of their unbelief.] So when the centurion by his answer had shewed the strength of his faith, Christ marvelled, and said to them that followed him, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel: (Matt. viii. 10.) whereas, had not God vouchsafed sufficient power to those of Israel to believe, as well as to the centurion, what ground can we imagine for this marvelling? for sure Christ could have no sufficient cause to marvel either that faith should be found where it was, or not found where it was not, if believing depended on an omnipotent act of God, producing faith in all that did at any time believe (unless that could be a just ground of marvelling, that God by his omnipotence could work faith in whom he pleased), or that man should not do more than he had power, or than God would enable him to do.

[4] Ver. 8. And he commanded them, that they should take nothing for their journey, εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον, save a staff only.] St. Matthew, x. 10. saith, μηδὲ ῥάβδον, not a staff: but Theophylact there reads, μηδὲ ῥάβδους, nor staves; and this reading is confirmed not only from many MS. copies, but from St. Luke, who, ix. 3. hath it, μηδὲ ῥάβδους, nor staves: it being common for those who were to travel a considerable journey, to take with them two staves, as well as two coats. The prohibition of ὑποδήματα, shoes, there, ver. 10. contradicts not the permission of sandals here; the sandals being made of harder leather, the shoes of softer; the sandals so open, that you might put your foot into them before or behind, whereas you could put it into the shoe only one way. (See Lightfoot on Matt. x. 10.) And this command Christ laid upon them, to give them a manifest document in this their first mission (which was only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, to prepare them to receive the Messias, when he should manifest himself unto them) of the Divine Providence providing for them all things necessary; and this they thankfully acknowledge, Luke xxii. 35. by saying, that when he thus sent them forth, they wanted nothing. But then, that this was a temporary precept, respecting only this very mission, and not reaching to their whole apostolical function afterward, is evident, (1.) from the nature of their mission, which was only to the cities of Judea, and was performed in a short time; for, ver. 30. we find them returned, and telling their Master what they had done; and this also sufficiently appears from our Lord's words, When I sent ye forth without scrip or shoes, lacked you any thing? (Luke xxii. 35.) Hence Christ himself had one that bore his bag: (John xiii. 29.) and St. Paul sends for his cloak that he had left at Troas. (2 Tim. iv. 13.)

Ver. 11. 33. 36. 51. The reading of the text is defended, Examen Millii hic.

[5] Ver. 13. Καὶ ἤλειφον ἐλαίῳ, &c. And anointed with oil many that were sick.] That it was usual with the Jews to prescribe oil as a fit thing to anoint the sick in order to their recovery, Dr. Lightfoot here and elsewhere fully proves; nor do I think the apostles, having no command of Christ to do so, would have used this ceremony, had it not been customary for them so to do: but whether they did this symbolically, in hope of obtaining to the patient the oil of gladness, or only medicinally, it is certain that the virtue which attended it, when used by the apostles, could not be natural, or inherent in the oil, but must be supernatural, and derived from him who sent them; since by this unction was produced a certain and constant cure of all whom they anointed.

[6] Ver. 15. Προφήτης, ἢ ὡς εἷς τῶν προφητῶν, Others said, That he is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.] I see no necessity of questioning or changing the reading here into προφήτης, the prophet, by way of excellency: for when we find the disciples declaring what the Jews said of him, Matt. xvi. 14. and Luke ix. 19. there is no intimation of any of them who owned him as the Christ; nor is there any need of leaving out the ἢ ὡς, the Jews being of both these opinions; some saying that he was a prophet, John iv. 19. ix. 17. a great prophet risen up in Israel, Luke vii. 16. others, that he was one of the old prophets risen from the dead, Luke ix. 8. and in particular, that he was the prophet Jeremy, Matt. xvi. 14.

[7] Ver. 19. Herodias, ἐνεῖχεν, had a quarrel against him.] The word primarily imports "adverso erat animo," she was in mind averse to him, viz. after his reprehension of Herod; and because the natural consequence of that averseness is anger and hatred, arising from the conceived injuries which make us thus averse to any man, therefore it is well rendered by Hesychius and Phavorinus, ὀργίζεται, μνησικακεῖ, she is angry, and bears a grudge against him.

[8] Ver. 20. Συνετήρει αὐτόν, He observed him.] i. e. Saith Dr. Hammond, he kept him guarded from the malice of Herodias, who would have killed him; but this seems not to agree with his desire to kill him, Matt. xiv. 5. I therefore think it may relate to his regard to him and his sayings, before he was incensed against him, by reason of his reprehension, as the words following do insinuate.

[9] Ver. 56. Κἂν τοῦ κρασπέδου, At least they might touch the hem of his garment.] So κἂν signifies, Acts v. 15. Κἂν ἡ σκιὰ, that at least the shadow of Peter might overshadow some of them; and 2 Cor. xi. 16. Κἂν ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθέ με, yet as a fool receive me.

* Cont. Celsum, lib. vi. p. 299.

CHAP. VII.

1. THEN came together to him the pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2. And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with defiled, that is to say, with unwashen, hands, they found fault (with them for so doing).

3. For the pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands [1] oft (Gr. up to the wrist), eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

4. And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things (of this kind) there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and pots, brazen vessels, and of tables (Gr. κλινῶν, of beds, on which they did eat, as now upon tables).

5. [2] Then (therefore) the pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but (transgress them, for they) eat bread with unwashen hands?

6. He answered and said unto them, [3] Well did Isaiah prophesy of you hypocrites, as it is written (for what he testified of the people of that age, from the mouth of God, must equally respect all people of all ages, that do as they did), This people (of the Jewish nation) honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7. Howbeit in vain do they (think to) worship me, (by) teaching for doctrines (necessary to be observed) the commandments of men.

8. For laying aside the commandment of God (by obedience to which he is truly honoured), ye hold (to) the traditions of men, as washing of pots and cups: and many other such-like things ye do; (which, who hath required at your hands?)

9. And he said to them, [4] Full well ye (or, do ye well to) reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10. (As it is plain ye do) for Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth (or revileth) father or mother, let him die the death:

11. But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is (be it as a) corban, that is to say, (as) a gift (consecrated to God), by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me (he is free, i. e. he is bound by that vow not to succour his parents).

12. And (therefore) ye suffer him no more to do aught for his father or mother;

13. Making (thus) the word (i. e. the fifth commandment) of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered (in this manner to the people): [5] and many such-like things do ye.

14. And when he had called all the people (present) to him, he said to them, Hearken to me every one of you, and understand:

15. There is nothing from without a man, that (by) entering into him can defile him; but the things which come out of him, those are they which defile the man.

16. If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear (i. e. he that hath understanding to perceive this, let him take notice of it).

17. And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the (meaning of the) parable.

18. And he saith to them, Are ye so without understanding also (as to need farther instruction in this thing)? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing (it is) from without (that) entereth into a man, it cannot defile him (as to his heart and soul)?

19. Because it entereth not into his heart (to raise up evil thoughts there), but (only) into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats (by carrying off the dregs of them).

20. And he said, That which cometh out of a man, that defileth a man (in the sight of God).

21. For [6] from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22. Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy (or evil speaking), pride, foolishness:

23. All these evil things come from within, and (so) defile the man.

24. And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and (he) entered into a house, [7] and would have no man know it: but it could not be hid.

25. For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26. The woman was a Greek (as to religion), a Syrophœnician by nation; and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27. But Jesus said to her, Let the children (of the kingdom, Matt. viii. 12.) first be filled; for it is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to the dogs; (i. e. to them who are without the kingdom, Rev. xxii. 15.)

28. And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet (Gr. ναὶ Κύριε, καὶ γὰρ, I pray thee, Lord; for even) the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs (and in like manner thou mayest shew a little favour to the gentiles).

29. And he said to her, For this saying (shewing a more than ordinary faith) go thy way (satisfied; for) the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30. And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out (of her), and her daughter laid upon the bed.

31. And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came to the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coast of Decapolis.

32. And they bring to him one that was deaf, [8] and had an impediment in his speech (or was tongue-tied); and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33. And he took him aside from the multitude, and [9] put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue;

34. And looking up to heaven, he sighed (at the consideration of the miseries of human life), and saith to him, Ephphatha, that is, (Let thine ears) be opened.

35. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

36. And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;

37. And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 3. ΕΑΝ μὴ πυγμῇ νίψωνται, Unless they wash their hands oft.] i. e. If they wash not the hand up to the wrist; for Mr. Le Clerc is certainly out, when he interprets a word plainly relating to the Jewish customs, and therefore only to be interpreted by those customs, out of Hesychius and Phavorinus, who knew nothing of them. (See Dr. Lightfoot, in locum.)

[2] Ver. 5. Ἔπειτα, Then.] Or rather, idcirco, therefore: so Xenophon, ἔπειτ' οὐκ οἴει; Do you not therefore think that the gods take care of men?

[3] Ver. 6. Καλῶς προεφήτευσεν περὶ ὑμῶν, &c. Well hath Elias prophesied of you, as it is written.] He doth not say, Isaias prophesied of the Jews of that age in which Christ lived, or that he then said what by accommodation might be applied to them, but only that he well said of the hypocrites of his age, that which was true of the like hypocrites in any age; and therefore Dr. Hammond well paraphraseth the words thus, You are that very sort of Jewish hypocrites of which Isaias prophesied, i. e. you do resemble them.

[4] Ver. 9. Καλῶς ἀθετεῖτε, Full well ye reject the commandment of God.] Here it is proper to observe from Suidas, that the word καλῶς is used ἐπὶ παραιτήσει, καὶ ἀρνήσει, by way of refusal and denial: so the scholiast, upon the word καλῶς, used by Euripides, in Ranis, saith, τὸ καλῶς ἐπὶ παραιτήσει ἀποστρεφόμενος δὲ, καὶ παραιτούμενος ὁ Εὐριπίδης λέγει καλῶς, the word is here used by Euripides by way of averseness and refusal. (See also the text vindicated, ver. 16. 31. Examen Millii ibid.)

[5] Ver. 13. Καὶ παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλὰ ποιεῖτε, And many such-like things do ye.] i. e. Such things as make the word of God of none effect by your traditions: accordingly Dr. Pocock* cites from them this ancient canon, That vows take place even in things commanded by the law, as well as in things indifferent; and that any one is so bound by them, that he cannot without great sin do that which is commanded; so that if he makes a vow, which cannot be ratified without breaking a command, his vow must be ratified, and the commandment violated.

[6] Ver. 21. Ἔσωθεν γὰρ ἐκ τῆς καρδίας, &c. For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts.] The things here mentioned, as coming from the heart and defiling the man, are either the sins committed against the second table of the law, as they are reckoned up by St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 9. or the incentives and dispositions which incline us to them:

Against the sixth commandment, as murders and the evil eye;

Against the seventh, as fornication, adultery, lasciviousness;

Against the eighth, as theft, deceit;

Against the ninth, as false testimony, blasphemies, or evil-speaking;

Against the tenth, as covetousness.

The evil frames and dispositions of spirit, which incline us to these vices, are (1.) Ἀφροσύνη, as that imports in the Old Testament, not only an incogitancy and carelessness as to good things, but also a want of reverence to or awe of the Divine Majesty: and (2.) Πονηρία, a wicked disposition, inclining us to hurt or to do evil to another. (3.) Ὑπερηφανία, That pride which makes us to contemn and overlook our brother as unworthy our regard, and highly to resent the least affront or seeming injury: and, (4.) Διαλογισμοὶ κακοὶ, evil thoughts, or reasonings.

[7] Ver. 24. Οὐδένα ἤθελε γνῶναι, And would have no man know it.] Lest he should seem industriously to resort to and converse with heathens, neglecting the Jews. So Grotius.

[8] Ver. 32. Κωφὸν μογιλάλον, One deaf and tongue-tied.] That he was dumb as well as deaf, is argued, not only from the words of the Jews, who saw this miracle, He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, ver. 27. but also from Matt. ix. 33. Luke xi. 14. if they speak of the same person: for, say they, when the devil was gone out, ἐλάλησεν ὁ κωφὸς, the deaf man spake; which shews that before he could not move his tongue to make an articulate sound; and in this sense is the word μογιλάλος used, Exod. iv. 10. Isa. xxxv. 6.

[9] Ver. 33. Ἔβαλε τοὺς δακτύλους αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰ ὦτα αὐτοῦ, He put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue.] Christ often uses visible signs, to represent that Divine invisible virtue which he had in him, and would exert: thus, because deaf persons seem to have their ears closed, he puts his fingers into this man's ears, to intimate, that by his power he would open them; and, because the tongue of the deaf seems to be tied, or through drought to cleave to the palate, Christ touches his tongue, and moistens it with spittle, to intimate that he would loose and give free motion to his tongue. The Jews here also desire Christ to lay his hands upon him, because the ancient prophets laid their hands on those they healed. (2 Kings v. 11.)

* Miscel. p. 415.

CHAP. VIII.

1. IN those days (of his abode by the sea of Galilee, vii. 31.) the multitude (that heard him) being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples to him, and saith to them,

2. I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have (had) nothing to eat:

3. [1] And if I (should) send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4. And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread, (whilst we are) here in the wilderness?

5. And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6. And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground; and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks (to God), and brake (them), and gave to his disciples to set before them (i. e. the people); and they did set them before the people.

7. And they had a few small fishes: and he blessed (God over them), and commanded (his disciples) to set them also before them.

8. So they did eat, and were filled; and they (of Christ's retinue) took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9. And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and (having thus filled them) he sent them away.

10. And straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha, (which were within the coasts of Magdala, Matt. xv. 39.)

11. And the pharisees came forth, and began to question (or dispute) with him (about his office), seeking of him (for confirmation of his pretensions to be the Messiah) a sign from heaven, tempting him, (as doubting whether he could give them that sign of the Messiah promised, Dan. vii. 14.)

12. And he sighed deeply in his spirit (by reason of their infidelity), and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, [2] (εἰ δοθήσεται, May I not be true, if a sign be given, or) there shall no sign be given to this generation, (save that of the prophet Jonas, Matt. xvi. 4.)

13. [3] And he left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side (of the sea of Galilee).

14. Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread (with them), neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15. And he charged them, saying, Take heed (to yourselves, and) [4] beware of the leaven of the pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod: (i. e. of the doctrines of the pharisees, making the commandments of God of none effect by their traditions, and of the doctrine of Herod concurring in sentiments with the sadducees, Matt. xvi. 6.)

16. And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is (i. e. this caution is, a reprehension of our negligence,) because we have (taken) no bread (with us).

17. And when Jesus knew it (Gr. and Jesus knowing that they reasoned thus), he saith to them, Why reason ye (thus, as if ye were like to famish) because ye have no bread (and are bid to beware of the leaven of the pharisees)? perceive ye not yet, neither (do ye) understand (by the two late instances before your eyes, that I am able to provide bread for you)? have [5] you your hearts yet hardened (or unconvinced by these miracles)?

18. Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember (what I have done? I ask you, then,)

19. When I brake the five loaves among five thousand (persons), how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say to him, Twelve.

20. And when the seven (loaves were broken) among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven,

21. And he said to them, How is it (then) that ye do not understand (that I could not, upon that account, speak of bread)?

22. And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man to him, and besought him to touch him.

23. And he took the blind man by the hand, and [6] led him out of the town; and when he had spit on (Gr. into) his eyes, and put his hands upon him (i. e. his eyes), he asked him if he saw aught.

24. And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees, walking (i. e. I see men walking, but I see them so imperfectly, that they seem to me rather like trees than men).

25. After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and (then) he was restored (to perfect sight), and saw every man clearly.

26. And he sent him away to his house, saying, [7] Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any (who dwell) in the town.

27. And Jesus went out, and his disciples, (for Bethsaida, ver. 22.) into the towns of Cæsarea Philippi; and by the way he asked his disciples, saying to them, Whom do men say that I am?

28. And they answered, (Some say that thou art) John the Baptist; but some say, (Thou art) Elias; and others, (Thou art) one of the prophets.

29. And he saith to them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ.

30. And he charged them that they should tell no man (this) of him.

31. And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days [8] rise again.

32. And he spake that saying openly (i. e. in the hearing of the people). And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him (for it, saying, Far be it from thee; this shall not be to thee, Matt. xvi. 22.)

33. But when he had turned about and looked upon his disciples, he rebuked Peter, saying, [9] Get thee behind me, Satan (as in this being to me a tempter, and to men an adversary); for (in this) thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men (respecting not the will of God, that I should die for the salvation of men; but the vain traditions of men, that the Messiah, the Son of David, shall not die).

34. And when he had called the people to him with his disciples also, he said to them, Whosoever will come after me, let him (not expect to receive temporal advantages from me, as King of the Jews; but let him be ready to) deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

35. [10] For whosoever will (to) save his life (refuse thus to follow me, he) shall lose it; but whosoever (by thus taking up his cross) shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it (most likely here, most certainly hereafter; and this surely will be his wisdom).

36. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul (or life)?

37. Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (i. e. what shall it profit a man to have saved his temporal life by being thus ashamed to own me, since this will cause me to be ashamed of him when all men shall be doomed to eternal life or death?)

38. [11] Whosoever therefore (for whosoever) shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 3. ΚΑΙ᾽ ἐὰν ἀπολύσω αὐτοὺς νήστεις, &c. And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way.] Had there not been such danger, saith Theophylact, Christ had not wrought this miracle, that they might not follow him for loaves; and having done this, he straightway leaves them, (ver. 10.) that he might avoid their attempts to make him a king. (John vi. 15.)

[5] Ver. 12. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, εἰ δοθήσεται τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ σημεῖον, Verily I say unto you, If there shall be a sign given to this generation.] i. e. Let me not live, or let me not be deemed a true prophet. That this is a form of swearing frequent in the Old Testament shall be shewed, note on Heb. iii. 11. And we find it more fully, Ezek. xiv. 16. in these words, ζῶ ἐγὼ εἰ υἱοὶ ἢ θυγατέρες σωθήσονται, As I live, they shall neither deliver sons nor daughters; whence it must follow that our Lord cannot be reasonably supposed to forbid all swearing, Matt. v. 34. (See the note there.)

[3] Ver. 13. Καὶ ἀφεὶς αὐτοὺς, And he left them, and went into the ship again.] He left them as incorrigible, saith Theophylact: for where there is hope of doing good, there we are to remain; but when ἀδιάρθωτον τὸ κακὸν, the evil is incorrigible, to depart.

[4] Ver. 15. Βλέπετε ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν φαρισαίων καὶ τῆς ζύμης Ἡρώδου, Beware of the leaven of the pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.] It is certain that Josephus never represents the Herodians as a sect of the Jews; whence it is certain that the leaven of the Herodians here, is only the leaven of the sadducees, as may be gathered from St. Matthew, who gives us this caution in these words, (xvi. 16.) Beware of the leaven of the pharisees and of the sadducees. It may also be noted, that as the pharisees were inclined to the sect of the Galileans, and thought they ought not to be tributary to the Romans; (Matt. xxii. 16.) so the chief of the sadducees concurred with Herod in consenting to and approving that tribute as just and equal, and assisting him in the collecting of it, whence they might be styled also Herodians, or men of that sect.

[5] Ver. 17. Ἔτι πεπωρωμένην ἔχετε τὴν καρδίαν, Perceive ye not yet, neither understand ye, have ye your hearts yet hardened?] So Mark vi. 52. They considered not the miracle of the loaves, ἦν γὰρ καρδία αὐτῶν πεπωρωμένη, for their heart was hardened; and, xvi. 14. he upbraids in them their unbelief, καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, and hardness of heart. Now, hence it follows, (1.) that the heart may be hardened without any Divine influx concurring to that effect, unless it can be thought that God himself by a peculiar influx hardened the hearts of Christ's apostles.

(2.) That the heart is then said to be hardened, when after full and sufficient evidence of what we ought to do, or to believe, we neglect to do, or to believe it. Now this may happen either through incogitance, or want of the consideration of that evidence, as in the case of the apostles here, and vi. 52. in both which places the hardness of their heart is ascribed to this, that they considered not the miracle of the loaves; or through the weakness of their faith, as when they are upbraided with it, xvi. 14. because they believed not them who had seen him risen; in both which cases it only seems to have been a sin of infirmity: or this proceeds from that perverseness of the will, or from those evil dispositions and affections of the soul, which renders us averse from the performance of what is required, or the belief of what is revealed; as when it is said of the Jews, that their hearts were hardened, (John xii. 39, 40.) and then it is a wilful sin.

[6] Ver. 23. Ἐξήγαγεν αὐτὸν ἔξω τῆς κώμης, He led him out of the town.] Declaring those of Bethsaida, who had seen so many miracles in vain, unworthy to behold this miracle; (see Matt. xi. 21.) whence he permits him not to tell it in the town, (ver. 26.)

[7] Ver. 26. Μηδὲ εἰς κώμην εἰσέλθῃς, He sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, neither tell it to any one in the town.] The reading of the Vulgar, si in vicum introieris, and of some Greek MSS. seems only to have had its rise from a conceit, that this man's house was in the city, which the words of Christ seem to contradict; viz. and many that wanted cures came to him from other places, whilst he abode there: the Syriac, Arabic, the Alexandrian copy, and Theophylact, read as we do.

[8] Ver. 31. Καὶ μετὰ τρεῖς ἡμέρας ἀναστῆναι, And after three days to rise again.] Here note, first, That it is ten times expressly said, that our Lord rose, or was to rise again the third day; viz. Matt. xvi. 21. xvii. 23. xx. 19. Mark ix. 31. x. 34. Luke ix. 22. xviii. 23, 24. vii. 48. Acts x. 40. And so the expression which is most used, both in our Lord's predictions before his death, and in his and his apostles' language after his resurrection, being this, either that he did or should rise again the third day, and the history of our Lord's resurrection agreeing fully with it, these other forms of speech, which are but once or twice found in Scripture, must be interpreted, so as to accord with the expression so frequent in the Holy Scripture.

Secondly, Observe, that according to the language both of the Hebrew and the Greek, that is said to be done after so many days, months, or years, which is done in the last of those days, months, or years. So Deut. xiv. 18. At the end of three years (LXX. μετὰ τρία ἔτη, after three years), thou shalt bring in all the tithing of thy increase: and yet, Deut. xxvi. 12. The third year is the year of tithing. So Deut. xxxi. 10. μετὰ ἑπτὰ ἔτη, after seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, thou shalt read the law; and Deut. xv. 1. and yet it is plain, that the year of release began with the seventh year, for so we read, xv. 12. Thy brother shall serve thee six years, and in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free. Thus Rehoboam said unto the people, Come again after three days, 2 Chron. x. 5. and yet, ver. 12. The people came again the third day, as the king bade them, saying, Come again the third day. So Luke ii. 46. After three days they found Christ in the temple, that is, on the third day; for they spent one day in their journey, on the second they returned to Jerusalem, and the next day they found Jesus in the temple.

Note, thirdly, That it is evident, that both the Jews and the evangelists understood this expression, After three days, to signify no more than on the third day. The Jews did so; for having told Pilate that Christ had said, After three days I will rise again, they desire only that a watch might be kept ἕως τῆς τρίτης ἡμέρας, till the third day. And this is as plain of the evangelists; for what St. Mark here rendereth thus, He taught, that after three days he should rise again; St. Matthew and St. Luke record thus, He taught, that he should rise again the third day. And even St. Mark, ix. 31. x. 34. brings in our Lord teaching, that he should be raised the third day.

[9] Ver. 33. Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ, Get thee behind me, Satan.] He calls Peter, Satan, saith Theophylact, as savouring of the things of Satan, it being only Satan who would not that our Lord should suffer for the salvation of mankind.

[10] Ver. 35. Ὃς γὰρ ἂν θέλῃ, Whosoever will come after me.] Here the note of Athanasius* and Theophylact† is this, Θεοσεβείας μὲν ἴδιον μὴ ἀναγκάζειν ἀλλὰ πείθειν, It is the property of religion not to compel, but to persuade; for our Lord himself not offering violence to any, but giving place to human choice, said to all, If any man will come after me, οὐδένα γὰρ βιάζομα, for I compel none.

[11] Ver. 38. Ὃς γὰρ ἐπαισχυνθῇ, For whosoever shall be ashamed of me.] i. e. To own and to confess me and my doctrine; (Matt. x. 32, 33.) for, saith Theophylact, we being compounded of an outward and an inward man, both must be sanctified, the inward man by faith, the outward by confession of it. (Rom. x. 18.)

CHAP. IX.

1. AND he said unto them, Verily I say to you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power, (to take away their lives, who would destroy mine to preserve their own, John xi. 50.)

2. And after [1] six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up [2] into a high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them.

3. And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them: (i. e. like the inhabitants of heaven, clothed with white raiment, Rev. iv. 4.)

4. And there appeared to them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus (and by their talk they knew them to be Moses and Elias).

5. And Peter answered (i. e. spake with relation to what he had seen, see note on Luke xiv. 3.) and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and (καὶ, therefore) let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid (i. e. and this he said, being the most forward of them to speak, though, being struck with the same dread that seized on the other two, he knew not whether he said well or ill, or what was indeed advisable or not).

7. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

8. And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save only Jesus with themselves.

9. And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man was risen from the dead.

10. And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another [3] what the rising (of the Messiah) from the dead should mean: (i. e. how it could be reconciled with their tradition, that the Messiah the son of David should not die, John xii. 34.)

11. And they asked him, saying, (If thou hast done already what was required of the Messiah, and so art about to die), [4] why say the scribes that Elias must first come (to anoint the Messiah, and make him known to the people)?

12. And he answered and told them, [5] Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things (i. e. doth all things requisite to prepare the Jews for the reception of the Messiah, calling them to repentance, that they might be fitted to believe in him, pointing him out to the people, and baptizing him with that baptism in which he was anointed with the Holy Ghost); and (in answer to their first doubt he told them) [6] how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought.

13. But (as to your inquiry about the coming of Elias) I say to you, [7] That (the) Elias (who was to do these things) is indeed come, and they have done to him whatsoever they listed, (rejecting his baptism, Luke vii. 30. and his testimony, Mark xi. 31.) as it is written of him (that he should come).

14. And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them (whether the power of their Master did extend to the casting out of devils).

15. And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed (seeing some remainders of the splendour at his transfiguration in his visage), and running to him, (they) saluted him.

16. And he asked the scribes, (About) what question ye with them?

17. And one of the multitude answered, and said, Master, I have (now) brought to thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit (i. e. a spirit which takes away his speech);

18. And wheresoever he taketh him, [8] he teareth him (or throws him down): and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth (or fainteth) away: and I spake to thy disciples, that they should cast him out; and they could not; (this raised the dispute betwixt them and the scribes.

19. And) he answered him, and saith (to the scribes), O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you (r incredulity)? bring him (that is possessed) to me.

20. And they brought him to him: and when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare (or shook) him; and he fell to the ground, and wallowed, foaming.

21. And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child.

22. And ofttimes he hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing (to deliver him from this evil spirit), have compassion on us, and help us, (me and him.

23. And) Jesus said to him, [9] If thou canst believe (that I am able to do this), all things are possible to him that (thus) believeth.

24. And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief (or what is wanting to my faith).

25. When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying to him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26. And the spirit cried, and rent him sore (or shook him much), and (then) came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27. But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28. And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29. And he said to them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by (that faith which is to be procured by) prayer and fasting.

30. And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any should know it (that the concourse of the multitude might not retard his journey to Jerusalem, where he was to suffer).

31. For he taught his disciples, and said to them, The Son of man is (to be) delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise (again) the third day.

32. But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him (what the import of it was).

33. And he came to Capernaum: and being in the house he asked them, (About) what was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34. But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.

35. And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith to them, If any man desire to be first (in my kingdom), the same shall be last of all, and servant of all (the highest office in my kingdom tending not so much to dignify and advantage any man in this world, as to render him the more a servant and minister to all).

36. And (having said this) he took a child, and set him in the midst of them (as a fit emblem of that humility and freedom from that worldly-mindedness he required in them): and when he had taken him in his arms, he said to them,

37. Whosoever shall receive one of such children (i. e. any of my servants so free from pride and love of the world as they are) in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me (only), but (also) him that sent me.

38. And John answered him (to those words spoken of receiving him), saying, Master, [10] we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and (but) he followed not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.

39. But Jesus said, Forbid him not, for there is no man who shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly (i. e. easily be induced to) speak evil of me.

40. For he that is not against us (in beating down the kingdom of Satan) is on our part (and so is to be owned as one that doth me service, and so as one whom God will reward).

41. [11] For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink (or do you the least service) in my name, because you belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, He shall not lose his reward.

42. And (on the other side) whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me (and so discourage them from continuing in my doctrine), it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

43. And (therefore) if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into [12] hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

44. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched (i. e. where the body is consumed, and the soul tormented for ever).

45. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, i. e. into the fire that never shall be quenched:

46. Where their worm dieth not, and (where) the fire is not quenched.

47. And if thine eye (i. e. or any thing that seems most dear and useful to thee) offend thee (i. e. hinder thy entrance into life), pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire:

48. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

49. [13] For every one (that thus offends) shall be salted with fire (so as to endure for ever in a state of torment), and every sacrifice (saith the Scripture, even the whole burnt-offering) shall be salted with salt (the symbol of incorruption).

50. Salt is good (to make things savoury, and to preserve them from corruption): but if the salt have lost its saltness, wherewith will ye season it? (If by keeping these offending members, or corrupt affections, you corrupt yourselves, and become unsavoury, and like a sacrifice without salt, you can never be acceptable to God.) Have (therefore) salt in yourselves, and have peace (the bond of unity) one with another.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 2. ΜΕΘ' ἡμέρας ἓξ, After six days.] So also Matt. xvii. 1. ὡσεὶ ἡμέραι ὀκτώ, about eight days after, Luke ix. 28. for Matthew and Mark computing only the days betwixt this discourse of Christ, and the day he went up into the mount, style them six only; but St. Luke, including both the days of his discourse and his ascent, saith they were eight. And this is evident from the word ὡσεὶ, which, when a sum is mentioned, is always added to signify it is not exact, but wanteth something to make it complete; thus Christ was ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, i. e. beginning to be thirty, Luke iii. 23. It was ὡσεὶ ὥρα ἕκτη, inclining to the sixth hour, Luke xxiii. 44. (So Matt. xiv. 21. Luke i. 56. xxii. 59. John iv. 6. xix. 14. Acts ii. 41. iv. 4. v. 36. x. 3.)

[2] Into a high mountain.] That this was Mount Tabor, antiquity hath constantly taught and believed; yet Dr. Lightfoot questions the truth of this tradition upon two accounts; (1.) That Christ, in the story going before, was on the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, (Matt. xvi. 12. Mark viii. 27. Luke xix. 18.) and can we think, says he, that he travelled thence to Tabor through almost the whole length of Galilee? Ans. This he might do with ease in the space of six days; and that he did so, is made very probable from the very words of the same chapter, which represent him and his disciples as ἀναστρέφοντες, returning thence, Matt. xvii. 22. and going through Galilee, Mark ix. 29. As for what he adds, that the evangelists mention no change of place, will be answered by his note on x. 1. for, saith he, however it seems to be intimated by our evangelist, and by St. Matthew, that when he had finished these words forthwith he entered upon his journey, yet in truth he went before to Jerusalem, through the midst of Samaria, to the feast of tabernacles, (Luke ix. 51.) and again from Galilee, after he had returned thither through the cities and towns to Jerusalem, (Luke xiii. 22.) to the feast of dedication, (John x. 22.) and again beyond Jordan indeed, (John x. 40.) but first taking his way into Galilee, and thence beyond Jordan; so that hence we see, the silence of the text is no sure evidence that Christ made no such journey. The other things he offers seem too little to deserve consideration.

[3] Ver. 10. Συζητοῦντες, τί ἐστι τὸ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῆναι. And they kept that saying to themselves, questioning among themselves what the rising from the dead should mean.] They questioned not the general resurrection; for that all the pharisees believed, Acts xxiv. 15. that Martha owned, John xi. 24. nor could they be ignorant of the meaning of the rising of a particular person from the dead, for they had instances of it in the Old Testament; had seen an example of it at the gates of the city Nain with their eyes; but being taught out of the law, that Christ was to abide for ever, (John xii. 24.) and that the Son of David should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and, of his kingdom there should be no end, (Luke i. 33.) they knew not how to reconcile this with the death of Christ, supposed in that saying, The Son of man shall rise from the dead. Thus again, when Christ had told them, the Son of man shall be killed, and after that shall rise from the dead, ver. 31. they understood not that saying, ver. 32. and yet doubtless they knew what it was to be killed, and that our Saviour spake of his own death; whence these words made them very sorry, Matt. xvii. 23. and yet St. Luke saith, ix. 45. that they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not; and, xviii. 34. they understood none of these things, and knew not what was said; and here they understood not the saying, i. e. they knew not how to reconcile this death of the Son of David and their king Messiah, with the predictions of their prophets, and their own conceptions touching his temporal kingdom. Hence, when Christ was dead, their hopes died with him, i. e. their trust that he had been the redeemer of Israel, (Luke xxiv. 21.) and revived again at his resurrection, they presently inquiring, Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?

[4] Ver. 11. And they asked him, saying, ὅτι λέγουσιν οἱ γραμματεῖς, ὅτι Ἠλίαν δεῖ ἐλθεῖν πρῶτον; Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?] That ὅτι must signify why is evident; because the same question in St. Matthew, xvii. 10. runs thus, τί οὖν; why therefore say the scribes; ὅτι here therefore must be put for διότι; so ver. 28. ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἠδυνήθημεν; why could not we cast him out? So Homer Odyss. xix. they asked him οὐλὴν, ὅ, τττι πάθοι; why he had that scar? and Aristophanes, Plut. i. 19. ὅτι τῷδ' ἀκολουθοῦμέν ποτε; why do we follow him? This may suffice for the grammatical import of the words; but it is more difficult to assign the reason of this question. My conjecture is, that it relates to that title of the Messiah, Dan. vii. 13. the Son of man, here used, and to the voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son; as if they should have said, If thou art indeed the king Messiah, and the Son of God, and hast so far accomplished thy office, as to talk of a death which thou must suffer at Jerusalem, why is not Elias come to anoint thee, and to preach of thee? For the tradition of the scribes was, (1.) That before the coming of the Son of David, Elias was to come to preach of him: Lightfoot in Matt. xvii. 10. (2.) That Elias was to anoint the Messiah to his office, and that *before that unction the Messiah could do nothing, he being to manifest him to the world, saith Trypho. To this inquiry our Saviour first answers, in the following verse; and then to their scruple about his passion.

[5] Ver. 12. And he answered and told them, Ἠλίας μὲν ἐλθὼν πρῶτον, ἀποκαθιστᾷ πάντα, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things.] How Elias did this, see note on Matt. xi. 14. And note, that the Jews themselves did not conceive that Elias should do this work so effectually as to turn all the Jews to God, but only so as to deliver them from the terrible day of the Lord, who would turn to him. So David Kimchi,* When God shall bring Elias to life in the body, he shall send him to Israel before the day of judgment, which is the great and terrible day of the Lord; and he shall admonish both the fathers and the children together to turn to God, and they that turn shall be delivered from the day of judgment.

[6] Καὶ πῶς γέγραπται, And how it is written.] i. e. And in answer to their other scruple, how the Son of man could die; he told them also from the Scriptures, how it was foretold that he should suffer many things.

[7] Ver. 13. But I say unto you, καὶ Ἠλίας ἐλήλυθε, καὶ ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ ὅσα ἠθέλησαν, καθὼς γέγραπται ἐπ' αὐτὸν, Elias is indeed come (and they have done to him whatsoever they listed) as it is written of him.] Since we find nothing in the Old Testament which foretells of any thing the Jews should do, either to Elias in person revived, or to John the Baptist, it seems requisite to place these words (and they have done to him as they would) in a parenthesis, and to admit here the figure σύγχυσις, or such a transposition of the words as is usual in other places both of the Old and New Testament: so Gen. xiii. 10. And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where (before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah), even as the garden of the Lord: Exod. xii. 15. 20. 22. 2 Sam. iii. 27. Josh. xxiv. 26. Whosoever eateth leavened bread (that soul shall be cut off from Israel) from the first day until the seventh day: Mark xii. 12. And they sought to lay hold on him (for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them), but they feared the people, and they left him: Rom. i. 13. I purposed to come to you (but was let hitherto), that I might have some fruit among you: (see Cant. i. 5. Mark xvi. 3, 4. Acts viii. 7.) so that the sense of these words seems to be this,—Elias is come, as it is written of him in Malachi, and they, the scribes and pharisees, have done to him whatsoever they listed, rejecting his baptism, (Luke vii. 30.) and refusing to believe his doctrine, (Matt. xxi. 25.) or to own him as a prophet sent from God, saying, that he had a devil; (ver. 26.) and it is probable, that both they and the sadducees did this because he had styled them a generation of vipers. (Matt. iii. 7.) And though we do not read that they gave occasion either to his imprisonment, or to his death, yet may we reasonably conceive, that they who thus thought and spake of him were well pleased at it; whence Christ might say, they did unto him what they listed; it being not for fear of them, but only of the multitude, who accounted him as a prophet, that Herod for a season was restrained from killing him. (Matt. xiv. 3.)

again.] Here note, (1.) that the word ῥήσσει αὐτὸν, and ἔῤῥηξεν αὐτὸν, Luke ix. 42. being spoken of an epileptic person, are not well rendered, he teareth him, but rather signifies, as Hesychius and Phavorinus say, τύπτει αὐτὸν, he beateth him, or makes him fall to the ground, beating himself against the earth; or, as Eustathius and Phavorinus say, the word in Homer signifies σφοδερότερον τὴν γῆν πόσι παίειν, i. e. the evil spirit working with, or taking advantage of, his disease, makes him beat himself against the earth, ἐδαφίζει καὶ προσκρούει τῇ γῇ. He throws him upon the ground, saith Theophylact. So Wisd. iv. 19. the author speaking of the wicked saith, ὅτι ῥήξει αὐτοὺς πρηνεῖς, God will cast them down headlong, and shake them out of their foundations. (2.) The word ξηραίνεται signifies, not only to be dried up, and so pine away, but also to be under a consternation, and to faint; Isa. xxxvii. 27. they were of small power, they were dismayed, καὶ ἐξηράνθησαν· Zech. x. 2. ἐξηράνθησαν ὡς πρόβατα, as the flock they were troubled; whence it is rendered by Theophylact, λειποψυμεῖ, he is in a deliquium. The word σπαράττειν also signifies not only to tear and discerp, but also to move and shake: so Phavorinus, σπαρασσόμεθα, ταραττόμεθα· so Psal. xviii. 8. the foundations of the mountains, ἐταράχθησαν καὶ ἐσαλεύθησαν, were troubled, and shook; that is, 2 Sam. xxii. 8. καὶ ἐσπαράχθησαν; Jer. iv. 19. my heart maketh a noise, or moveth in me; LXX. σπαράσσεται ἡ καρδία μου· so here, ver. 20. ἐσπάραξεν, the spirit shook him.

[9] Ver. 23. Τὸ εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι, If thou canst believe this.] viz. That I can help thee; or, if thou canst believe this thing. So Rom. xiii. 9. τὸ γὰρ, For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery; Eph. iv. 9. τὸ δὲ ἀνέβη, but that he ascended; Luke xxii. 24. there was a contention, τὸ, viz. this, who should be greatest? So Justin Martyr, τὸ πῶς περὶ Θεοῦ λέγειν, It is an argument of incredulity to say of God, how; and τὸ μηδὲν ἄγαν, this saying, "ne quid nimis," much delights me.

This the grammarians call τὸ ὁρικὸν, or ὁριστικὸν, i. e. articulus definitivus, as defining or particularizing the thing, which before was spoken of more generally; and then it signifies nimirum, videlicet, to wit, that is to say; and thus we find it four times used in one chapter, Luke xxii. 4. Judas consulted with the high-priest, τὸ πῶς αὐτὸν παραδῷ, to wit, how he might betray him; ver. 23. And they began to question among themselves, τὸ, τίς ἄρα εἴη ἐξ αὐτῶν, to wit, who of them it should be that would betray him; and, ver. 24. And there was also a contention among them, τὸ, τίς αὐτῶν δοκεῖ εἶναι μείζων, to wit, which of them should be the greatest; which ix. 46. is varied thus, τὸ, τίς ἂν εἴη μείζων αὐτῶν: and ver. 37. That which is written of me must be fulfilled; τὸ, καὶ μετ' ἀνόμων ἐλογίσθη, to wit, that scripture which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. And accordingly the words may be here rendered, And Jesus said unto him, to wit, If thou canst believe, &c.

[10] Ver. 38. Εἴδομέν τινα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐκβάλλοντα δαιμόνια, &c. We saw a man casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him because he follows not us.] That this man did truly cast out devils, Christ's answer supposes, and his disciples saw with their eyes: it is also certain that he did this in the name of Christ; but that he did it by invocation of the name of Jesus of Nazareth, is not so certain: for he might be a disciple of John, and so do this in the name of Christ shortly to come; for if he steadfastly believed that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, it is hard to give a reason why he did not follow him, or join himself to Christ's disciples; however, it was no small confirmation of the truth of Christianity, that his name was thus powerful even among those that did not follow him, and therefore could do nothing by compact with him: This man, saith Christ, do not forbid; for he that pursues the same end with us, the beating down of Satan's kingdom, cannot be against us, but rather for us; and he that finds so sensibly the power of my name, cannot speak evil of me. (See Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 41. Ὃς γὰρ ἂν ποτίσῃ ὑμᾶς ποτήριον ὕδατος, &c. For whosoever shall give you a cup of cold water in my name, because you belong to Christ, verily I say to you, He shall not lose his reward.] The particle γὰρ shews the connexion of these words with the preceding, which seemeth to be thus; Even the least service done to me, by owning any one for my name's sake, shall be rewarded, and much more the labour which this man shews in divulging the honour of my name, and assisting me in beating down the kingdom of Satan.

[12] Ver. 43, 44. Ἀπελθεῖν εἰς τὴν γέενναν, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ ἄσβεστον· ὅπου ὁ σκώληξ αὐτῶν οὐ τελευτᾷ, καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται, Than having two hands to be cast into hell, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] These words seem plainly taken from Isa. lxvi. 24. where they exactly may be found; and it seems reasonable to interpret them according to the received opinion of the Jews: since otherwise our Lord, by using this expression frequently in speaking to them, who would be sure to understand it in the usual sense, without saying any thing to shew he did not understand it as they did, must have strengthened them in their error. Now it is certain,

First, That gehenna was by them still looked on and represented as the place in which the wicked were to be tormented by fire: so the Jerusalem Targum* represents gehenna, which is prepared for the wicked in the world to come, as a furnace sparkling and flaming with fire, into which the wicked fall. And the Targum upon Ecclesiastes speaks of the fire of hell, Eccles. ix. 15. of the sparks of the fire of hell, x. 11. and of the wicked who shall go to be burned in the fire of hell, viii. 10. Accordingly our Lord speaks here, ver. 47. and Matt. v. 22. of the wicked being cast into the fire of hell, and of their being cast into a furnace of fire, Matt. xiii. 42.

Secondly, The ancient Jews held that the punishment of the wicked in hell should be perpetual, or without end; so Judith saith, that κλαύσονται ἐν αἰσθήσει ἕως αἰῶνος, they shall weep under the sense of their pains for ever, xvi. 17. Josephus† informs us, that the pharisees held the souls of the wicked were to be punished, ἀϊδίῳ τιμωρίᾳ, with perpetual punishment, and that there was appointed for them εἱργμὸς ἀΐδιος, a perpetual prison. Philo‡ saith, the punishment of the wicked person is ζῆν ἀποθανόντα ἀεὶ, to live for ever dying; and αἰωνίζειν ἐν ἀλγηδόσι καὶ ἀνίαις, καὶ συμφοραῖς ἀδιαστάτοις, to be for ever in pains and griefs, and calamities that never cease: accordingly our Lord continually saith of them, that they shall go away into everlasting punishment, and that their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched; and that God will destroy their soul and body in hell-fire, Matt. xviii. 8. xxv. 41. Luke iii. 17. Whence I collect,

First, That though it is not to be doubted that the worm not dying is to be taken tropically for the worm of conscience, yet shall the bodies of the wicked suffer in fire properly so called; this being suitable not only to the tradition of the Jewish and the Christian church, but to the constant phraseology of the Scriptures, declaring that the tree that brings not forth good fruit, the fruitless branch, the chaff, shall be cast into the fire, and burnt with unquenchable fire, Matt. iii. 10. 12. xiii. 50. John xv. 6. that the wicked shall go into everlasting fire; their souls and bodies shall be cast into hell-fire, Matt. x. 28. xxv. 45. that they shall be punished with flaming fire, 2 Thess. i. 8. Suffer the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. The heavens and earth being reserved to fire for the punishment of ungodly men, 2 Pet. iii. 10.

Secondly, That the punishment of wicked men shall be eternal. That this was the constant opinion of the Christian church, see note on Heb. vi. 2. and that this punishment is consistent with Divine justice and goodness, see appendix to 2 Thess. chap. i.

[13] Ver. 49. Πᾶς γὰρ πυρὶ ἁλισθήσεται· καὶ πᾶσα θυσία ἁλὶ ἁλισθήσεται, For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.] These words may be referred to the preceding, respecting the punishment of those wicked men, who will not cut off those offending eyes, feet, or hands, which render them obnoxious to future punishments; and then the import of them will be to this effect: Every wicked man shall be seasoned with fire itself, so as to become inconsumable, and shall endure for ever to be tormented; and therefore may be said to be salted with fire, in allusion to that property of salt, which is to preserve things from corruption. To strengthen this interpretation, consider,

First, The connexion of the words, where the worm dieth not, and where the fire is not quenched, πᾶς γὰρ αὐτῶν, for every one of (them) shall be salted with fire; where the illative particle γὰρ, for, shews, that these words are designed as a proof of the words preceding. Consider,

Secondly, From whence those words, their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched, are taken, viz. from Isa. lxvi. ult. where they run thus: They shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of those men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, nor shall their fire be quenched: which words plainly belong to the wicked, and to them alone; and so the proof of them in this verse must belong to them only. Note,

Thirdly, That the word πᾶς must refer therefore to the same persons; as if it had been said expressly, πᾶς γὰρ αὐτῶν, For every one (of them) whose fire is not quenched, shall be salted with, or in the fire, i. e. preserved from corruption in or by it; so xii. 44. πάντες γὰρ, for all, i. e. πάντες οἱ πλούσιοι οὗτοι, all those rich men cast in out of their superfluities; so Luke xvi. 16. The kingdom of heaven is preached, καὶ πᾶς, and every one (viz. who believes) presseth into it: and Luke xxi. 32. This generation shall not pass away, ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται, till all things be done, i. e. πάντα ταῦτα, all these things now mentioned, Matt. xxiv. 35. Mark xiii. 30. (See many other instances in Grotius.) Note,

Fourthly, That these words καὶ πᾶσα θυσία, &c. may be rendered thus: For every sacrifice shall be seasoned with salt, even the whole burnt-offerings (which answer here to the whole body), as well as others; and then they will be a proof of the former, from the precept concerning sacrifices, Lev. ii. 13. That the particle καὶ frequently signifies for, appears from many examples: so Exod. v. 23. καὶ ἀφ' οὗ, for from the time that I spake to Pharaoh; Josh. i. 5. καὶ ὥσπερ ἤμην, for as I was with Moses; see also xxii. 25. 1 Sam. ii. 15. καὶ οὐ μὴ λάβω, for I will not take sodden flesh; Psal. cviii. 12. Send us help from trouble, καὶ ματαία, for vain is the help of man; Isa. lxiv. 5. Thou wast angry, καὶ ἡμεῖς, for we have sinned; Micah vii. 8. καὶ ἀναστήσομαι, for I shall rise up again. Note, Fifthly, That it is the property of salt to preserve things from corruption; hence a covenant of salt is put for an everlasting or inviolable covenant: so Numb. xviii. 19. διαθήκη ἁλὸς αἰωνίου ἐστὶν ἔναντι Κυρίου, it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord; and 2 Chron. xiii. 5. God gave David and his sons kings over Israel for ever, by a covenant of salt. Whence the Jews say, salt was to season all their sacrifices, to signify that they preserved their souls from corruption, as the salt did the sacrifice. Philo, that salt is a symbol, διαμονῆς τῆς τῶν συμπάντων, of the perpetuity of all things, preserving that on which it is sprinkled: (de Victimis, p. 647. F.) and on those words, With every oblation you offer salt, δι' οὗ τὴν εἰσάπαν διαμονὴν αἰνίττεται, φυλακτήριον γὰρ οἱ ἅλες σωμάτων τετιμημένοι ψυχῆς δευτερείοις· By this (saith Philo*) he signifies the perpetual duration of them; salt being the preservation of bodies next to the soul itself; for as the soul is the cause that our bodies are not corrupted, so is salt, preserving them for a long time, καὶ τρόπον τινα ἀθανατίζοντες, and rendering them in a manner incorruptible: if then, by keeping these offensive members, or corrupt affections, you render your Christianity such as hath lost its savour, and like a sacrifice without salt, you can never be acceptable to God; retain therefore your Christian wisdom or piety, and preserve peace, the bond of unity, among yourselves.

Others interpret the words thus: Let it not seem a hard saying, that I require your abscission of those offensive members; for every sacrifice, that it may be grateful and acceptable to God, must be salted with fire; for the fire must prove every man's action, and it will not receive its reward till it hath passed through the fire of tribulation, (1 Cor. iii. 13, 14.) and he be purged from his dross by it as gold is, διὰ πυρὸς δοκιμαζόμενον, 1 Pet. i. 7. see iv. 12. It is then more desirable here to endure this trial by fire, and communion with Christ in his sufferings, that ye may rejoice at his appearance, than to fall into that fire, which will never be extinguished: it is therefore good to have this salt in yourselves, this Christian wisdom, which will preserve you from corruption, and that peace, which will preserve the Christian body from it. Like this is that expression of Josephus, concerning one of the seven children roasted in the fire; ὥσπερ ἐν πυρὶ μετασχηματιζόμενος εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν, he is transformed into incorruption as it were by fire. (Lib. de Macc. p. 1093. D.) And in this sense Irenæus saith, Tribulation is necessary for the children of God, "ut igniti sint ad convivium regis," that, being salted with fire, they may be fit for the banquet of the king. (Lib. v. cap. 28.)

CHAP. X.

1. AND he arose from thence (from Capernaum, ix. 33.) and cometh into the coasts of Judea by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort to him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again.

2. And the pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him (i. e. by that question, thinking he might be induced to speak something against the law of Moses).

3. And he answered and said to them, [1] What did Moses command you?

4. And they said, Moses suffered (us) to write a bill of divorcement, and (so) to put her away.

5. And Jesus answered and said to them, For the hardness of your heart (which would not suffer you to perceive and yield to the first institution of matrimony) he wrote you this precept (that if you would put away your wife, you should do it by giving her a bill of divorce).

6. But from the beginning [2] of the creation God (shewed he would have it otherwise; for he) made them male and female, (saying, Gen. xxii. 24.)

7. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

8. And they twain shall be one flesh (so as they are not one flesh with father or mother): so then they (after the matrimonial duty) are no more twain, but one flesh.

9. What therefore God hath (thus) joined together, let no man (under the gospel dispensation presume to) put asunder.

10. And (when he was) in the house, his disciples asked him again of the same matter.

11. And he saith to them (according to the primitive institution of matrimony), [3] Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her, (she being by that institution still his wife, and she having the sole right over his body, 1 Cor. vii. 4.)

12. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another (as hath of late been done among you), she committeth adultery (against him, as being still his wife, and not having power over her own body, but the husband, ibid.)

13. And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them.

14. But when Jesus saw (i. e. perceived) it, he was much displeased, and said to them, Suffer little children to come to me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom [4] of God. (And if of such as resemble them in disposition, why should they whom they are to resemble be unfit for that kingdom?)

15. Verily I say to you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child (i. e. with the same freedom from vain-glory, and the love of the world, which is in them), he shall not enter therein.

16. And he took them up in his arms, and put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

17. And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18. And Jesus said to him, Why callest thou me good? (seeing) there is none good but one, that is, God. (Dost thou own me as one commissionated by him to teach the way of life? I shall then do it according to his will, by saying,)

19. Thou knowest the commandments, (viz.) Do not commit adultery; Do not kill; Do not steal; Do not bear false witness; [5] Defraud not; Honour thy father and (thy) mother; (do this and thou shall live.)

20. And he answered and said to him, Master, all these things have I observed from my youth.

21. Then Jesus beholding him [6] loved him, and said to him, One thing thou (yet) lackest (to render thee my disciple): go thy way, (and at my command) sell whatsoever thou hast, and give (it) to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and (then) come, and take up the cross, and follow me.

22. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23. And Jesus looked round about, and saith to his disciples, [7] How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

24. And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith to them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25. It is easier for a camel (or cable) to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man (thus trusting in riches, as in things which make him happy) to enter into the kingdom of God.

26. And they (who heard this) were astonished above measure (at it), saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?

27. And Jesus looking upon them, saith, With man it is impossible (i. e. human persuasion cannot work men off from this love of the world), but (this is) not (impossible) with (to) God: for with God all things are possible.

28. Then Peter began to say to him, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29. And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say to you, There is no man who hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's,

30. But he shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands (i. e. shall find men more affectionate to him than these relations, and receive greater blessings than he parts with here), with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

31. [8] But many that are first shall be last; and the last (shall be) first. (See the note here.)

32. And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and [9] they were amazed (that Christ would thus go into the mouth of the Sanhedrin, who had resolved to kill him); and as they followed, they were afraid (of what might befal them, being his disciples). And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen to him,

33. Saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered up to the chief priests, and to the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the gentiles:

34. And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him: and the third day he shall rise again.

35. [10] And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come to him (by their mother), saying, Master, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36. And he said to them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37. They said to him, Grant to us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy glory.

38. But Jesus said to them, Ye know not what (it is) you ask (the highest place in my glory being the reward of the highest sufferings): can ye (then) drink of the cup that I (am to) drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am (to be) baptized with? (i. e. can ye suffer as I am to do?)

39. And they said to him, We can. And Jesus said to them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I am to drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized (i. e. shall suffer for my sake):

40. But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand [11] is not mine to give (to any others); but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John (for desiring precedency above them in Christ's kingdom).

42. But Jesus called them to him, and saith to them, Ye know that they which are [12] accounted to rule over the gentiles, exercise lordship over them (commanding them as their servants); and their great ones exercise authority upon them (at their pleasure).

43. But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

44. And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall (by that office) be (-come the) servant of all.

45. For even the Son of man came not to be ministered to, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many (and so must it be with his disciples).

46. And they came to Jericho; and as [13] he went out of Jericho with his disciples, and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, sat by the way-side begging (and another with him).

47. And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth (that came that way), he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me; (and so said the other also, Matt. xx. 30.)

48. And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49. And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they called the blind man, saying to him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50. And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

51. And Jesus answered and said to him, What wilt thou that I should do to thee? The blind man said to him, Lord, (I ask) that I may receive my sight.

52. And Jesus said to him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 3. Τί ὑμῖν ἐνετείλατο Μωσῆς; What did Moses command you?] There seems to be a difference here betwixt St. Matthew and St. Mark, not much taken notice of by interpreters; St. Mark introducing Christ asking them what Moses commanded in this case; St. Matthew introducing them asking Christ, Why then did Moses command us to write a bill of divorce? &c. But this seeming difference may be removed, by saying, They first asked him why did Moses command? And then our Saviour asked them, What were the words of Moses in this case? And when they had repeated them, he tells them the reason why Moses gave them this permission.

[2] Ver. 6. Ἀπὸ δὲ ἀρχῆς κτίσεως, From the beginning of the creation.] The word κτίσεως is found in the Alexandrian copy and in Theophylact, and is interpreted by the Vulgar and the Arabic, and extant in most copies, and therefore is not to be suspected, because not found in Beza's copy, or in the Syriac, or in the parallel place, Matt. xix. 4. for ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, being in sense the same, St. Matthew might say no more, but St. Mark could not well add more if Christ had said no more.

[3] Ver. 11. Ὃς ἐὰν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, καὶ γαμήσῃ ἄλλην, μοιχᾶται ἐπ' αὐτήν, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.] Though this discourse of Christ be originally about divorce, yet it seems plainly to evince that polygamy must be unlawful, especially under the Christian economy: for, (1.) from Christ's saying, He that putteth away his wife, and marries another, committeth adultery against her; it clearly follows, that he who, having not put her away, marries another, must be guilty of the same crime, seeing he must have at least the same power to marry another, when the first is put away, as when she is not. (2.) He who commits adultery against his wife by marrying another, could have no power to do so whilst she lived, since no man can be supposed to have power to commit adultery. And (3.) he who by marrying another commits adultery with her, must marry her whom he had no power to marry. (4.) Since to commit adultery is to violate the bed of another person, he that commits adultery against his wife must violate her bed, which no husband can do, only by doing that which a husband lawfully might do. Since then a right to polygamy is a right to marry more wives than one, he that hath this right cannot violate the bed of his first wife, by assuming another to it. It therefore must be acknowledged, either that the husband under Christ's institution, and by the original law of matrimony, had no such right, or that he that marrieth another cannot by that commit adultery against his first wife.

[4] Ver. 14. Τοιούτων, Of such is the kingdom of God.] That is, saith Theophylact, of those who have by exercise, τὴν ἀκακίαν ἣν παιδία ἔχουσιν ἀπὸ φύσεως, that innocence which children have by nature. In his note on Matt. xviii. 5. he saith, We are to be like children, κατὰ τὸ ἄκακον, οὐχὶ κατὰ τὸ ἀνόητον, not as to their ignorance, but as to their innocence. And xix. 14. Of such is the kingdom of God; that is, saith he, τῶν ἀκάκων καὶ ἀπονηρῶν, of those who resemble them in innocence and freedom from sin.

[5] Ver. 19. Μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, Thou shalt not defraud.] Dr. Hammond here saith, that the tenth commandment is rendered by the LXX. and by St. Paul, Rom. vii. 7. οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις, Thou shalt not covet; by Christ here, Thou shalt not defraud, and Matt. xix. 19. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: whence he concludes, that the commandment contains the importance of all these phrases; obliging us so to rest satisfied with that lot God hath afforded us, and so to desire the good of others as well as of ourselves, as not to desire or endeavour to gain any thing to ourselves by the loss or diminution of another, but to think others as worthy to enjoy what belongs to them, as we are to enjoy what belongs to us: all which is very true. Mr. Clerc also here well notes, that there be two ways of injuring our neighbour, (1.) by theft, whether privately, or by force against the will of the owner, and by taking away what belongs to another, without any pretence of right or justice, which is forbidden in the eighth commandment; or (2.) by secret and cunning devices, where the law, and a pretence of right is made use of to cover the injury, which is forbidden in the tenth commandment, and here expressed by μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, Thou shalt not defraud: and surely all such endeavours to defraud must shew a very covetous mind, inclining us, against the dictates of our consciences, and to the damage of our precious souls, to defraud another of his right: only let it be noted, that the word ἀποστερεῖν in Scripture is of a greater latitude, and signifies also to detain, and keep back a thing when it is due. So Exod. xxi. 10. her food and raiment, and the duty of marriage, οὐκ ἀποστερήσεις, thou shalt not keep back. So the word signifies, Numb. ix. 7. Deut. xxiv. 14. οὐκ ἀποστερήσεις μισθὸν πένητος, thou shalt not keep back the hire of the poor, at his day thou shalt give him his hire, ver. 15. and so we expound the word ἀπεστερημένος, used James v. 4. by kept back; Ecclus. iv. 1. τὴν ζωὴν τοῦ πτωχοῦ μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, detain not the life of the poor, and make not his eyes to wait long; and xxxiv. 21, 22. the bread of the poor is his life, ὁ ἀποστερῶν αὐτὴν, he that detains it is a man of blood; ὁ ἀποστερῶν μισθὸν μισθίου, he that detains the wages of the hireling sheddeth blood: and surely they who desire thus to detain that which belongs to others, and they know they much want, must covet to have for that time what is another's. And here especially the rule of the civilians obtains, "minus solvit, qui tempore minus solvit," he pays less than he ought, who pays not in due time, or when he ought to do it.

[6] Ver. 21. Ἠγάπησεν αὐτὸν, And Jesus looking upon him, loved him.] He loved not only virtues, but even the seeds of them; the one so as to reward them, the other so as to encourage, and minister to their growth.

[7] Ver. 23. Πῶς δυσκόλως οἱ τὰ χρήματα ἔχοντες, How hardly can they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!] The example of this young man shews that ἔχειν here imports not only to possess riches, but also to retain such an affection to them as that we cannot well bear the thoughts of losing them, or parting with them. The interpretation of Christ, that they who trust in riches, ver. 24. cannot do it, is the consequence of that affection; for this affection must be built upon the apprehension of the goodness of them, the conveniences and advantages we trust we shall receive by having and retaining them.

[8] Ver. 31. Πολλοὶ δὲ ἔσονται πρῶτοι, ἔσχατοι, &c. But many that are first shall be last, and they that are last shall be first.] i. e. But as it is with this Jew, so will it be with the generality of that nation; though they shall have the first offer of this kingdom, they shall generally refuse to enter into it; whereas many of the gentiles shall gladly embrace it upon these terms, and shall be admitted into it, and so preferred before the Jews to whom these blessings primarily belonged. That this is the true import of these words, see the note on Matt. xx. 1.

[9] Ver. 32. Καὶ ἐθαμβοῦντο, καὶ ἀκολουθοῦντες ἐφοβοῦντο, They were amazed; and, following, they were afraid.] They were amazed that, the Sanhedrin resolving to kill him, John xi. 53. and sending out their pursuivants and injunctions to apprehend him, ver. 57. he would run himself into the mouth of that danger he seemed formerly to decline; and they were afraid what might befal them, who bore the character of his disciples for his sake.

[10] Ver. 35. Καὶ προσπορεύονται αὐτῷ Ἰακωβὸς καὶ Ἰωάννης, And James and John came unto him.] viz. By their mother, as their mouth, Matt. xx. 20. And so Christ insinuates by answering, not to the mother, but to them coming with her on this errand, Ye know not what ye ask, ver. 22.

[11] Ver. 40. Οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι, ἀλλ' οἷς ἡτοίμασται· It is not for me, &c. who never vary from my Father's will, to give it to others than to them for whom it is prepared by my Father.] Οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμοῦ, τοῦ δικαίου κριτοῦ, It is not for me, a righteous judge, and distributor of recompences, to give to any by favour or affection to their relations or themselves, but to those who are prepared for it according to the will of my Father. (Theophylact.)

[12] Ver. 42. Οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν τῶν ἐθνῶν, They who are accounted to rule over the gentiles.] This is, Matt. xx. 25. οἱ ἄρχοντες τῶν ἐθνῶν, the rulers of the gentiles; Luke xxii. 25. οἱ βασιλεῖς τῶν ἐθνῶν, the kings of the gentiles. So that this shews that δοκέω is sometimes an expletive, as has been noted on 1 Cor. vii. 40.

[13] Ver. 46. Καὶ ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ Ἰεριχὼ, Βαρτίμαιος ὁ τυφλὸς, &c. And as he was going from Jericho, a blind man named Bartimeus sat by the way-side.] Luke xviii. 35. ἐν τῷ ἐγγίζειν αὐτόν εἰς Ἰεριχὼ, when he was near to Jericho, a certain blind man sat, Matt. xx. 30. δύο τυφλοὶ, two blind men. There is no reason from these seeming differences to think the story different of which the evangelists speak. For as to the first, St. Luke saith, indeed, that Christ was yet near to Jericho; but then, so is he who is gone a little from it, as well as he who is come near to it, which St. Luke doth not say. To the second it may be answered, that he who saith there was a certain blind man celebrated by the name of Bartimeus, saith not there was no more, but only that there was no other so noted and distinguished by that name; and he that mentioned his desire, and Christ's answer, doth not exclude the other from making the like request, nor from an interest in Christ's answer, but only shews he thought it sufficient to take notice of him as the most celebrated of the two.

CHAP. XI.

1. AND when they came nigh to Jerusalem, (even) to [1] Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,

2. And he saith to them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye have entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, [2] whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him (to me).

3. And if any man say to you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need of him; and straightway he will send (i. e. will quietly permit you to bring) him hither.

4. And they went their way (to the village), and found

(there) the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.

5. And certain of them that stood there said to them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6. And they said to them, (We do) even as Jesus had commanded; and (upon this) they let them go.

7. And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

8. And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strewed them in the way.

9. And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord (let prosperity attend on the Messiah):

10. [3] Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord (may the kingdom flourish which God is to erect according to his promise made to David): Hosanna in the highest (let prosperity be from heaven on this King and kingdom).

11. And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, (and cured the blind and lame, Matt. xxi. 14.) and now the eventide was come, he went out to Bethany with the twelve.

12. And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry:

13. [4] And seeing a fig-tree afar off having leaves, (which the common fig-trees then had not, Matt. xxiv. 32.) he came (to it), if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he was come to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of (other) figs was not yet.

14. And Jesus answered (i. e. upon this disappointment spake) and said unto it, (Let) no man eat fruit of (i. e. from) thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.

15. And they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves:

16. And would not [5] suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

17. And he taught (them who did these things, how contrary they were to Scripture), saying to them, Is it not written, [6] My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? (Gr. a house of prayer to all nations, and so that very court of the gentiles you thus profane is dedicated to his service:) but ye (by employing it to these uses) have made it a den of thieves.

18. And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and (instead of being moved by what he said from the Scripture, to reform this abuse, they) sought how they might destroy him (privily): for they feared (to do this openly to) him, because all the people were astonished at his doctrine.

19. And when even was come, he went out of the city.

20. And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots.

21. And Peter calling to remembrance (the words of Christ) saith to him, Master, behold, the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away.

22. And Jesus answering saith to them, Have (a strong) faith in God.

23. For verily I say to you, That whosoever shall say to this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea (i. e. whosoever of you shall attempt the greatest difficulties respecting your office, in confirming the truth of my doctrine to Jew and gentile, and bringing them to the faith); and shall not doubt in his heart (of God's power or readiness to assist him), but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass (Gr. shall be done); he shall have whatsoever he saith (it shall be to him according to what he saith).

24. Wherefore I say to you (for the confirmation of your faith), What things soever ye desire, when ye pray (or ask in prayer), believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

25. And when ye [7] stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught (any just matter of complaint) against any (for what they have done to you); that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26. But (for) if you do not forgive (them), neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

27. And they come again to Jerusalem: and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,

28. And they say to him, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things?

29. And Jesus answered and said to them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer (you) me, and (then) I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30. The baptism of John, was it from (the God of heaven), or of men (only)? answer me.

31. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, (It was) from heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him? (and from his testimony, John iii. 21. 34. learn that I also came from God?)

32. But if we shall say, Of men, (this may be hazardous; for) they feared (this might incense) the people: for all men counted John, that he was (to be) a prophet indeed.

33. And they (therefore) answered and said to Jesus, We cannot tell. Jesus answering saith to them, Neither do I (think fit to) tell you by what authority I do these things.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. Εἰ'Σ Βηθφαγὴ καὶ Βηθανίαν, To Bethphage and Bethany.] So most copies read; though, as St. Matthew leaves out Bethany, so the Vulgar and, as Origen* informs us, St. Mark here left out Bethphage. These two places were conterminous, the bound of Bethany, through which they went to go from Jericho to Jerusalem, reaching to Bethphage, whither our Lord was come. Now this Bethphage, saith St. Jerome, was "sacerdotum viculus situs in Monte Oliveti," a little village of the priests situated in Mount Olivet. It was, according to the Jews, a place out of Jerusalem near the mountain of the temple, "in quo coquebant oblationes," in which (saith the Talmud) they boiled their offerings. (Tract. Berachoth, cap. 11. f. 95.)

[2] Ver. 2. Ἐφ' ὃν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων κεκάθικε, Upon which no man ever sat.] Here Grotius truly notes, that such animals as had not been employed in the use of man, were wont to be chosen for sacred uses; for even the heathens thought those things and sacrifices most proper for the service of the gods, which had not been put to profane uses. Thus the Philistines return the ark in a new cart, drawn by heifers never before put into the yoke. (1 Sam. vi. 7.) To Minerva the heathens sacrificed "injuges boves," oxen not put into the yoke; and in Virgil we read thus, (Æn. vi. 36.)

> "Nunc grege de intacto septem mactare juvencos > Præstiterit."——
> It is best to offer seven heifers not yet brought from the flock:

Which Macrobius* calls "hostias injuges," sacrifices not accustomed to the yoke; they thinking them polluted, saith Turnebus,† by being put to profane work; and it seems to have been a miracle that such a colt should so patiently suffer Christ to ride upon him; to be sure there was a completion of the prophecy of Zachary, ix. 9. the Jews themselves applying those words to the Messiah; for R. Joseph said, May the Messiah come, and may I be worthy to sit under the shadow of the tail of his ass. (Sanhedrin, cap. 10. in Gemara.)

[3] Ver. 10. Εὐλογημένη ἡ Βασιλεία ἐρχομένη ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, τοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν Δαβὶδ, Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord.] i. e. Let the kingdom be happily begun and flourish, which God is to erect according to his promise made to our father David; let the prosperity be from heaven to the king Messiah, and to his kingdom. (See Examen Millii.)

[4] Ver. 13. And seeing a fig-tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon; and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves, οὐ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς σύκων, for the time of figs was not yet.] Here it is inquired, why Christ should curse this fig-tree, because it had not figs upon it before the time of figs? The criticism οὐ γὰρ ἦν, for where he was it was the time of fruit, and that of Dr. Hammond, that it was not καιρὸς σύκων, a good or seasonable year for figs, are both confuted by this one observation, that Christ did this on the eleventh of Nisan, that is, five months before figs were ripe; for about summer (saith our Lord) the branch of the fig-tree is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves. (Matt. xxiv. 32. Mark xiii. 28.) From the time of production of leaves to the green figs (say the Jews), is fifty days; from thence to the falling off of the buds, fifty; and from thence to ripe figs, fifty. And in Canticles, the entrance of the summer is described by the fig-trees bringing forth green figs, פִּגָּיהּ i. e. grossos, ἐλύνθους αὐτῆς, her unripe figs: not as Mr. Clerc here renders the words, she hath brought her figs to perfection; nor do either Theophrastus or Pliny make mention of any figs in Syria, which were gathered till after the dog-days, that is, about the latter end of August; and had there been a sort of figs, which, as Mr. Clerc fancies, might have been ripe at the Passover, before which Christ spake these words, St. Mark could not truly have said, the time of figs was not yet. There is another ingenious exposition of a reverend and learned bishop, that ὁ καιρὸς σύκων is the time of gathering in of figs, of which signification of the word καιρὸς he gives two or three instances; and then it seems reasonable for our Saviour to expect some figs upon this tree, they being not yet gathered in, and to curse it for having none upon it, when none had been taken from it; and could I find it proved that any, even the biccaroth, or first ripe figs, mentioned Jer. xxxiv. 2. and Hosea ix. 10. were fit to be gathered in at the Passover, I should acquiesce in this interpretation; but the words cited from Cant. ii. 13. and Matt. xxiv. 32. seem to prove, that the fig-tree only began to put forth her leaves and her green figs at the entrance of the summer. Wherefore let it be noted, that St. Mark doth not by these words, for the time of figs was not yet, design to give a reason why our Lord found no figs upon this tree, but why he only went to this one tree, which had leaves on it, and so was of that kind of figs which, saith Theophrastus,* was ἀεὶ φύλλον, "semper comantibus foliis,"† a fig-tree that had always leaves, and why he expected to find fruit on that, which upon the other ordinary fig-trees abounding there, he could not expect, the time of ordinary figs being not yet: for this kind of fig-tree being ever green with leaves, had, saith Theophrastus, ἅμα καὶ τὸν ἔνον καὶ τὸν νέον κάρπον, old and new fruit hanging on it together; the fruit of the year past and present, say the Jewish doctors. Accordingly Julian‡ the Apostate, speaking of the fruits of Damascus, saith, some of them were but of a short duration, μόνῳ δὲ τῷ σύκῳ καὶ ὑπερενιαυτίζειν ἔξεστι, καὶ τῇ τοῦ μέλλοντος κάρπου γένεσει συνενεχθῆναι, only the fig-tree carries its fruit above a year, and it hangs on with the fruit of the following year. And thus was this fig-tree a fit resemblance of the Jewish nation, to whom alone Christ came in person, and from whom alone he could then expect fruit; whence are they in another parable represented by a fig-tree, from which the husbandman three years expected fruit, but found none, Luke xiii. 7. and therefore is there ordered to be cut down; and here they are emblematically cursed for their barrenness, the kingdom of God being shortly to be taken from them, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. (Matt. xxi. 43.) Origen§ saith, this fig-tree was δένδρον τοῦ λαοῦ, a tree representing the people of the Jews, saying, ἔμψυχος ἦν ἡ αὐτὴ συκῆ, this was a living fig-tree, and therefore heard a curse suitable to its condition; for διὰ τοῦτο ἄκαρπός ἐστιν ὁ Ἰουδαίων Συναγωγὴ, καὶ τοῦτο γίνεται αὐτῇ ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος ἕως τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ, and therefore the synagogue of the Jews is unfruitful, and shall continue so till the fulness of the gentiles doth come in.

[5] Ver. 16. Καὶ οὐκ ἤφιεν ἵνα τὶς διενέγκῃ σκεῦος διὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, And he suffered not any one to carry a vessel through the temple.] In this our Lord approved of the received doctrine of the Jews, who (saith Josephus‖) held, "quod ne vas quidem aliquod portari in templum liceat," that it was not lawful to carry any vessel into the temple; and this was part of that reverence they thought due to it by virtue of that precept, thou shalt reverence my sanctuary. (Lev. xix. 30.) But whereas the rabbins extended this to their synagogues, yea, even to a synagogue laid waste, that none should make them a thoroughfare, in this they seem to have exceeded; there seeming not to be the same reason for things instituted by them, for their convenience of meeting for religious worship, as for that house which the Lord hath chosen to put his name there, (Deut. xii. 5.) and in which the Divine Majesty dwelt; though they being houses of prayer, a reverence was to be observed in them, whilst they engaged in that worship.

[6] Ver. 17. Καὶ ἐδίδασκε, λέγων αὐτοῖς· οὐ γέγραπται, ὅτι ὁ οἶκός μου, οἶκος προσευχῆς κληθήσεται πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν· And he taught them, saying, Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer to all nations?] In the temple there were three courts—the court of the priests, where the altar of incense stood; the second was that into which the clean Jews, and the proselytes of justice who had embraced circumcision and the whole law of Moses, entered; and this was parted from the third court (which was called the court of the gentiles, because the unclean Jew, and the gentile who owned the true God, were permitted to come and worship there), by a step or low wall, having this inscription on it, μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἐκτὸς τοῦ ἁγίου παριέναι, that no alien was to enter into the holy place; where Josephus,* by adding τὸ γὰ ρδεύτερον, ἱερὸν ἅγιον ἐκαλεῖτο, for the second court was called holy, seems to intimate, that the court of the gentiles was by them not deemed holy, but profane; and therefore thither they brought sheep and doves to sell; and hence it appears how appositely our Saviour argues, that the house for all nations was God's house, and therefore must be sacred, and not to be polluted. Mr. Whiston must therefore be mistaken, when he conjectures that our Lord did this twice in the week before his passion; once driving these hucksters and their merchandise out of the inner temple, and the next day out of the outer temple: for Christ drove out the oxen and the sheep, as well as the men. (John ii. 15.) Now can we think that they who had so great a reverence for the inner temple, as to make it death for any gentile, though a proselyte of the gate, to come into it, would themselves bring sheep and oxen to dung in it? It is true that St. Mark speaks of this as done the day after he came into the city, and discoursed with the pharisees; but that he did this only by recapitulation, St. Austin† proves; but let this be done twice, provided he brings not his merchants and merchandise into the inner temple. (See Maldon. in Matt. xxi. 12.)

[7] Ver. 25. Καὶ ὅταν στήκητε προσευχόμενοι, ἀφίετε, And when you stand praying, forgive if ye have aught against any.] That it was ordinary with the Jews to pray standing, see note on Matt. vi. 5. yet in their solemn days of fasting they did kneel, and even prostrate themselves before the Lord: but the first Christians usually kneeled down and prayed. (Acts ix. 40. xx. 36. xxi. 5.) The command here to forgive those that offend us before we pray, not only shews that no resentments of what our brother doth should stick long upon our spirits, because they indispose us for that duty we are continually to be prepared for; but also, that there is some kind of forgiveness to be exercised towards him, though he do not ask it, or shew any tokens of repentance; of which, see note on Matt. vi. 14, 15. And seeing I am to pray not only for myself, but for him also, (Matt. v. 44.) and that out of love to him, I must be free from all displeasure against him, that I may lift up pure hands without wrath, I must be inclined and ready to do him any good: for how else can I heartily desire it of God, and wish well to him, which in effect I do by praying for him?

CHAP. XII.

1. AND he began to speak to them by parables; (saying), A certain man planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower (in it), and let it out to husbandmen, (the Jews, Isa. v.) and (then) went into a far country (i. e. left them to manage it for him, so as that he might in their season receive the fruits of it).

2. And (accordingly) at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen (the guides and rulers of the Jewish church) of the fruit of the vineyard.

3. And (but) they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4. And again he sent to them another servant; and at him they [1] cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.

5. And again he sent another; and him they killed, and (so they dealt with) many others, (2 Chron. xxxv. 15, 16.) beating some, and killing some (of them).

6. Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last to them, saying, (It may be) they will reverence my son.

7. But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and (then) the inheritance shall be ours.

8. And (accordingly) they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

9. What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do (to those men? Surely) he will come and destroy the (se) husbandmen, and will give the vineyard to (be cultivated by) others.

10. And (if ye doubt this, ye understand not what these husbandmen deserve,) have ye not read (or, nor have ye read with attention) this scripture; (which saith, Psal. cxviii. 22, 23.) The stone which the builders rejected is become the head (stone) of the corner:

11. This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

12. And (when he had said this) they sought (occasion) to lay hold on him, but (they) feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable [2] against them: and (through this fear) they left him, and went their way.

13. And they send to him certain (persons) of the (sect of the) pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in (and get advantage against him from) his words.

14. And when they were come, they say to him, Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man ('s person); for thou regardest not the person (s) of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: (tell us therefore) Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?

15. Shall we give, or shall we not give? (that if he said no, the Herodians might represent him as an enemy to Cæsar; if yea, the pharisees might represent him to the people as no friend to the nation.) But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said to them, Why tempt ye me (ye hypocrites)? bring me a (Roman) penny, that I may see it.

16. And they brought it. And (then) he saith to them, Whose is this image and superscription (that is upon this money)? and they said to him, (It is) Cæsar's.

17. And Jesus answering said to them, Render (then) to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him (that he had answered from their own received principles, and yet so wisely, that they could take no advantage from his words).

18. Then come to him the sadducees, who say there is no resurrection (of the body); and they asked him, saying,

19. Master, Moses wrote to us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed to his brother.

20. Now there were (with us) seven brethren: and the first (of them) took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21. And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22. And (so) the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23. In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise (from the dead), whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24. And Jesus answering said to them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God? (nor yet the state in which they that are raised from the dead shall be.)

25. For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven.

26. And as touching the dead, (to prove from the Scriptures, which you own,) that they rise: have ye not read (what is written) in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake to him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? (and yet,)

27. He is not the God of the dead (i. e. of them that are so dead as not to be the sons of the resurrection), but the God of the living (i. e. of those whom he will raise to life again): ye therefore do greatly err.

28. And one of the [3] scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29. And Jesus answered him, The [4] first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord:

30. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

31. And the second is like (to it), namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32. And the scribe said to him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he:

33. And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and (for a man) to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

34. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said to him, Thou art not far from (being prepared to enter into) the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

35. And Jesus answered (their questions) and said (to them by way of question), while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David?

36. For [5] David himself said (of him) by (the afflatus of) the Holy Ghost, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

37. David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and whence (how) is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.

38. And he said to them in his doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love (to have) salutations in the market-places,

39. And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts:

40. Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

41. And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and (saw that) many that were rich cast in much.

42. And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing.

43. And he called to his disciples, and saith to them, Verily I say to you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

44. For all they did (only) cast in of their abundance; but she [6] of her want did cast in all she had, even all her living (i. e. her livelihood for that day).

[1] Ver. 4. ΛΙΘΟΒΟΛΗΣΑΝΤΕΣ ἐκεφαλαίωσαν, καὶ ἀπέστειλαν ἠτιμωμένον· Again he sent to them another servant, and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully treated.] That ἐκεφαλαίωσαν here cannot signify capite, i. e. "vitâ eum mulctârunt," they beheaded him, or took away his life; but as St. Luke interprets it, τραυματίζοντες, they wounding him, (x. 12.) to wit, in the head, cast him out of the vineyard, τὴν κεφαλὴν ἔτυψαν, they beat him on the head: so Theophylact; and this is evident from the words following, They sent him away dishonoured, or shamefully treated: so in Aristophanes,* Θύειν τὸν κρότοφον κεφαλαίῳ ῥήματι, is to smite the skull with a blow upon the head, or to strike one upon the head with a radish root. (See Examen Millii.)

[2] Ver. 12. They knew that he spake this parable, πρὸς αὐτούς· so Luke xx. 19. against them.] So λέγειν πρὸς αὐτὸν, is to say what they could against him, Acts xxiii. 30. to kick πρὸς κέντρα, against the pricks, Acts xxvi. 14. to fight πρὸς τὰς μεθοδίας, against the machinations of Satan, Eph. vi. 11. to strive πρὸς τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, against sin, Heb. xii. 4. to fight πρὸς υἱοὺς, against the children of Ammon, Judg. x. 3. to speak πρὸς Κύριον, against the Lord, Isa. xxxii. 6. Ezek. xiii. 9.

[3] Ver. 28. Καὶ εἷς τῶν γραμματέων, And one of the scribes came: so Luke xx. 39. but Matt. xxii. 25. εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν νομικὸς, one of them being a lawyer.] Now, in this diversity of words, there is no difference in sense; for the scribes were of two sorts, or had at the least two offices; the one was to sit in the chair of Moses, i. e. to read, and to interpret the law of Moses to the people, Matt. xxiii. 2. the other was to expound, and to deliver to the people the traditions which they pretended to have received from their forefathers: the first name of scribe they seem to have had from Ezra, who is so often styled γραμματεὺς, a scribe of the law of the Lord, (Ezra vii. 12. Neh. xii. 36.) who read in the book of the law, and expounded: (Neh. viii. 2—4.) they being also teachers of the traditions, which were called νόμμα, or laws, and binding these heavy burdens upon the people, were thence called νομικοὶ, see the note on Matt. xxii. 23. And this scribe is said to speak to Christ πειράζων, tempting him, or making an experiment of his wisdom, whether it was such as fame reported; as the queen of Sheba came, (1 Kings x. 1.) πειράσαι, to tempt king Solomon, i. e. to try whether his wisdom was equal to the fame she had heard of it.

[4] Ver. 29. And Jesus answered, ὅτι πρώτη πασῶν τῶν ἐντολῶν, &c. The first of all the commandments is this, The Lord thy God is one God.] For this is necessary to be known, that we may worship him alone in opposition to all heathen gods, and own that he alone is God, who is the maker of heaven and earth. Here Woltzogenius objects, that this lawyer having said, that there is one God, and that there is no other God besides him, our Lord acknowledges that he had answered wisely; whereas he could not have given him this commendation, if he had been obliged to own him also as God, or to have owned a trinity of persons; as if he had not heard that Thomas, who held the unity of the Godhead as much as any other Jew, yet styles our Saviour, my Lord and my God; and is commended for his faith, John xx. 28, 29. And since all that assert a trinity of persons, do as unanimously assert a unity of essence, and of the Godhead, I know not why this answer might not be commended by him; though perhaps our Saviour's commendation might especially respect his prelation of the love of God and our neighbour to all burnt-offerings and oblations; of which see the note on Matt. xxii. 35. and of which one of the Jews saith thus, The doing acts of beneficence is more acceptable to God than all the victims and oblations which the Israelites offer on the altar; he having said, I will have mercy and not sacrifice. (Pirk. Eliezer, cap. 16. p. 33. See here and ver. 27. Examen Millii.)

[5] Ver. 36. Αὐτὸς γὰρ Δαβὶδ εἶπεν ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τῷ ἁγίῳ, For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, &c.] i. e. By a Divine afflatus, or the spirit of prophecy; for elsewhere we read, that God spake by the mouth of David, Acts i. 16. iv. 25. Nor is any one cited in the New Testament, as speaking by the Spirit, or by the Holy Ghost, who was not thus assisted by a Divine afflatus; and this deserves to be noted by them who deny that the Psalms of David were written by the spirit of prophecy.

[6] Ver. 44. Αὕτη δὲ ἐκ τῆς ὑστερήσεως αὐτῆς πάντα ὅσα εἶχεν ἔβαλεν, ὅλον τὸν βίον αὐτῆς, But she of her want did cast in all she had, even all her living.] Or, all that she had to live upon that day. Hence it appears, that a person may be sometimes liberal, even in giving what he wanteth for himself, or being ready to expend in works of charity, ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, above what he can well spare. (2 Cor. viii. 2, 3. See here Grotius.)

CHAP. XIII.

1. AND as he went out of the temple, (his disciples came to him, to shew him the buildings of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 1. and) one of his disciples saith unto him (in the name of the rest), Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2. And Jesus answering, said to him, Seest thou these great buildings? There shall not be left (to them) one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down (or dissolved).

3. And as he sat upon the mount of Olives over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, (i. e. apart, not from the rest of his disciples, but from the multitude,

4. Saying), Tell us, (Master, Luke xxi. 7.) when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5. And Jesus answering them, began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you:

6. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and (by that pretence) shall deceive many.

7. And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things must needs be; but the end (of the polity and temple of the Jews) shall not be yet.

8. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: (all) these (things) are (only) the beginnings of sorrows (to them).

9. But take heed to yourselves: for (then) they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the [1] synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against (Gr. to) them (that the kingdom of God is come).

10. And the gospel must first be published among all nations (before the end of these things).

11. But when they shall (thus) lead you, and deliver you up (to these rulers), [2] take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak (from your own wisdom), but the Holy Ghost (who teacheth you what to speak).

12. Now (at this time) the brother shall betray the (his) brother to death, and the father the son; and the children shall rise up against their (believing) parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13. And ye shall be hated of all (sorts of) men for my name's sake: but (yet possess your souls in patience, Luke xxi. 19. for) they that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved (out of this calamity).

14. But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, (ix. 27.) standing where it ought not, (i. e. the Roman army compassing Jerusalem, Luke xxi. 20.) let him that readeth understand (that her desolation draweth near, ibid. and) then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains (of Peræa):

15. And (then) let him that is on the housetop not go down into the house, neither enter therein to take any thing out of his house:

16. And let him that is in the field (and hath laid aside his garment) not turn back again to put up his garment (i. e. let not your regard for your clothes, or goods, cause you to delay your flight, but do it with your utmost expedition).

17. But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days (of vengeance, Luke xxi. 22. and so are not in a condition to fly from it).

18. And [3] pray ye that your flight be not in the winter (when the ways be scarce passable).

19. For in those days shall be affliction, (even) such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created to this time, neither shall be (afterward, so that ye cannot hope to escape without hazard).

20. And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but [4] for the elect's (i. e. the Christians') sake, whom he hath chosen (out of the world), he hath shortened the (se) days (of vengeance).

21. And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

22. For false Christs and false prophets shall arise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if (it were) possible (or if they can), the very elect.

23. But (therefore) take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all (these) things.

24. But in those days, after that tribulation (of which I have spoken), the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

25. And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in (or the hosts of) heaven shall be shaken; (i. e. the dissolution of their government in church and state by the zealots, shall be a sign of their approaching ruin, Luke xxi. 25.)

26. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory (μετὰ δυνάμεως πολλῆς καὶ δόξης, with a great and glorious host, viz. the Roman army).

27. And then shall he send his angels (the messengers of the gospel), and (they) shall gather together his elect (among the gentiles) from the four winds, from the utmost parts of the earth to the utmost part of heaven (i. e. from one end of the earth to the other).

28. Now learn a parable of (from) the fig-tree; (For) when her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near:

29. So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it (viz. the desolation I speak of) is nigh, even at the doors.

30. Verily I say unto you, That this generation shall not pass (away) till all these things be done.

31. Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away (unperformed).

32. [5] But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son (who hath the Spirit without measure), but the Father (only).

33. Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is (to be).

34. For the Son of man is [these words are not in the original, and so this verse may begin thus:] (And in this exhortation to watch, I am) as a man taking a far journey, who left his house (Gr. as a travelling man leaving his house), and gave (Gr. giving) authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and (who) commanded the porter (as I do you) to watch.

35. Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning:

36. Lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping (and therefore unprepared for his advent).

37. And what I say to you I say to all (my disciples, i. e.) Watch.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 9. ΚΑΙ᾽ εἰς συναγωγὰς δαρήσεσθε, And ye shall be beaten in the synagogues.] It is certain, both from the Scriptures and the Jewish writers, that whipping and the rebels' beating were punishments used in the synagogues of the Jews. Thus Paul saith, he punished the Christians κατὰ πάσας τὰς συναγωγὰς, throughout all the synagogues, Acts xxvi. 11. and that he did beat in the synagogues those that believed, xxii. 19. And that it was usual to whip both their wise men and their disciples, when they had done perversely in their synagogues, is fully proved by Campegius Vitringa de Synag. Vet. lib. iii. cap. 11.

[2] Ver. 11. Μὴ προμεριμνᾶτε τί λαλήσητε, μηδὲ μελετᾶτε· οὐ γάρ ἐστε ὑμεῖς οἱ λαλοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, But when they shall lead you (before) and deliver you up (to these rulers, ver. 9.) take no thought beforehand what you shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye; for I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay, Luke xxi. 14, 15.] From these two places collated together, it is evident, (1.) that this promise is peculiar to the apostles, to whom alone Christ here discourseth: and (2.) that it belongs to them alone, when they were brought before kings and rulers, to plead the cause of Christ, and leave before them a testimony of the truth of it; (Matt. x. 18.) and therefore there can be nothing more ridiculous than the quakers applying this to their extemporary effusions, their senseless prayers and harangues; of which it cannot, without blasphemy, be said, It is not you that speak, but the Holy Ghost speaketh in you; seeing, if so, all their foolish and ignorant harangues must be as sacred, and as worthy to be preserved, as the inspired Scriptures. (See Examen Millii.)

Ver. 14. Τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ Δανιὴλ προφήτου. This reading is vindicated, Examen Millii, in locum.

[3] Ver. 18. Προσεύχεσθε δὲ ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ φυγὴ ὑμῶν χειμῶνος, Pray therefore, that your flight may not be in the winter.] Hence it seems plain, that even when tribulations come by the decree of God, the circumstances of them may be mitigated by our prayers. (See the note on Matt. xxiv. 20. See Examen Millii.)

[4] Ver. 20. Ἀλλὰ διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς οὓς ἐξελέξατο, ἐκολόβωσε τὰς ἡμέρας, But for his elect's sake, whom he hath chosen (out of the world), he hath shortened those days.] That in the New Testament all Christians called to the knowledge and belief of the faith are styled the elect, as being γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, a chosen generation, see the note on 1 Pet. ii. 9. These are the elect our Saviour speaks of, when he saith, Many are called, but few are chosen, Matt. xx. 16. and shall he not hear his elect, which cry unto him day and night? Luke xviii. 7. And this was also the phraseology of the primitive Christians: thus Clemens* tells the Corinthians, that their sedition was ἀλλοτρία καὶ ξένη τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς τοῦ Θεοῦ, alien from, and strange to the elect of God; and exhorts them to come to God with holy souls, lifting up pure hands to him, and loving our kind and merciful Father, ὃς ἡμᾶς ἐκλογῆς μέρος ἐποίησεν ἑαυτῷ, who hath made us a part of his election. Ignatius* writes to the church of Ephesus, ἐκλελεγμένη, elected; and the author of the Martyrdom of Polycarp saith, the common people admired the difference there was † μεταξὺ τῶν ἀπίστων καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν, betwixt the heathens and the Christians: and among the aphorisms of the apostle, this is one, ἐὰν ἐκλεκτοῦ ὁ γείτων ἁμαρτήσῃ ἥμαρτεν ὁ ἐκλεκτὸς, If the neighbour of a Christian hath sinned, he hath sinned also.

[5] Ver. 32. Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης καὶ τῆς ὥρας οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, οὐδὲ οἱ ἄγγελοι, οὐδὲ ὁ υἱὸς, εἰ μὴ ὁ πατήρ· But of that day and hour knoweth no man, neither the angels which are in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father; Matt. xxiv. 36. but my Father only.] I dare not here say with St. Ambrose, lib. v. de Fide, cap. 8. that these words were added by the Arians, seeing I find them owned by Irenæus, lib. ii. cap. 48. and by Origen, in Matt. hom. 30. F. 64. A. But for explication of them, note,

First, That these words περὶ δὲ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης, of that day and hour, may refer, not to the destruction of Jerusalem, but, as the fathers generally thought, to the immediate precedent words, heaven and earth shall pass away, but of that day and hour when they shall pass away, none knoweth but the Father. Note,

Secondly, That ὁ υἱὸς here is Christ, considered as a prophet sent into the world to reveal his Father's will; and therefore as delivering to the world not what the Λόγος knew or taught, but what the Spirit of God revealed to him, according to his frequent declarations concerning himself, that he spake nothing of himself, but the Father which sent him gave him commandment what he should say, and what he should speak, John xii. 49. My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me, vii. 16. The word which I speak, I speak not of myself, but the Father which abideth in me, xiv. 10. The Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all that he doth, John v. 20. which by the Baptist seems to be expounded thus, He that is of God speaketh the words of God: for the Father giveth not him the Spirit by measure: for the Father loveth the Son, and hath put all things (relating to the revelation of his will) into his hands. (John iii. 34, 35.) Though therefore he revealed this doctrine as the Son of man, as the nature of the prophetic office absolutely required, yet he is placed here, as to his knowledge of the mind of God, deservedly above the angels, as being, by this Spirit residing in him without measure, more fully acquainted with the mind of God than they; and yet, saith he, the knowledge of this day and hour being no part of my prophetic office; even I, the Son of man, know it not; it being one of those times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. (Acts i. 7.) Excellent to this purpose are the words of Dr. Lightfoot on this place: "(1.) It is one thing to understand the Son of God barely and abstractly for the second person in the Holy Trinity; another to understand him for the Messias, or the second person incarnate. To say that the second person in the Trinity knows not something, is blasphemous; to say so of the Messias is not so, who nevertheless was the same with the second person in the Trinity. For although the second person abstractly considered, according to his mere Deity, was coequal with the Father, co-omnipotent, co-omniscient, coeternal with him, &c. yet Messias, who was God-man, considered as Messias, was a servant, and a messenger of the Father, and received commands and authority from the Father: and those expressions, The Son can do nothing of himself, &c. will not in the least serve the Arians' turn, if you take them in this sense, which you must necessarily do; Messias can do nothing of himself, because he is a servant and a deputy. (2.) We must distinguish between the excellences and perfections of Christ, which flowed from the hypostatical union of the two natures, and those which flowed from the donation and anointing of the Holy Spirit. From the hypostatical union of the natures, flowed the infinite dignity of his person, his impeccability, his infinite self-sufficiency to perform the law, and satisfy the Divine justice. From the anointing of the Spirit, flowed his power of miracles, his foreknowledge of things to come, and all kind of knowledge of evangelic mysteries: those rendered him a fit and perfect redeemer, these a fit and perfect minister of the gospel."

Now, therefore, the foreknowledge of things to come, of which the discourse here is, is to be numbered among those things which flowed from the anointing of the Holy Ghost, and from his immediate revelation; not from the hypostatic union of the natures: so that those things which were revealed by Christ to his church, he had them from the revelation of the Spirit, not from that union. Nor is it any derogation or detraction from the dignity of his person, that he saith, He knew not that day and hour of the destruction of Jerusalem: yea, it excellently agrees with his office and deputation, who, being the Father's servant, messenger, and minister, followed the orders of the Father, and obeyed him in all things.

CHAP. XIV.

1. AFTER two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread: and (then) the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2. But they said, (Let) not (this be done) on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

3. And (he) being in Bethany in the house of Simon (formerly) the leper, as he sat at meat, [1] there came a woman having an alabaster-box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake (or shook) the box (of ointment), and (then) poured it on his head.

4. And there were some that had indignation within themselves (at this which the woman had done), and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5. For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, (and the money might) have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6. And (but) Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her (without cause)? she hath (in doing this) wrought a good work on me.

7. For ye have the poor (for whom ye pretend so much kindness) with you always, and whensoever you will you may do them good; but me ye have not always (my de- parture from you being at hand, which will cut off all farther opportunity of shewing kindness to my body).

8. She hath done what she could (to testify her affection to me: for) she is come aforehand to anoint my body (in order) to the burying (of it; nor shall her charity be lost; for)

9. Verily I say to you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached (as I assure you it will be) throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

10. And (then) Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went to the chief priests, to betray him to them.

11. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money (for so doing, covenanting with him for thirty shekels). And (upon this promise) he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

12. And (on) the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said to him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare (for thee), that thou mayest eat the passover?

13. And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith to them, Go ye into the city, and (when you are come into it) there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14. And wheresoever he shall go in (go ye in after him, and) say ye to the good man, (the master) of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall (may) eat the passover with my disciples?

15. And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared (Gr. a great upper room strewed, ready to receive guests): there (shall ye) make ready for us.

16. And his disciples went forth, (from Bethany, ver. 3.) and came into the city, and found as he had said to them: and they made ready the passover.

17. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve (to eat of it).

18. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say to you, One of you who eateth with me (at the table) shall betray me.

19. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say to him one by one (severally), Is it I? and another, Is it I?

20. And he answered and said to them, It is one of the twelve, (he) that (now) dippeth with me in the dish; (Matt. xxvi. 23.)

21. (Now) the Son of man indeed goeth (to suffer), as it is written of him: but (yet) woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man, if he had never been born (it being better not to be, than to be miserable for ever).

22. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed (it), and brake (it), and gave (it) to them, and said, Take, eat; this is my body (given for you).

23. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks (over it), he gave it to them; and they all drank of it.

24. And he said to them, This is (the memorial of) my blood, (that blood) of the new testament (or covenant), which is shed for many.

25. Verily I say to you, [2] I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God (i. e. till after my resurrection).

26. And when they had sung a [3] hymn, they went to the mount of Olives.

27. And Jesus saith to them, All ye shall be offended because of (or scandalized in) me this night: for (it will be as) it is written, (Zech. xiii. 7.) I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28. But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29. But Peter said to him, Although all shall be offended (at thy passion), yet will not I (be offended).

30. And Jesus saith to him, Verily I say to thee, This day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

32. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he said to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33. And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34. And (he) saith to them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour (of his present temptation) might pass from him.

36. And he said, Abba, (that is) Father, all things are possible to thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt (be done).

37. And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith to Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? (after all thy confidence) couldest not thou watch one hour?

38. Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. (For) the spirit truly is (may be) ready (to make good resolutions), but the flesh is weak (and so unable to perform them, without that Divine assistance, which is to be obtained by prayer, and improved by vigilance).

39. And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40. And when he returned, he found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy: neither wist they what to answer him.

41. And he cometh the third time, and saith to them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough (ἀπέχει, the time of watching is now past), the hour is come (in which I shall be apprehended); behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43. And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priest, and the scribes, and the elders.

44. And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; [4] take him, and lead him away safely.

45. And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, Master; and kissed him.

46. And (then) they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47. And [5] one of them that stood by (namely Peter) drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his ear.

48. And Jesus answered (i. e. spake with relation to their manner of coming thus to apprehend him), and said to them, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49. I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and (then) ye took me not: but (now ye are permitted to do it, because) the Scriptures (which foretold my sufferings) must be fulfilled.

50. And (having said this) they (who were with him) all forsook him, and fled.

51. And there followed him a certain [6] young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him:

52. And he left the linen cloth (in their hands), and fled from them naked.

53. And they led Jesus away to the [7] high-priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes.

54. And Peter followed him afar off, even to the palace of the high-priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55. And the chief priests and all the council [8] sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and (but) found none (that could testify any thing capital against him).

56. For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together (Gr. their testimony was not sufficient to render him guilty of death).

57. And there arose certain (men), and bare false witness against him, saying,

58. We have heard him say, I will destroy this temple made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59. But neither so did their witness agree together (i. e. their testimony did not amount to a capital crime).

60. And the high-priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing; what, is it (of no concern) that these (men) witness against thee?

61. But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high-priest asked him, and said to him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed (God)?

62. And Jesus said, [9] I am: and (within a while, Matt. xxvi. 64.) ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63. Then the high-priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any farther witnesses?

64. Ye have heard the blasphemy (he now speaks): what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death (for it).

65. And (then) some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say to him, Prophesy (who it is that smites thee): and the (very) servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

66. And as Peter was beneath in the palace, their cometh one of the maids of the high-priest:

67. And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68. But he denied (it), saying, I know not (the man), neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by (what one of them said to him), This is one of them (that were with Jesus).

70. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereunto (or, is like those of Galilee).

71. But he (upon this) began to (imprecate a) curse (upon himself) and to swear, (saying with an oath), I know not this man of whom ye speak.

72. And (then) the second time the cock crew. And Peter (upon that) called to mind the words that Jesus said to him, viz. Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he [10] thought thereon (rushing forth from the company), he wept (bitterly).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 3. Ἦλθε γυνὴ ἔχουσα ἀλάβαστρον μύρου, νάρδου πιστικῆς πολυτελοῦς· καὶ συντρίψασα τὸ ἀλάβαστρον, κατέχεεν αὐτοῦ κατὰ τῆς κεφαλῆς, There came a woman having an alabaster-box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it upon his head.] Either the πιστικὴ answers to the Syriac pistica, and then it may be rendered nardus spicata, or ointment made of the spikes of nard; or, if it be a Greek original, I think Theophylact well renders it, πιστικὴ ἡ ἄδολος καὶ μετὰ πίστεως κατασκευασθεῖσα, that is,nard unadulterated,* and faithfully prepared; the great price it carried, tempting many to adulterate it, as Dioscorides and Pliny tell us, according to these words of Vadianus,† Dignum autem cognitu quod, lib. xiii. Plinius tradit, viz. novem herbarum species esse quæ nardum imitentur, et adulterent. Unde intelligimus in tanta fraudis materia usum loquendi obtinuisse, ut 'pistica' nardus diceretur, quæ sincera et absque vitio esset, ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως, a fide, et plane ἄδολος, hoc est germana et nulla arte vitiata. Moreover, it is the conjecture of Dr. Hammond, that συντρίψασα here signifies, not to break the alabaster, that being not easily done, but to shake it, to liquefy the ointment, and make it fitter to run out; the old glossary rendering συντρίβω, conquatio. Now Mr. Clerc owns that the word doth not always signify to break; but when the discourse is about a vessel that may be broken, he saith it must so signify; as if a vessel might not be shaken as well as broken; or the vessel might not be put for the ointment in it, it being that which was poured out on Christ's head; or else the vessel might be only broken as we break a flask, by striking off the head of it, and then we may easily perceive how, after it was thus broken, the ointment might be poured on his head.

[2] Ver. 25. Οὐκέτι οὐ μὴ πίω ἐκ τοῦ γενήματος τῆς ἀμπέλου, ἕως τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης, ὅταν αὐτὸ πίνω καινὸν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ Θεοῦ· Henceforth I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, till the day that I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God.] Hence we may argue thus against the doctrine of transubstantiation: that which after consecration remains the fruit of the vine, is not substantially changed into the blood of Christ; therefore that which Christ gave the apostles to drink, was not substantially changed into his blood: the consequence is evident, because Christ calls that which he gave them to drink, the fruit of the vine; for that Christ spake this after the consecration of the elements, St. Matthew and Mark unanimously testify; nor doth St. Luke contradict them, but only saith, our Lord spake this also after the giving of the paschal cup. Nor can St. Matthew or St. Mark be understood of any cup, but of that which they only mention; now they make mention only of the cup given at the eucharist, and therefore can be only understood of that. Hence doth the Romish catechism inform us, that from these words, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, the catholic church hath always taught that our Lord used wine in the institution of this sacrament; which yet she could not teach from these words, unless they were spoken of the sacramental cup, seeing the accidents of wine, without the subject, cannot be called the fruit of the vine. And seeing wine is styled αἷμα σταφυλῆς, the blood of the grape, Deut. xxxii. 14. and by the heathens αἷμα βοτρύων, Achill. Tatius, lib. ii. why may it not by a like metaphor be styled Christ's blood? Moreover, the ancient fathers from these words confuted the heresy of the Encratitæ, or Aquarians, who consecrated only water at the celebration of the sacrament; declaring that by these words our Saviour shewed the thing, which had been blessed, was wine, and therefore was "carnis potus," the drink of the flesh, saith Irenæus. Now had not the sacramental cup after the consecration remained wine, this argument could have no force, since then the orthodox could no more have drank it in the eucharist than the Aquarii. (See Iren. lib. v. cap. 33. Clem. Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 2. p. 158. Chrysost. hom. in Matt. xxvi. p. 511. Theodoret. dial. 1. p. 17, 18. and many others cited by Albert. l. de Euch. cap. 17. p. 112.)

The following words, Till I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God, are by St. Luke thus varied, till the kingdom of God come, (xxii. 18.) or until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God; and therefore only seem to signify till I rise again from the dead: for the kingdom of God here, and the kingdom of the Father in St. Matthew, being certainly the same, viz. the kingdom and the power given to Christ, the exercise of his kingly office being given to him of the Father, when one of these is come, the other must be come also. Now (1.) Christ calling the Jews to repentance, because the kingdom of God is near, (Mark i. 15.) upbraiding the scribes and pharisees because they suffered publicans and harlots to enter into the kingdom of God before them, (Matt. xxi. 31.) and threatening that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to other nations: Matt. xxi. 43. (2.) The Jews expecting then the kingdom of God, (Mark xv. 43.) and thinking it should suddenly appear, (Luke xix. 11.) and inquiring of him when it should come, (Luke xvii. 20.) and speaking of eating bread with him in it, (Luke xiv. 15.) and wishing prosperity to it as then coming: Mark xi. 10. (3.) Christ having told them that the kingdom of God was near, (Luke xi. 2. 20.) that it was to come to them, (Matt. xii. 28.) that it was among them, (Luke xvii. 21.) that some of them should not die till they saw the Son of man coming in his kingdom, (Matt. xvi. 28.) that is, till they saw the kingdom of God, (Luke ix. 27.) till they saw the kingdom of God come with power; (Mark ix. 1.) and having spoken so many parables relating to this kingdom of God, or state of the gospel: (Mark iv. 30. Luke xiii. 18. 20.) and, lastly, the doctrine which he preached being the gospel of the kingdom of God, (Mark i. 14.) the word of the kingdom, (Matt. xiii. 19.) the mystery of the kingdom of God, (Mark iv. 11.) the preaching of it being the preaching of the kingdom of God: (Luke iv. 43. viii. 1. ix. 2. 11. 60. xvi. 16.) Christ also after his resurrection speaking to his apostles of the things relating to the kingdom of God, (Acts i. 3.) and they preaching to others the things belonging to the kingdom of God, (Acts viii. 12. xix. 8. xx. 25. xxviii. 23. 31.) exhorting their hearers to enter into the kingdom of God, (Acts xiv. 22.) and telling believers they were translated into the kingdom of God: (Col. i. 13.) on these accounts, I say, I cannot think this kingdom of God should signify heaven, or the happiness then and there to be enjoyed, but rather the gospel-state, and the kingdom of Christ erected at his resurrection, and more completely begun when he sat down at the right hand of Power, and was made heir of all things. To drink this wine new, is, by the interpretation of St. Luke, to do it when it was fulfilled in the kingdom of God, v. g. when Christ our passover was sacrificed for us, (1 Cor. v. 7.) and when that blood of the new covenant, which was represented by the wine, was actually shed, and a new feast was instituted in commemoration of it. And if you yet inquire, when did Christ thus drink this wine with them? I answer, he did it, not so much by eating and drinking with his disciples after he arose from the dead, (Acts x. 41.) for that drinking could have no relation either to the paschal or the sacramental cup; as by fulfilling the promise made to them, Luke xxii. 29, 30. I dispose to you a kingdom as my Father hath done to me; and ye shall eat and drink with me at my table in my kingdom: for in what sense soever they are here said to drink with him at his table, he also must be said to drink with them.

[3] Ver. 26. Ὑμνήσαντες, And when they had sung a hymn they went forth.] The evangelist may well be supposed to intend such a hymn as was customarily sung at the Passover: for if Christ had begun a new and unusual hymn, his disciples could not have told how to sing with him: now the usual hymn sung on the night of the Passover, began at Psal. cxiii. and ended at Psal. cxviii. in which hymns, as the Jews observe, are mentioned, the sorrows of the Messiah, and the resurrection of the dead. (So Dr. Lightfoot.)

Ver. 41. Ἀπέχει, Sat est, It is enough.] Though this sense of the word be something rare, and Stephanus himself could only produce one instance of it, viz. these words of Anacreon, ἀπέχει βλέπω αὐτὴν, sufficit jam video eam; yet all will not seem so strange, if we consider, that in effect it bears the ordinary sense of abstaining in both places; for here it is the same with, you may abstain from watching any longer: and in Anacreon it signifies, the painter, now I see her, may abstain from making any picture of her. He that would see more instances of the use of the word in this sense, may consult the notes of Gataker on Antoninus, lib. iv. §. 49. p. 178.

[4] Ver. 44. Κρατήσατε αὐτὸν, Hold him fast, and lead him away securely.] It is probable that Judas thought they could not do this, but that as Jesus had at other times conveyed himself from the multitude, when they attempted to cast him down a precipice, (Luke iv. 30.) or to stone him, (John viii. 59. x. 39.) so he would have done now. And when he found that he did not rescue himself, he repented, and went and hanged himself. (Matt. xxvii. 5.)

[5] Ver. 47. Εἷς δέ τις τῶν παρεστηκότων σπασάμενος τὴν μάχαιραν, And one that stood by drew a sword.] viz. Simon Peter, John xviii. 10. Hence, saith Beza, the ancients may be confuted, who with so great consent say that Mark writ this Gospel from the mouth of Peter, for why should Peter deny his name, who speaks so fully of his denial of his Lord? I answer, so doth St. Matthew and St. Luke speak as plainly of his denial, and yet both conceal his name who drew the sword. (2.) The ancients only say that Mark wrote his Gospel at the desire of others, Peter neither forbidding nor commanding it to be done; and that it being done, he did κυρῶσαι τὴν γραφὴν εἰς ἔντευξιν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις, confirm the reading it in the church. (Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. ii. cap. 15. lib. vi. cap. 14.)

[6] Ver. 51. Καὶ εἷς τις νεανίσκος ἠκολούθει αὐτῷ, And there followed him a certain young man, &c.] Epiphanius and St. Jerome think this young man was James the brother of our Lord; but he had forsook him, and fled, (ver. 50.) and we read nothing of his return. St. Chrysostom, Ambrose, and Gregory, say he was John; but John was with Christ in the garden clothed, (ver. 33.) and afterward fled from him, (ver. 50.) How then can it be like he should fly naked away? Note also, that those words, he fled away naked, need not be so understood as if he had no garment, but only so, as that he had a linen garment left. And so Dionysius Alexandrinus saith of himself, ἤμην γυμνὸς ἐν τῷ λινῷ ἐσθήματι, I was naked, having only a linen garment. (Apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. vi. cap. 40. see the note on John xxi. 7.)

[7] Ver. 53. Καὶ ἀπήγαγον αὐτὸν πρὸς τὸν ἀρχιερέα, And they brought him to the high-priest.] That is, to Caiaphas; (Matt. xxvi. 57.) for though it be evident from John xviii. 13, 14. that he was first brought to Annas, yet, because there was nothing done to him there, and he seems only to be detained there till the council met at the house of Caiaphas was ready for him, the other evangelists pass that over in silence.

[8] Ver. 55, 56. Ἐζήτουν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ μαρτυρίαν, εἰς τὸ θανατῶσαι αὐτὸν, καὶ οὐχ εὕρισκον. Πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐψευδομαρτύρουν κατ' αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἴσαι αἱ μαρτυρίαι οὐκ ἦσαν, They sought for witness against him to put him to death; and found none. For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.] If they had many false witnesses, it cannot be true that they found no witness against him. This latter clause therefore, and the like, ver. 59. should be rendered, their testimonies were not equal, viz. to the charge laid against him, that he was worthy to die; or they were not sufficient, εἰς τὸ θανατῶσαι αὐτὸν, to cause him to be put to death, either not testifying two of the same thing, or else not charging him with a crime that deserved death by the law. For a vain-glorious boast of destroying the temple could not be capital, especially being attended with a promise of rebuilding it in three days.

[9] Ver. 62. Ἐγώ εἰμι, I am he.] The answer, Matt. xxvi. 62. σὺ εἶπας, i. e. I am what thou hast said, is the same; for these two phrases are of equal import in the Hebrew idiom: so that we need not here St. Austin's subtilty, viz. non ego dico, sed tu ais.

[10] Ver. 72. Καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν, ἔκλαιε, And when he thought thereon, he wept.] I think this reading may be maintained; for though Casaubon gave no instance of this signification of the word, Constantine proves out of Philoponus, Dionysius, and St. Basil, that it signifies κατανοεῖν, mente agitare, to consider of, and ponder, or fix the mind upon a thing. So Eustathius says, ἐπιβάλλει γοῦν τις νοήματι, ἢ ἔργῳ, ἤγουν ἠκριβωμένως ἐγχειρεῖ, καὶ ἐπιτυχῶς νοεῖ· the word ἐπιβάλλω respects either the action, and then it signifies exactly to take it in hand; or the mind, and then it signifies to consider of it as we are able; or, as Phavorinus interprets it, ἐπιβόλως νοεῖν, aptly and wisely to consider of it. So again, ἐπιβάλλει τις (saith Phavorinus) ἐπιτιθεὶς, ἢ νοῶν, ἐπιβάλλει οὖν τις νοήματι, &c. ἐπιβάλλεσθαι, ἐπιθυμεῖν, ἐπιβαλλόμενος, ἐπιθυμῶν, i. e. the word signifies to think upon, or consider of, a thing; and Theophylact here renders it ἐνόησας: and this is sufficient to justify our own translation, that Peter, remembering what our Saviour had foretold concerning his denial, and considering how exactly, but shamefully (after all his confident engagements to the contrary), he had fulfilled the same, was filled with compunction, and wept bitterly. (2.) Whereas the other evangelists say, ἐξελθὼν ἔξω, he went forth, and wept there; there is another exposition of the word ἐπιβαλὼν, which makes it agree with them, and that is, "projiciens se foras," rushing out from the company, or casting himself out, he wept: and plain it is, that in the book of Maccabees it often signifies irruens, or se projiciens; as when Gorgias attempted ἐπιβαλεῖν εἰς τὴν παρεμβολὴν, "projicere se," to rush in upon the camp of the Jews, (1 Macc. iv. 2.) and Judas, νυκτὸς ἐπιβαλὼν, rushing upon the Jamnites by night, set fire on the haven: (2 Macc. xii. 9. see also xiii. 15. xv. 1.) but the most pertinent instance to this purpose is in Psal. cviii. 10. where אשליך בעלו "projiciam, vel emittam calceamentum meum," I will cast forth my shoe, is in the Greek, ἐπιβαλῶ τὸ ὑπόδημά μου. Here therefore understand only ἑαυτόν, and the sense will run agreeably to St. Matthew and St. Luke; and casting himself forth, he wept.

CHAP. XV.

1. AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and (upon that consultation they) bound Jesus, and carried him away, [1] and delivered him to Pilate.

2. And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering said to him, Thou sayest it (i. e. it is as thou sayest).

3. And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing.

4. And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold, how many things they witness against thee.

5. But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

6. Now [2] at (or after the manner of) the feast he released to them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7. And there was one named Barabbas, who lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8. And the multitude [3] crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done to them (at that feast).

9. But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release to you the King of the Jews?

10. (For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy.)

11. But the chief priests moved the people, that (they would desire) [4] he should rather release Barabbas to them (and they accordingly did so).

12. And (then) Pilate answered and said again to them, What will ye then that I shall do to him whom ye call the King of the Jews?

13. And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14. Then Pilate said to them, Why (desire you this)? what evil hath he done (to deserve this punishment)? And (but) they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15. And so Pilate, (being) willing to content the people, released Barabbas to them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified.

16. And the soldiers led him (immediately) away into the hall called Pretorium; and they call together the whole band.

17. And they clothed him with purple (the robe of kings), and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head,

18. And began to salute him (saying, in raillery), Hail, King of the Jews!

19. And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and, bowing their knees, worshipped him.

20. And when they had (thus) mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him.

21. And they compel one Simon, a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, (and who was) the father of Alexander and Rufus, (two celebrated Christians afterward, Acts xix. 33. Rom. xvi. 13.) to bear his cross.

22. And they bring him to the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull.

23. And (there) they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not (being not willing, by any stupifying draughts, to allay his pains).

24. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

25. [5] And it was the third hour, and (when) they crucified him.

26. And [6] the superscription of his accusation was written over (his head thus), THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27. And with him they crucified two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28. [7] And (thus) the Scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors.

29. And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days,

30. Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others, (but) himself he cannot save.

32. Let Christ, (who styles himself) the King of Israel, descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they (one of them) that were crucified with him reviled him.

33. And when the sixth hour was come, there [8] was darkness over the whole land (of Judea) till the ninth hour.

34. And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

35. And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias.

36. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

37. And Jesus cried (again) with a loud voice (saying, Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit), and (so) gave up the ghost.

38. And (then) the veil of the temple (which parted the holy place from the most holy) was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. (See paraphrase on Matt. xxvii. 51.)

39. And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and (Gr. that he so crying) gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.

40. There were also women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome;

41. Who also, when he was in Galilee, followed him (as he was teaching), and ministered to him; and many other women which came up with him to Jerusalem.

42. And now when the even was come (because it was (the even of) the preparation, that is, (of) the day before the sabbath),

43. Joseph of Arimathea, an [9] honourable counsellor, who also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly to Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus (might be given him).

44. And Pilate marvelled if he were (that he was) already dead: and calling to him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45. And when he knew it of (i. e. the certainty from) the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

46. And he brought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone to the door of the sepulchre.

47. And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joses, beheld where he was laid.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΑΡΕ'ΔΩΚΑΝ τῷ Πιλάτῳ, They delivered him to Pilate.] Here the observation of Theophylact is this, The Jews delivered up our Lord to the Romans, and they for that sin were themselves given up into the hands of the Romans.

[2] Ver. 6. Κατὰ δὲ ἑορτὴν ἀπέλυεν, And at the feast he delivered up to them a prisoner whomsoever they desired.] I conceive that ἀπέλυεν here is not put for εἰώθει ἀπολύειν, (Matt. xxvii. 15.) he was wont to deliver up, as Mr. Le Clerc thinks, rather κατὰ δὲ ἑορτὴν should be rendered, "ad morem festi, or secundum morem festi," after the manner of the feast; as κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak after the manner of a man, Rom. iii. 5. Gal. iii. 15. κατ' ἄνθρωπον περιπατεῖν, is to walk after the manner of men, 1 Cor. iii. 3. to fight with beasts at Ephesus, κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, after the manner of men, 1 Cor. xv. 32. so κατὰ Θεὸν, "Dei in morem," after the example of God; and among the Attics, κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ, that is, κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον, after the same manner. Now the feast of the Passover being celebrated in memory of their release from Egypt, it was agreeable to the nature of that feast to make this release at that time, and therefore customary.

[3] Ver. 8. Ἀναβοήσας, Crying out.] The Vulgate and some MS. copies read here ἀναβὰς, or ἀναβήσας· but the Alexandrian copy, Theophylact, and all the eastern versions, reading as we do, and the thirteenth verse saying that πάλιν ἔκραξαν, they cried out again, this must pass only for a mistake of the copier, or of the abbreviation used by him.

[4] Ver. 11. But the chief priests moved the people, ἵνα μᾶλλον Βαραββᾶν ἀπολύσῃ αὐτοῖς, that he should rather release Barabbas to them.] i. e. That he should release Barabbas, and not Jesus; for their cry was this, Not this man, but Barabbas, John xviii. 40. And that the comparative μᾶλλον is often in sense negative, see the note on 1 Tim. i. 4. so Matt. x. 5. Go not into the way of the gentiles, πορεύεσθε μᾶλλον, but go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, ver. 6. Mark ix. 43. It is good to go into life lame, μᾶλλον, and not having two hands to go to hell; Eph. iv. 28. Let him that stole steal no more, μᾶλλον δὲ κοπιάτω, but contrariwise let him labour; v. 4. Let not there be among you filthiness, or scurrilous speaking, μᾶλλον δὲ, but giving thanks. (See John xii. 43. Rom. xiv. 13. Eph. v. 11.)

Ver. 14. and Matt. xxvii. 13. Τί γὰρ κακὸν ἐποίησεν.] Stephanus, and other critics note, that here, and Acts xix. 35. τίς γάρ ἐστιν ἄνθρωπος, the particle γὰρ seems redundant, which also our translation seems to own by not translating it in either of these places; yet doth it rather seem to be here, as elsewhere it is, a rational particle, and to have an elegant relation, by way of answer, to what went before. So when the high-priest had said of Jesus, Crucify him; Pilate's answer is, Why should I crucify him; for what evil hath he done? And in the latter place the town-clerk, to appease the cry of the rabble, Great is Diana of the Ephesians, (ver. 28.) answers, What needs this cry; for who knoweth not that the city of Ephesus is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana?

[5] Ver. 25. Ἦν δὲ ὥρα τρίτη, καὶ ἐσταύρωσαν αὐτὸν, And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.] But St. John saith, it was ὥρα ὡσει ἕκτη, about the sixth hour, xix. 14. when even, he was condemned to crucifixion. But then it must be observed, that the Greek MSS. produced by Camerarius, Beza, and R. Stephanus, read in St. John, ὡσει τρίτη, about the third hour; that Nonnus seems to have read so, his paraphrase running after this manner, ἦν δὲ τιταινομένη τριτάτη θανατηφόρος ὥρα, the third hour was not yet past; that Theophylact contends it ought to be so read, and that because the three other evangelists unanimously say, that the darkness began at the sixth hour, which yet began not till after our Lord had hung upon the cross some considerable time; till after the soldiers had divided his garments, the Jews had mocked him, and bid him come down from the cross, and the discourse had passed between the two thieves among themselves, and betwixt the repenting thief and our Lord: and, lastly, the author of the Constantinopolitan Chronicle saith expressly, that τὰ ἀκριβῆ βίβλια αὐτό τε τὸ ἰδιόχειρον τοῦ εὐαγγελίστου Ἰωαννοῦ, that the exacter copies, and the manuscript of St. John kept till his time at Ephesus, read ὥρα ὡσει τρίτη, about the third hour. (See St. Jerome, in Psal. lxxvii.) And the change from γ the third to ϛ the sixth, is so easy, that this may very reasonably be owned in the latter copies of St. John's Gospel; especially if we consider how punctual St. Mark is in the enumeration of the hours, saying, It was the third hour, and they crucified him, or began to lead him away to be crucified; and, ver. 33. when the sixth hour was come, from that time there was darkness over the whole earth till the ninth hour; and, ver. 34. at the ninth hour Jesus expired.

This I prefer before the exposition of some others, that St. John speaks of the hours according to the Roman, and St. Mark according to the computation of the Jews; first, because this alters not the difficulty, there being the same distance of time betwixt the Romans' sixth, and the Jews' third hour, as between the Jews' third and their sixth, i. e. three hours' difference. And, secondly, because the vulgar hours, by which the Romans reckoned, and the hours of the Jews were the same, viz. twelve, as our Lord shews in these words, Are there not twelve hours of the day? John xi. 9. and Dempster in these words, dies civilis duodecim horarum; (Auctu. p. 175.) the civil day of the Romans contained twelve hours. And, thirdly, if St. Mark, writing his Gospel at Rome for the Romans there, retains the Jewish hours, we have more reason to conceive that St. John should do so.

[6] Ver. 26. Καὶ ἦν ἡ ἐπιγραφὴ τῆς αἰτίας αὐτοῦ ἐπιγεγραμμένη, And the superscription of his accusation was written.] This is spoken according to the manner of the Romans, by whom the title of the crimes, for which the criminals were condemned, were either carried before them, or affixed to the instrument of their punishment: thus Dio* speaks of a Roman servant crucified by his master, μετὰ γραμμάτων τὴν αἰτίαν τῆς θανατώσεως δηλούντων, with a writing declaring the cause of his death. See of this matter other instances in Lipsius de Cruce, lib. ii. cap. 11. p. 52, 53.

[7] Ver. 28. Καὶ ἐπληρώθη ἡ γραφὴ, And the Scripture was fulfilled, which saith, Isa. liii. 12. And he was numbered with the transgressors.] Seeing Abarbanel, and R. Moses Alshe,† testify that their rabbins did with one mouth confess that the words of this chapter were spoken of Messiah the king, and they bring in God inquiring of the Messiah thus,‡ Wilt thou heal and redeem my sons after six thousand years? Wilt thou bear chastisement to expiate their iniquities according to what is written, Isa. liii. 4. Surely he bore our griefs? they cannot reasonably deny that these words were fulfilled by Christ's crucifixion between two thieves.

[8] Ver. 33. Σκότος ἐγένετο ἐφ' ὅλην τὴν γῆν, There was darkness over the whole earth.] Of this darkness Africanus§ speaks thus, τοῦτο τὸ σκότος ἔκλειψιν ἡλίου Θάλλος ἐπικαλεῖ τρίτῃ τῶν ἱστοριῶν, ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ ἀλόγως, this darkness Thallus calls an eclipse of the sun in the third book of his history, but without reason, as I conceive. Origen‖ saith, Phlegon in the fourteenth book of his Chronicles writ of the defection of the sun under Tiberius Cæsar, in whose reign it is manifest that our Lord suffered. Tertullian¶ saith, that this prodigious darkening of the sun was recorded in the Roman archives; For (saith he) at the same moment about noontide the day was withdrawn, they, who knew not that this was foretold concerning Christ, thought it was an eclipse. And Eusebius in his Chronicle, at the eighteenth year of Tiberius, saith, Christ suffered this year. In which time we find in other commentaries of the heathens these words, There was a defection of the sun, Bithynia was shaken with an earthquake, and many houses fell down in the city of Nice: and then he proceeds to the testimony of Phlegon.

[9] Ver. 43. Εὐσχήμων βουλευτὴς, An honourable counsellor.] That is, saith Dr. Hammond, a decurio, one of those who were appointed for a standing council to a Roman colony. But against this Mr. Le Clerc objects that he was Joseph of Arimathea; now, saith he, that was never reputed a Roman colony, and therefore he conjectures he is here named a counsellor, as being one of the greater Sanhedrin, or of the council of the high-priest, who had a chamber in the temple, in which he consulted with the priests, called the chamber of the counsellors, saith Dr. Lightfoot here; they who were of the council of the high-priest being called, saith he, βουλευταὶ, counsellors. And this is the most likely, because Arimathea was a city of Judea; this Joseph had a sepulchre in Jerusalem, and waited for the consolation of Israel, which are indications rather of a Jew than of a Roman; and especially because it is peculiarly noted of him by St. Luke, that he consented not to the counsel or actions of them who destroyed our Lord, (xxiii. 51.) He therefore might have consented to them, being one of the Sanhedrin: hence he is introduced, John xix. 38, 39. with Nicodemus, who certainly was one of the great Sanhedrin, John iii. 1. vii. 50. doing kind offices to Christ; the first, begging his body, that it might not be buried in the common burial-place of malefactors; the other, bringing spices to embalm him, as being both disciples of the holy Jesus. (Matt. xxvii. 57.)

CHAP. XVI.

1. AND when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, (who) [1] had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint (i. e. embalm) him (set out).

2. And [2] very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came to the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

3. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4. And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away; for (that which made them solicitous about it, was, that) it was very great.

5. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw (one in the shape of) a young man sitting on the right side (of the sepulchre), clothed with a long white garment; and they were affrighted (at the sight of him).

6. And he saith to them, Be not (ye) affrighted: (for) ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified: he is risen; he is not here; (come near, and) behold the place where they laid him.

7. But go your way, tell his disciples, and (especially) [3] Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, (according) as he said to you.

8. And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled, and were amazed (at the sight): neither said they any thing to any man (whom they met by the way); for they were afraid.

9. Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils.

10. And she went and told them that had been with him (his disciples), as they mourned and wept.

11. And (but) they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

12. After that he appeared in another form to two of them, as they walked (to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 13.) and (so) went into the country.

13. And they went and told it to the residue: [4] neither believed they them (see the note).

14. Afterward he appeared to the eleven as they sat at meat, and [5] upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them who had seen him after he was risen.

15. And he said to them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every [6] creature, (to all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19.)

16. He that believeth and is baptized [7] shall be saved, (by his continuance in that faith, 1 Cor. xv. 2. Colos. i. 23.) but he that believeth not (the gospel preached, and by miracles confirmed to him), shall be damned.

17. And these [8] signs shall follow them that believe: (By virtue of that faith) in my name shall they cast out devils; (and) they shall speak with new tongues (which they had not learned).

18. They shall take up serpents (without being hurt by them); and if they drink any deadly thing, (the poison of) it shall not hurt them; they shall lay their hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

19. So then after the Lord had spoken (thus) to them, he was received up into heaven, and sat at the right hand of God.

20. And they went forth (after the Holy Ghost had come upon them), and preached every where; the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen (i. e. So it was).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΗΓΟΡΑΣΑΝ ἀρώματα, Had bought spices.] This translation is justified from Luke xxiii. 56. where it is said, They prepared these spices (before), and rested on the sabbath-day; so that the aorist is here put for the perfect tense. (See examples of like nature, note on 1 Cor. v. 9.)

[2] Ver. 2. Καὶ λίαν πρωὶ τῆς μιᾶς τῶν σαββάτων ἔρχονται ἐπὶ τὸ μνημεῖον, Very early in the morning.] Ὀψὲ τῶν σαββάτων, τῇ ἐπιφωσκούσῃ εἰς μίαν Σ. In the end of the week, as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, Matt. xxviii. 1. on the first day of the week, ὄρθρου βαθέος, very early in the morning, Luke xxiv. 1. σκοτίας ἔτι οὔσης, when it was yet dark, John xx. 1. i. e. they began their journey to see the sepulchre, whilst it was only twilight, or whilst there was a mixture of light and darkness, saith St. Matthew, ὀψὲ τῶν σαββάτων, after the end of the former week (see the note there); they passed through the city, and came to the sepulchre, ἀνατειλάντος τοῦ ἡλίου, as the sun began to arise. This may be illustrated from a passage of Agellius,* that when two times immediately succeed one another, it matters not whether we reckon from the end of the one, or the beginning of the other.

* "Tempora duo cum inter se opposita sunt, atque ita cohærentia, ut alterius finis cum alterius initio misceatur, non refert utrum per extremitatem prioris, an per initium sequentis, locus ipse confinis demonstretur," lib. vii. cap. 21.

[3] Ver. 7. Καὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ, Say to his disciples, and to Peter.] Peter is here named, not as prince of the apostles, but, as the fathers say, for his consolation, to take off the scruple which might lie upon his spirit; whether, after his threefold denial of his Master, he had not forfeited his right to be one of Christ's disciples. So St. Gregory,* Jerome, St. Chrysostom, and others.

[4] Ver. 13. Οὐδὲ ἐκείνοις ἐπίστευσαν, Nor believed they them.] And, ver. 11. they believed not; When he shewed them his hands and feet, they believed not for joy, Luke xxiv. 41. When they saw him, according to his promise, in Galilee, some doubted, Matt. xxviii. 17. Hence one of the ancients says well, "Nos de illorum dubitatione solidari," Their doubting is the confirmation of our faith; and the more difficulty they shewed in believing Christ's resurrection, the greater reason have we to believe it; for the testimony of them, who believed not themselves till after unquestionable conviction, is the more credible on that account.

[5] Ver. 14. Ὠνείδισε τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν, καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, &c. He upbraided them for their unbelief and hardness of heart, that they believed not them that had seen him.] That after so many assurances from his own mouth, that he would rise again the third day; and after so many eye-witnesses, that he had performed his promise, they believed not: and, if this be attributed to them as culpable unbelief, and hardness of heart, surely they must much more be guilty of these sins, who, after the testimony of these apostles, and five hundred more eye-witnesses of his resurrection; after the ocular testimony of a whole world of Christians, touching the mighty miracles performed in his name by the apostles, the chosen witnesses of his resurrection, and by many others, who believed it, and were baptized into this faith; after so many internal and external experiments all Christian churches had of the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, exercised before their eyes and their assemblies, and by themselves, for a whole age together,—do yet continue to disbelieve that resurrection, and the faith confirmed by it.

[6] Ver. 15. Preach the gospel, πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, to every creature.] i. e. To all men; not in opposition to, but in conjunction with, the Jews, to whom they were first to preach it; for so their commission runs, viz. To preach εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. (See this more fully, note on Rom. viii. 23.)

[7] Ver. 16. Ὁ πιστεύσας καὶ βαπτισθεὶς, σωθήσεται· ὁ δὲ ἀπιστήσας, κατακριθήσεται, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.] He shall be saved, i. e. he shall by virtue of that faith and baptism be put into a state of salvation; so that, if he continue in that faith, and do not wilfully recede from his baptismal covenant, he shall actually be saved: of which import of the phrase, salvation and being saved, see note on Eph. ii. 8. Note also, that they who hence conclude that infants are not capable of baptism, because they cannot believe, must also hence conclude they cannot be saved; faith being here more expressly required to salvation than to baptism. Note, thirdly, That in the second clause baptism is omitted, because it is not simply the want of baptism, but the contemptuous neglect of it, which makes men guilty of damnation; otherwise, infants might be damned for the mistakes or the profaneness of their parents.

[8] Ver. 17. Σημεῖα δὲ τοῖς πιστεύσασι ταῦτα παρακολουθήσει, And these signs shall follow them that believe, &c.] Of the casting out devils, the healing diseases, the speaking with new tongues, see the general preface to the Epistles, §. 17—19. Of the drinking of deadly poisons, I find but four instances recorded in history; that of Barsabas,* who, saith Papias, drank of it without hurt; that of the Cecilian soldier, mentioned by Ado in his Martyrology; that of Sabinus, bishop of Canoso, mentioned by Gregory of Tours; and that of Joshua ben Levi, who, having drunk a deadly poison, was, saith the Jewish Talmud, cured by pronouncing the name of Jesus. Of taking up serpents without hurt, though venomous, we find in Scripture only the instance of St. Paul, Acts xxviii. 5. and in church-history we find but few of any credit, though the words of Tertullian† seem to intimate, that the faith of Christians not only preserved themselves, but helped even heathens. And miracles of this nature being more liable to exceptions than those which were performed upon unbelievers; it being easy to imagine they might have some antidotes against the venom of those beasts, or the pernicious operations of those draughts, it seemed good to Providence to be more sparing in affording them.—

By way of appendix to this chapter, it may be noted, that St. Jerome hath long since told us, that this chapter was rarely to be found in this Gospel, and that scarce any of the Greek copies had it: but, notwithstanding these words of Jerome, it is evident, that this chapter was owned in the times of Irenæus,‡ who cites the nineteenth verse of it, and says, that St. Mark, in the end of his Gospel tells us, that Christ ascended into heaven, &c. The Apostolical Constitutions§ cite these words, ver. 16. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. They also fully cite the seventeenth and eighteenth verses.‖ This chapter is also to be found in all the versions, and, as Beza testifies, in all the old MSS. Nor doth Theophylact, in his notes upon it, take notice of any Greek copies where it had been wanting.

And as for the seeming opposition betwixt what is recorded in this chapter, and in the other evangelists, which St. Jerome¶ tells us, was the occasion why this chapter was by some rejected; I shall first enumerate them, and then endeavour to return a sufficient answer to them.

Obj. 1. St. Matthew and St. Mark make mention only of one angel appearing to and speaking with the women which came to the sepulchre; whereas St. Luke and St. John mention two angels.

Ans. I cannot here approve the solution of Vossius, that one angel only is mentioned by St. Matthew and St. Mark, because one only spake to the women; seeing St. Luke saith in the plural, εἶπον πρὸς αὐτὰς, the angels said unto them, xxiv. 15. St. John λέγουσι αὐτῇ ἐκεῖνοι, they said to Mary Magdalene, xx. 13. besides, the place of their appearance and the words they speak differ from the place and words of the first angel.

I answer, therefore, that one only is mentioned by St. Matthew and St. Mark, because the women standing without the inward sepulchre, or being only on the floor or pavement of it, saw but one angel, who said unto them, He is not here, he is risen; come, see the place where the Lord lay; and then go tell his disciples and Peter of it: (Matt. xxviii. 6. Mark xvi. 6.) but when, in obedience to the words of this angel, they proceed to look into the cave, or inward sepulchre, where the Lord lay, they see two other angels, one sitting at Christ's head, another at his feet, where his body was laid, (John xx. 12. Luke xxiv. 5.) and saying words the other did not, but giving them no intimation that they should tell these things to Christ's disciples; and this seems to be a plain account of this matter, from the very words of the evangelists.

Obj. 2. St. John and St. Matthew say, the women stood without the sepulchre, when they saw the angel or angels; St. Mark and St. Luke, that they had this vision when they were come within the sepulchre.

Ans. That the truth of the matter of this objection may be justly questioned. For, first, as St. John saith of Mary Magdalene, she stood πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον, at the sepulchre, which may signify either within or without, ver. 11. so ver. 1. he saith, she came εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον, into the sepulchre: and that she was upon the pavement, or in the outward sepulchre, when she is said to stand at the sepulchre, is evident from this, that only by stooping down she looked down into the cave, or inward sepulchre, where the angels stood at the place where his body had been laid, (ver. 11, 12.) St. Matthew saith nothing directly of the place where the women were when they saw the angel; but because he saith, that the angel sat upon the stone which he had rolled from the sepulchre, hence they conclude that the angel sat without the sepulchre; but the stone being rolled to the mouth of the cave, or inward sepulchre, where Christ's body lay, (Matt. xxvii. 60.) the angel might sit upon it thus rolled away, and yet sit in a part of the outward sepulchre, or pavement, as St. Mark saith he did, ver. 5. when he bid the women come, and see where the Lord lay. In a word, they were without the cave, or sepulchre, according to St. Matthew; but within the pavement, outward fence, sept or wall of the outward sepulchre, when they saw the single angel, as St. Mark saith; being invited, Mary Magdalene stoops down into the cave, or inward sepulchre, of which St. Luke and St. John speak, and sees two angels present there, in a quiescent posture, represented in Scripture sometimes by sitting, sometimes by standing.

Obj. 3. St. Mark saith, ver. 8. the women said nothing to any man; the other three evangelists, that they told these things to the apostles, or disciples.

Ans. And so saith St. Mark expressly, that they went and told these things, τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ, to those who belonged to Christ, and were usually with him, (ver. 10, 11.) And he saith only, (ver. 8.) that during their flight from the sepulchre, and amazement, before Christ's appearance to Mary, (ver. 9.) they said nothing to any whom they met about the sepulchre.

Obj. 4. St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke say, that the women came first to the sepulchre; saw the angel or angels; yea, and Christ too, say Matthew and Mark, before they came to the apostles; St. John saith, Christ was seen of Mary, after St. John and Peter had been at the sepulchre.

Ans. I answer here again, the matter of fact seems not exactly related in this objection: for John saith expressly, as the other evangelists did, that Mary Magdalene came first to the sepulchre, and saw the stone rolled away, (ver. 1.) and that she ran and told Peter and John of it: (ver. 2.) he therefore doth not, or could not say, that Peter and John came before Mary to the sepulchre. Moreover, it is plain from all the other evangelists, and especially from St. Luke, that Peter and John went to the sepulchre after she had told these things to the apostles; for having said this, ver. 10. he adds, ver. 12. that Peter rising up, ran to the sepulchre: and ver. 22, 23. he introduces two disciples speaking thus to Christ, Some women of our own being early at the sepulchre, made us astonished; for they came, saying, They had seen a vision of angels, who told them that he was alive. Vain here seems the imagination of some, who say, St. John speaks here of Peter and John first, because their testimony was to be preferred before the testimony of women; for they neither saw Christ, nor had a vision, telling them that he was risen, as the women had and did, but only saw his body was not there, which the Jews denied not. The words therefore of St. John, ver. 11. Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει, may be rendered thus, Mary had stood at the sepulchre, and, stooping down, had seen; and then there is no word of any difference in the order of this narration among the evangelists, though nothing is more slight than that: or else it may be said, that St. John thus postpones the story of Mary Magdalene, because he having a particular thing to say of her, (ver. 15.) which all the other evangelists had omitted, he would put her whole story together.

Obj. 5. St. Matthew saith, the women held Christ's feet, (ver. 9.) but St. John, that Christ said to Mary Magdalene, Touch me not, (ver. 17.)

Ans. True it is that St. John saith, Christ spake thus to her; but he saith not that Christ said this before she had touched him; and therefore he saith nothing in opposition to St. Matthew. Besides, the meaning of those words, Touch me not, is only this, Be not so solicitous to hold me, as if I was immediately to go hence, and thou shouldest see me no more; thou mayest have time sufficient for that, for I do not yet ascend. (See the note on John xx. 17.)

Obj. 6. Here it is said, ver. 12, 13. that the two disciples returning from Emmaus told these things, (concerning our Lord's resurrection) to the residue, neither believed they them: but Luke xxiv. 34. it is said, that at their return they heard them, saying, The Lord is risen again, and hath appeared to Simon.

Ans. They said this indeed, but none with a firm faith, excluding doubting; for after this Jesus himself appearing to them, doubtful thoughts arose within them: (Luke xxiv. 38.) and when our Lord hath shewn them his hands and his feet, they believed not yet for joy, and wondered, ver. 41. (See Dr. Lightfoot on Luke xxiv. 34.)

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the day on which our Lord did eat the passover with his disciples.

FOR resolution of this question, let it be noted:

First, That the paschal lamb was to be killed in the evening of the fourteenth day of the month Nisan; for so we read, Exod. xii. 6. And the whole congregation shall kill it in the evening, or between the two evenings, saith the Hebrew: so also Lev. xxiii. 5. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even (Hebr. between the two evenings) shall be the Lord's Passover. Now hence we learn, that though the day of the Jews began and ended at the evening, yet was it the latter even, on the fourteenth day, in which the passover was to be killed; because the Jews had not two evenings in the morning, but only in the close of the day, the latter evening beginning at the setting of the sun: and (2.) because the fifteenth day, or first day of unleavened bread, began immediately after the eating of the paschal lamb; and therefore, ver. 7. is called the day when they did sacrifice the passover; and the seven days of it were accounted from that day to the twenty-first day of the same month; (Exod. xii. 17, 18.) whereas had they been reckoned from the beginning of the fourteenth day, there would have been not seven only, but eight days of unleavened bread. Accordingly Josephus* doth inform us, that they did kill the paschal lambs, ἀπὸ ἐννάτης ὥρας μέχρι ἑνδεκάτης, from the ninth hour to the eleventh. Note,

Secondly, That the paschal lamb was to be killed and offered at a set time, and the whole congregation was never to transfer it to another season: for it is expressly said, Exod. xii. 14. This day (of the Passover) shall be to you for a memorial, and ye shall keep it (i. e. this same day) as a feast by an ordinance for ever; and, xiii. 10. Thou shalt keep this ordinance (of the Passover, and of the feast of unleavened bread) למועדה in its set time from year to year: and, Lev. xxiii. 5. On the fourteenth day at even shall be the Lord's Passover: whence it is evident, there could be no translation of either of these feasts to another day, time, or season, without plain violation of the law of Moses.

Moreover, The reason of the translation assigned by those who hold the Jews did thus translate it when our Saviour suffered, is this, viz. That this was done, that the first day of unleavened bread, being as a sabbath, might fall upon a sabbath-day, lest two sabbaths should succeed each other: whereas it is evident, that, upon this translation, two sabbaths must succeed each other; for the seventh day of unleavened bread, being a sabbath as much as the first, Exod. xii. 16. must then fall upon the Friday following, and so two sabbaths must succeed each the other.

Thirdly, That Christ did eat the last passover with his disciples at the day and time accustomed, and did not anticipate the day, seems evident from the concurrent testimony of three evangelists, and from the reason of the thing. For,

First, St. Matthew saith, xxvi. 17. that the first day of unleavened bread Christ's disciples did prepare, and at the even of that day Christ with them did eat the passover; St. Mark, xiv. 12. that the first day of unleavened bread the Jews killed the passover; St. Luke, that then came, or was coming, the day of unleavened bread, in which the passover ought to be killed, Luke xxii. 7. He therefore did eat the passover, ὅτε ἔθυον, when the Jews killed it; and in the day, ἐν ᾗ ἔδει θύεσθαι, in which it ought to be eaten; and on the first day of unleavened bread, which was contemporary with the Passover, according to those words of St. Mark, After two days was the Passover, and the feast of unleavened bread. (Mark xiv. 1.) Whereas both could not have been on the same day, had not the feast of unleavened bread begun on the fourteenth of Nisan: and therefore Maimonides and others, on Exod. xii. 15. Deut. xvi. 4. say, that the fourteenth of Nisan is called the first day of unleavened bread; it being said, Exod. xii. 15. at even, the first day, ye shall put leaven out of your houses, and yet they did this on the fourteenth after mid-day: and, Deut. xvi. 4. there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee seven days; neither shall any of the flesh (of the paschal lamb), which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain till the morning. Whence it appears, that though the fifteenth of Nisan was the first day of unleavened bread, as to the holy convocation, yet was the fourteenth the first day as to the separation of leaven from their houses: and therefore, in relation to this computation, Josephus saith,† Ἑορτὴν ἄγομεν ἐφ' ἡμέρας ὄκτω τὴν τῶν ἀζύμων λεγομένην, We celebrate the feast of unleavened bread eight days. And again, that† Ἐνστάσης τῆς τῶν ἀζύμων ἑορτῆς θύσαντες τὴν λεγομένην πάσχα, that when the feast of unleavened bread was come, they, sacrificing the passover in the days of king Josias, offered other sacrifices, ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ, for seven days following. He therefore who did eat it on the first day of unleavened bread, did eat it on the fourteenth day of Nisan, and on the day when the Jews did so. Vain therefore is the observation, that Christ is said not θύειν, to kill or sacrifice, but only ποιεῖν and φάγειν, to celebrate and eat the passover, seeing he did it at the time, ὅτε ἔθυον, when the Jews killed the passover, and sent his disciples to prepare, i. e. to kill, and dress it for him, as usually (saith Dr. Lightfoot) servants did for their masters, that he might eat of it. And vainer still is the argument from the word ποιῶ, with thee do I eat; not ποιήσω, I will eat the passover, Matt. xxvi. 18. for seeing the disciples went to prepare it, that he might eat of it, Mark xiv. 12. 14. seeing they prepared it at the time when the Jews did and ought to kill the passover, and seeing he comes in the evening of that day to eat it, according to the commandment, with the twelve, Mark xiv. 17. it is evident, these words are well rendered, I will keep the Passover at thy house when my disciples have prepared it.

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 45.

* Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5. p. 65. D. † Ibid. lib. iii. cap. 14. p. 394. D.

Arg. 2. Secondly, Christ saith to his disciples, Ye know that after two days is the Passover, Matt. xxvi. 2. and Mark xiv. 1. the Passover and the feast of unleavened bread was after two days; or, as St. Luke hath it, The feast of unleavened bread, called the Passover, xxii. 1. and that Christ did not eat it till the first day of unleavened bread, hath been proved already, therefore he did not eat it till after those two days, when the disciples and the Jews knew the passover was by them to be eaten.

Arg. 3. Thirdly, The day following, i. e. the day on which Christ suffered, was a feast-day, for Barabbas was released at the feast, Matt. xxvii. 15. Mark xv. 6. Luke xxiii. 17. Now the feast of unleavened bread, in which a holy convocation was held, was the day after the Passover, as we read, Lev. xxiii. 4—6. In the fifteenth day of the first month is the Lord's Passover; and on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread; in the first day ye shall have a holy convocation.

Fourthly, If Christ had celebrated the Passover by an anticipation on the thirteenth of Nisan, he had violated the law, which expressly requires the celebration of it on the fourteenth day, and upon that account might have been justly liable to the censure of the Jews; nor would his disciples have come to him, before the time appointed by the law, and by the rulers of the Jews, with that question, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover? (Matt. xxvi. 17. Mark xiv. 12.) nor would they, without scruple, have eaten with him against the letter of the law, or the custom of their nation: and that they did not so is plain, because they put this question to him only on the first day of unleavened bread, in which the passover ought to be eaten, saith St. Luke.

Fifthly, It is confessed on all hands, that our Lord suffered on Friday; and also, that, at the same time that he did eat the passover, he instituted the holy sacrament of the Lord's supper; and yet, that he did this the same night that he was betrayed, St. Paul informs us, 1 Cor. xi. 23. Now all the evangelists inform us, that in the morning following he was led bound to Pilate, at the sixth hour was crucified, at the ninth hour expired; therefore he must be crucified the day after he instituted the sacrament, and so the day after he celebrated the Passover: the day of his crucifixion being therefore Friday, he must have celebrated the Passover on Thursday, or on the fourteenth of Nisan, according to the law.

Lastly, The paschal lamb could not be slain, but in the place which God hath chosen to put his name there, (Deut. xvi. 6.) that is, the temple. Now this the priests would never have done for any contrary to the law, which appointed the slaying of it on the fourteenth day betwixt the two evenings, (ibid.) Now this, if it were not done by the priests, as Josephus intimates, but, as Philo saith,* on a set day of every year, every one was then a priest for himself; yet would not the apostles have either done it or have asked to do it on any other day than that which by the law and by the practice of the nation was appointed for that work. And whereas, to take off the force of this argument, some learned persons have invented a distinction betwixt πάσχα θυτικὸν, i. e. a Passover in which a lamb was sacrificed according to the law, and μνημονευτικὸν, or a commemoration of it without a sacrifice, and say our Saviour only did the latter, this is a novel and absurd imagination: it is new; for though some of the Greek church from the fifth century have held that Christ anticipated the day, I find not one of them who says he did not eat the paschal lamb. It is also without precedent among the ancient Jews, who in the times of their captivity and dispersion never celebrated any such commemorative Passover, nor could do it without a sin like that of Jeroboam, by devising a celebration of it on their own heads against the tenor of the law; but, as Mr. Ainsworth notes, were then contented to keep the feast of unleavened bread, which being not confined to one place might be observed in their captivity and their dispersions. Moreover, admit that such an uncommanded memorial of the Passover had been kept by them, when, their temple being burnt, they could not offer sacrifice, and in their dispersions at such distance from it they could not repair to it; yet is there no one instance, nor any semblance of a reason, that this was ever done by any present at Jerusalem, where Christ was at that very time, in which, saith St. Luke, they ought to sacrifice the passover.

Obj. 1. But on the contrary it is objected, (1.) that it is plainly said that our Lord ate that supper in which he said, One of you shall betray me, and in which he gave the sop to Judas, πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα, John xiii. 1. before the paschal feast; and yet that supper seems to be the same with that mentioned in the other evangelists. To this I answer,

Ans. First, That it neither was the same, nor indeed could be the same, and for the very reason assigned in the objection, because it was held before the feast of the Passover; whereas it is already proved, our Saviour kept the paschal feast on the first day of unleavened bread, when the Jews did and ought to kill the passover, and when the feast of unleavened bread, called the Passover, was come, Luke xxii. 1. 7. (2.) Because, when Christ said at this supper to Judas going out from it, What thou doest, do quickly, some of the disciples thought that our Lord had bid him prepare those things which they had need of against the feast; viz. the paschal feast: whereas Christ keeping the feast but one night, they could not have so conceived of his words, had they then celebrated the paschal supper; nor was Judas ever employed by Christ in making preparation for the paschal supper, but Peter and John, Luke xxii. 8. (3.) The devil entered into Judas after our Lord had given the sop to him at this supper, (John xiii. 2. 7.) and yet this is evident from St. Luke, xxii. 1. 3. that Satan entered into Judas when the Passover was only near, but not yet come, (ver. 8.) And (4.) had the supper mentioned here by St. John been the paschal supper, Judas must have made his agreement to betray Christ after that supper; whereas it is plain from all the other evangelists, that he did that before the paschal supper. (See Matt. xxvi. 14. Mark xiv. 10. Luke xxii. 4.)

Ans. 2. And (2.) there is a great difference betwixt the circumstance relating to him that should betray him here, and at the paschal supper; for here Christ privately tells John who it was that should betray him, (John xiii. 25, 26.) but at the paschal supper he makes him known to them all. (Matt. xxvi. 25. Luke xxii. 21.) Here he makes him known to St. John, by giving him a sop which he himself had dipped in the dish, (John xiii. 26.) but in the paschal supper he makes him known by this, that he had his hand with him in the dish. (Matt. xxvi. 24. Mark xiv. 20.)

Obj. 2. Secondly, It is objected, that the Jews the day our Saviour suffered would not enter into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, and so unfit to eat the passover, John xviii. 28. whereas Christ ate of it the night before he suffered.

Ans. To this I answer, that by the passover mentioned John xviii. 28. we are to understand, not the paschal lamb, but the chagigah, or peace-offering, the sheep and oxen offered all the seven days of the feast, and which are expressly called the passover, as the whole feast of unleavened bread was, Luke xxi. 1. So Deut. xvi. 2. Thou shalt sacrifice the passover to the Lord, of the flock and of the herd; where the note of the Jewish doctors is, the flocks signify the lambs and kids of the passover; the herd, the offerings for the chagigah. Now the lamb, say they, was eaten on the fourteenth day, but the chagigah on the fifteenth. So 2 Chron. xxxvii. 7—9. where it is twice said, that the king and the princes gave to the people and the priests, oxen as well as sheep, lepesachim, εἰς τὸ φασὲκ, for the passover. And the apocryphal Esdras saith, i. 8. Helkias, Zacharias, and Suelus, governors of the temple, gave to the priests εἰς πάσχα, for the passover, two thousand and four hundred sheep, and three hundred calves. So here the rulers of the Jews would not go into the judgment-hall, that they might not be defiled, but be fit to eat the passover; i. e. those paschal-offerings of the herd, which were holy things, of which none might eat in their defilement. Mr. Whiston takes the passover here in the strict sense, but then he thinks that it was on the same night that the rulers would not go into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, and that they afterward did eat the paschal lamb betwixt two and four in the morning; which they might do: for though the paschal lamb was to be killed betwixt the two evenings, (Exod. xii. 8.) and to be killed at night, so that none of it was to be left till the morning; yet I find not any precise time of night limited, beyond which they might not delay the eating of it; but yet it is certain that in this instance it could not be so, for Pilate, in compliance with their scrupulosity, goes out of the judgment-hall to them three times successively, John xviii. 29. 31. xix. 4. then he brings out Christ to them, and saith, Behold your king; and then it was Friday at the sixth hour, or at noon; so that they who stayed without the hall that they might eat the passover, stayed there till Friday at noon, Pilate still going out to them, because they durst not go in to him.

Obj. 3. Thirdly, It is objected, that the day on which Christ was crucified is styled παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, the preparation of the passover, therefore the passover could not be eaten; (John xix. 14.) for as the παρασκευὴ of the sabbath is said to be προσάββατον, the day before the sabbath, (Mark xv. 42. Luke xxiii. 54.) so the parasceve of the Passover must be the day before the Passover.

Ans. 1. But (1.) according to this exposition of the words, the Jews must have eaten their passover on the sabbath-day, our Lord being crucified on the Friday; so that if that day was the day before the Passover, Saturday must be the paschal day, and so they must have eaten it at least two days after our Saviour did.

Secondly, To answer therefore positively to this objection; as παρασκευὴ, absolutely put, or with relation to the sabbath, is always Friday, so here παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα is only the paschal Friday, or the Friday in the paschal festival, as dominica paschæ, or Pentecostes, is the day of those festivals.

GOSPEL OF ST. LUKE.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

§. 1. ALL that I have to offer touching this Gospel from church-history, hath been delivered in the preface to the Gospel of St. Mark; where it hath been observed,

First, That this Gospel was received by the whole church of Christ as genuine,* and an authentic record, fit to be owned as a rule of faith, and that the Spirit of God assisted and stirred up St. Luke to indite it.

Secondly, That this Gospel was praised by St. Paul, and was approved by the apostle St. John: the first consideration is a ground sufficient to believe this Gospel to be a true and authentic record of all things contained in it; but I confess I am not so well satisfied of the truth and certainty of this second proposition, as to lay the foundation of the Divine authority of this evangelist upon it: I therefore shall endeavour to establish the authority of St. Mark and of this evangelist upon a better, and, in my apprehension, a more sure foundation.

§. 2. First, therefore, it is certain, that our Lord had not only twelve apostles, but seventy or seventy-two of his disciples to attend upon him: for, after he had sent forth the twelve to preach the kingdom of God, (Luke ix. 1, 2.) he sends out seventy others to go in pairs before him, and to preach in every city to which he was about to come, saying, The kingdom of God is come near to you. (Luke x. 1. 9.)

* "Dico itaque apud illas, nec solas jam apostolicas, sed apud universas quæ illis de societate sacramenti confœderantur, id evangelium Lucæ ab initio editionis suæ stare." Tertull. contr. Marc. lib. iv. cap. 5.

Secondly, note, That they were both sent forth to preach the kingdom of God, and therefore sent on the same errand; both sent to preach immediately from the same Lord, to preach in his name, with the same power to heal diseases, and to cast out devils: (Luke ix. 1. 17. x. 1. 10.) that as he said to the apostles, I send you forth as sheep among wolves, Matt. x. 16. so also saith he to the seventy, Luke x. 3. as he said to the apostles, He that receiveth you, receiveth me, Matt. x. 40. so saith he to the seventy, He that heareth you, heareth me, Luke x. 16. As therefore I have proved, that these things were said to the apostles, not so much with relation to their first mission whilst Christ was with them upon earth, as with relation to their second mission, which was to begin after our Lord's ascension, and the falling of the Holy Ghost upon them; (see note on Matt. x. 8.) so may we rationally conceive, that the like words spoken to the seventy relate to the farther commission to be given to them; and therefore, when they were returned to Christ after their first mission, as he speaks to them thus, I beheld Satan falling as lightning from heaven before you, as he was to do after our Saviour's death, John xii. 31. so doth he add, Luke x. 18, 19. Behold, I give you power to tread upon scorpions and serpents, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you: which words seem plainly to give a new commission to the seventy, relating not, as their former, to their preaching before him to the cities of Israel only, but to their preaching among other nations; as we may gather, by comparing these words with the commission given by Christ to his apostles, sent into the world to preach the gospel to all nations. (Mark xvi. 15—18.) As then the apostles were to execute this second mission by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and upon that account are bid to stay at Jerusalem till they received this power from on high, by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them, Luke xxiv. 49, 50. Acts i. 4. 8. so may we reasonably believe, the seventy were to be endued with the same power for the execution of their mission. Note,

Thirdly, That both St. Mark and St. Luke were of the number of the seventy disciples, as we learn from the testimonies of Origen* and Epiphanius: for when Origen† had said, that the disciples of Christ, John and Matthew, Mark and Luke, γεγραφήκασιν τὰ εὐαγγέλια, writ the Gospels, he proves this; because Christ first sent his apostles, and after them the seventy-two, εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, to evangelize; and that therefore Mark and Luke preached the gospel with Paul the apostle, St. Luke being mentioned as an attendant on St. Paul, (see note on Acts xvi. 10.) and St. Mark as one of the circumcision, who was συνεργὸς αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, his fellow-worker unto the kingdom of God. (Coloss. iv. 10, 11.) Epiphanius‡ having told us, that Mark εἷς ἐτύγχανεν ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο, was one of the seventy-two, adds, that the work of writing was committed to Luke, ὄντι καὶ αὐτῷ ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο,* he also being one of the seventy-two. But against this it is objected, Obj. 1. That St. Luke confesses, that he was not from the beginning an eye-witness and minister of the word, (Luke i. 1, 2.) and therefore is thought to have his Gospel from the information of St. Paul, and other of the apostles; so Jerome and others, ancient and modern, have conjectured from these words.

Ans. The words of the evangelist are so far from giving any ground to this assertion, that they plead fairly for St. Luke's personal knowledge of all the things written in his Gospel, even from first to last: for, saith he,

Ver. 1. Forasmuch as others have undertaken to set forth in order a narrative of those things which are most surely believed among us (Christians),

Ver. 2. Even as they who, from the beginning, were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, have delivered them to us (Christians);

Ver. 3. It seemed good to me, who have had a perfect knowledge of all things (performed among us in Judea), from the very first (rise of them, in the vision made to Zacharias concerning the birth of his son, John the Baptist), to write to thee in order (of them). Now here I say,

First, That these words do not affirm, that any of those men who set forth these narratives, did it from the instruction they received from these eye-witnesses, or ministers of the word, but only that they pretended to do it agreeably to what these eye-witnesses said; much less do they give us the least hint that St. Luke received his instructions from them.

Secondly, They, saith he, declare their narrative agreeably to what is delivered by those who were eye-witnesses from the beginning, and the ministers of the word. It therefore seemeth good to me, who have had a certain knowledge of the same things, ἄνωθεν, from the first rise of them (as these eye-witnesses had), to write to thee in order of them; and then he begins his narrative from a higher rise, than either St. Matthew or St. Mark hath done; not giving the least hint that he received his knowledge of these things from any other. It is true, that Irenæus† saith, that Luke ἐν βιβλίῳ κατέθετο, writ in a book the gospel which St. Paul preached; but he saith not, he did this in his Gospel, and not in the Acts of the Apostles: his Gospel also contains in substance the same great things which St. Paul preached for the conversion of the Jews and gentiles; as also doth the Gospel of St. Matthew: but hence it doth not follow, that the one rather than the other is to be ascribed to St. Paul. Yea, it is certain, that St. Luke could not receive his Gospel from St. Paul, as an eye-witness of it; because we know St. Paul was no eye-witness of it, but a convert to Christianity, after all that Luke had written was accomplished.

Obj. 2. We are told, that Luke was converted by St. Paul at Thebes.

Ans. But this we have only from Nicephorus; and it is the less credible, not only because it comes to us so late, but because it appears not from any credible author that St. Paul was ever there. It is more probable, from the silence of St. Luke and St. Paul, who never calleth him his son, that he was a Christian, or a believer, long before; and having, as Theophylact observes, ἑβραϊκὴν παιδείαν, his instruction in the Jewish religion at Jerusalem, he might be so from the beginning of Christ's preaching. Note,

Fourthly, That the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost came down upon all that were then assembled with the apostles; for being ἅπαντες, altogether with one accord, ver. 1. they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, ver. 4. even all the one hundred and twenty, mentioned Acts i. 15. as it is proved in the note on Acts ii. 1. And again, the apostles being dismissed by the high-priest and his council, they go to their own company, that is, to the one hundred and twenty, Acts iv. 24. (see the note there): and when they had prayed for ability to preach the word with boldness, and that God would confirm it by signs and wonders done in the name of Jesus, they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the word with boldness, ver. 29—31. Note, Fifthly, That it is highly reasonable to conceive, the seventy were part of the one hundred and twenty that were then present, and assembled with the apostles: not only from the tradition of the church,* that Matthias, and Joseph called Barsabas, were chosen out of the seventy, but also from the nature of the thing itself. For St. Peter saith, an apostle must be chosen out of those that had been with them all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among them, to succeed in the place of Judas, and be a witness of our Lord's resurrection. (Acts i. 21, 22.) Now, whence should they choose such men but from the seventy? And St. Paul speaks of men coming up with Jesus after his resurrection from Galilee, who were his witnesses to the people, Acts xiii. 31. and sure the seventy must be of this number. Moreover, What was become of the seventy, if they came not up with their raised Saviour to Jerusalem? Can we think that men so full of hopes that he would now restore the kingdom to Israel, (Acts i. 6.) would stay behind in Galilee? and if they came up to Jerusalem, would they not consort as formerly with the apostles? Can we think that one hundred and twenty other persons should adhere thus closely to them, and yet the seventy should absent themselves, especially at the feast of Pentecost, when they had so much reason to expect the promise of the Father?

Moreover, it is certain from St. Luke, that Christ had made them labourers in his harvest, (Luke x. 2.) and so far ministers of his gospel, as to declare, that he who heard them, heard him; and he that despised them, despised him, (ver. 16.) and also given them commission to work miracles, and cast out devils in his name, (ver. 9. 17.) And I have shewed that after their return to Christ they received a new commission like to that given to the apostles, when they were sent to preach to all nations, and which, as far as we can learn from the evangelists, they never executed till after our Lord's resurrection, when we are sure that all who by Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. i. cap. 12. and by Epiphanius† in the heresy of the Herodians, are mentioned as belonging to the seventy, did it. Now, if the seventy disciples had a commission from our Lord to preach to other nations; if, after he was seated at the right hand of his Father, he sent not only the twelve, but, as Epiphanius there expressly saith, the seventy-two, to be κήρυκας εἰς ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, preachers throughout all the world, and, among them, as he there saith, St. Mark and Luke; they also must be enabled by the Holy Ghost to speak with tongues and prophesy, that so they might be able to preach to those nations whose languages they understood not: and hence Eusebius* reckons among those who were enabled, as St. Paul was, to write μύρια καὶ ἀπόῤῥητα, a thousand mysteries, the twelve apostles, and the seventy disciples: and therefore Origen† says well, that Christ having such disciples, it is more reasonable to think, he should commit the writing of his gospel to them, rather than to those who were not his disciples.

If then St. Mark and St. Luke were of the number of those men who had a commission from Christ to preach the gospel after his ascension, not only to the Jews, but to other nations also; if the Holy Ghost which fell on the apostles, fell on them in like manner also for that end; if the universal church of Christ hath held, that they as well as the apostles did indite their Gospels by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and upon that account received them as a rule of faith, as much as the Gospels written by St. Matthew and St. John, who were undoubtedly apostles of our Lord, and were by his Spirit assisted to indite their Gospels; then have we equal reason to receive the Gospels of St. Mark and St. Luke as the oracles of God, and so as a most certain rule of faith, as we have to receive the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. John under that character.

As to the time of writing this Gospel, I find it most uncertain; Irenæus‡ is positive, that it was written after the death of the apostle Paul; for, speaking of St. Peter and St. Paul, he saith, that after their decease, St. Mark and St. Luke writ their Gospels: whereas Theophylact§ saith expressly, μετὰ πεντεκαίδεκα ἔτη τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀναλήψεως συνεγράψατο, it was written within fifteen years after our Lord's ascension, that is, about ten years before the death of the apostle Paul: and so also saith the Synopsis, attributed to Athanasius. And, could we depend on the opinion of Origen,‖ and others of the ancients, that those words of St. Paul, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches, did belong to the Gospel of St. Luke, we might conclude from the writing the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, that St. Luke's Gospel, writ before it, must be written at or before the time assigned by Athanasius and Theophylact: but Theodoret¶ being positive, that St. Paul in these words meant not St. Luke, but Barnabas, who travelled with St. Paul, and preached the gospel throughout all the churches, Acts xiii. 2. xvi. 36. and who was chosen by the churches about Antioch to travel with St. Paul, to bring their charity to the brethren in Judea, Acts xi. 30. we must be content to leave the time when St. Luke writ this Gospel still uncertain: only, because it is certain from the beginning of the Acts, that it was writ before that treatise; and highly probable from the conclusion of the Acts of the Apostles, that these Acts were written and finished in the ninth of Nero; we may hence probably conclude this Gospel must be indited before that time; and consequently, that Irenæus must mistake, in saying it was written after the death of the apostle Paul.

CHAP. I.

1. FORASMUCH [1] as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed, (or have assuredly been performed) among us (by the Lord Jesus),

2. Even as they delivered them to us, who from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and (who are now) ministers of the word; (or have the ministration and dispensation of the word committed to them, see Acts xiii. 5. 1 Cor. iv. 1.)

3. [2] It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write to thee in order (of them), most excellent Theophilus,

4. That thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been [3] instructed.

5. THERE was in the days of Herod, the king of Judea, a [4] certain priest named Zacharias, [5] of the course of Abia (i. e. the eighth of the twenty-four courses of the priests, which ministered in the temple by their weeks): and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6. And they were both righteous before God, (as) walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7. And they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they [6] were both now well stricken in years (Gr. were aged in their days).

8. And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9. According to the custom of the priest's office, [7] his lot was (i. e. he was chosen by lot) to burn incense, when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time [8] of (his burning) incense.

11. And (whilst he was doing this) there [9] appeared to him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

12. And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13. But the angel said to him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy [10] prayer (for the people) is heard (God meaning now suddenly to send the Messiah); and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son (who shall be his forerunner), and thou shalt call his name John.

14. And thou shalt have joy and gladness (for the fruit of her womb); and (not only thou, but others also, for) many shall rejoice at his birth.

15. For he shall be [11] great in the sight of the Lord (as being highly favoured by him), and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb (i. e. very early).

16. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17. And he shall go before him in [12] the spirit and power of Elias, (who turned the people from Baal to God, 1 Kings xviii. 37.) to turn the hearts of the fathers to (or with) the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of (him who is emphatically styled) the Just (One, Acts iii. 14. and so) to make ready a people prepared for (the reception of) the Lord.

18. And Zacharias said to the angel, Whereby shall I know (the truth of) this (of which I have cause to doubt)? for I am an old man, and my wife (also is) well stricken in years.

19. And the angel answering said to him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent (by him) to speak (this) to thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

20. And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed; because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

21. And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the (inner) temple.

22. And when he came out, he could not speak to them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple: for he (only) beckoned to them, and remained [13] speechless.

23. And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24. And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and (through devotion, or to avoid discourses) [14] hid herself five months, saying,

25. Thus (graciously) hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away (that barrenness, which was) my reproach among men.

26. And in the sixth month (the same) angel Gabriel was sent from God to a city of Galilee, named Nazareth,

27. To a [15] virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

28. And the angel (of the Lord) came in to her, and said, Hail thou that art [16] highly favoured (of God), the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.

29. And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be (or what might be the import of it).

30. And the angel said to her, Fear not, Mary: (for) thou hast found favour with God.

31. And, behold, thou (being a virgin) shalt (yet) conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus.

32. And he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give to him the throne of his father David (or that spiritual kingdom promised to the Messiah the son of David):

33. And he shall [17] reign over the house of Jacob for ever (whilst he hath any seed in being); and of his kingdom there shall be no end (as there hath and shall be of the four great monarchies).

34. Then saith Mary to the angel, [18] How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

35. And the angel answered and said to her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.

36. And, behold, thy [19] cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month (from her conception) with her that was called barren: (nor is this to be doubted of,)

37. For with God nothing shall be impossible. (Gen. xviii. 14.)

38. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it to me according to thy word. And (then) the angel departed from her.

39. And Mary arose in those days, and went into the [20] hill country with haste, to a city of Juda (named Hebron, to visit her cousin of whom the angel spake);

40. And (she) entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41. And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost (i. e. the spirit of prophecy):

42. And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and [21] blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43. And whence is this (honour done) to me, that (she who is) the mother of [22] my Lord should come to me?

44. For, lo, (this so affected me that) as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe [23] leaped in my womb for (the) joy (that transported me).

45. And blessed is she that believed (the words of the angel): [24] for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

46. And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,

47. And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

48. For he hath (highly) regarded the [25] low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

49. For he that is mighty hath done [26] to me great things; and holy (and reverend) is his name. (Psal. cxi. 9.)

50. And (as) his mercy is (to me, so will it be) on them that fear him, from generation to generation.

51. (To shew that he is mighty) he (in all ages) hath shewed strength with his [27] arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and hath exalted them of low degree.

53. (And through his mercy to them that fear him), he hath filled the hungry with good things; and (but) the rich he hath sent empty away.

54. He hath [28] holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy;

55. As he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed, (promising them one who should be a blessing to them) for ever.

56. And Mary abode with her (cousin) about three months, and (then) returned to her own house.

57. Now Elisabeth's full time came, that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

58. And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.

59. And it came to pass, that on the [29] eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60. And his mother answered and said (to them so naming him, It shall) not (be) so; but he shall be [30] called John.

61. And they said to her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62. And they made signs to his father, (to know) how he would have him called.

63. And he (by signs) asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea.

66. And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be? [31] And the hand of the Lord (i. e. his favour) was with him (in a special manner to assist and prosper him).

67. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and [32] prophesied, saying,

68. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for [33] he hath visited and redeemed his people,

69. And he hath raised up [34] a horn of salvation (a mighty, royal Saviour) for us in the house of his servant David;

70. As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been (successively) [35] since the world began: (promising by them)

71. That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us:

72. (And this he hath done) to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; (ver. 54, 55.)

73. (And) the [36] oath which he sware to our father Abraham, (That in his seed should all the families of the earth be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18. and)

74. That he would grant (Gr. to grant) to us, that we, being delivered out of the hands of our enemies (sin, death, and Satan), might [37] serve him without fear (of them),

75. In holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life.

76. And thou, (my) child, shalt be called [38] the Prophet of the Highest (God): for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord (Christ) to prepare his way;

77. To give knowledge of salvation (i. e. of the Messiah, styled by the prophets the salvation of God: see note on ii. 30.) to his people, for the remission of their sins,

78. Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the [39] day-spring from on high (or rising sun, as Christ is styled, Zech. iii. 8.) hath visited us,

79. To give light (not to us only, but also) to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80. And the child grew, and waxed strong in (the) Spirit (or had the Spirit of God daily shewing himself more conspicuously in him), and was in the desert till the day of his shewing (himself) to Israel (by the execution of his office among them).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. FORASMUCH as πολλοὶ ἐπιχείρησαν, many have taken in hand to set forth a narration, περὶ τῶν πεπληροφορημένων ἐν ἡμῖν πραγμάτων, concerning the things which have most surely been believed and done among us, Ver. 2. Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses (of what Christ did), and ministers of the word (of the gospel).] Here note,

First, That πράγματα πεπληροφορημένα, refers not only to things believed, but also to things performed by Christ and his apostles. This first treatise being designed to mention the things which Jesus himself said or did, (Acts i. 1.) as they were delivered by the apostles who had been with Christ from the beginning, (John xv. 27. Acts i. 21.) which the seventy disciples were not; his second to declare the acts of the apostles, who being sent to preach the gospel to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, were in that ὑπηρέται τοῦ λόγου, ministers of the word. Let a man so account of us apostles, saith St. Paul, ὑπηρέτας Χριστοῦ, as the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. (1 Cor. iv. 1.) He also was himself ordained to be ὑπηρέτης, a minister, and witness of what he had seen, and of what Christ should reveal to him; (Acts xxvi. 16.) i. e. a witness of what he had seen, and a minister of Christ's revelations made to him. So when Barnabas and Paul were preaching the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews, they had with them John ὑπηρέτην, a minister of this word. (Acts xiii. 5.) And when St. Luke saith, they were πεπληροφορημένα ἐν ἡμῖν, he doth not only mean that they were done, but that they were performed with such circumstances as gave them πληροφορίαν τῆς πίστεως, a full assurance of faith, (Heb. x. 22.) as to the truth of the doctrines taught, and the works done by Christ and his apostles, as the word signifies continually in the Epistles; as when it is said that Abraham was πληροφορηθεὶς, fully assured that what God had promised he was able to perform, Rom. iv. 21. and xiv. 5. Let every one be fully assured, πληροφορείσθω, in his own mind; when St. Paul wishes to his Colossians the riches τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως, of the full assurance of knowledge; (Col. ii. 2.) when he saith his Thessalonians received the word ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ, in much assurance, (1 Thess. i. 5.) and desires the believing Jews to be careful to attain εἰς πλήροφορίαν, to a full assurance of hope to the end. (Heb. vi. 11.)

Secondly, Hence note, that there is no necessity that the many who had taken in hand to make a narrative of what was believed or done by Christians, should have done this at all by writing, rather than by word of mouth, and much less they should all be writers of gospels, rather than of the acts of the apostles; it is certain also that St. Luke is so far from blaming them for these performances, that he places himself in the rank of them, and saith, they made their narrative of these matters, even as the apostles had delivered them.

Thirdly, Hence I conclude, that though St. Luke was no apostle, he might be one of the seventy mentioned Luke x.; for neither were they with Christ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, nor chosen to be the witnesses of what he did, nor, in the primary sense, ὑπηρέται, τοῦ λόγου, the ministers of the gospel. And yet, besides these words which prove nothing to the contrary, I see not why St. Luke, who was before a proselyte to the Jewish religion, and who had, saith Theophylact, ἑβραικὴν παιδίαν, his instruction in the Jewish religion at Jerusalem, should not see and converse with Christ, and be one of the seventy, as Origen and Epiphanius say he was. (See the preface to this Gospel, §. 2. n. 3.)

[2] Ver. 3. It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things ἄνωθεν, from the very first, to write unto thee καθεξῆς, in order, most excellent Theophilus.] Here note,

First, That it is not certain that ἄνωθεν here signifies from above, i. e. οὐρανόθεν, from heaven, as it is done, John iii. 3. 7. 31. xix. 11. James i. 17. iii. 15. 17. seeing it as often signifies from the top, rise, or beginning of a thing; as when the veil of the temple is said to be rent ἀπὸ ἄνωθεν, from the top to the bottom, Matt. xxvii. 51. Mark xv. 38. Christ's coat to be woven ἐκ τῶν ἄνωθεν, from the top, John xix. 24. St. Paul to be known of the Jews ἄνωθεν, from the beginning, Acts xxvi. 5. and the evangelist here beginning his narrative higher than St. Matthew or Mark had done, even from the promise made to Zacharias of the Baptist, or forerunner of the Lord, I think it more reasonable to adhere to our translation, and not to lay the authority of St. Luke's Gospel upon uncertainties.

Secondly, It being certain that St. Luke in his Gospel doth not give us Christ's miracles, sermons, and journeys, in that order of time in which they were done and spoken, it remains, that when he promised to write καθεξῆς, in order, we understand this of Christ's conception, birth, circumcision, baptism, preaching, death, resurrection, and ascension, of which he truly writes in order; or that he would write to him first of what these eye-witnesses had delivered to him of Christ, and then of what these ministers had done in propagation of the gospel, as in the Acts he doth. Note, Thirdly, That the Theophilus to whom he writes, seems not to be a feigned name, importing only any Christian, who was a lover of God, as Salvian conceived; for we have no such instance in the sacred history of feigned names thus used. 2. The word κράτιστος is used in the New Testament as a title of excellency, and never otherwise. (See Acts xxiii. 26. xxiv. 3. xxvi. 25.) And, 3. had he intended this only as a dedication of his work to the true lovers of God, why writes he still in the singular number, and never in the plural?

[3] Ver. 4. Ἵνα ἐπιγνῷς περὶ ὧν κατηχήθης λόγων τὴν ἀσφάλειαν, That thou mayest know the certainty of those things in which thou hast been instructed.] Κατήκησις is an instruction, not only by questions and answers, but also by a continual discourse. (Acts xviii. 25. Rom. ii. 18. 1 Cor. xiv. 19.) But that which is hence chiefly to be observed against the Romanists, is (1.) against oral tradition, that St. Luke thought not what was delivered by word of mouth only, even by the eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, sufficient to give Theophilus a knowledge of the certainty of these things without writing the Gospel; and this the wisdom of God shewed in causing them to be written, saith Irenæus,* to be the pillar and foundation of the Christian faith. (2.) That St. Luke held it not unlawful, or unfit for a layman, or any Christian, to read the Scriptures, nor such a one insufficient by thus reading to understand the things in which he had been instructed; and seeing it is certain that he, and other Christians were instructed in all things necessary to be believed and done by them to salvation, it follows that these writings must contain fully, and with sufficient clearness, all that was necessary to be believed or done by him in order to his salvation, they being written for this very end, that Theophilus might know the certainty of all those things in which he had been instructed; and then surely the writings of the whole New Testament must be much more sufficient for that end.

[4] Ver. 5. Ἱερεύς τις, A priest named Zacharias.] That he was not, as some have imagined, a high-priest, appears, (1.) because St. Luke calls him simply ἱερεὺς, a priest, not ἀρχιερεὺς, a high-priest, as he who bore that office was still called, iii. 2. ix. 22. xxii. 2. 4. 52. 54. 66. xxiii. 4. 10. 13. 23. Acts iv. 6. v. 17. 21. 24. vii. 1. ix. 1. 14. (2.) Zacharias was chosen by lot to burn incense; the high-priest did it by right of succession, and burnt it in the holy of holies, into which Zacharias entered not. (3.) Josephus* saith, that Simon son of Boethus was high-priest that year: and, lastly, Zacharias was priest of the course of Abia, whereas the high-priest was of no course at all. Of the twenty-four courses appointed by David for the service of the temple, when it should be built, this of Abia was the eighth. (1 Chron. xxiv. 10.) These several courses began on the sabbath-day, and continued to serve till the next sabbath, 2 Kings xi. 7. 2 Chron. xxiii. 8. ἀπὸ σαββάτου ἐπὶ σάββατον, from sabbath to sabbath, Joseph. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 11. p. 248.

[5] Of the course of Abia.] Most chronologers that I have read agree in this, that no certain computation can be made from these courses touching the conception or birth of the Baptist. Mr. Whiston's attempt in this matter seems unsuccessful on several accounts. For,

First, Whereas he† begins that computation with the rabbinical tale, that after the return of the priests from the captivity, they were divided again into twenty-four courses, he ought to have observed from the same tale, that the course of Jedajah‡ was then put before that of Jojarib; because he was of the high-priest's family, and so should have begun those courses not from Jojarib, but from Jedajah.

Secondly, Whereas he saith, that it is highly probable that when Judas Maccabeus restored the daily sacrifice, and afresh appointed the courses of the priest, he would begin those courses with the first family: it remains to be proved, that he did then appoint any of these courses at all to serve, and that all the priests did not then serve together, as at the other three great festivals. Secondly, There is no reason why he should alter the courses appointed by Solomon in the month Tisri, and that he did not do it is supposed by Dr. Lightfoot,§ who therefore in his account of these courses makes the first of them to begin in that month. In a word, if there were made any alteration at all, St. Luke cannot refer to the course of Abia as it is placed, 1 Chron. xxiv. and then, seeing the family of Abia was not then extant among the courses (there being no mention of their return out of captivity), who can tell where to place it? If he does refer to it, that course must continue in the same order in which it was before, and so was not changed by Judas Maccabeus.

Thirdly, As for this historical evidence from a Jewish rabbinical chronicle, it can be of no validity to them who know they were the worst of chronologers, as the learned have observed, and as is evident from the chronology of David Ganz, and Vorstius's notes upon it, and his famous chronicle, Seder Olam Rabbi; with which he is not much acquainted, though it pretends to some antiquity, yet, saith Buxtorf, "Videtur seipsum in fine libri prodere, dum inquit, Hamar Rabbi Jose," He betrays himself by adding, Thus saith R. Jose.

Fourthly, His corollary from all these uncertainties, that the blessed Virgin conceived in the beginning of the sixth month from the conception of Elisabeth, is built upon a mistake, it being plain from Luke i. 36. that her sixth month was completed when the Virgin came to her (which she did presently after the angel appeared to her), for she stayed with her but almost three months, and then Elisabeth's full time was come, (ver. 56, 57.)

[6] Ver. 7. They were both προβεβηκότες, well stricken with age.] Here, saith Theophylact, because a virgin was to bring forth a son προῳκονόμησεν ἡ χάρις ἵνα γραῦς τέκῃ, οὐ κατὰ νόμον φύσεως, εἰ καὶ μετ' ἀνδρὸς, God provided that an old woman should bring forth a son, not according to the course of nature, though with a man, they being both aged.

[7] Ver. 9. Ἔλαχε τοῦ θυμιάσαι, His lot was to burn incense.] The law required that the priest should burn incense morning and evening upon the altar of incense, placed before the veil of the most holy: (Exod. xxx. 6—8.) but because they who thus served in every course were many, it was necessary they should by lot choose the man who was to perform that service for that week, and so the Jews say they did. (See Dr. Lightfoot here.)

[8] Ver. 10. And all the multitude of the people were praying without, τῇ ὥρᾳ τοῦ θυμιάματος, at the time of incense.] When the priest went into the sanctuary, or within the first veil, to offer incense, notice was given by the sound of a little bell, that it was then the time of prayer; and every one present then offered up his prayers to God silently: and though this silent prayer was not commanded, yet there seems a manifest allusion to it in those words of John, where, at the first offering of incense with the prayers of the saints, it is said, there was silence in heaven for half an hour. (Rev. viii. 1—3.) Whether that of the high-priest Simon, mentioned Ecclus. l. belongs to this matter, or rather to the great day of expiation, I will not determine.

[9] Ver. 11. Ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος Κυρίου, An angel of the Lord appeared to him.] That they had former examples of their priests who had seen visions in the temple seems reasonable to conceive from the words, ver. 22. where from his silence it is said, the people knew that he had seen a vision; and yet, if you reject the story of Simon the Just seeing an angel going into the holy of holies yearly, on the day of expiation, you will hardly find another instance: for Hyrcanus the high-priest saw no vision, only as he was offering incense, φάσι,* some say he heard a voice, declaring that his sons had got the victory.

verse is wanting only in the Ethiopic version, being in all the other versions, in Theophylact, in Hilary the deacon, in Jerome, and Chrysostom, ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 475. and yet Dr. Mills suspects hunc versum fictum esse ab aliquo ob similia quæ ad Mariam dicuntur, ver. 24. Append. p. 20. though this suspicion be confuted by the words following μὴ φοβοῦ Ζαχαρία.

[10] Ver. 13. Εἰσηκούσθη ἡ δέησίς σου, Thy prayer is heard.] Not that this good man was now praying for himself, that he might have a child; he is so far from any expectation of that, that when an angel appearing to him in God's temple, and so unquestionably as a messenger from God speaks to him of this matter, he believeth not his words; the meaning is, Thy prayers for the delivery of thy people, for the coming of the Messiah, and the consolation of Israel, and the remission of their sins, is so graciously heard, that from thy very loins shall now come the forerunner to prepare his way; and thou wilt now quickly have occasion to acknowledge, that God hath visited and redeemed his people, and raised up a horn of salvation for them, (ver. 68, 69.)

[11] Ver. 15. Ἔσται γὰρ μέγας ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου, He shall be great in the sight of (or before) the Lord.] Either before the Lord Christ, as being the prophet of the Highest, to go before the Lord to prepare his way, as the angel saith, ver. 17. and Zacharias, ver. 76. or in the sight of God, as David found favour ἐνώπιον Θεοῦ, in the sight of God, Acts vii. 46. It follows, and he shall neither drink wine nor strong drink. This being the description of a Nazarite, Numb. vi. 3. Judg. xiii. 4. the words from the womb, may refer to the same thing, as it is said of Samson, the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb, Judg. xiii. 5. xvi. 17. (see note on ver. 28.) or if they refer to his being filled with the Holy Ghost, they must be interpreted as Dr. Hammond paraphrases them, the power of the Holy Ghost shall be discerned to be upon him very early. So Job xxxi. 18. I have guided the widow from my mother's womb: Psal. lviii. 3. The wicked are estranged from the womb, as soon as they are born they go about and tell lies: Isa. xlviii. 8. Thou wast called a transgressor from the womb. This exposition I prefer to that of Grotius, that he is said to be filled with the Holy Ghost from the womb, because he being in the womb was part of his mother who was filled with the Holy Ghost.

[12] Ver. 17. Ἐν πνεύματι καὶ δυνάμει Ἠλίου, In the spirit and power of Elias.] Not in his power of working miracles, for John did no miracles, (John x. 41.) but in his power of turning the people to the Lord. (1 Kings xviii. 37.) So the angel expounds it in the following words, cited from Mal. iv. 6. To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the Just, and so to make ready a people prepared for the Lord; that is, he shall turn the hearts of the fathers עַל to the children, as that preposition signifies, Josh. ii. 8. 1 Sam. xxii. 11. by causing them to lay aside their discords, and unite, of what sect soever they were, in a general profession of repentance, and a free confession of their sins; and so the son of Sirach saith, he is appointed, ἐπιστρέψαι καρδίαν πατρὸς πρὸς υἱὸν, to turn the heart of the father to the son: (xlviii. 10.) or else, He shall turn the hearts of the fathers, al, with the children, as al signifies, Exod. xii. 8, 9. xxxv. 22. calling them all to a general confession of, and repentance for, their sins; and so turning the disobedient to the wisdom, revealed to them by Christ, the Just One, as he emphatically is styled, Acts iii. 14. And this the Baptist did by preaching to all sorts, young and old, conversion and repentance, and uniting them all in one baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins. (Matt. iii. 5, 6. Mark i. 5.) He was sent to bear witness of Christ that all men might believe on him; (John i. 7.) and this he also did so effectually, that many, finding that all that John said of him was true, believed on him. (John xiii. 41, 42.) Josephus informs us that he was a good man, who instructed the Jews by the exercise of virtue, καὶ τῇ πρὸς ἀλλήλους δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ πρὸς Θεὸν εὐσεβείᾳ, and by piety towards God, and righteousness or justice towards one another, to come to his baptism; and that hereupon there was great concourse made to him, the people being much delighted with his doctrine. (Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 7. p. 626. F. G.)

[13] Ver. 22. Καὶ διέμενε κωφὸς, And remained speechless.] It seemeth that he was both dumb and deaf, for we read that he was σιωπῶν καὶ μὴ δυνάμενος λαλῆσαι, not able to speak, and dumb, ver. 20. and that he was not able to hear is evident, because they nodded and made signs to him and he to them, ver. 22. 62. and therefore it was only by a sign that he asked for a writing-table, ver. 63. And this was the result of his infidelity, in that he believed not an angel appearing to him, in a place where evil angels durst not come, in the name of our Lord, and telling him his prayer was heard, which evil angels could not do, and of things which tended to the glory of God, the completion of his promises, and the welfare of mankind, which they would not do.

[14] Ver. 24. Καὶ περιέκρυβεν ἑαυτὴν, And she hid herself five months.] Partly from devotion to bless God for a mercy so singular and unexpected, and partly from respect to the child, lest she should be any way defiled, and so derive uncleanness upon the Nazarite in her womb.

[15] Ver. 27. Πρὸς παρθένον (μεμνηστευμένην ἀνδρὶ ᾧ ὄνομα Ἰωσὴφ) ἐξ οἴκου Δαβὶδ, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς παρθένου Μαριάμ.] Which words I would render thus, To a virgin of the house of David, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph; and the virgin's name was Mary. For, first, of this συμπλοκὴ, or placing of words not in due order of construction, I have given many instances, note on Mark ix. 13.; and I think there is an instance of it here, ver. 15. He shall neither drink wine nor strong drink from his mother's womb, and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost. And this construction I prefer, as being most suitable to those words of the angel, The Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David. The Virgin therefore must be of the house of David, for seeing the angel had plainly told her, she should not have this son by the knowledge of a man, it was not Joseph's but Mary's being of the house of David, which made David his father; see also ver. 69. where this horn of salvation is said to be raised up in the house of his servant David: now thus he was raised up in the house of David, not by Joseph's espousal, but by his birth of the Virgin; for from her also was it, that Christ was ἐκ καρπου τῆς ὀσφύος αὐτοῦ τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, of the fruit of the loins of David according to the flesh, Acts ii. 30. ἀπὸ τοῦ σπέρματος, of the seed of David, xiii. 23. Rom. i. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 8. Such reason had the evangelist here to say, rather that Mary than Joseph was of the house of David.

[16] Ver. 28. Κεχαριτωμένη, Thou who art highly favoured.]

Or, who hast found mercy, or favour with God, as it is expounded, ver. 30. It answers to the Hebrew חסד which signifies χάρις and ἔλεος, mercy and favour. So Psal. xviii. 26. עם חסד μετὰ κεχαριτωμένου χαριτωθήσῃ, with the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; or, to him that shews favour to others, thou wilt shew favour: and Eph. i. 6. to the praise of his glorious grace, ἐν ᾗ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, through which he hath dealt graciously with us, or made us favourites by the beloved, or, in Christ Jesus. Thus χαριεργὸς, he that doth kind and grateful offices, is in Suidas τὰ κεχαριτωμένα ἐργαζόμενος, he that doth kind things, and χαρίεντα in Phavorinus is κεχαριτωμένα. And the son of Sirach saith, A word, i. e. a kind word, is better than a gift, but both come παρὰ ἀνδρὶ κεχαριτωμένῳ, from a kind man, to one that shews favour, Ecclus. xviii. 17. It follows, εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξίν, blessed art thou among women. So it is said of Jael, εὐλογηθείη ἐν γυναιξίν, blessed be Jael among women, Judg. v. 24. of Ruth, iii. 10. εὐλογημένη σὺ, blessed art thou of the Lord, O daughter! and so David speaks to Abigail, 1 Sam. xxv. 33. so also, the Lord is with thee, is said to Gideon, Judg. vi. 12. And the words, ver. 30. εὗρες χάριν παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, thou hast found favour with God, are also said of Noah, Gen. vi. 8. of Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 4. of David, Acts vii. 46. So that here is nothing said of the blessed Virgin in this salutation, which was not before said of others.

[17] Ver. 33. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob, εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, καὶ τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔσται τέλος, for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.] i. e. Whilst the house and the seed of Jacob, or the world lasts; his kingdom being never to give place to any other kingdom, as the four monarchies did, Dan. vii. 14. but yet when death, the last enemy of his church, shall be dissolved, he shall give up this mediatory kingdom to the Father. (See note on 1 Cor. xv. 28.)

[18] Ver. 34. Πῶς ἔσται τοῦτο; How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?] She so inquires after the manner, as not to doubt of the fact, but she says not she was under a vow not to know a man: for, (1.) virginity amongst the Jews was not matter of praise, but reproach; (Psal lxxviii. 63.) insomuch that Grotius with all his learning could bring no instance of any women who were παρθέναι δι' ἁγνείαν, or kept their virginity, but from a testimony of Philo * concerning some old women among the essenes, who were known enemies to matrimony: (see the note on Coloss. ii. 21.) and, (2.) marriage is numbered by them among the precepts of the law, Targum on Gen. i. 28. which they only were exempted from, who devoted themselves wholly to the study of the law: and, (3.) if she made this vow before her espousals, why should she marry? if after, it was void, as being not made with the consent of her husband.

Ver. 35. Διὸ καὶ τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον, Therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee.] Here it is evident that our interpreters followed the other reading, viz. τὸ γεννώμενον ἐκ σοῦ ἅγιον, for which they had good reason, for so read all the ancient versions; so Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 26. Tertullian, contra Prax. cap. 20. Novat. de Trin. cap. 19. Author Quæst. et Respons. ad Orthodox. q. 46. p. 430. Epiphan. Anchor. p. 69. Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 476. Autor Dial. contra Marcion. p. 121. where he notes that the evangelist saith not διὰ σοῦ but ἐκ σοῦ. (See Examen Millii.)

[19] Ver. 36. Elisabeth thy cousin, συγγενής σου.] Though Elisabeth was of the tribe of Aaron, ver. 5. it follows not that Mary was so; for a woman might marry into another tribe, provided she were not an heiress that carried the paternal inheritance along with her, care being taken only against that by the law, Numb. xxxvi. 8, 9.

[20] Ver. 39. Mary went εἰς τὴν ὀρεινὴν—εἰς πόλιν, into a city of Juda.] i. e. To Hebron, which was situated in the hill country, (Josh. xi. 21.) and was given to the posterity of Aaron for an inheritance; (Josh. xxi. 10, 11.) it was also the city where David was anointed king over Judah. (2 Sam. ii. 4.)

[21] Ver. 42. Καὶ εὐλογημένος ὁ καρπὸς τῆς κοιλίας σου, And blessed be the fruit of thy womb.] These words shew that Christ had not his body from heaven, but from the womb of the Virgin, and so was truly the seed of David, according to the flesh, Rom. ix. 5. (See Matt. i. 20. Gal. iv. 6. and the note on 1 Cor. xv. 47.)

[22] Ver. 43. The mother of my Lord.] She calls him, saith Woltzogenius, her Lord, as David had done, Psal. cx. 1. and in his note on Matt. xxii. 45. he saith, he was so styled by him, because, by virtue of his exaltation to the right hand of Power, or of God, he was made Lord of angels, and of all men. Now he who is Lord over all men, and angels, must have Divine power and wisdom to rule and govern them, and so partake of the Divine nature. Hence of him, whose name is King of kings, and Lord of lords, Rev. xix. 16. St. John doth also say, his name is ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Word of God, ver. 13. and in the beginning of his Gospel, that this Word was God.

[23] Ver. 44. Ἐσκίρτησεν ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει τὸ βρέφος. The child leaped in my womb.] By reason of the joy which transported me, saith Dr. Hammond; for it was when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, that the babe leaped in her womb, ver. 41. nor is any infant in the womb capable of any joy, as having no apprehensions of good to be enjoyed, or evil to be avoided; and so he cannot be capable of that joy which results only from these apprehensions: if you object, that the angel had foretold that this child should be filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, ver. 15. and upon that account he might rejoice whilst he was in it, see the answer, note on ver. 15.

[24] Ver. 45. And blessed is she that believed, for (ὅτι, that) there shall be a performance of these things.] As the Hebrew כי signifies not only for, but that; as Job iii. 12. כי אינק that I might suck; and Psal. xi. 3. the wicked bend their bow, &c. that the foundations may be destroyed: (see note, p. 406.) so doth the Greek ὅτι.

[25] Ver. 48. Ὅτι ἐπέβλεψεν ἐπὶ ταπείνωσιν τῆς δούλης αὐτοῦ, For he hath regarded (or compassionately looked upon) the low estate of his handmaid.] The word here is not ταπεινοφροσύνη, the humble-mindedness, but ταπείνωσις, the mean, low, or afflicted state of the Virgin, which appeared in her offering for her purification, Luke ii. 24. So the word constantly signifies both in the Old and the New Testament: so speaks Leah, Gen. xxix. 32. The Lord saw τὴν ταπείνωσιν, my affliction, and hath given me a child: so Jacob, Gen. xxxi. 22. The Lord saw my affliction: so Deut. xxvi. 7. 1 Sam. ix. 16. 2 Kings xiv. 26. Neh. ix. 9. Psal. ix. 13. xxiv. 18. xxx. 7. cxix. 153. Lam. i. 9. Acts viii. 33.

* De Vita Contemp. p. 695.

[26] Ver. 49. For he that is mighty hath done to me μεγαλεῖα, great things;] i. e. He hath wrought a great miracle upon me; so μεγαλεῖα, and τὰ μεγάλα, often signify the miracles God wrought in Egypt and in the wilderness, Deut. x. 21. xi. 7. xxxiv. 12. Psal. lxxi. 19. Ecclus. xvii. 8. xxxvi. 8. xliii. 15.

[27] Ver. 51. Ἐποίησε κράτος ἐν βραχίονι αὐτοῦ, He hath shewed strength with his arm.] Here Grotius notes, that God's great power is represented by his finger, his greater by his hand, his greatest by his arm; the production of lice was by the finger of God, Exod. viii. 19. his other miracles in Egypt were wrought by his hand, Exod. iii. 20. the destruction of Pharaoh and his host, in the Red Sea by his arm, Exod. xv. 6. The following words seem to be taken from the song of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 4—6. and need no farther explication than that which they have received in the paraphrase.

[28] Ver. 54. Ἀντελάβετο, &c. He hath holpen his servant Israel, &c.] The word ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι signifies, to hold by the hand, to sustain from falling, or to lift up when fallen, and so to afford aid or help, Jer. xxxi. 32. Zech. xiii. 13. This he hath done, saith the Virgin, in remembrance of his mercy; for then God is said signally to remember his people, when, after a long oppression, in which he seemed to have forgotten them, he works a mighty salvation for them: so Psal. cxxxvi. ἐν τῇ ταπεινώσει ἡμῶν ἐμνήσθη, the Lord remembered us in our affliction, (ver. 23.) and delivered us out of the hand of the enemy; and he did this also in pursuance of his promise made to our forefathers, to send the Messiah to be an everlasting blessing to all that believed in him, and so became the seed of Abraham by faith.

[29] Ver. 59. Ἐν τῇ ὀγδόῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἦλθον περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον, On the eighth day they came to circumcise the child.] Not before that day, because the mother was unclean seven days, (Lev. xii. 1, 2.) and so was the child by touching her, and therefore he was not then fit to be admitted into covenant: moreover, till that time he was weak, and could not well endure the pain of circumcision. (See the note on Phil. iii. 5.) Note also, that the law appointed no certain place in which circumcision was to be done, nor any certain person to perform it, and therefore it was done sometimes by women, (Exod. iv. 25.) and here in the house of Elisabeth, as appears by her presence at it, (ver. 60.) The Jews did it sometimes in their schools, not out of necessity, but to have more witnesses of the fact. Then also they gave the name to the infant, because, when God instituted circumcision, he changed the names of Abraham and Sarah.

[30] Ver. 60. He shall be called John.] This she might learn from her husband, giving her in writing a relation of what the angel said to him, (ver. 13.) Now, God is gracious, which is the import of that name, is a name very fit for him, who was to be the first preacher of the kingdom of grace, and who was to point out him, for whose fulness we receive grace for grace. (John i. 16.)

[31] Ver. 66. Καὶ χεὶρ Κυρίου ἦν μετ' αὐτοῦ, And the hand of the Lord was with him.] Here by the hand of the Lord we are not to understand the spirit of prophecy, for this is still described by the hand of the Lord being ἐπ' αὐτὸν, upon the prophet, Ezek. i. 3. iii. 22. xxxvii. 1. xl. 1. but the care, providence, and assistance of God, as Psal. lxxx. 17.

[32] Ver. 67. Καὶ Ζαχαρίας ἐπλήσθη πνεύματος ἁγίου καὶ προεφήτευσε, And his father Zachary was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied.] Notwithstanding all that the critics here say, I know but two significations of the word prophesying, especially when it is said to be done by one filled with the Holy Ghost; as here; and two senses, in which any one in Scripture is called a prophet. And,

First, According to the grammatical import of the word, a prophet is ὁ προφάσκων τὸ μέλλον, one who foretells, that something future, and contingent in respect of us, shall certainly fall out: so Phavorinus, Προφήτης ἐστὶν ὁ δὶ ἐνεργείας πνευματικῆς τὰ μέλλοντα δηλῶν, A prophet is one who declares things future, by the assistance of the Spirit: thus, when Ezekiel had prophesied of the desolation of Jerusalem by the sword, and by wild beasts, When this (saith he) cometh to pass, ye shall know that a prophet hath been among you: (Ezek. xxxiii. 27. 33.) and in the time of their captivity, they thus complain, We see not our signs; there is no prophet more, not one that can tell us how long these calamities shall last, or when they will have an end. (Psal. lxxiv. 9.) And in this sense Zacharias here prophesies, foretelling what should be done by his son, and by the Messiah hereafter.

Secondly, a prophet, in the Scripture language, is a revealer of the will of God. So Phavorinus, Προφήτης ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος θεῖος πνευματοφόρος, A prophet is a Divine man, endued with an afflatus of the Holy Spirit. In this sense is Abraham styled a prophet, by reason of the many Divine revelations made to him, Gen. xx. 7. and by him left unto posterity, xviii. 19. and John the Baptist is here styled a prophet, ver. 76. because he received his commission and doctrine from heaven, Matt. xxi. 25. John i. 6. though we read of no predictions made by either of them. And to such a prophet it was absolutely necessary, that he should receive his doctrine by revelation from God; for as the things of man knoweth no man, but the spirit of man that is in him; so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God: (1 Cor. ii. 11.) so that he who reveals his will must be ἄνθρωπος ὁ πνευματοφόρος, a man inspired by the Spirit; for, saith St. Peter, no prophecy is of private motion or incitation, but holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2 Pet. i. 20, 21.) Hence are they styled so often the messengers of the Lord, the prophets who had spoken in the name of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. Hag. i. 13. Mal. ii. 7. 1 Pet. i. 10. 2 Pet. iii. 2. Their prophecies are called the word and burden of the Lord; and their style runs, Thus saith the Lord. Hence, lastly, this is still the character of the false prophets, that they run when God had not sent them, and prophesied when God had not spoken to them; nor have these words any other sense in Scripture, nor were they ever used otherwise by the ancient Jews: this sense the word plainly bears, when it is said, Exod. vii. 1. I have made thee a god to Pharaoh, and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet; i. e. the revealer of what thou, the god of Pharaoh, shalt say to him; nor does it ever signify to expound or interpret Scripture, otherwise than by a Divine afflatus, or gift of prophecy. (See the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 6.) It also signifies a Divine afflatus enabling a man to compose hymns, or psalms of praise, but still as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (See the same note.) In the example of Saul, it signifies to rave in prophesying; i. e. to be, as the Septuagint hath it, Hos. ix. 7. ἐξεστηκὼς, a prophet in ecstasy and madness; but still by the afflatus of an evil spirit, according to that distinction of prophecy Phavorinus gives us, that it is either πνευματικὴ ἢ καὶ διαβολικὴ, by the afflatus of the good or evil spirit; as in this instance, the evil spirit came upon Saul, and he prophesied in his house. (See the opinion of the Jews, note on 2 Pet. i. 21.) And, lastly, when the body of Elisha is said by the son of Sirach to prophesy by raising the dead man, Ecclus. xlviii. 14. he intended not to say, it wrought a miracle, but only that it foretold a thing to come, viz. the fall of the Syrians, who, saith Elisha there, shall be smitten three times, and the rising up of God's oppressed people, or the reviving of them; and so is to be reduced to the first acceptation of the word.

[33] Ver. 68. Ἐπεσκέψατο, καὶ ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ, He hath visited in mercy, &c.] So Ruth i. 6. Psal. lxxix. 15. cv. 4. so as to do them good; as he visited Sarah, Gen. xxi. 1. and Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 21. and his people oppressed by the Egyptians, Gen. l. 24, 25. Exod. iii. 16. when the people rejoiced, ὅτι ἐπεσκέψατο, that God hath visited the children of Israel, iv. 31. xiii. 19. as he did then by granting them the deliverance they desired, and here by granting the Messiah they so earnestly expected, who was to save his people from their sins, and so to work redemption for them.

[34] Ver. 69. Κέρας σωτηρίας.] Either a strong or mighty salvation; the metaphor being taken from beasts, whose strength is in their horns, as Jer. xlviii. 25. Lam. ii. 3. 17. Or a royal salvation; the horn signifying royal power, Psal. cxxxii. 17. Dan. vii. 7, 8. Zech. i. 18. this relating to the setting up the kingdom of David by the Messiah, who was to reign over the house of Jacob, ver. 33. 73. so that it is eminently κέρας τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ, the horn of his Christ, 1 Sam. ii. 10.

[35] Ver. 70. Τῶν ἀπ' αἰῶνος προφητῶν, Which have been since the world began.] From the beginning of ages, the promise being made to Adam, Gen. iii. 15. that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. So Jerusalem hath been a rebellious city, min Jomath holma, ἀφ' ἡμερῶν αἰῶνος, i. e. from time of old, Ezra iv. 15. 19. and ἡμέραι ἀρχαῖαι, the days of old, and ἤτη αἰώνια, are the same, Psal. lxxvii. 5. (See the note on Tit. i. 2.)

[36] Ver. 73. To perform the oath, &c.] This oath was made to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16, 17. Now that being an immutable thing, (Heb. vi. 17.) it could neither be hindered nor retarded by the sins of the Jews, as they say the coming of their Messiah was! and the words following, δοῦναι ἡμῖν, that he would give us this horn of salvation, or this seed, in which all the families of the earth should be blessed, are the subject of that oath, Gen. xxii. 18. and therefore these words are rather to be joined to this verse, as in the Greek, than to be added to the beginning of the next, as it is in our translation.

[37] Ver. 74. Ἀφόβως λατρεύειν αὐτῷ, To serve him without fear.] That ἀφόβως here is to be joined to λατρεύειν, to serve, is evident, as Mr. Le Clerc notes, from the harshness of the other expression, to be delivered without fear; and from the nature of the Christian constitution, which delivers us from the spirit of bondage unto fear, under which the Jews were held, (Rom. viii. 15.) from the fear of death, the last enemy, and of Satan, who had the power of death; (Heb. ii. 14, 15.) God having not now given us the spirit of fear, (2 Tim. i. 17.) but that love which casts out fear. (1 John iv. 18.) But then, when Mr. Le Clerc adds, that at this time the Syrians, Egyptians, and other heathen nations bordering on Judea, were troublesome to the Jews; nor were they without fear of the Romans themselves, so that they could not exercise their religion ἀφόβως, without fear; and that Zacharias speaks of the Messiah, as of one that was about to rescue the Jews from those dangers, in agreement with the common opinion; nor did the spirit of prophecy undeceive him as to this matter: this is one of those bold strokes, which if that learned man could abstain from, he would give less offence to the Christians, and less advantage to the antiscripturists; for if one filled by the Holy Ghost, and prophesying by an afflatus from him, may prophesy deceit, and promise to his fellow Jews that a temporal kingdom should be erected by the Messiah, which their common opinion made them to expect; though this opinion was not only false, but wholly opposite to the nature of Christ's kingdom, and that which chiefly hindered the Jews from receiving Christ as their Messiah: why might not others, though filled with the Holy Ghost, speak other things according to the common though false opinion of the Jews, and the spirit of prophecy not undeceive them? And if so, where is our certainty of the rule of faith? But surely, if Christ's kingdom be spiritual, his subjects must be so, and their enemies spiritual, sin, death, and Satan; from all which we shall obtain a full deliverance by serving God in righteousness and holiness before him all the days of our life.

[38] Ver. 76. Ὁ προφήτης ὑψίστου, The prophet of the Highest.] The God of Israel seems to have been still owned by those heathens who had any knowledge of him, as a God above all gods; by Cyrus he is styled, by way of emphasis, ὁ Θεὸς, the God, Ezra i. 3. by Rahab the harlot, the God of heaven above, and in the earth beneath, Josh. ii. 11. by Cyrus, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 33. Ezra i. 2. by Darius, Ezra vi. 9, 10. by Artaxerxes, Ezra vii. 21. 23. by Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 37. by Hiram, the God that made heaven and earth, 1 Chron. ii. 12. And as in Scripture he is exalted above all others, by the name of אל עליון the most high God, Gen. xiv. 18. so also he is styled by Cyrus, Esd. ii. 3. by Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 34. by Darius, Esd. vi. 31. by Artaxerxes, Esd. viii. 19. 21. by the emperor Augustus, Josephus Antiq. lib. xvi. cap. 10. p. 561. by Tiberius, Philo legat. ad Caium, p. 785. E. by Tatnai and Shethar-boznai, Θεὸς ὁ μέγας, the great God, Ezra v. 8. by Artaxerxes, the highest, the greatest, and the living God, Esth. xvi. 16.

[39] Ver. 78. Ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους, The day-spring from on high hath visited us.] He who is here styled the day-spring from on high, or rising sun, is by Zachary called, iii. 8. Ἀνατολὴ, the rising sun, my servant; and, vi. 12. the man whose name is Ἀνατολὴ, the rising sun: and by Malachi iv. 2. the Sun of righteousness, as being to arise upon the Jew and gentile, and spread his bright beams on those who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death, Isa. ix. 2. Whence by old Simeon he is said to be a light to lighten the gentiles, Luke ii. 32. and by the Baptist, to be a light shining in darkness, John i. 5.—

An addition. It is evident to any one who inspects the Greek, that this hymn is deficient as to the full sense of it, from ver. 71. to 75. and that ποιῆσαι ἔλεος μετὰ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, ver. 72. which we translate to perform the mercy promised to, should rather be translated, to perform the mercy (covenated) with our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; according to the words of the blessed Virgin, He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy (covenanted) to Abraham, and to his seed for ever: it being therefore very usual, both in the Old and the New Testament, to supply what is defective from the preceding words, I look upon the whole following hymn to ver. 76. as a descant upon those words in the beginning, to wit, ἐπεσκέψατο, καὶ ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν, he hath visited and redeemed his people; and therefore fill up the sense of it thus, ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν, He hath performed redemption to them: viz. ver. 71. σωτηρίαν, Salvation from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us. Ἐπεσκέψατο, ver. 72. ποιῆσαι ἔλεος, He hath visited us, to perform the mercy covenanted with our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; καὶ μνησθῆναι, ver. 73. τὸν ὅρκον, and to remember the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, τοῦ δοῦναι ἡμῖν, to give us the heirs of the promise, (Heb. vi. 17.) this horn of salvation, ver. 69. this Redeemer, this deliverer out of Zion, styled ὁ ῥυόμενος, to enable us, ῥυσθέντας, thus delivered from the hands of our enemies, to serve him without fear, &c.

CHAP. II.

1. AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that [1] all the world should be taxed (i. e. should have their names and conditions of life set down in court-rolls, according to their families).

2. (And this taxing was [2] first made (before that made) when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3. And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4. And Joseph also [3] went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, to Judea, to [4] the city of David, which is called Beth-lehem, because he was of the house and lineage of David;

5. To be taxed with [5] Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6. And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7. And she brought forth her first-born son, [6] and wrapped him in swaddling-clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

8. And there were in the same country [7] shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

9. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them (Gr. stood by them), and the [8] glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

10. And the angel said to them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be (so) to all people.

11. For to you is born this day in (Beth-lehem) the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12. And this shall be a sign to you (of the truth of my words, That going thither) ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes, lying in a manger.

13. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14. [9] Glory (be) to God (who dwelleth) in the highest (heavens), and (or, for by this Saviour is procured) on earth peace, (and God's) good-will towards men.

15. And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even to Beth-lehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us.

16. And they came with haste (thither), and found Mary and Joseph (there), and the babe lying in a manger.

17. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them (by the angel) concerning this child.

18. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things they had heard (from the angel) and seen, as it was told them (by him).

21. And when eight days were [10] accomplished (i. e. when the eighth day was come) for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of (or, the name imposed on him by) the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22. And when the days of her [11] purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord;

23. As it is written in the law of the Lord, [12] Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord (i. e. shall be consecrated to God, and so made holy);

24. And to offer a sacrifice (for the woman at her purification), according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, (That he who is not able to bring a lamb, should bring) a [13] pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons.

25. And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just (towards men) and devout (towards God, and he was) [14] waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the [15] Holy Ghost was upon him.

26. And it was revealed to him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27. And he came by (motion of) the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents (at the same time) brought in the child Jesus, to do for him (i. e. to pay the price of his redemption as being their first-born) after the custom of the law (concerning the first-born),

28. Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

29. Lord, now lettest thou thy servant [16] depart in peace, (seeing it hath been with me) according to thy word:

30. For mine eyes have seen (the Messiah, called) thy [17] salvation,

31. Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people (as well gentiles as Jews, he being sent as)

32. [18] A light to lighten the gentiles, and (to be) the glory of thy people Israel.

33. And Joseph and his mother marvelled at these things which were spoken of him.

34. And Simeon blessed them, and said to Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for [19] the fall (of many through infidelity), and (for the) rising again (or up) of many in Israel (through faith in him); and for a sign that shall be spoken against (by the scribes and pharisees, and rulers of the people, who shall blaspheme his person, contradict his doctrine, and set him up as their mark to shoot at);

35. Yea, a sword (that of martyrdom) shall pierce through thy own soul also (and this contradiction of him, God in his wisdom shall permit), that the thoughts of many hearts (i. e. the inward tempers and dispositions of many) may be revealed.

36. And there was (also) one [20]Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser; (and) she was of a great age, and had lived with a husband seven years from her virginity;

37. And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years (old), which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayer night and day (at evening and morning service).

38. And sho coming at that instant (that the child was there) gave thanks likewise to the Lord, and [21] spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem (as the person from whom it was to be expected).

39. And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord (and had fled into Egypt for the safety of the child, after the death of Herod), they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, (being) filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him (i. e. the favour of God was with him).

41. Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover.

42. And when he was twelve years old, they went up (with him) to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

43. And when they had fulfilled the (seven) days (of the feast), as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44. But they, supposing him to have been in the company, (they) went a day's journey; and (then) they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45. And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

46. And it came to pass, that [22] after three days (the third day) they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

47. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers.

48. And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said to him, Son, why hast thou dealt thus with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

49. And he said to them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's [23] business (Gr. in my Father's house)?

50. And they understood not the saying which he spake to them.

51. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject to them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

52. And Jesus [24] increased in wisdom, and stature, and in favour with God and man.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. ΑΠΟΓΡΑΦΕΣΘΑΙ πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην, That all the world should be taxed.] Not only the Roman empire, but all the precedent empires were styled οἰκουμένη, the world; and the governors of them were said πάσης ἐπικρατῆσαι τῆς οἰκουμένης, to rule over the whole world. (See the note on Heb. ii. 5.) Hence the counsel of God against the empire of Babylon is styled his counsel, ἐπὶ τὴν ὅλην οἰκουμένην, against all the earth; her desolation is represented as the desolation ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης, of the whole world; and the evil brought upon her, as evils which extended τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ὅλῃ, to the whole world. (Isa. xiv. 17. 26.)

[2] Ver. 2. Αὕτη ἡ ἀπογραφὴ πρώτη ἐγένετο ἡγεμονεύοντος τῆς Συρίας Κυρηνίου, Now this taxing was first made when (or, was before that, when) Cyrenius was governor of Syria.] I dare not allow of the boldness of those critics, who for Κυρηνίου read Κυιντηλίου, or Σατυρνίνου, there being no footsteps of any such reading either in ancient writers, versions, or MSS.; and were there place for conjecture here, I would rather read πρὸ τῆς than πρώτη; as if the evangelist should say, This taxing or enrolling was before that, which was made by Cyrenius, that being so unhappy and pernicious to the Jews,* by reason of the sedition then raised, upon occasion of the tax, by Judas Gaulonites, and which, saith Josephus,† gave the rise to all their future troubles.

Now this, saith Josephus, was after Judea was made προσθήκη τῆς Συρίας, an addition to the province of Syria; and when Archelaus was banished, and so above ten years after that mentioned here, as done at our Saviour's birth, and fit to be thus separated from that, which was attended with those ill effects; this being in design highly salutary, that being very fatal to the Jewish nation. But neither do we need this criticism, since the words πρῶτος and πρότερος are by the LXX. oft used according to this sense: of the word πρότερον, this is beyond doubt, God saying twice ἀποστελῶ σφηκίας לפניך προτέρας σου, I will send hornets before thee; (Exod. xxiii. 28. Josh. xxiv. 12.) in which sense you will find this word above twenty times in Kircher's Concordance in the word פנה: that πρῶτος also is used in the sense of priority, we learn from these instances, πρωτότοκος ἐγὼ ἢ σύ, Heb. אני ממך I am before thee, I am elder than thou; καὶ ἵνα τι οὐκ ἐλογίσθη ὁ λόγος μου πρῶτος. Chald. קדימוצא לי kaddemotza li, why then was not the word first spoken to me? cur mihi non annuntiatum est priori? 2 Sam. xix. 43. Isa. lxv. 16. The former troubles are forgotten, Gr. ἐπιλήσονται τὴν θλῖψιν αὐτῶν τὴν πρώτην, and ver. 17. οὐ μὴ μνησθῶσι τῶν προτέρων, they shall not remember the former: so John i. 15. 30. ὅτι πρῶτός μου ἦν, for he was before me; and, xv. 18. know that they hated ἐμὲ πρῶτον, me before you; 1 Cor. xiv. 30. ὁ πρῶτος, let the former hold his peace; and 1 John iv. 19. we love him, ὅτι πρῶτος, because he loved us before; and in Aristophanes, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἂν πρώτου is interpreted ἀλλ' οὐκ ἂν πρότερον, Neph. p. 122. and so Theophylact interprets the words here, τουτέστι προτέρα ἡγεμονεύοντος, ἦγουν πρότερον ἢ ἡγεμόνευε τῆς Συρίας Κυρήνιος. As for this ἀπογραφὴ, that it was not a money tax, but an enrolling of persons according to their families and estates, see Dr. Hammond, note b.

[3] Ver. 4. Ἀνέβη δὲ καὶ Ἰωσὴφ, &c. And Joseph went up from Galilee—to the city of David called Beth-lehem.] Here, first, interpreters observe, that ἀναβαίνειν, to ascend, or go up, does not always signify to go from a lower to a higher place, but to go from one place to another, as Judg. xvi. 18. Secondly, That admirable was the providence of God in ordering this enrolment, intended by Augustus to be done before, to be deferred to this very time, that so Christ might be born in Beth-lehem, according to the prediction of the prophet, Micah v. 2. And, thirdly, that the stock and family of Christ might at that time be known and preserved in the public tables, as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Chrysostom, (hom. 8. in Matt.) testify.

[4] Εἰς πόλιν Δαβὶδ, To the city of David.] That musterings and enrollings, as in other nations, so especially in Judea, were made according to their tribes, cities, and families, we learn from the sortition which Joshua made by tribes, families, and households, Josh. vii. 14. Now this could not be done, especially after their manifold dispersions, unless every one went to that city to which his family belonged.

[5] Ver. 5. Σὺν Μαριὰμ τῇ μεμνηστευμένῃ αὐτῷ γυναικὶ, With Mary his espoused wife.] She was not only espoused now, but married also to him, but is still called espoused, because Joseph used her as such, not knowing her till she had brought forth υἱὸν αὐτῆς τὸν πρωτότοκον, her first-born son, Matt. i. 25. (See the note there.) Moreover, hence it is probably collected, that the blessed Virgin Mary was also of the house and family of David, as hath been shewed, note on Luke i. 27. for, if he went to Beth-lehem to be enrolled because he was of the house and family of David, she must go thither for the same reason also; "nam alioqui ipsa in familiæ suæ urbe profiteri debuerat;" for otherwise (saith Grotius) she ought to have been enrolled in the city of her own family, and not at Beth-lehem: for it is said, ver. 3. that all (men and women) went to be taxed, every one in his own city.

[6] Ver. 7. Καὶ ἐσπαργάνωσεν, &c. And she wrapped him in swaddling-clothes.] By doing this herself it is thought her labour was without the usual pangs of childbed.

[7] Ver. 8. Καὶ ποιμένες ἦσαν—φυλάσσοντες φυλακὰς τῆς νυκτὸς, &c. And there were shepherds—keeping watch over their flock, or the watches of the night over their flock.] Here note, 1. That as Abraham and David, to whom the promise of the Messiah was first made, were shepherds, so was the completion of this promise first revealed to shepherds. 2. The watches of the night were four; the first of them is mentioned Lam. ii. 19. the second and third, Luke xii. 38. and the fourth, Matt. xiv. 25. being the morning watch, Exod. xiv. 24. These flocks being kept in the field, they watched severally in their courses, to preserve them from thieves and wild beasts, and had their little cottages erected for that purpose.

[8] Ver. 9. Καὶ ἡ δόξα Κυρίου περιέλαμψεν αὐτοὺς, And the glory of the Lord shone round about them.] i. e. Not only a great light, but such a glorious splendour as useth to represent the presence of God; of which, see note on Phil. ii. 6. Heb. i. 3. and was oft attended with a host of angels, as here, ver. 13. styled the heavenly host, 1 Kings xxii. 19. Neh. ix. 6. Psal. ciii. 20. who, as they sang together at the first creation, Job xxxviii. 7. so do they now at the redemption of the world, praising God, and saying,

[9] Ver. 14. Δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις Θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη, ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία, Glory to God on high, and on earth peace, good-will towards men.] Here note, first, that this is not a hymn of prayer, that glory may be given to God, peace may be upon earth, &c. but rather a declaratory hymn of glory due to God for what he hath done already; for the angels are said to praise God, saying, Glory, &c. Now praise is for what is done already. Secondly, Some, observing that καὶ is sometimes casual, and signifies for, give the sense of this hymn thus, Glory be to God; because, by the birth of this Saviour, who is our peace, (Eph. ii. 14.) there will be peace on earth, and the good-will of God to man is manifest. Others thus: The good-will of God to man, shewed in the incarnation of our Saviour, is matter to him of the highest glory, and the foundation of our peace on earth: and because some copies read ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας, to men of good-will; some, following that reading, give the sense thus: Peace will be on earth to men whom God accepts. But this is less to be regarded, because all the Greek fathers (Orig. in Joh. xi. 14. Euseb. Demonst. Evang. lib. iv. cap. 10. p. 163. Epiph. Hær. 30. §. 29. Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 47.) read otherwise. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[10] Ver. 21. Καὶ ὅτι ἐπλήσθησαν ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ τοῦ περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον, And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child.] That is, not when the eighth day was ended, but when it was come: so ver. 22. so Acts ii. 1. ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι, when the day of Pentecost was come. Now Christ was circumcised, that he might wear the badge of a child of Abraham, and that he might be made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, (Gal. iv. 4.) καὶ ἐκλήθη, and then was his name called Jesus. So καὶ signifies, Gen. xxiv. 41. xxviii. 21. xxxi. 8. xlii. 34. 38. Exod. vii. 9. Lev. iv. 3. 14. 23. 28. Numb. v. 15. 21. Deut. vi. 21. viii. 10. Josh. i. 15. xxiv. 20. 1 Sam. i. 11. Matt. ix. 7. Luke ii. 28.

[11] Ver. 22. Καὶ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτῆς—αὐτῶν, And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished.] I formerly thought that the reading her purification, and not the purification of them both, was to be retained, that only being agreeable to the law, and to the version of the LXX. because the law of purification belonged only to the mother, who till that time remained ἐν αἵματι ἀκαθάρτῳ αὐτῆς, in the blood of her impurity, till the days καθάρσεως αὐτῆς, of her purifying were fulfilled: (Lev. xii. 4, 5.) then, saith the text, shall she bring her offering, and the priest ἐξιλάσεται περὶ αὐτῆς καὶ καθαριεῖ αὐτὴν, shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood: this is the law for her that hath born a male or female, (ver. 7, 8.) But I have since found cause to judge otherwise: for that the ancient reading was αὐτῶν is evident from these words of Origen,* Si scriptum esset propter purgationem ejus; i. e. Mariæ, nihil quæstionis oriretur, et audacter diceremus Mariam quæ homo erat, purgatione indiguisse post partum; nunc vero in eo quod ait, dies purgationis eorum, non videtur unum significare, sed alterum, sive plures. So also read St. Jerome, Con. Helvid. tom. ii.

* Hom. 14. in Lucam, F. 100. D.

F. 7. lit. A. Euthymius, Theophylact, and the Syriac version; nor is there any fear of ascribing any moral impurity to the holy Jesus by allowing this reading, since this purgation imports only a compliance with a ceremonial law, in order to their admittance into the congregation of God's people, to which Christ, being made of a woman made under the law, was to submit, that he might fulfil all righteousness: on which account also he was made relatively holy, by being consecrated to the Lord, according to the law concerning every male that openeth the womb, ver. 23.

[12] Ver. 23. Πᾶν ἄρσεν διανοῖγον μήτραν, Every male that openeth the womb.] The words of the law concerning every male that openeth the womb, being here applied to the blessed Virgin, bringing forth her first-born, sufficiently confirm the assertion of Irenæus,* Tertullian,† Origen,‡ and others of the fathers, cited by Petavius, that she brought forth Christ after the usual manner; and yet the contrary opinion, though built upon fables, and superstitious imaginations, and spurious authorities, prevailed almost generally in the fourth and fifth centuries. (See the treatise of Traditions, par. i. cap. 1. §. 4.)

[13] Ver. 24. Καὶ δοῦναι θυσίαν—ζεῦγος τρυγόνων, And to offer——a pair of turtles.] This being the oblation appointed only for the poor, (Lev. xii. 6. 8.) discovers the poverty of Joseph and Mary, that they could not reach to a lamb of the first year; the offering which they who had ability were to make.

[14] Ver. 25. Προσδεχόμενος τὴν παράκλησιν τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, Waiting for the consolation of Israel.] This was the familiar phrase they used when they spake of the coming of the Messiah; to see those days being, in their way of speaking, to see the consolation of Israel, or the years of the consolation to come. See the Targum on Isa. iv. 3. on Jer. xxxi. 6. and 2 Sam. xxiii. 1. and they were wont, saith Dr. Lightfoot, to swear by their desire to see this consolation.

[15] Καὶ πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἦν ἐπ' αὐτὸν, And the Holy Ghost was upon him.] i. e. He had received the gift of prophecy; for that having ceased four hundred years, began to dawn again at the birth of the Messiah in some pious persons, as Zachary, Simeon, and Anna the daughter of Phanuel.

[16] Ver. 29. Νῦν ἀπολύεις, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart.] Here Grotius well notes, that ἀπολύειν and ἀπόλυσις, both in sacred and profane authors, signify to depart out of this life, or to die; as when Abraham says, ἐγὼ ἀπολύομαι ἄτεκνος, I die childless, Gen. xv. 2. ἀπελύθη Ἀαρὼν, Aaron died, Numb. xx. 29. Thus Tobit prays, Command my spirit to be taken from me, ὅπως ἀπολυθῶ, that I may be dissolved, ἐπίταξον ἐπιλυθῆναί με, Tobit iii. 6. and Sarah saith, εἶπον ἀπολύσαί με ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, ver. 13. I desired God to take me from the earth; and one of the seven children saith to the tyrant, σὺ ἐκ τοῦ παρόντος ἡμᾶς ζῆν ἀπολύεις, thou takest away our present life. Thus, saith Lycon,§ this is my testament, μετὰ τὴν ἐμὴν ἀπόλυσιν, after my dissolution. Themistius‖ notes that it was customary to some to call death ἀπόλυσις, and to say of them that they did ἀπολύειν. So Theophrastus¶ calls death ἀπόλυσις; and Heraclitus saith, perhaps the soul presageth ἀπόλυσιν αὐτῆς, her dissolution; all which expressions confirm the old traditions of the distinction of the soul from the body, and her continuance in a state of separation.

[17] Ver. 30. Ὅτι εἶδον ὀφθαλμοί μου τὸ σωτήριόν σου, For mine eyes have seen thy salvation.] So the deliverance God sent to his people is called σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, the salvation of God, Psal. xcviii. 3. how much more may the salvation sent by Christ be styled, as it is emphatically, ἡ σωτηρία, the salvation, Isa. xlix. 6. lii. 7. yea, σωτηρία παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, salvation from God, ver. 10.?

[18] Ver. 32. Φῶς εἰς ἀποκάλυψιν ἐθνῶν· A light to enlighten the gentiles.] It is wonderful that, after so many clear prophecies in the Old Testament of the calling of the gentiles, the Jews should have been all so blind as to imagine God had no kindness for them. (Acts x. 45. xi. 18.)

[19] Ver. 34. Οὗτος κεῖται εἰς πτῶσιν καὶ ἀνάστασιν, This child is set for the fall and rising of many in Israel.] Doubtless God's first design in sending his Son into the world was that through him the world might be saved, (John ii. 16.) and he was designed especially to save his people from their sins, and be a horn of salvation to them. (Luke i. 69.) But to persons who were worldly-minded and had no relish for spiritual things, which was the case of the generality of the Jews, who were much given to the flesh, as Tacitus observes of them, who were puffed up with a vain conceit of their own wisdom and singular piety, full of vain-glory, greedy of empire and applause, and affected with worldly pomp and grandeur, as were the scribes and pharisees, and rulers of the people, he was to be a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, because these things obstructed their reception of his doctrine and spiritual kingdom, so different from that which they expected; and to discover who had hearts well disposed to embrace his doctrine upon conviction, and who by those prejudices and corrupt affections would shut their eyes against the light, is here to manifest the thoughts of men's hearts by their actions. When Simeon adds, καί σου δὲ αὐτῆς ψυχὴν διελεύσεται ῥομφαία, and a sword shall pass through thine own soul; though grief is said to pierce as with a sword, both in profane authors and in the Psalmist, xlii. 10. yet, seeing this comes not up to the height of this expression, this seemeth rather to respect her martyrdom, or being taken away by death, saith Epiphanius, ὡς γέγραπται, as it is written, A sword shall pass through her soul, or herself. (Hæres. 78. §. 32.)

[20] Ver. 36, 37. Anna, a prophetess, of the tribe of Aser, a widow of about eighty-four years, καὶ οὐκ ἀφίστατο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, and she departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.] Note, (1.) that this fourscore and four years must be reckoned, not from the beginning of her widowhood, but of her life, otherwise she must be a very decrepit woman, not able to fast after this manner; and (2.) she is said to be always in the temple, because she was so constantly there at the hours of prayer: so Aaron and his sons are bid not go out of the door of the tabernacle, (Lev. x. 7.) i. e. not to do it during the time of their ministry.

[21] Ver. 38. Ἐλάλει περὶ αὐτοῦ πᾶσι τοῖς προσδεχομένοις λύτρωσιν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, She spake of him to all that looked for redemption in Jerusalem.] This being the time when the whole Jewish nation was looking for the consolation of Israel, ver. 25. for redemption here, and even the scribes and pharisees expected that the kingdom of God should immediately appear; and this being, say Tacitus* and Suetonius,† the old and constant opinion which had obtained through the east; "ut eo tempore Judææ profecti rerum potirentur," that some, or rather one, out of Judea should obtain the government of the world, as Josephus hath it; we may be certain that the Jews of that age did so interpret the prophecies concerning their Messiah, as agreeing only to the time when our Christ did come, and when Simeon was assured by the Holy Ghost that this Messiah was to come. This, saith Josephus,‡ πολλοὶ τῶν σοφῶν, many of our wise men gathered from the sacred oracles. And indeed this seemed so certain, that though they rejected our Jesus, yet the fable soon obtained among them, that their Messiah was or might be come, though for a season he lay hid, by reason of their sins; as we learn from Trypho,§ and the Targum‖ of Jonathan.

Ver. 40. Καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι.] Here, saith Dr. Mills, πνεύματι, adjectum est ex hujus evangelio, (cap. 1. 80. Proleg. p. 44.) not only against the reading of Theophylact, and all the versions, but against the fierce dispute betwixt the Arians and the orthodox about these words; the Arians objecting that he, who increased in spirit, could not be God; some of the orthodox answering, that this related only to Christ's human nature, viz. Athanasius, Epiphanius, Ambrose, Cyril Alex. and Fulgentius; and others, that he thus waxed strong in spirit, not in his own person, but in the person of the church, or in the demonstration of the Spirit; as Origen, and many others cited by Maldonate on the place, but none of them questioning this reading; for Titus Bostrensis, the only father produced by the doctor, is by Dr. Cave proved to be spurious.

[22] Ver. 46. Μεθ' ἡμέρας τρεῖς, After three days they found him.] i. e. The third day, for they journeyed one day, returned to Jerusalem the second, and found him the third.

Ver. 47. Ἐπὶ τῇ συνέσει καὶ ἀποκρίσεσιν αὐτοῦ, At his understanding and answers.] As the word ἀποκρίνομαι often signifies only to speak, both in the Old and New Testament, and so is often used by the Septuagint, to answer to dabar in the Hebrew; so also doth the noun ἀπόκρισις in these words, Deut. i. 22. They shall bring us word; Sept. ἀπόκρισιν. Here then being no mention of any questions put to Christ, or of any answers he gave to the doctors, the words may be rendered thus, They were amazed at his understanding and speeches.

[23] Ver. 49. Ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναί με, I ought to be in my Father's house.] So Origen, Dionysius, Alexandrinus, Titus Bostrensis, Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact. See Dr. Hammond here: for as ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Διὸς, in Josephus, is, to be in the temple of Jupiter, so to be ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Πατρός μου, must signify to be in the temple of his Father, where they found him.

[24] Ver. 52. Καὶ Ἰησοῦς προέκοπτε σοφίᾳ, &c. And Jesus increased in wisdom, and stature, &c.] Vain hence is the conclusion of Woltzogenius, that Christ could not be God, because he cannot wax strong in spirit, either by advancing in the perfections of his mind, or by the teachings of the Spirit, as Christ did, or increase in wisdom; this being spoken of Christ, according to his human nature; these being, say the fathers,* τῆς ἀνθρωπότητος διηγήματα, the indications of humanity, and are to be understood κατ' ἀνθρωπίνην ψυχὴν, according to his human soul: and though the λόγος was united to the human soul from his conception, yet might the Divinity, or the Holy Ghost, manifest itself to the human nature as it thought fit, and by degrees insinuate into it its gifts and illuminations, as St. Luke here teacheth; so that we need not say with others, Christ did not really increase in wisdom, but only seem to others so to do: for seeing the evangelist here joins three things together, his increase in age and stature, in favour with men, and wisdom, as he increased truly and literally in the two first, so seems he to have done also as to his wisdom, and the endowments of his mind.

CHAP. III.

1. NOW in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor (or procurator) of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip (being) tetrarch of Iturea and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias (being) tetrarch (i. e. governor of a fourth division of the kingdom, named) of (the city Abyla) Abylene,

2. [1] Annas and Caiaphas being the high-priests (to whom was committed the civil and ecclesiastical government of the Jews according to their laws; Annas being the ruler of the people, Acts xxiii. 5. and Caiaphas the father of the Sanhedrin), [2] the word of God came to John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness.

3. And he (having received this commission from God) came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for (procuring to them) the remission of (their) sins:

4. (And he came) as it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying (of him, xl. 3. This is) the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight (for the coming of the king Messiah).

5. [3] Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and (the ways that are) crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth (as it useth to be when great kings take a journey into any part of their dominions);

6. [4] And all flesh shall see (the Messiah, who is emphatically styled, Isa. xlix. 6. lii. 7. 10.) the salvation of God. (See note on ii. 30.)

7. Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, (but more especially to the pharisees and sadducees, Matt. iii. 7.) [5] O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath (which is) to come (upon this nation)?

8. Bring forth therefore (if you indeed desire to escape this wrath) fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not (or be not willing, in lieu of it) to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our Father (and so by that have a sufficient right to the blessings of the Messiah, promised to him and his seed): for I say to you, That (if ye repent not, you are to be cut off; and think not that you being so, no children of Abraham will be found to whom this promise can be made good; for) God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham. (See note on Matt. iii. 9.)

9. And (to excite you to this repentance, know that even) now also the axe is laid to the root of the trees: every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruit is (to be) hewn down, and cast into the fire.

10. And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then (to prevent or avert this ruin)?

11. He answereth and saith to them, He [6] that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise (i. e. he prescribed to them an extensive charity to all that wanted what they had to spare).

12. Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said to him, Master, what shall we do (to escape this wrath)?

13. And he saith to them, [7] Exact no more than that which is appointed you (to receive).

14. And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? and he said to them, Do [8] violence to no man, neither [9] accuse any (man) falsely (or, oppress no man); but (and) be content with your wages.

15. And as the people were in expectation (of the promised Messiah), and (so) all men mused in their hearts of John, [10] whether he were the Christ, or not;

16. John answered (their surmises by) saying to them all, I indeed baptize you with water (and by that baptism call you to repentance, to fit you to believe on the Messiah, who will suddenly reveal himself); but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose (i. e. whose servant I am not worthy to be): he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire (i. e. in the symbol of fire):

17. (And he will come as one) whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

18. And many other (such) things in his exhortation preached he to the people.

19. But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,

20. Added yet this above (them) all, that he shut up John in prison.

21. Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened,

22. And the Holy Ghost descended (hovering) in [11] a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.

23. And Jesus himself (when he was baptized) [12] began to be about thirty years of age, being, as (it) was supposed, the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli,

24. Which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Janna, which was the son of Joseph,

28. Which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Addi, which was the son of Cosam, which was the son of Elmodam, which was the son of Er,

29. Which was the son of Jose, which was the son of Eliezer, which was the son of Jorim, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi,

30. Which was the son of Simeon, which was the son of Juda, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Jonan, which was the son of Eliakim,

31. Which was the son of Melea, which was the son of Menan, which was the son of Mattatha, which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David,

32. Which was the son of Jesse, which was the son of Obed, which was the son of Booz, which was the son of Salmon, which was the son of Naasson,

33. Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the son of Aram, which was the son of Esrom, which was the son of Phares, which was the son of Juda,

34. Which was the son of Jacob, which was the son of Isaac, which was the son of Abraham, which was the son of Thara, which was the son of Nachor.

35. Which was the son of Saruch, which was the son of Ragau, which was the son of Phaleg, which was the son of Heber, which was the son of Sala,

36. Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, which was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

37. Which was the son of Mathusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Maleleel, which was the son of Cainan,

38. Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. Ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων Ἄννα καὶ Καϊάφα, Annas and Caiaphas being high-priests.] It is a rule of the Jews, that they do not constitute two high-priests together; and yet we have not only mention in Josephus* of Jonathan and Ananias, Ananus and Jesus, as high-priests at the same time, but also of a στάσις τῶν ἀρχιερέων, a contention of the high-priests against the priests and chief Jews; and mention of one Jesus, as γεραίτατος τῶν ἀρχιερέων,† the eldest of the high-priests after Ananus. There were then doubtless many that bore that name, even all that ever had been so; as we still call them colonels and captains, who once bore those offices; and especially those of them, who were rulers in the great Sanhedrin, their supreme civil judicature. But then they being many, why are these two only mentioned as high-priests? to this Mr. Selden answers, That as in the first verse St. Luke had given an account of their external government by tetrarchs and procurators, so in this he gives an account of that civil and sacred government, which was left to be managed by themselves, by the Sanhedrin and high-priest; and because Annas was then their nasi, or prince of the Sanhedrin, whence he is called the ruler of the people, Acts xxiii. 5. and Caiaphas was high-priest that year, and, as he conjectures, the father of the Sanhedrin; therefore they only are here named, as having the chief authority, civil and sacred, in their hands.

[2] Ἐγένετο ῥῆμα Θεοῦ ἐπὶ Ἰωάννην, The word of God came to John.] These are the very words used of the prophets of the Old Testament, Τὸ ῥῆμα Θεοῦ ὃ ἐγένετο ἐπὶ Ἱερεμίαν, The word of the Lord came, or which came, to Jeremiah, i. 2. iv. 11. Καὶ ἐγένετο λόγος Κυρίου πρὸς Ἰεζεκιὴλ, And the word of the Lord came to Ezekiel, i. 3. vi. 1. vii. 1. xii. 1. xiii. 1. xiv. 2. 12. and so it is said of the rest. Shall we then think, that this forerunner of the Messiah spake the word of the Lord, as did the prophets of the old testament; and that the prophets and apostles of the new testament, on whom the Holy Ghost descended, to enable them to teach the mind of Christ to all future ages of the church, should not speak and write what they delivered as the rule of faith by like Divine assistance?

[3] Ver. 5. Πᾶσα φάραγξ πληρωθήσεται, καὶ πᾶν ὄρος καὶ βουνὸς ταπεινωθήσεται, Every valley shall be filled up, and every mountain and hill shall be made low.] These words refer to a known custom of great kings, who, when they travelled any whither, ὁδοποιοὶ, waymen were sent before them to make plain their way, by filling up deep places, and levelling those that were high, and smoothing the places that were rough, and making straight the crooked. So Josephus saith, That when Titus came to the wars, * προῆγον μὲν βασιλικοὶ, καὶ πᾶν τὸ συμμαχικὸν, ἐν οἷς ὁδοποιοὶ, there went before him all the royal aids, and all the military men, and those who planed the ways. Thus the Targum upon Canticles saith, The cloud went before the Israelites in the wilderness three days' journey, to take down the hills, and fill up the valleys before them, according to that of the Psalmist, lxviii. 4. rendered by the Greek ὁδοποιήσατε τῷ ἐπιβεβηκότι ἐπὶ τῶν δυσμῶν; and by Ainsworth, from the Hebrew, Sollu, make a highway for him that rideth in the deserts, as the word δυσμὸς signifies, Numb. xxxiii. 48. 50. xxxvi. 13. Deut. i. 1. Josh. v. 10. 2 Sam. iv. 7.: and this also do they still expect, when they return from their captivity. Thus Baruch saith, God hath commanded, or appointed, ταπεινοῦσθαι πᾶν ὄρος ὑψηλὸν, καὶ φάραγγας πληροῦσθαι εἰς ὁμαλισμὸν τῆς γῆς, that every high mountain and bank of long continuance should be cast down, and every valley filled up, that Israel may go safely in the glory of God, v. 7. So that as, when God led his people out of captivity, through the great desert to the land of promise, a highway was made for him, riding in the cloud before them: so, when Christ comes to proclaim liberty to the captives to sin and Satan, and lead them through the wilderness of this world to the heavenly Canaan, a voice is again heard in the wilderness, saying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c.

[4] Ver. 6. Καὶ ὄψεται πᾶσα σὰρξ τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.] These words are cited from Isa. lii. 10. in which chapter the ancient Jews allow, that the prophet is speaking of the Messiah: the Targum on the thirteenth verse saying, Behold, my servant the Messiah shall be exalted; and the apostle applying the seventh verse to the preaching of the gospel, Rom. x. 15.

[5] Ver. 7. Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, O generation of vipers.] What in St. Matthew, iii. 7. is said to be spoken to the pharisees and sadducees, is here said to be spoken τοῖς ὄχλοις, to the multitude, coming forth to be baptized; partly, because it was spoken to the pharisees mixed with the multitude, and in their audience, and agreed to them, not only as being generally of one of these two sects, but being also an adulterous generation, degenerated from the seed of Abraham to be the seed of the serpent.

[6] Ver. 11. Ὁ ἔχων δύο χιτῶνας μεταδότω τῷ μὴ ἔχοντι· καὶ ὁ ἔχων βρώματα ὁμοίως ποιείτω, He that hath two coats, let him give to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.] The Baptist doth not here make it unlawful to have two coats; for Peter had two, Acts xii. 8. and Paul likewise, 2 Tim. iv. 13. but only saith, that he that hath one coat, which his brother wants, and he at present doth not, should rather give it to him, than suffer him to be in want; and he that hath βρώματα περισσεύοντα, meats above what he himself needs, should, in like cases, feed his hungry brother with it; teaching us, that it is not lawful for us to abound in those things which our brother wants, when we have sufficient both to relieve his and our own necessities. Nor could this precept seem hard to those philosophers, who taught that ἑνὶ χρῆσθαι χιτῶνι τοῦ δεῖσθαι δυοῖν προτιμητέον, that it was better to use one coat, than to want two. (Stob. Ser. 1. p. 18.)

[7] Ver. 13. Μηδὲν πλέον παρὰ τὸ διατεταγμένον, ὑμῖν πράσσετε, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.] The office of the publicans was to collect the tribute-money, which in Greek is πράττειν φόρους, as in Thucydides and Athenæus: and their name was infamous, saith Strabo, διὰ τὴν πλεονεξίαν, for their exacting more than they ought: saith Tacitus, ob illicitas exactiones, for their unjust exactions. (See the note on Matt. ix. 11.) And hence we see the reason and the pertinency of this exhortation; it being not to be expected, that any one should begin to be good till he ceaseth to be unjust.

[8] Ver. 14. Μηδένα διασείσετε, Do violence to no man.] This word primarily signifies to shake, and terrify by shaking, and so to force money from any, by fear of what they may suffer if they do not give it; and secondarily, "calumniis insectari," to calumniate a person, as in Aristophanes, in Equit. ver. 203. which is to shake his reputation, and so to render him obnoxious to a mulct.

[9] Μηδὲ συκοφαντήσητε, Nor accuse any man falsely.] This word answers to the Hebrew עשק, and signifies not only to accuse falsely, but to circumvent and oppress. So Gen. xliii. 18. We are brought in, τοῦ συκοφαντῆσαι ἡμᾶς, that he may oppress us; Job xxxv. 9. Ἀπὸ πλήθους συκοφαντουμένων κράξονται, They shall cry for the multitude of oppressors: so Psal. lxxii. 4. He shall break in pieces, συκοφάντην, the oppressor; Psal. cxix. 122. Μὴ συκοφαντησάτωσάν με, Let not the proud oppress me; and, ver. 134. Deliver me ἀπὸ συκοφαντίας, from the oppression of men; Prov. xiv. 31. Ὁ συκοφαντῶν πένητα, He that oppresseth the poor, despiseth his Maker: so xxviii. 3. 16. and Eccles. iv. 1. I saw πάσας τὰς συκοφαντίας, all the oppressions that are under the sun, and beheld the tears τῶν συκοφαντουμένων, of those that were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and in the hands τῶν συκοφαντούντων, of those who did oppress them, there was strength.

[10] Ver. 15. Μήποτε αὐτὸς εἴη ὁ Χριστὸς, Whether, or if so be, he were the Christ.] Of this sense of μήποτε, see note on 2 Tim. ii. 25.

[11] Ver. 22. Καὶ καταβῆναι τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα σωματικῷ εἴδει, ὡσεὶ περιστερὰν ἐπ' αὐτὸν, &c. And the Holy Ghost descended upon him in a bodily shape as a dove.] viz. As a dove uses to descend upon any thing, hovering, and overshadowing it: for that this relates not to the bodily shape, as if that had resembled a dove, but to the descent of that bodily shape, is evident from this, that had it related to the first, it should have been ὡσεὶ περιστερᾶς, as of a dove, not ὡσεὶ περιστερὰν, as a dove: so Acts ii. 3. there appeared to them cloven tongues, ὡσεὶ πυρὸς, as of fire. This bodily shape seems rather to have been that of light, or a bright cloud, in which God usually appeared under the old testament, and from which he spake, and which is usually called ἡ δόξα τοῦ Κυρίου, the glory of the Lord. So when the voice here mentioned was uttered a second time, it is expressly said, that ἡ νεφέλη φωτεινὴ ἐπεσκίασεν αὐτοὺς, a bright cloud overshadowed or hovered over them, and a voice came from the cloud, Matt. xvii. 5. or, as St. Peter saith, from the magnificent glory, 2 Pet. i. 17. and this Holy Spirit might here be said to descend after the manner of a dove, because that bird was anciently by the Jews looked upon as the symbol of the Holy Spirit: so Cant. ii. 12. The voice of the turtle is heard; that is, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, קל דורא רקורשא, the voice of the Holy Ghost.

[12] Ver. 23. Καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος, And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age.] i. e. He was entering into his thirtieth year, when he was thus baptized, and consecrated to his office. It is therefore certain from the first verse, that in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, our Lord was but beginning or entering upon the thirtieth year of his age: and then he suffering, as all agree, in the nineteenth year of Tiberius, could be but thirty-three years and a half when he was crucified. I know the critics say, that ἦν ἀρχόμενος ὤν, is a tautology; but ὤν belongs not to this, but the following sentence; ὢν ὡς ἐνομίζετο, being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph. They add, that it is not rightly said, ἄρχομαι ἐτῶν τριάκοντα; but if ἀρχόμενος τέχνης, i. e. ἀπὸ τέχνης, in Plato,* be good Greek, why may not ἀρχόμενος ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, i. e. ἀπ' ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, be good Greek in St. Luke? Moreover, let ἀρχόμενος here be put absolutely for Christ's beginning his office, and the sense will run thus, That Jesus was then about thirty years of age when he began his office. And if we consider, that this was the age appointed for the Levites to begin the service of the sanctuary; that John the Baptist began his office at that age; and that all the ancients † do agree in this, That our Lord entered on his office in the thirtieth year of his age; yea, that Irenæus and Eusebius justify this Greek against our critics; and some of them take this for granted upon the authority of St. Luke; all this will justify our version. And then impossible is it to be true, that our Lord suffered in the thirty-eighth; or, as Irenæus saith, lived either till fifty, or between forty and fifty, as he proves from the testimony of the disciples of St. John in Asia, declaring, "id ipsum eis tradidisse Johannem;" they did this, not by conjecture from the countenance of Christ, but by tradition from the mouth of the apostle John; yea, that some of them heard, "hæc eadem," the very same things from the mouth of other apostles, "et testantur de hujusmodi relatione," and give in testimony to this relation. Now Irenæus had laid down this as certain, that Christ "per omnem venet ætatem," passed through all ages, that he might sanctify them all, i. e. infants, little ones, boys, young men, "et seniores" and old men: he therefore, saith he, was made, "infantibus infans, sanctificans infantes," an infant to sanctify them of that age; "juvenibus juvenis," to young men, whose age (saith he) begins at thirty, and extends to forty, he was made a young man, being baptized in his thirtieth year; and this he proves from Scripture, and the confessions of the Valentinians and gnostics, against whom he disputes. He goes on, and says, "sic et senior senioribus," so was he made an old man for the sake of them; for (saith he) from the fortieth or fiftieth year, man's life declines "in ætatem seniorem," in old age; "quam habens Dominus noster docebat, sicut evangelium et omnes seniores testantur," to which age our Lord having obtained, taught, as the gospel and all the seniors testify—the gospel in those words of the Jews, Thou art not yet fifty years old, (John viii. 57.) and the seniors, as having received it by tradition from the mouth of John and of other apostles. Who sees not now, that Irenæus both doth, and, by his gradation from infants to young men, and from young men to old, was obliged to assert, that our Lord taught after the age of forty, if not till he was fifty years old; and that this was the tradition he speaks of, as received by the elders from the mouth of St. John and other apostles?

CHAP. IV.

1. AND Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2. Being [1] forty days (invisibly) tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing (nor was he hungry): and (but) when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3. And (then) the devil (visibly appearing) said to him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone (this heap of stones) that it may be made bread.

4. And Jesus answered him, saying, (There is no necessity of that, for) [2] it is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every (thing appointed to feed him by the) word of God.

5. And (then) the devil, taking him up into a high mountain, shewed him (as in a map) all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6. And the devil said unto him, All this power (i. e. the power of these kingdoms) will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered to me, and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7. If thou therefore wilt [3] worship me, all shall be thine.

8. And Jesus answered and said to him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9. And (then) he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle (or battlement) of the temple, and said to him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10. For it is written, (Psal. xci. 11.) He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11. And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12. And Jesus answering said to him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt (i. e. distrust) the Lord thy God (as I should do, if, after a voice from heaven, saying to me, Thou art my beloved Son, I should require any farther experiment of that truth).

13. And when the devil had ended all the (se) temptations, he departed from him for a [4] season.

14. And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee; and there went out a fame of him throughout the region round about.

15. And (for) he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16. And he came to Nazareth, [5] where he had been brought up; and, as [6] his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath, and [7] stood up for to read.

17. And there was delivered to him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened (i. e. unfolded) the book (the roll), he found the place where it was written, (Isa. lxi. 1.)

18. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he (the Father) hath anointed me (with the Holy Ghost at my baptism, iii. 22.) to [8] preach the gospel to the poor (in spirit); he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, (who are in bondage to the law of sin and death, Rom. vii. 23.) and recovering of sight to the blind (Jews and pharisees, who have eyes and see not, John ix. 40, 41. and the blind gentiles, Rom. ii. 19.) and to set at liberty those that are bruised (with the weight of their sins),

19. To preach the [9] acceptable year of the Lord (the year of jubilee and rest, which was on that account very acceptable to servants and debtors).

20. And he closed (or, folded up) the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him.

21. And he began to say to them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled (which hath been read) in your ears.

22. And (when he had expounded to them how it was fulfilled) all bare him witness (that so it was), and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?

23. And he said to them, You will surely say to me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done at Capernaum, do also here in thy (own) country (i. e. do that at home, which it is famed thou hast done at Capernaum).

24. And he said, Verily I say to you, No prophet is (so well) accepted in his own country, (as elsewhere, they finding exceptions against him either for his parentage, ver. 22. or his kindred, Mark vi. 3, 4. or his habitation, John i. 47. or his country, John vii. 52.)

25. But I tell you of a truth, (you deserve for your infidelity to be dealt with as Elias dealt with the Israelites; for) many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heavens were shut up [10] three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land:

26. But to none of them was Elias sent, save to Sarepta, a city of Sidon, to a woman that was a widow.

27. And (as in the case of Elisha; for) many lepers were in Israel, in the time of Eliseus the prophet, and (but) none of them was cleansed, save Naaman the Syrian (even so now the gentiles are more worthy, to whom I should be sent, than you Jews).

28. And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these words, [11] were filled with wrath,

29. And rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him to the brow of the hill, whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong (thence).

30. But he passing (miraculously) through the midst of them went his way,

31. And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath-days.

32. And they were astonished at his doctrine; his word was (attended) with (the) [12] power (of miracles to confirm it).

33. And (for) in the synagogues there was a man, who had a spirit of an unclean devil, and (he) cried out with a loud voice,

34. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy us (before the time)? I know thee who thou art; (viz.) the Holy One of God.

35. And (but) Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36. And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a (wonderful) word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37. And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38. And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

39. And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered to them.

40. Now when the sun was setting (and so the sabbath was ending), all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them to him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41. And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak (refusing to receive testimony from them, though they spake the truth): for they knew that he was Christ.

42. And when it was day, he departed and went into a desert place: and the people sought him, and came to him, and (would have) stayed him, that he should not depart from them.

43. And (but) he said to them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent.

44. And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 2. ΗΜΕΡΑΣ τεσσαράκοντα πειραζόμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου—καὶ συντελεσθεισῶν αὐτῶν, ὕστερον ἐπείνασε, Being forty days tempted of the devil,—and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.] He was tempted of the devil only inwardly, and invisibly, during those forty days; afterward by Satan appearing in a visible shape: for the devil came unto him, Matt. iv. 3. and departed from him, ver. 11. and tempted him to worship before him. Moreover, seeing Christ did eat nothing during those forty days and nights; they who, during the like number of days, abstain only from flesh, eating fish, and drinking wine plentifully on those days, do nothing less than imitate the example of Christ here: and seeing they cannot, for forty days, οὐδὲν φάγειν, eat nothing, they can be no more obliged in this to imitate our Lord than Elias. (See the note on Matt. iv. 2.)

[2] Ver. 4. Γέγραπται, ὅτι οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ παντὶ ῥήματι Θεοῦ, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.] The words in Deut. viii. 3. run thus: He suffered thee to hunger, and then fed thee with manna (a light aerial sort of food), giving thee as great strength and vigour from that, as from the bread and flesh thou didst eat in Egypt; and this he did, providing it miraculously every day, that he might teach thee (by this example) that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word of God; i. e. every thing that he shall please to command to give him nourishment; so that though I am now hungry, as they were, I have no need to work a miracle myself to satisfy my hunger, seeing I know, by this example, that God, though he suffer his children to want bread, yet will command some other thing to preserve them alive, and will himself rather work a miracle, than they shall want nourishment.

[3] Ver. 7. Σὺ ἐὰν προσκυνήσῃς ἐνώπιόν μου, If thou wilt worship before me: ἐὰν πεσὼν προσκυνήσῃς μοὶ, If thou wilt fall down, and worship me, Matt. iv. 9.] Hence Dr. Lightfoot collects, that it is the same thing to worship the devil, and before the devil; and so, in like manner, to worship before an image, and to worship an image: and this indeed is true, when that before which we worship is the object, and the reason of the worship, as in this case it would have been; but it is otherwise, when that before which we worship is only a circumstance; as when the Jews worshipped before the ark, or sanctuary, as Psal. xcix. 5. 9. cxxxii. 7. the object of that worship being God, the ark only the circumstance, to wit, the place of his peculiar residence; and much less, when it is a mere accidental circumstance; as when old Jacob worshipped God upon his bed, and so bowed down to some part of it.

Ver. 8. Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου Σατανᾶ. See the defence of this reading, Examen Millii.

[4] Ver. 13. Ἀπέστη ἀπ' αὐτῷ ἄχρι καιροῦ, He departed from him for a season.] Till the time of his passion; for then only he returned, John xiv. 30. and that was his hour, Luke xxii. 53. And if this enemy of mankind omitted no season of tempting Christ, we have reason to believe he will omit no opportunity of tempting us.

[5] Ver. 16. Καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν Ναζαρὲθ οὗ ἦν τεθραμμένος, And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up.] That he, by his example, might teach us, saith Theophylact, first to teach and to do good to those of our own family and abode.

[6] Καὶ εἰσῆλθε κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς αὐτῷ ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν σαββάτων εἰς τὴν συναγωγήν· And, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day.] That the synagogue-worship was then loaded with rites and ceremonies of human invention, and that the manners of those who met there were much corrupted, no man, who is acquainted with the Scriptures and the Jewish history, can doubt; and yet Christ, with his disciples, go customarily to these synagogues, as members of the church of Nazareth, every sabbath-day; and he joins with them in their worship, condemning, by his example, the niceness of our sectaries.

[7] Καὶ ἀνέστη ἀναγνῶναι, Ver. 20. καὶ πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον ἐκάθισε, And stood up to read.——And, closing the book, he sat down.] Here Christ conforms to the ceremonies of the Jewish doctors, who, in honour of the law and the prophets, stood up when they read them; because, as the law was given with reverence, so is it, say they, to be handled with reverence; and he sits down to teach; because it was the custom in their schools and synagogues to do so. So the Targum on Judg. ii. 6. The wise men returned to sit in the houses of the synagogues with their heads covered, and to teach the people the words of the law: so again, ver. 9. That this was our Lord's constant custom, when he taught the people, we learn from his own words, I sat daily teaching in the temple, Matt. xxvi. 55. and from his practice throughout the evangelists. (See Luke ii. 46. John viii. 2.) Moreover, the book which he read in, being made of skins of parchment sewed to each other, and joined to a stick, upon which it was rolled; he that was to read unrolled it, till he came to the place where he was to read, and this was ἀναπτύξαι, to unfold it; and when he had done reading he did, πτύξαι, roll it up again, and gave it to the chasan, styled here, ὑπηρέτης, the minister of the synagogue.

[8] Ver. 18. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι πτωχοῖς, To preach the gospel to the poor.] To the humble, or poor in spirit, Matt. v. 3. (see note on Matt. xi. 5.) ἰάσασθαι τοὺς συντετριμμένους τὴν καρδίαν, to heal the broken-hearted; i. e. those who are so pierced in heart, and contrite in spirit for their sins, as to repent, and turn from them, Isa. lvii. 15. Psal. xxxiv. 18. li. 17. κηρύξαι αἰχμαλώτοις ἄφεσιν, preach deliverance to the captives, to the Jews in bondage to the law, Gal. iv. 9. to both Jew and gentile, under captivity to the law of sin, Rom. vii. 23. and recovering of sight to the blind Jews and pharisees, who had eyes, and saw not, John ix. 40, 41. and the blind gentiles, Rom. ii. 19. (see the note there); ἀποστεῖλαι τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει, to set at liberty those that are bruised with the chain of their sins. (See Examen Millii here.)

[9] Ver. 19. Κηρύξαι ἐνιαυτὸν Κυρίου δεκτὸν, To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.] The year of jubilee and rest, when liberty was to be proclaimed throughout the land to all the inhabitants of it; (Lev. xxv. 8.) when debts were to be remitted, and possessions restored to the poor, the Hebrew servant of the Jew set free, and he that was sold to a sojourner was to be redeemed, (ibid.) Hence this jubilee is by Josephus rendered ἐλευθερία, liberty, and by Aquila, ἄφεσις, remission; and that the Jews themselves thought this jubilee did signify a spiritual redemption, is proved by Voisin de Jubilæo, lib. i. cap. 2.: and the forty-second and sixty-first of Isaiah being, by the Jews themselves, interpreted of the Messiah, (see Targum on Isa. xlii. 1. and Synopsis on lxi. 1.) well might our Lord say, ver. 21. This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears.

Ver. 23. That do, ἐν τῇ πατρίδι σου, in thy own country.] For though Nazareth and Capernaum were both in Galilee, yet Nazareth was in the lower Galilee; whereas Capernaum, being a Decapolitan city, was in Galilee of the gentiles, that is, in upper Galilee.

[10] Ver. 25. Ἐπὶ ἔτη τρία καὶ μῆνας ἕξ, When heaven was shut up three years and six months.] For Elias tarried a year at the brook Kerith, (1 Kings xvii. 7.) and then in the middle of the third year came to Ahab. (1 Kings xviii. 1.)

[11] Ver. 28. Καὶ ἐπλήσθησαν πάντες θυμοῦ, And they were all filled with wrath.] When they heard Christ declaring them unworthy of the benefit of those miracles, which he had done at Capernaum; and, by the instances of the Sidonian widow and Naaman the Syrian, plainly intimating, that this gospel should chiefly be received among the gentiles, they, in a furious zeal, seek to destroy him; but he, by passing unseen through the midst of them, or restraining their violence, gave an instance of his Divine power.

[12] Ver. 32. Ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ ἦν ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ, For his word was with power.] That is, either as being confirmed by his miracles; so with great power gave the apostles testimony to the resurrection of the Lord, Acts iv. 33. Mark xvi. 20. (See note on Matt. vii. 29.) or he taught them as a prophet sent from God, and delivering his message to them, which, from the time of the prophets, had not been done; whence it was usually said by the Jews of the times of Ezra, Hitherto the prophets, the wise men follow, (see 1 Macc. ii. 27. xiv. 41.) and of a difficult question, We leave it undecided till a prophet shall arise, (1 Macc. iv. 46.) and when Christ came, they say, A great prophet is risen up among us, (Luke vii. 16.) and inquire of him, ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ, by what extraordinary authority he did these things, and who gave him that authority? (Matt. xxi. 23.)

CHAP. V.

1. AND it came to pass, that, as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesaret,

2. And saw two ships standing by (the shore of) the lake; but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing (Gr. having washed) their nets.

3. And he entered into one of the ships, (viz. that) which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out (the ship) a little from the land. And (this being done) he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4. Now when he had left speaking (to the people), he said to Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught (of fishes).

5. And Simon answering said to him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down their net.

6. And when they had done this, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes; and the net brake.

7. And they (finding this) beckoned to their partners, which were (now) in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both ships so (full), that they began to sink (with the weight of the fishes).

8. When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a [1] sinful man, O Lord, (and so unworthy of the presence of so Divine a person as I perceive thou art.

9. This he spake from a great sense of the majesty of Christ;) for he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of fishes which they had taken:

10. And so were also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon (and were in the other ship). And (but) Jesus said to Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men; (i. e. shalt be instrumental to draw men into the net of the gospel, see Acts ii. 41.)

11. And when they had brought their ship to land, they forsook all (their other business), and followed him.

12. And it came to pass, when he was in (the confines of) a [2] certain city, (to wit, Capernaum, Mark ii. 1.) behold a man (was there) full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13. And he put forth his hand, and [3] touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14. And he charged him to tell no man: but (or, and said to him) go, and shew thyself to the priest (first), and [4] offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony to them (that thou art cleansed from thy leprosy).

15. But so much the more (did he divulge it, so that thence) went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear (him), and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16. And he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed (Gr. he was withdrawn into the wilderness, and praying).

17. And it came to pass on a certain day, as (that) he was teaching, that (Gr. and) there were pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem; and the [5] power of the Lord was present (with him) to heal them (who came to be healed of their infirmities, ver. 15.)

18. And, behold, men brought in a bed a man that was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in (to the house), and lay him before him.

19. And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went up on the housetop, and let him down through the tiling, with his couch, into the midst (of the people) before Jesus.

20. And when he saw their faith, he said to him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21. And the scribes and pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this who speaketh (these) blasphemies, (making himself God? for) who can forgive sins, but God alone?

22. But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answered and said to them, (For) what (cause) reason ye (thus) in your hearts?

23. (For) whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say (effectually, that which is a certain indica- tion, that the punishment of them is remitted, viz.) Rise up and walk?

24. But (I choose to say the first) that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive sins: (then) he said unto the sick of the palsy, I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go to thine house.

25. And immediately he arose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26. And they (who saw this) were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

27. And after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named [6] Levi (or Matthew), sitting at the receipt of custom: and he said to him, Follow me.

28. And he left all (his toll-business, and) rose up (instantly), and followed him.

29. And Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans and others that sat down with him (and his disciples, Matt. ix. 10.)

30. But [7] their scribes and pharisees (i. e. the scribes and pharisees of that place) murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

31. And Jesus answering said to them, (This is done, because they most need my help, for) they that are whole need not the physician; but they that are sick.

32. (And this suits best with the reason of my advent, for) I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

33. And they (who followed John, Matt. ix. 14.) said to him, Why do (we) the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the pharisees; but thine eat and drink (on our fasting-days)?

34. And he said to them, Can ye (reasonably) make the children of the bridechamber (or guests of a marriage-feast) fast, while the bridegroom is with them?

35. But the days will (shortly) come, when the bridegroom shall (by death) be taken from them, and then they shall fast in those days.

36. And he spake also a parable to them (relating to the same purpose, saying), No man putteth a piece of new garment upon an old (garment): if otherwise, then both the new maketh a (fresh) rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

37. And (in like manner) no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else (or, if so) the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles will perish.

38. But new wine must be put into new bottles; and (so) both are preserved: (even so my young disciples, taken not from the schools, but from their fishing-trades, must not presently be put to severe tasks, for which they are not yet strong enough, lest they should be discouraged, and fall off from me.)

39. No man also having drunk old wine (which is smooth, grateful to the palate, and agreeable to the stomach,) straightway desires (to exchange it for) new (which is harsh to the palate, and, by reason of the lee in it, offensive to the stomach): for he saith, The [7] old is better; (even so my raw disciples must not be presently engaged in those austerities of life, which may be offensive to them at the first, but, by degrees, be brought to observe them.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 8. Ἔξελθε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλός εἰμι, Κύριε, Depart from me: for I am a sinful man, O Lord.] Not in that famous sense in which the sinner is joined with publicans and heathens, and denotes one who hath cast off the fear of God, and given up himself to wickedness; for this his fear was an indication of a religious mind. Moreover, hence it is probable, that St. Peter had higher apprehensions of Christ than of a mere man, seeing, of old, men were only struck with such a fear from the presence of the Divine Majesty, or of some angels delivering their message in his name. (Gen. xxxii. 30. Judg. vi. 22. xiii. 22. Isa. vi. 5.)

[2] Ver. 12. Ἐν τῇ μίᾳ τῶν πόλεων, When he was in one of the cities.] i. e. When he came down from the mount, (Matt. viii. 2.) being about to enter into Capernaum, (into which he entered after he had healed the leper, Mark ii. 1.) a leper meets him in the field of that city, the law not admitting such to come into a city; he is therefore here said to be in the city, as being in the field near to it: so, to be in Jericho, Josh. v. 13. is to be in the field of Jericho, or by Jericho; and to smite them begibajon in Gibeion, Josh. x. 10. is to do it in the fields of Gibeon. This leper came to him, πεσὼν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον, bowing down with his face to the earth, saith Luke here; προσκυνῶν, worshipping, Matt. viii. 2. γονυπετῶν, bending his knees, Mark i. 40.: so, Luke viii. 41. Jairus came to him, πεσὼν παρὰ πόδας, falling down at his feet; προσκυνῶν, Matt. ix. 18.

[3] Ver. 13. Ἥψατο αὐτοῦ, He touched him.] To shew, that he, being a prophet, was not obliged to observe the punctilios of the ceremonial law.

[4] Ver. 14. Offer for thy cleansing.] Pious here is the note of Theophylact, that μεθ' ὅτις καθαρίσθη, ἄξιός ἐστι προσφέρειν τὸ δῶρον· then only is a man fit to offer to God his gift, when he is cleansed from his sin. Hence the unclean person, who came into the sanctuary, was, by the law of Moses, to be cut off from his people, Numb. xix. 20.

[5] Ver. 17. Καὶ δύναμις Κυρίου ἦν εἰς τὸ ἰᾶσθαι αὐτούς, And the power of the Lord was present to heal them.] Who came to be healed of their infirmities, ver. 15. not the pharisees and lawyers, who had no faith to be healed, and perhaps no need of it; it being a known rule, that pronouns often do refer not to the immediate precedent, but the remoter noun. So Matt. xi. 1. he taught, ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν αὐτῶν, not in the cities of his disciples, for they had none, but of the Jews: so Psal. xcix. 8. Thou answeredst them, Moses and Aaron, ver. 6. and tookest vengeance on their inventions, i. e. the inventions of the people. (See Matt. xii. 9. Acts xv. 11. see Glass. de Pronom. lib. iii. Tr. 2. Can. 10.)

[6] Ver. 27. Τελώνην ὀνόματι Λευΐν, A publican named Levi.] That this Levi was not the same with Matthew, mentioned Matt. ix. 9. Grotius, and those who follow him, conceive, (1.) because Matthew never calls himself Levi, nor doth Mark (ii. 14.) or Luke ever call Levi, Matthew: to which argument St. Jerome * answers, that Matthew, out of modesty, and in remembrance of his former life, styles himself Matthew the publican, (x. 3.) but Mark and Luke never call him the publican, but mention his more honourable name, "ne antiquæ conversationis recordantes," lest they should seem to reproach him by remembering his former conversation; it is enough that St. Mark calls his Levi the son of Alpheus, as Matthew is in church-history said to be the son of Alpheus: as therefore Saul, after his conversion, is almost always called Paul, so might Matthew the publican by these two evangelists be called Levi. (2.) He adds, that Heracleon, who was near to the apostles' time, reckons Matthew, and Philip, and Thomas, and Levi, among them who had no occasion to own Christ before princes, or suffer martyrdom on that account, as Clemens of Alexandria testifies.* I answer, there is no regard to be had to this Valentinian heretic, especially when he contradicts the opinion of all the ancients, in saying that Matthew, and Philip, and Thomas, did not suffer martyrdom. (See Dr. Cave in the Life of Matthew, p. 134. of Philip, p. 125. of St. Thomas, p. 139.) Against him we oppose the Apostolical Constitutions, introducing him speaking thus, Ἐγὼ Ματθαῖος ὁς καὶ Λευὶ, I Matthew, named also Levi; the testimonies of St. Jerome and Sophonius, in voce Matthæus, and others of the ancients. See Cotelerius in Constit. Apost. p. 315. (3.) He adds, that when Celsus objected that our Lord gathered publicans, Origen† confesses that Matthew was a publican, but he denies that Levi was so. To this it is answered, that the same Origen, in his preface to the Epistle to the Romans, and in the place cited in the catenæ on St. Matthew, says expressly, that he whom St. Matthew styles by the name of Matthew the publican, is by St. Luke called Levi. (See another answer in Cotelerius, ibid.) In a word, sure it must be in vain to object against a history in Mark and Luke, where he is called Levi, so exactly agreeing with that in St. Matthew, where he is called Matthew, that not a circumstantial difference can be discerned; insomuch that even Mr. Clerc, who, in his annotations, quarrels with Dr. Hammond for following an opinion confuted by Grotius, in his Harmony, is himself forced to do what he corrects Dr. Hammond for doing. His words are these, vidit publicanum cui nomen erat Levi, seu Matthæus. Moreover, that this Levi, being called, instantly left all, and followed Christ, both Mark and Luke attest: now this is the note of an apostle, Matt. xix. 27. (See also Examen var. Lect. Mill. in Matt. x. 3.)

[7] Ver. 30. Ἐγόγγυζον οἱ γραμματεῖς αὐτῶν, Their scribes and pharisees murmured, saying, διατί; Why eateth?] i. e. The scribes and pharisees, not the guests that sat down μετ' αὐτῶν, with them, ver. 29. (for then they must themselves have been guilty of the same crime, for which they murmured against Christ), but the scribes of the Jews; for what is here, their scribes, is absolutely, Mark ii. 16. the scribes. So in their cities, Matt. xi. 1. is in the cities, not of Christ's disciples, but of the Jews; and he entered εἰς συναγωγὴν αὐτῶν, into a synagogue of theirs, xii. 9. i. e. not into a synagogue of the pharisees to whom he spake, ver. 2. but of the Jews. Schmidius also here observes, that διατί here is as much as, by what privilege? for εἰς τί and ἵνα τί denote the final cause, but διατί the antecedent reason.

[8] Ver. 39. Ὁ παλαιὸς χρηστότερός ἐστιν, For he saith, The old is better.] So Cicero, de Amicitiis, "veterrimæ quæquæ, ut ea vina quæ vetustatem ferunt, esse debent suavissimæ," old friendships, as old wines, are to be deemed the sweetest.

Ver. 36. Οὐ συμφωνεῖ τὸ ἐπίβλημα. See this reading defended, Examen Millii.

CHAP. VI.

1. AND it came to pass on the [1] second sabbath after the first (Gr. on the first sabbath after the second day of the feast of unleavened bread), that he (Christ) went through the corn-fields, and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat (of them), rubbing them in their hands.

2. And certain of the pharisees said to them, Why do ye that which (it) is not lawful to do on the sabbath-days?

3. And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, (which is a case parallel to that of my disciples, viz.) what David did, when himself was a hungered, and they that were with him?

4. How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shew-bread, and gave also to them that were with him; which (bread by the letter of the law) it is not lawful to eat, but for the priests alone?

5. And (moreover) he said to them, That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath (i. e. he who came to save men's lives must have power, in such cases as concern the good and welfare of men, to dispense with the strict rest required by the law of the sabbath).

6. And it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into a synagogue and taught: and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7. And the scribes and pharisees (having asked him, whether it was lawful to heal on the sabbath-day, Matt. xii. 10.) watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath-day; that (if he did so) they might find an accusation against him, (as one that kept not the sabbath-day, John ix. 6.)

8. But he knew their thoughts (or reasonings), and said to the man who had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst (of the synagogue). And he arose and stood forth.

9. Then said Jesus to them, I will (also) ask you one thing; (viz.) Is it lawful on the sabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? to save life or to destroy it?

10. And looking round about upon them all (and receiving no answer from any of them), he said to the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11. And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus, (i. e. how they might destroy or punish him with death, for violating the sabbath, Matt. ix. 14.)

12. And it came to pass in those days, that he went out to a mountain to pray, and continued all night in [2] prayer to God (Gr. ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, in God's house of prayer, or in a synagogue dedicated to his service).

13. And when it was day, he called to him his disciples: and (out) of them he chose twelve (to be his constant attendants, and witnesses of his actions, John xv. 27.) whom also he named apostles; (i. e. persons whom he would send to preach in his name to the Jews first, and after to the gentiles;

* Strom. iv. p. 501. D. 502.

† Lib. i. contr. Celsum, p. 48.

14. Viz.) Simon, whom he also named Peter, and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15. Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes,

16. And Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17. And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and (with him were) the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea-coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;

18. And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19. And the whole multitude (of them who came to be healed) sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all (who thus touched him).

20. And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, [3] Blessed be ye (who are) poor (in spirit): for yours is the kingdom of God.

21. Blessed are ye that hunger now (after righteousness): for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now (with that godly sorrow which works repentance): for ye shall (find that comfort which will make you) laugh.

22. Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and shall cast out your name as evil (doers), for the Son of man's sake; (i.e. for the sake of the Messiah, styled by Daniel the Son of man, Dan. vii. 14.)

23. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven (your case being like, in this, to those holy prophets who are now in heaven): for in the like manner did their fathers to the prophets.

24. But woe to you that are rich (and by those riches are indisposed to follow me)! for you have received your consolation (in this life).

25. Woe to you that are full (and therefore do not hunger after righteousness)! for ye shall hunger. Woe to you that laugh now (when you are called to repentance, to fit you to receive the gospel)! for ye shall mourn and weep, (when ye find yourselves excluded from the kingdom of God, Matt. viii. 12.)

26. Woe to you, when [4] all (the) men (of the world) speak well of you (this being a sign that you imitate those false prophets, who spake things pleasing to the people)! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

27. But I say to you that hear (me), Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you,

28. Bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you.

29. And to him that smiteth thee (with his palm) on the one cheek, offer (i. e. permit) also the other (to be smitten); and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also (rather than contend by force, or before the magistrate, about supportable injuries).

30. Give to every (indigent) man that asketh of thee (what he wants, and thou canst spare); and of him [5] that taketh away thy goods ask them not again, (in a judiciary manner; see note on Matt. v. 42. or urge not the restoring them to the detriment of charity, or so as to quarrel, or shew a contentious spirit about them).

31. And as you would that men should do to you, (in equal circumstances) do ye also to them likewise.

32. For if [6] ye love them (only) that love you, what thank have ye? (i. e. what reward can ye expect for that which even the worst of men will do? ver. 35.) for sinners also love those that love them.

33. And if ye do good to them (only) which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

34. And if ye lend to them (only) of whom ye hope to receive (what ye lend), what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and [7] lend, (though) hoping for nothing again; and your reward (in heaven) shall be great, and ye shall (shew yourselves to) be the children of the highest (God): for he is kind to the unthankful and to the evil.

36. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

37. Judge not (unnecessarily), and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive (others their trespasses) and ye shall be forgiven (yours).

38. Give, and it shall be given to you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall [8] men give (by God's disposal, or δώσουσι, shall be given; see the note,) into your bosom. For with the same (liberal) measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you (by God) again. (2 Cor. ix. 6. 8. 10.)

[To this sermon of Christ the evangelist here adds other things spoken by Christ at other times; but tending to engage men to observe these precepts, or to take off their exceptions against them.]

39. And (first, against the pharisees, who, being covetous, derided these charitable doctrines, Luke xvi. 14.) he spake a parable to them (that heard him, saying), Can the blind (pharisees) lead the blind (in the right way? if they commit themselves to their conduct,) shall they not both fall into the ditch?

40. (And to remove that fear of poverty, reproach, and injuries, to which this practice might subject his followers, he said,) The disciple is not (to expect to be) above his master; but every one that [9] is perfect (i. e. fully instructed in these rules) shall (will) be as his master, (i. e. conformed to him in these things; see Matt. x. 25.)

41. And (as for his command not to judge others, when we ourselves are greater criminals, his question upon that occasion was,) why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42. Either (or) how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam which is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly (how) to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

43. For (then only wilt thou be fit to direct others well, both by example and by words, when thou art good thyself; seeing) a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44. For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of (or, from) a bramble-bush gather they grapes.

45. (And, in like manner,) a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of (from) the abundance of his heart his mouth speaketh.

46. And (he said, moreover) why (to what purpose) call ye me Lord, Lord (i. e. profess yourselves my disciples), and (yet) do not the things which I say (ye ought to do)?

47. (For) whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

48. He is like a man who built a house and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and (yet) could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

49. But he which heareth (my words), and doeth (them) not, is like a man that without a foundation built a house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΕΓΕΝΕΤΟ δὲ ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, It came to pass in the second sabbath after the first.] This should have been rendered, in the first sabbath after the second day of the Passover; for after the first day of the Passover, which was a sabbath, Exod. xii. 16. ἀπὸ τῆς ἐπαύριον τῶν σαββάτων, from the morrow after the sabbath, (that is, saith Josephus, τῇ δευτέρᾳ ἀζύμων ἡμέρᾳ, from the second day of unleavened bread, that is, the sixteenth of the month, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 10.) ye shall count unto you seven sabbaths complete, (Lev. xxiii. 15.) reckoning that day for the first of the first week, which was therefore called δευτερόπρωτον, the first sabbath from this second day of unleavened bread; the second was called δευτεροδεύτερον, the second sabbath from that day; and the third δευτεροτρίτον, the third sabbath from that second day; and so on till they came to the seventh sabbath from that day, i. e. to the forty-ninth day, which was the day of Pentecost. The mention of the seven sabbaths to be numbered, with relation to this second day, answers all that Grotius objects against this exposition; see Petavius on Epiphan. Hær. 30. n. 32. where Epiphanius expressly says, our Lord's disciples did this, τῷ σαββάτῳ τῷ μετὰ τὴν ἡμέραν τῶν ἀζύμων, on the sabbath following the day of unleavened bread; which, if understood of the second day, is the truth. And if Pentecost was called the feast of harvest, Exod. xxiii. 16. (as Bochart, Hieroz. par. i. lib. iii. cap. 13. Nicholas Fuller, Miscell. lib. iii. cap. 11. Mr. Mede, Disc. 46. p. 355. Dr. Lightfoot, and the Jews say, see Temple Serv. cap. 14. sect. 4.) because then their barley and wheat-harvest were gathered in, this feast could not be Pentecost, as Grotius conjectures; because then the corn must be gathered in: and therefore could not be plucked by Christ's disciples in the field.

[2] Ver. 12. Ἦν διανυκτερεύων ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, And he continued all night in prayer to God.] Or, in a house of prayer of God, or in a synagogue dedicated to the service of God: though synagogues were not, as far as we can find, of Divine institution; yet, being necessary for the performance of God's service, they, by the Psalmist, are styled the houses of God, Psal. lxxiv. 9. and here a house of prayer of God: and in like manner may our churches, for the same reason, be styled the houses of God: for, as the mountain of God, Exod. iii. 1. iv. 27. the bread of God, Lev. xxi. 17. the lamp of God, 1 Sam. iii. 3. the vessels of God, 1 Chron. xxii. 19. the altar of God, Psal. xliii. 4. the sacrifices of God, Psal. li. 17. the gifts of God, Luke xxi. 4. the ministers of God, 2 Cor. vi. 4. the tabernacle of God, 2 Chron. i. 3. the temple of God, Matt. xxi. 12. and the synagogue of God, Psal. lxxiv. 8. are all things consecrated or appropriated to God's service; so προσευχὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ must, in all reason, be a house of prayer of God; whence it is called τόπος προσευχῆς, a place of prayer, 1 Macc. iii. 46. And so the word προσευχὴ is certainly used, Acts xvi. 13. and by Philo* in his oration against Flaccus, where he complains, that αἱ προσευχαὶ, their houses for prayer were pulled down; and there was no place left, in which they might worship God, or pray for Cæsar: and by Josephus,† who says, the multitude was gathered, εἰς τὴν προσευχὴν, into the house of prayer: and so Juvenal‡ speaks of the mendicant Jew, "Ede ubi consistas, in quâ te quæro proseuchâ?" In what house of prayer may I find thee begging, or asking alms?

[3] Ver. 20—26. Μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοὶ, &c. Blessed are the poor, the hungry, the mourners, for the Son of man's sake.] Here being but four of the eight beatitudes mentioned Matt. v. and not one of these being delivered in the same words which are there used; as it is certain this must be another sermon than that on the mount, and spoken to other auditors; so it is only probable, not necessary, that they should bear the same sense. However, it seems necessary that what is here added to the last clause should agree to them all, Blessed are they who patiently suffer poverty and hunger, grief and persecution, for the sake of Christ, that they may obtain that kingdom and that reward in heaven he hath promised to his faithful servants; or, that the poor should be the poor in spirit; the hungry, those that hunger after righteousness; and the mourners, those that sorrow to repentance after a godly manner, (2 Cor. vii. 9.) for to those that are otherwise poor and hungry, and upon other accounts, these blessings cannot always belong; and the opposite woes, which seem to favour the first interpretation of these four beatitudes, must be restrained to them, who, by the love of riches, pleasures, and plentiful provisions, are kept from preparing themselves by repentance for, and so from, entering into Christ's kingdom, or choosing that narrow and afflictive way which leadeth unto life eternal: for even here the very Christian sufferer is to rejoice, and leap for joy; and the rich man, who is ready, when Christ calleth, to leave all, and follow him, who is rich in good works, ready to give, and willing to distribute, layeth up for himself a good foundation against the time to come. (1 Tim. vi. 19.)

[4] Ver. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσι πάντες οἱ ἄνθρωποι, Woe unto you when all men speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.] For he that will be pleasing to all, must speak things grateful to all, and do what they like; now that cannot be good, which is grateful to bad men: thus the false prophets, whom the Jews commended, spake to them smooth things; (Isa. xxx. 10.) they prophesied lies, because the people loved to have it so; they prophesied of peace, when war was at hand, Jer. vi. 14. viii. 11. xiv. 13. Ezek. xiii. 10. 16. Zech. x. 2. they strengthened the hand of evil-doers, Jer. xxiii. 14. and daubed with untempered mortar, Ezek. xiii. 10, 11. (See Examen Millii.)

[5] Ver. 30. From him that taketh away what is thine, μὴ ἀπαίτει, ask it not again.] i. e. If any man will not ask, but without asking will take away, or detain from thee what is thine; ask it not again, either in a judiciary manner, (see note on Matt. v. 40. 42.) or urge not the restoring of it, to the detriment of charity or mercy; they who would interpret these words thus, From him that received any loan from thee, exact no usury, put a double force upon the words: for (1.) our Saviour doth not here say, as he doth Matt. v. 42. τὸν θέλοντα ἀπό σου δανείσασθαι, from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away; but ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴροντος τὰ σὰ, from him that will take up, or take away that which is thine, ask it not again. Now he that is willing to borrow of me, owns that which he would borrow to be mine, and so cannot be willing at the same time to take away what is mine. (2.) Whereas they render the word ἀπαιτεῖν, to exact usury, and for this sense appeal to the use of it in Nehemiah; it is evident, that there it hath no such sense, but plainly relates to their unjust exactions of debts and services of their brethren against the law, requiring them to remit those debts and services every seventh year, saying, Every seventh year thou shalt make a release; and this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth any thing to his neighbour, πᾶν χρέος ἴδιον ὃ ὀφείλει σοι ὁ πλησίον, every debt of thine thy neighbour oweth thee, thou shalt release; and of thy brother, οὐκ ἀπαιτήσεις, thou shalt not exact it; of a foreigner, ἀπαιτήσεις, thou mayest exact it; but to thy brother thou shalt remit thy debt, Deut. xv. 1—3. and so for services, Exod. xxi. 2. Jer. xxxiv. 14. Accordingly, saith Nehemiah, let us remit the seventh year, ישׁשׁא כל יד καὶ ἀπαίτησον χειρὸς, and the exaction of every debt: so Deut. xv. 2. כל משה ידו πᾶν χρέος ἴδιον, all thy own debt thou shalt remit. When therefore he saith, v. 10. Let us remit, I pray you τὴν ἀπαίτησιν ταύτην, this exaction, he must refer to the same debt; and when he says, ver. 7. ἀπαιτήσει, should a man exact of his brother, ἃ ὑμεῖς ἀπαιτεῖτε, the things which ye exact? he plainly refers to the sin taxed in the Jews by Jeremy, chap. xxxiv. of demanding service of them again after these years of release were expired: so also Ecclus. xx. 14, 15. The gift of a fool will do thee no good, σήμερον δανιεῖ, καὶ αὔριον ἀπαιτήσει, he will lend to-day, and ask it again to-morrow. And, lastly, if the first words referred to Matt. v. 42. μὴ ἀπαιτεῖν here must be the same with μὴ ἀποστρέφειν there, which sure hath no relation to usury.

[6] Ver. 32. Εἰ ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, ποία ὑμῖν χάρις; &c. If you love them that love you, what thank have you? for sinners also love those that love them.] Here saith Theophylact, If you only love them that love you, you are only like to sinners and heathens; but if you love those that do evil to you, you are like to God; Ποῖον οὖν θέλετε ὅμοιοι εἶναι, τοῦ ἁμαρτολοῦ ἢ τοῦ Θεοῦ; Which therefore should you choose, to be like sinners, or like God?

[7] Ver. 35. Καὶ δανείζετε, μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, And lend, hoping for nothing again.] They who render these words, making no man to despair, put a double force upon the words; first, reading μηδένα, no man, for μηδὲν, nothing; and, secondly, interpreting ἀπελπίζειν, to make to despair; of which sense they afford no instance. They who render them, distrusting nothing, i. e. not fearing lest thou shouldest be reduced to poverty by this charity, give a sense alien from the text; for when they say, the heathens give and lend, knowing that they may want themselves; this they add of their own to the words of Christ, who says, They lend, ἵνα ἀπολαβῶσι τὰ ἴσα, that they may receive as much again; and they reject that sense the text doth manifestly require: for so run the preceding words, If ye lend to those, παρ' ὧν ἐλπίζετε ἀπολαβεῖν, from whom you hope to receive again what you lend, what thank have you? for, do not sinners lend to sinners to receive, or that they may receive, what they lend again? But lend not you on so mean account, but even when you hope to receive nothing back from them you lend to. And whereas we are told, that the word ἀπελπίζω bears no such sense; I hope the credit of Stephanus, who says, the word is rightly rendered by the Vulgar, nihil inde sperantes; and of Casaubon, who saith, ἀπελπίζειν is ἀπὸ τοῦ πράγματος τὴ ἐλπίζειν, to hope for something from a person, or matter; may be sufficient to support the credit of our translation; especially when we read in the life of Solon, that he made no law against parricides, διὰ τὸ ἀπελπίσαι, because he did not expect that such a crime would be committed, (Diog. Laert. lib. i. p. 17.) and find this like composition in the word ἀπέχειν, when it signifies, ἀπό τινος ἔχειν, to receive, ἀπογεύομαι, ἀπό τινος γεύομαι, I taste of something; and in the word ἀπεσθίειν, which, saith Athenæus, is used, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀπό τινος ἐσθίειν, for to eat of any thing. But (2.) where it is rendered by them, to despair, or to be desperate, the sense is still the same, viz. to be μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, hoping for nothing from men, and therefore repairing to God. This is the plain sense of it, Isa. xxix. Jud. ix. 12. Esth. xiv. 19.: so Ecclus. xxii. 21. xxvii. 21. μὴ ἀπελπίζῃς, is, Be not without hope of reconciliation with thy friend; and why then may not the word here signify, Being without hope of receiving any thing again from him you lend to? So that it is not to be doubted, that these words are well rendered by Chrysostom,* Πρὸς ὧν οὐ προσδοκῶμεν ἀπολαμβάνειν, From whom you expect not to receive.

[8] Ver. 38. Δώσουσι] "Impersonaliter interpretandum," Is to be rendered impersonally, saith Grotius. (See note on xvi. 9.)

[9] Ver. 40. Κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς ἔσται ὡς διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ, But every one that is perfect, shall (will) be as his master.] Καταρτίζεσθαι is to be perfect in any thing, Matt. xxi. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 9. 11. Heb. xiii. 21. 1 Pet. v. 10. The sense therefore of these words may be this, The disciple that perfectly understands the rules, and sees the example, of his master, will think it is his business to tread exactly in his steps, to do and suffer, upon like occasions, as his master did, and so he will be like his master.

CHAP. VII.

1. NOW when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, he entered into Capernaum.

2. And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear to him, was sick, or ready to die (or near death).

3. And when he (the centurion) heard (the fame) of

* In Matt. v. 42.

Jesus, he [1] sent to him (some of) the elders of the Jews, beseeching him (by them) that he would come and heal his servant.

4. And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly (or earnestly), saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this (i. e. he well deserved this kindness):

5. For he loveth our nation (and religion), and (as an indication of this) he hath built us a synagogue.

6. Then Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent (other) friends to him, saying to him, Lord, trouble not thyself (to come to me); for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

7. Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come to thee: but say in a word (thy pleasure), and (I believe) my servant shall be healed.

8. For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers; and I say to one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. (How much more then canst thou, who hast all power in heaven and earth, command one of the ministering spirits to come and heal my servant?)

9. When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, and turned him (self) about, and said to the people that followed him, I say to you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel; (and upon this faith, he told them that were sent, it should be as he believed, Matt. viii. 13.)

10. And they who were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

11. And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12. Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, (who was) the only son of his mother, and she was a widow (and so by the loss of this son left destitute): and much people of the city was with her (to attend the funeral).

13. And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said to her, Weep not.

14. And (then) he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, [2] I say to thee, Arise.

15. And (at that word) he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

16. And there came a fear on (them) all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited his people (by sending to them the promised Messiah).

17. And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

18. And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19. And John calling to him two of his disciples [3] sent them to Jesus, saying (in the name of their master, who sent them for their own satisfaction), Art thou he that should come (the Messiah)? or look we for another?

20. When (therefore) the men were come to him, they said, John (the) Baptist hath sent us to thee, saying (or, to say), Art thou he that should come? or look we for (are we to expect) another?

21. And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities, and plagues, and of evil spirits; and to many that were blind he gave sight, (according to the prophecy of Isaiah concerning him: see the note on Matt. xi. 5.)

22. Then Jesus answering said to them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

23. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me (i. e. who shall not fall off from me by reason of the afflictions he may suffer, as John doth, or by reason of my mean circumstances in this present world).

24. And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak to the people concerning John (saying), What went ye out into the wilderness to see? (Was it) a reed shaken with the wind (a man wavering in his doctrine or testimony)?

25. But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment (a courtier and parasite)? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26. But what went ye out for to see? (Was it) a prophet? Yea, I say to you, and (one that is) much more than a (an ordinary) prophet.

27. (For) this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28. (More, I say, than an ordinary prophet,) For I say to you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist; but (yet) he that is (the) [4] least (prophet) in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

29. And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God (i. e. approved the wisdom and justice of his counsel, in calling them, by the Baptist, to repentance), being baptized with the baptism of John.

30. But the [5] pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against (towards) themselves, being not baptized of him (as being confident they were righteous, Luke xviii. 9. and so needed no repentance).

31. And the Lord said, Whereunto shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32. They are like to children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped to you (as at a festival), and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you (as they do at funeral solemnities), and ye have not wept (i. e. you have neither complied with us, when we called you with mirth nor sadness).

33. For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine (his meat being only locusts, and his drink water); and ye say (of him), He hath a devil (or, is a melancholy, frantic person).

34. The Son of man is come eating and drinking (in the usual manner); and ye say (of him), Behold, (he is) a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35. But Wisdom is [6] justified (i. e. approved) of all her children (i. e. of all true lovers of wisdom).

36. And (or, then) one of the pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And (thereupon) he went into the pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37. [7] And, behold, a woman in the city, which was (for- merly) a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment,

38. And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39. Now when the pharisee which had bidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him; for she is a sinner (and so by touching must defile him).

40. And Jesus answering (to his thoughts), said to him, Simon, I have somewhat to say to thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41. (Jesus then began his discourse thus,) There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed (him) five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him most?

43. Simon answered and said, I suppose he to whom he forgave most. And he said to him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44. And he turned to the woman, and said to Simon, Seest thou this woman? (When) I entered into thy house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45. Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman, since the time I came in, hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46. My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47. [8] Wherefore, I say to thee, (This is a testimony that) her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she (hath) loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48. And (then) he said to her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49. And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who is this (man) that (he) forgiveth sins also?

50. And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee (from the punishment of thy past sins); go in peace.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 3. ΑΠΕ'ΣΤΕΙΛΕ πρὸς αὐτὸν πρεσβυτέρους τῶν Ἰουδαίων, He sent to him the elders of the Jews.] And, ver. 6. the centurion sent to him friends: by Matthew, viii. 5. the centurion came to him; and, ver. 8. the centurion said to him. To reconcile this difference, note,

First, That St. Luke relating this story more largely than St. Matthew doth, and with this signal circumstance said by his messengers, I thought not myself worthy to come unto thee, (ver. 7.) these circumstances must be as they are related by St. Luke. Note,

Secondly, That it being a rule among the Jews, that "apostolus cujusque est quisque," the disciple, messenger, or proxy, of any man is as himself; and, among the civilians, "quod facimus per alium, id ipsum facere judicamur," we ourselves are reputed to do that which by another we do: St. Matthew might well say, the centurion who sent these elders and friends, came to him by them. So Jethro comes to Moses by a messenger, Exod. xviii. 6. and Solomon speaks to Hiram by his servants, 1 Kings v. 7. James and John came to Christ with a petition presented by their mother, Mark x. 35. compared with Matt. xx. 20. John the Baptist speaks to Christ by his disciples, Matt. xi. 3. Note,

Thirdly, That though it seems probable from those words of Christ to the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, be it done unto thee, (Matt. viii. 13.) that when Christ was nigh to the house, the centurion might come in person to him, yet neither is this necessary; for when David sent messengers to commune with Abigail to take her to wife, she answers as if he had been present, Behold thy handmaid to be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord. (1 Sam. xxv. 41.)

[2] Ver. 14. Εἶπε, νεανίσκε, σοὶ λέγω, ἐγέρθητι, Jesus said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.] Here Woltzogenius owns that Christ spake this by that Divine power which he had over inanimate things, as the wind and the sea; "est quidem hoc Deo proprium," this indeed (saith he) is proper to God, who calleth things that are not, as if they were, (Rom. iv. 17.) but God had communicated this power to his Son, by whom he would most perfectly manifest himself to the world. So Peter speaks to Tabitha, Tabitha, arise; (Acts ix. 40.) as Christ to Lazarus, Lazarus, come forth. (John xi. 43.) Now to this I reply,

First, That the instance of St. Peter saying to Tabitha, Arise, doth not lessen the strength of the argument from these words for the Divinity of Christ, seeing he doth this only by prayer to and faith in the Lord Christ; to which he ascribes all his miracles, doing them in his name, or power, and through faith in his name, (Acts iii. 16.) and so in effect saith to her as he did to Æneas, (ver. 34.) Jesus Christ healeth thee, arise, &c. Christ here doth this by his own power, without any prayers, as appears from those words, I say to thee, Arise; and he will raise all his servants from the dead, and change their vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, according to the mighty power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself. (Phil. iii. 21.) He prayed, indeed, when he raised Lazarus; but then even Woltzogenius observes, he could not do this to receive power to raise him, because he had this power in himself already, John v. 26. and doth there challenge to himself to be the resurrection and the life, xi. 25. but for other reasons accounted for John xi. 41, 42.

Secondly, When Woltzogenius can prove, that Divine virtue which is proper to God alone, ever was, or ever can be communicated to a creature, or to another without communication of the Divine nature, then, and not till then, will he have given a satisfactory answer to this argument.

[3] Ver. 19. John sent, saying, Art thou he that should come?] See the note on Matt. xi. 3.

[4] Ver. 28. The least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.] See the note on Matt. xi. 11.

[5] Ver. 30. Οἱ φαρισαῖοι καὶ νομικοὶ τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἠθέτησαν εἰς ἑαυτοὺς, μὴ βαπτισθέντες ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, But the pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against (Gr. towards) themselves, being not baptized of him.] That some of them came to be baptized, we read Matt. iii. 7. it therefore must be said, either that this is here said of them in general, because it was true of many of them; or that those who came to him, hearing the character he gave of them, refused his baptism. (See note on Matt. iii. 7.) But the chief thing here observable is this, that, in rejecting John's baptism, they are said to reject the counsel of God towards them, that is, his gracious design of calling them by him to that repentance, which could alone exempt them from the wrath to come; and by that refusal declared they approved not of God's counsel, as just and righteous, in calling such unblamable persons as they were, and such zealots for the law, to repentance, that so they might escape the ruin threatened by St. John; for thus Eleazer, one of them, speaks, after the destruction of the Jews, that though all the rest of the Jews perished,* ἡμεῖς δ' ἄρα μόνοι ἠλπίσαμεν περιέσεσθαι ὥσπερ ἀναμάρτητοι πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν γενόμενοι, we alone expected to be preserved, as having not sinned against God, nor been guilty of any fault, and who were teachers to others. Christ tells us they were, πεποιθότας ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς, confident in themselves, that they were righteous, (Luke xviii. 9.) and represents them by the elder son, saying, I never transgressed at any time thy commandments. (Luke xv. 29.) They therefore judged it an incongruous thing to call such righteous persons to repentance and threaten them with ruin, who were so dear to God; but the publicans and common people were conscious to themselves of sins sufficient to expose them to Divine judgments, and therefore they approved of this counsel God sent them by his messenger, and declared him righteous, both in calling them to repentance and threatening his judgments if they did neglect it; and therefore they submitted to this baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, to which God, by the Baptist, called them: that δικαιοῦν is to declare, or approve a thing or person righteous, see ver. 35. They whose principles will not allow them to believe, that God had any such benign designs towards such a generation of vipers, say, first, that βουλὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ is not the counsel, or the purpose, but only the command of God; but (1.) this phrase in Scripture never signifies a bare command, but always the decree, the purpose, or the counsel of God. (See Acts ii. 23. iv. 28. xiii. 36. xx. 27. Eph. i. 11. Heb. vi. 17.) Nor (2.) can it be rationally supposed, that God should give men any virtuous or moral precepts, which he doth not design and purpose that they should obey. Secondly, They add, that εἰς ἑαυτοὺς, towards them, is here put for ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, in themselves; and therefore render the text thus, they despised in themselves the counsel of God. But (1.) was it his counsel towards them, or was it not? If not, how could they, by neglecting that which concerned not them, despise it? If so, then it is certain, that the purpose and counsel of God towards them was this, That they should repent, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance. (2.) The phrase, in themselves, is always expressed by ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, iii. 8. vii. 49. viii. 9. εἰς ἑαυτοὺς occurs but twice elsewhere, viz. 1 Pet. iv. 8. 10. and then it plainly signifies, towards themselves.

[6] Ver. 35. Καὶ ἐδικαιώθη, But Wisdom is justified of her children.] See note on Matt. xi. 19.

[7] Ver. 37. Ἰδοὺ, γυνὴ ἐν τῇ πόλει. And, behold, a woman in the city.] Here are two arguments against the opinion of Huetius† and others, that this woman was Mary, the sister of Lazarus, and that Simon the leper, mentioned Matt. xxvi. 6. Mark xiv. 3. was the same with the Simon mentioned here; (1.) because this Mary was a woman of that city, that is, either of Nain or Capernaum, the only cities mentioned here; whereas Mary, the sister of Lazarus, was of no city, but of the town or village of Bethany. John xi. 1. (2.) After the collation here, which is not styled a supper, our Lord went through every city and village, preaching the kingdom of God, (viii. 1.) whereas, after he raised Lazarus, Jesus walked no more openly. And, lastly, Mary's unction was made for Christ's interment, and but six days before Christ's last passover, (John xii. 7.) when he continued in Bethany and in Jerusalem. (Mark xi. 11.)

[8] Ver. 47. Οὗ χάριν, λέγω σοι, ἀφέωνται αἱ ἁμαρτίαι αὐτῆς αἱ πολλαὶ· ὅτι ἠγάπησε πολύ· For which cause I say unto thee, Her sins, which were many, are forgiven; for she loved much.] Christ saith not her sins were forgiven, because she loved much; but this ought to be a token to thee, that her sins, which rendered her unworthy to touch me, have been forgiven; this great love to me being an indication of her deep sense of God's mercy to her in pardoning her many sins: and this do I the Prophet and the Son of God declare unto her: to this sense lead both the parable of the great debtor, to whom the Lord frankly had forgiven all, for he loved much, because much had been forgiven; and the conclusion of it in these words, he that hath less forgiven loveth less; whence it appears, that ὅτι here cannot be causal or intimate, she was forgiven much, because she loved much; the cause assigned of her forgiveness being not her love but faith; (ver. 50.) but only consequential, denoting the effect or indication of the forgiveness of her many sins. So Hosea ix. 15. All their iniquity was in Gilgal, therefore there I hated them; for they did not sin in Gilgal, because he hated them there; but he hated them there, because there they offended; (Eccles. v. 7.) ὅτι σὺ τὸν Θεὸν φοβοῦ, wherefore fear thou God. So John xiv. 17. The world cannot receive the spirit of truth, ὅτι οὐ θεωρεῖ αὐτὸ, therefore it sees him not, neither knows him, but ye know him, therefore he abideth with you, and shall be with you. In one at least of these two paragraphs ὅτι must bear this sense.

CHAP. VIII.

1. AND it came to pass afterward, that he went through every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and the twelve were with him,

2. And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils,

3. And Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which [1] ministered to him (necessaries out) of their substance.

4. And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake to them by a parable:

5. (Saying,) A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the way-side; and [2] it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6. And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked (root and) moisture.

* Apud Joseph. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. p. 990. † Not. in Matt. p. 43. 44.

7. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns [3] sprang up with it, and (overgrowing it) choked it.

8. And other (seed) fell upon good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit a hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear (i. e. wisdom to discern and willingness to receive the truth), let him hear (i. e. embrace it).

9. And his disciples asked him, saying, What might (the meaning of) this parable be?

10. And he said (to them), To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God; but to others (I speak) in parables; (they having shut their eyes and closed their ears, Matt. xiii. 14.) [4] that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11. Now the (meaning of the) parable is this: The seed is the word of God.

12. Those (seeds sown) by the way-side are (emblematically) they that hear; (but consider not what they hear, Matt. xiii. 19.) then cometh the devil (Gr. ἵνα, so that the devil cometh), and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13. They (who are represented by the seed sown) on the rock, are they which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, (being persons) which for awhile believe, and (but) in time of temptation fall away.

14. And (by) that (seed) which fell among thorns are they (represented), who, when they have heard (the word), go forth (into the world), and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

15. But (by) that (seed which fell) on [5] good ground, are they (represented), who in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

16. (And, having thus explained this parable, he said, I do not impart this knowledge to you that ye may conceal it, but that ye may teach it to others; for) [6] no man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in (to the house) may see the light.

17. For nothing is (said in) secret (by me), that shall not be made manifest; neither (is) any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18. Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath (so as to improve it), to him shall be given (more); and whosoever (thus) hath not, from him shall be taken (away) even that which he seemeth to have.

19. Then came to (see) him his mother and his brethren, and (they) could not come at him for the press.

20. And it was told him by certain, which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21. And he answered and said to them, (As) my mother and my brethren are these who hear the word of God, and do it.

22. Now it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples: and he said to them, Let us go over to the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23. But as they sailed he fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24. And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, Master, we (are ready to) perish! Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water (saying to them, Peace, be still); and (then) they ceased, and there was a calm.

25. And he said to them, Where is your faith? And they, being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26. And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27. And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had (been possessed with) devils (a) long time, and (he) wore no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28. When he (the evil spirit) saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, torment me not: (this he said, fearing he might be punished for what he had done to the man.)

29. For he (i. e. Jesus) had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and (though) he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and (yet) he brake the bands, and he was driven of the devil into the wilderness.

30. And Jesus asked (the unclean spirit in) him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, (It is) Legion; because many devils were entered into him.

31. And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.

32. And there was there a herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33. Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34. And when they that fed them saw what was done, they fled (from the place), and went and told it in the city and in the country (what was done).

35. Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36. They also that saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37. Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear (of what they might farther suffer by him): and he (accordingly) went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38. Now the man out of whom the devils were departed besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39. Return to thine own house, and shew how great things [7] God hath done to (for) thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done to him.

40. And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

41. And, behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue; and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42. For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying. (But, as he went, the people thronged (about) him.

43. And a woman having an issue (or flux) of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of (i. e. by) any (of them),

44. Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanched.

45. And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all (the rest) denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46. And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me (in order to some cure): for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me (to heal somebody).

47. And when the woman saw that she was not hid (from him), she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared to him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48. And he said to her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.)

49. While he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master (any farther).

50. But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51. And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in (to her apartment), save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and mother of the maiden.

52. And all (present) wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; (you shall soon find) she is not (as one) dead, but (as one that) sleepeth.

53. And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54. And he put them all out (who were thus weeping), and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.

55. And her [3] spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56. And her parents were astonished: but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 2, 3. ΚΑΙ᾽ γυναῖκές τινες, αἳ ἦσαν τεθεραπευμέναι ἀπὸ πνευμάτων πονηρῶν καὶ ἀσθενειῶν, And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities,—— ministered to him of their substance.] This was customary, saith St. Jerome,* among the Jews, for women, and especially for widows, to minister necessaries to their teachers; and his disciples being with him, and they being not represented as of his family or domestics, but only as followers of his doctrine, could give no ground for any ill suspicion in this case.

[2] Ver. 5. Καὶ κατεπατήθη, And it was trodden down.] This is not mentioned by St. Matthew or Mark, and seems to signify a great contempt of the Divine seed, the things which we tread under our feet being accounted vile, and not worthy to be taken up from the ground.

[3] Ver. 7. Καὶ συμφυεῖσαι αἱ ἄκανθαι ἀπέπνιξαν αὐτό· And the thorns springing up with it, choked it.] There be two principles of action in man, the flesh and the spirit, or the inward man; from which arise different appetites and inclinations: the flesh produceth an affection to riches, pleasures, and other allurements of the world, which are here called thorns; the inward man, or mind approving of the laws of God, (Rom. vii. 22.) and persuading to those things which conduce to the peace, and tranquillity, and welfare of the soul, is a principle inclining us to virtuous actions; but if we suffer these thorns to take root in our hearts, and gain our affections, these inclinations to virtue will be quickly choked, or bring no fruit to ripeness or perfection, which is all one as to be ἄκαρποι, without fruit, as appears from ver. 14. compared with Matt. xiii. 22. Mark iv. 19.

Ver. 8. Ταῦτα λέγων ἐφώνει· Ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω.] These words are owned by all the versions, Theophylact, and Jerome, and yet are rejected by Dr. Mills on the sole authority of three MSS.

[4] Ver. 10. Ἵνα βλέποντες μὴ βλέπωσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες μὴ συνιῶσιν, That seeing they may not see, and hearing they may not understand: Mark iv. 12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not understand, lest they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.] Here, say some, this is plainly given as the reason why our Saviour spake to them without in parables, viz. that they may not perceive, or understand, or be converted. But, to take off this pretension, it is sufficient to observe, that the words in St. Mark and St. Luke are only an abbreviation, or short hint of what St. Matthew saith was spoken by our Lord more fully; for Christ might say what St. Mark and Luke relate, and yet say more than they relate, as St. Matthew doth assure us he did; but then St. Matthew could not have given us his discourse more fully, unless our Lord had spoken it more fully than it is related by St. Mark and Luke; whence it must follow, that the relations of Mark and Luke must be allowed to be deficient, i. e. not to contain all that our Saviour said on this occasion, and therefore must be filled up, or rendered entire, by the addition of the words recorded in St. Matthew. Since then St. Matthew doth expressly tell us from the mouth of Christ, He therefore spake to them in parables, because they seeing would not see, or did not see, and hearing did not understand; and that they therefore did not see, hear, and understand, because their heart was waxed gross, and their ears heavy, and they had closed their eyes, lest they should see, and hear, and be converted; it seemeth evident, that the words of St. Mark and Luke must be filled up, or made entire thus—To others (of the Jews) speak I in parables (because they seeing, see not; and hearing, do not understand; for their hearts are waxed gross, and their ears heavy, and their eyes have they closed), that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand, lest they should be converted: and though doubtless this sad effect of their not hearing, and seeing, viz. lest they should be converted, was not intended by them, yet, since it was the natural issue of their shutting their eyes against the light, it fitly is ascribed to them; as when the prophet Hosea saith, viii. 4. Of their silver and gold have they made them idols, that they might be cut off; and the prophet Micah, vi. 16. For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make thee a desolation. A like expression to this we find, Isa. lxiii. 17. Why hast thou caused us to err from thy ways? τί ἐσκλήρυνας τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν τοῦ μὴ φοβεῖσθαί σε; Why hast thou hardened our hearts, that we should not fear thee? And yet this is the church's prayer, imploring God's mercy, and the removal of his judgments, viz. the long oppression of the heathens, which was a temptation to them to depart from him, and to cast off his fear; and therefore shews they were no otherwise hardened by God than as these providences were a strong temptation to them to cast off his service. Hence also we may learn the power and efficacy of the word, when it is heartily believed and seriously attended to, to work in those that hear it conversion, to the salvation of the soul; it being only through the want of seeing and of understanding, that is, of believing and considering the importance of it, that it hath not this effect upon men. (See the note on Jam. i. 18.)

[5] Ver. 15. Τὸ δὲ ἐν τῇ καλῇ γῇ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἵτινες ἐν καρδίᾳ καλῇ καὶ ἀγαθῇ, ἀκούσαντες τὸν λόγον, κατέχουσι. But that on the good ground, are they, who, in (with) an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.] From these words it is manifest, that some good disposition of heart is requisite to render the word truly and durably fruitful. Now what this is, see in note on Matt. xiii. 23.

[6] Ver. 16. Οὐδεὶς γὰρ λύχνον ἅψας, καλύπτει αὐτὸν, No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel.] Of this, and the seventeenth verse, see Mark iv. 22.

[7] Ver. 39. Ὅσα ἐποίησέ σοι ὁ Θεὸς, Shew how great things God hath done to thee.] Here, saith Woltzogenius, Christ ascribes this miracle to God, the author of that power by which he did it, (John v. 19.) whereas had he been the high God, he should have ascribed it to himself. I answer, he doth this as not seeking his own glory, but the glory of him that sent him; that is, as one executing his prophetic office in his Father's name, and casting out devils by that Spirit he received from his Father.

[8] Ver. 55. Ἐπέστρεψε τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτῆς, Her spirit returned.] By adding this, saith Grotius, St. Luke shews, that the soul of man is not corporeal, or any thing that perisheth with it; but ἀυθυπόστατόν τι, something subsisting of itself; which, when the body dies, exists elsewhere, as the word ἐπέστρεψε shews. But this is not a certain inference from the word; for of Samson, refreshed with the water that came from the jaw of the ass, it is said, ἐπέστρεψε τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ, his spirit returned, Judg. xv. 19. and the like phrase we find, Psal. iii. 23. Lam. i. 11. 16. 19. plainly importing the restoring a person to his vigour. This therefore is more surely to be gathered from the death of the damsel, ver. 53. for so Elijah speaketh in a like case, 1 Kings xvii. 21. ἐπιστραφήτω δὴ ἡ ψυχὴ τοῦ παιδαρίου τούτου, Let, I pray thee, the soul of this child return into it.

CHAP. IX.

1. THEN he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority (through his name) over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2. And he sent them to preach the (coming of the) kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

3. And he said to them, Take nothing (with you) for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece; (for you shall want neither provision nor protection, xxii. 35.)

4. And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide (while ye continue in that city), and (from) thence depart (to another).

5. And whosoever will not receive you, (your words, Matt. x. 14.) when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them (that ye account them as unclean, and not fit to be conversed with any more).

6. And they departed, and went through the towns (of Judea), preaching the gospel, and healing (the sick) every where.

7. Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead (and so his great wickedness appeared in killing a man so highly favoured by God);

8. And of some (it was said), that Elias had appeared; (and so that kingdom of the Messiah was to be set up, which should destroy all other kingdoms, Dan. ii. 44.) and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9. And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but (if he be not risen again) who is this, of whom I hear such (wondrous) things? And he desired to see him (that so he might discern whether he were the Baptist or not).

10. And the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done (in his name). And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place, belonging to the city called Bethsaida, (that they might rest a little, Mark vi. 31.)

11. And the people, when they knew it, followed him: and he received them, and spake to them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12. And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said to him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the country and towns round about, and (may) lodge, and get victuals (which here they cannot do): for we are here in a desert place.

13. But he said to them, Give ye them to eat. And they (upon inquiry, Mark vi. 38.) said, We have no more but five loaves and two (little) fishes, (and what are they among so many? we cannot therefore satisfy them,) except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14. For they were about five thousand men (who were to be fed). And he said to his disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15. And they did so (as he commanded), and made them all sit down.

16. Then he took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, blessed (God over) them, and brake (them), and gave (of them) to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17. And they did eat, and were all filled; and there were taken up of fragments that remained to them (that gathered them) twelve baskets.

18. And it came to pass, [1] as he was alone (from the multitude) praying, his disciples were with him: and (having ended his prayer) he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

19. They answering said, (Some say thou art) John the Baptist; but some say (thou art) Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20. He said to them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, (Thou art) the Christ of God.

21. And he straightly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22. Saying, The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be slain, and be raised (again) the third day.

23. And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him [2] deny himself, and take up his cross daily (as occasion serves), and follow me.

24. For whosoever will (reject me to) save his life shall lose it; but whosoever will (be ready to) lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it (and this surely will be his wisest course).

25. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away (as they who reject me, to save this temporal life, will be)?

26. For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words (now), of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own [3] glory, and in his Father's, (that of light and flame; see note on Heb. i. 3.) and (with the glorious attendance) of the holy angels.

27. But (besides this coming at the dreadful day), I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the (Son of man coming in the) kingdom of God (with power, Matt. xvi. 28. Mark ix. 1. to execute his judgment on them that reject him).

28. And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, (see the note on Mark ix. 2.) he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29. And as he prayed, the fashion (or appearance) of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was (or became) white and glistering.

30. And, behold, there talked with him two men, which (by their discourse) were (known to be) Moses and Elias:

31. Who appeared in glory, and spake of his [4] decease, (the death) which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32. But Peter and they that were with him (whilst he was praying) were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33. And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: [5] and (therefore) let us make (here) three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing (whether) what he said (were well or ill said).

34. While he thus spake, there came a cloud (of glory), and overshadowed them; and they feared as they entered into the cloud, (because of the magnificent glory of it, 2 Pet. i. 17.)

35. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

36. And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they (three) kept it (the vision) close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

37. And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38. And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son; for he is my only child:

39. And, lo, a [6] spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again (Gr. it causeth him to beat himself; and foam), and, bruising him, hardly departeth from him.

40. And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and they could not; (and this hath raised a dispute betwixt the scribes and thy disciples concerning thy power, Mark ix. 15.)

41. And Jesus answering said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42. And as he was yet coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him (or, and he beat himself with his fists). And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child (of his epilepsy), and delivered him again to his father.

43. And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God (visible in Christ). But while they wondered every one at all (these) things which Jesus did, he said to his disciples,

44. Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for (notwithstanding this seeming admiration) the Son of man shall (by these very Jews) be delivered into the hands of men.

45. But they [7] understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not; and they feared to ask him (of) that saying.

46. Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47. And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him,

48. And saith to them, Whosoever shall receive (such a one as) this child in my name, receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all (in his own), the same shall be great (in my esteem and kingdom).

49. And John answered (i. e. spake) and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us.

50. And Jesus said to him, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us (but pursues the same design in beating down the kingdom of Satan) is for us.

51. And it came to pass, when the time was (near) come that he should [8] be received up (into heaven), he [9] steadfastly set his face (or fully purposed) to go to Jerusalem (where he was to suffer).

52. And (therefore) sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready (a lodging) for him.

53. And they did not receive him, because his [10] face was as though he would go (i. e. he appeared to them to be going) to Jerusalem (to worship).

54. And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven to consume them, even as Elias did (to the captains and their fifties)?

55. But he turned, and [11] rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of (i. e. how opposite this exterminating spirit is to the design of my coming).

56. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's (temporal) lives, but to save them. And they went to another village

57. And it came to pass, as they went in the way, a certain man said to him, Lord, [12] I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58. And Jesus said to him, (Thou canst expect no advantage at present by following me; for) the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

59. And he said to another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go (home), and (stay till I) bury my (aged) father (and then I will attend upon thee).

60. Jesus said to him, Let the dead bury their dead (or those who are dead to spiritual things be employed in those affairs): but go thou (forthwith) and preach the kingdom of God.

61. And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, that are at home at my house.

62. And Jesus said to him, No [13] man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back (i. e. having undertook my service, and diverting from it to worldly business), is fit for the kingdom of God.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 18. ΚΑΙ᾽ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ εἶναι αὐτὸν καταμόνας προσευχόμενον, &c. And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him.] The word καταμόνας alone, excludes not his disciples, but the multitude now sent away, when they were filled, ver. 17. as appears from Mark iv. 10.: or καταμόνας προσευχόμενος may be rendered, as he was praying alone, or by himself, his prayer being ended, his disciples came to him.

[2] Ver. 23. Ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτὸν, καὶ ἀράτω τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ καθ᾽ ἡμέραν, &c. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.] Daily; i. e. as oft as an occasion offers itself. Here I shall recollect all that is said in several places of the gospel concerning this self-denial, and taking up the cross; and thence give rules of comprising this whole duty. And,

First, We must deny father and mother; for, If a man come to me (saith Christ), and hate not, Luke xiv. 26. i. e. forsake not father and mother, Matt. xix. 29. he cannot be my disciple. For he that loveth father and mother more than me, is unworthy of me, Matt. x. 37. Our Lord had told them, ver. 35, 36. that his gospel would accidentally cause great variance and division betwixt the father and the son, the mother and the daughter, and render those of their own household the most fierce and cruel enemies; he therefore lets them know, that if, when this shall come to pass, father and mother did prevail upon them, either by that affection which men naturally bear to their parents, or by that reverence they give to their authority and commands, when these commands do thwart his precepts; or else by those advantages, or outward comforts, which they expect to receive from their parents, and by adhering to the doctrine of their Lord, might lose or hazard; i. e. if they, by any of these motives, were induced to prefer the commands or will of their parents before Christ's, and value their countenance and affection before his favour,—they could not sincerely be his disciples. Now this, by parity of reason, holds concerning civil magistrates, who are the fathers of their country, and spiritual superiors, who are fathers of the church; and of all others, who have like power to command, reward, or punish us; and so this instance affords this rule of self-denial.

Rule I. That they to whom we bear the greatest natural affection, and the highest reverence, to whose commands we owe the most entire obedience in lawful matters, from whom we have received already, and may expect, the greatest temporal advantages, provided we comply with their desires, or the worst temporal evils upon refusal, must be denied, forsaken, and comparatively hated, for the sake of Christ; so that although the yearning bowels of a tender mother, which at first conceived me, and the gray hairs of an indulgent father, should be pleaded as motives to induce me to break the least commandments of the holy Jesus; though the authority of civil, natural, and ecclesiastical superiors should combine to tempt me to do what Christ forbids; though this authority should allure me with proffers of the highest honours or rewards, or should endeavour to affright me with the severest menaces; yet, if all these considerations should prevail with me, to gratify myself and them, by doing that which my own conscience and God's word assure me will be displeasing to my Saviour, or opposite to his commands, it is evident that I regard myself, or them, more than I do my Saviour; and therefore am unworthy of him, and cannot be sincerely his disciple.

Secondly, We must deny our wife and children, even that wife of our bosom, who is made one flesh with us, whom we must love as dearly as we love ourselves, (Eph. v. 33.) and for whose sake father and mother must be left. (Gen. ii. 24.) We also must deny those children, which are the offspring of our bowels, the joy and comfort of our lives; for, if any man come to me (saith Christ), and hate not his wife and children, Luke xiv. 26. if he forsake not wife and children for my name's sake, and the gospel's, Mark x. 28. he cannot be my disciple. Accordingly it is recorded, for the everlasting honour of the Levites, that they observed God's word, and kept his covenant, saying unto their father and mother, I have not seen them, not knowing their own children, not acknowledging their brethren; that is, being commanded by God's servant Moses, to kill every man his brother, friend, and son, that had been guilty of idolatry, in worshipping the golden calf, they executed the command of God without regard to father, mother, son, or brother, Exod. xxxii. 27, 28. Now the children of our loins, and the wife of our bosom, being the objects of our strongest love and greatest pity, and those in whom we chiefly take delight and pleasure; this second instance will afford this rule, viz.

Rule II. That whatever we most passionately love, are most especially concerned for, do cleave most closely to in our affections, and above all enjoyments do take the most pleasure in, must be loved less than Christ; and consequently must be denied, forsaken, and comparatively hated, for his sake, and the gospel's. Now to this rule, by parity of reason, may be reduced all our immoderate affections to the pleasures of this world, whether they be the pleasures of the appetite, such as the glutton and the drunkard do pursue; the pleasures of the senses, which the voluptuous and lustful persons chiefly prosecute; the pleasures of vain sports and pastimes, gamings, and other recreations: so that if our affection to a bosom friend prevail upon us to defer that religion we profess without conviction, or to act in contradiction to any precept of it, of which our conscience is convinced; (if our love to our own offspring will not permit us to reprove, correct, or to restrain them, when they dishonour God, and render themselves vile, but, with old Eli, we despise our God by thus preferring our sons before him; if our affections are inordinately set upon the pleasures of this world, now mentioned, so that we do more passionately covet and delight more in them than the things of God; we do more eagerly pursue, more constantly employ our care and time about them than about spiritual things, and so become lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; if our affection to them doth prevail upon us to neglect our duty towards God, our neighbour, or ourselves, or to enjoy them in that degree or manner, which is forbidden by the laws of Christ,—then do we love them more than Christ; and therefore cannot be sincerely his disciples.

Thirdly, We must deny brother and sister, which may be fitly styled denying of ourselves, seeing a brother is a second self, of the same flesh and blood with us, and therefore styled, Frater quasi ferè alter: for, he that cometh unto me (saith Christ), and hateth not his brother and his sister, Luke xiv. 26. i. e. who will not leave them for my sake, Mark x. 28. cannot be my disciple. Now a brother, naturally, and in the Scripture import of the word, denotes a person with whom we do familiarly converse, and have an intimate acquaintance; hence, when the spouse desireth to have more near acquaintance, and more close communion with Christ, she thus expresseth her desire: Oh that he were as my brother, that sucked the breast of my mother! Cant. viii. 1. And the wise man, exhorting others to associate themselves with wisdom, and be more intimately acquainted with her ways, doth bid them say to wisdom, Thou art my sister, Prov. vii. 4. Moreover, this relation intimates the closest union of affection, and the greatest friendship; whence friends, in Scripture, are so oft styled brethren; and Christian love, in the superlative degree, is often represented by the love of brethren. So that our third rule will be this, viz.

Rule III. That Christians must deny, forsake, and must, comparatively, hate their nearest relative and dearest friend, who are as their own soul, (Deut. xiii. 6.) and cleave closer to them than a brother, (Prov. xviii. 24.) and him with whom they have enjoyed the sweetest and most delightful converse, and most familiar acquaintance, when it is necessary for the sake of Christ, and in obedience to his precepts, so to do; and then, à fortiori, this rule must bind us to deny our pot-companions, our lustful Delilahs, our brethren in iniquity, our vain and sinful company, and to have no communion with them in their works of darkness, but to reprove them. If then the importunity of friend or brother prevail upon thee to transgress wilfully any commandment of thy God and Saviour; if they draw thee, by their example or persuasions, to excess or riot, to chambering or wantonness, or any other sin, which is, in effect, to persuade thee to be damned for company; if, in dispensing punishments, rewards, preferments, favours, thou dost transgress this rule of equity on their accounts; if thy regard to them restrain thee from reproving their drunkenness and swearing, their lewd or atheistical discourse; nay, if the plain command of God, to hold no friendship or familiarity with them, doth not prevail upon thee to abandon and forsake their company, as much as may be,—then evident it is, thou lovest the company of such vile creatures, more than communion with thy Saviour; thou dost more prize their friendship than his favour, thou wilt not leave thy friend for him, and therefore art not worthy of him.

Fourthly, We must deny ourselves in houses, lands, and goods, or in those things by which we, with God's blessing on them, do subsist; and though these things be not so properly ourselves, as wife and children; yet, since men are so hot in the pursuit of them, that they will hazard their reputation, health, life, soul, or their whole selves in prosecution of them; since, when these things are lost, we are so apt to think and say, we are undone; since by the Scriptures these things are called our substance, and are indeed the things by which our nature does subsist;—our denial of them, upon these accounts, may very fitly be called self-denial, and thus we are obliged to deny ourselves: for, whosoever he be of us, that forsaketh not all that he hath, πάντα τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, all his possessions, or his worldly goods, he cannot be my disciple, saith our Lord, Luke xiv. 33. Hence doth our Saviour lay this command on the young man, to sell his great possessions, and give them to the poor, and follow him, in expectation of a heavenly treasure; and did pronounce, on his refusal to obey so irksome a command, that he could not enter into the kingdom of God. Here then the rule runs thus, viz.

Rule IV. That Christ's disciples must, when his providence doth call them to it, renounce, cast from them, abandon, even their whole subsistence, and all their temporal good things, in prospect of those spiritual blessings, which he hath promised to all, who, for his and his gospel's sake, do thus deny themselves: and then much more must we renounce our superfluities, and those accommodations whereby we only gratify our fancies, and our carnal minds, viz. our stately palaces, our numerous attendants, our delicious fare, our rich attire, our large and flourishing estates. If then we cannot freely spend these temporal enjoyments in the cause of Christ, or part with superfluities for the relief and comfort of his members; if we cannot cast away, abandon, or reject these things, though dear unto us as a right hand, or eye, when they prove snares, temptations, and offences to us; if the rich man cannot be content to be brought low, and to take joyfully the spoiling of his goods, in prospect of those never-failing riches Christ hath promised; if, to enjoy or to preserve these things, we venture to make shipwreck of faith, or a good conscience, or out of love unto this present world are moved, with Demas, to forsake or to neglect our duty to Christ,—then we love mammon more than Christ, and therefore cannot be his true disciples.

Fifthly, We must deny even life itself, which is still a more high degree of self-denial: there is scarce any thing we do so highly value and dearly love, and so much labour to preserve, and so unwillingly let go, as life; for, skin for, or after, skin, and all that a man hath, will a man give for his life, and yet this also must be denied for Christ's sake: for, if any man come unto me, and hateth not his own life (saith Christ), he cannot be my disciple; i. e. if he doth not love God better, and prize his favour more, than he doth value the continuance of this present life; if he cannot prevail upon himself to die for Christ, that he may live for ever with him; and lose this miserable life, to find it happily improved into a life of endless bliss and happiness; if he cannot follow the example of his Lord, who suffered first, then entered into his glory,—he vainly doth pretend to be a follower or a disciple of the holy Jesus. This instance then of self-denial doth inform us, that even natural life must be forsaken, and renounced, when we cannot preserve it without the loss of our more valuable interest in Christ, and those eternal blessings he hath promised to all those that suffer for the sake of righteousness. And if this natural life must be denied for Christ, much more my personal or civil liberty, my habitation, or my country.

Rule V. If then I cannot live a pilgrim and stranger upon earth, in expectation of a heavenly country, or live in banishment and exile for the cause of Christ; if I cannot suffer bonds and imprisonments, that I may still continue the Lord's freeman; if I cannot be induced to lose my life, that I may find it; but will endeavour to preserve my life or liberty by the violation of any laws of Christ,—it is evident I love this present life more than I love my Saviour, more than that crown of life, which he hath only promised to those who shall continue faithful to the death; and therefore am unworthy of him, and falsely do pretend to be a true disciple of the holy Jesus.

Sixthly, We must deny our honour, and our reputation, our ease, and our deliverance from those afflictions, which render life a burden, which is the last and highest pitch of self-denial; even when our afflictions and our persecution do render death itself a mercy and deliverance; when, with good Job, our soul chooseth strangling, and death, rather than life, and longeth for it more than for hid treasure; (Job iii. 21.) when for his sake we are reproached all the day long, and are exposed as spectacles of shame and infamy to the beholder: all this we must with patience suffer for the name of Jesus; for even after that our Lord had said, If any man come to me, and hate not his own life, he cannot be my disciple, he adds, Luke xiv. 27. And whosoever doth not bear his cross cannot be my disciple; wherefore this bearing of the cross imports some farther act of self-denial; which, that we may the better understand, consider, 1. that the cross among the Romans was accounted the most ignominious and shameful death, inflicted only upon slaves; for, as Lactantius saith, "Homine libero quemvis nocente indignum videbatur," Now to a generous spirit it is not so much to die, as it is to suffer in an ignominious manner, and as the worst of malefactors, being innocent; whence, as the heathen Seneca well notes, no person can so much express his love to virtue, or more entirely be devoted to her, than he, "Qui boni viri famam perdit, ne conscientiam perderet," that loses his reputation to preserve his conscience. 2. Consider that this was a most bitter, painful, and afflictive death; whence, as Austin notes, acerbissimi dolores, Cruciatus, à Cruce vocabantur. From this expression therefore thus explained, I collect this rule, viz.

Rule VI. That the disciple of the holy Jesus must endure the most fiery trials, the most sharp afflictions, and choose to die in the most shameful, ignominious manner, for the cause of Christ; i. e. when he cannot escape those things without denial, or acting contrary to the commandments of his Saviour: and then much more, when equal circumstances do concur, must he deny himself his ease and worldly quiet, his places of grandeur, his honour and his reputation, and those punctilios of honour, which the hectors of our age so much insist on; and must with patience bear, and readiness forgive, all the affronts he suffers from the hands of men, which he can never less deserve than by adhering firmly to his Lord. If then we cannot quit our ease and worldly quietness for Christ, but rather will neglect known duty, than give ourselves the trouble, which Christ's service calls for, rather comply with what is uppermost, than put ourselves to any trouble or disquiet to preserve an upright conscience; if the example and authority of Christ be not sufficient to curb our angry passions, quell our malicious and revengeful tempers; if the punctilios of honour tempt us to duel, and to spill our brother's blood; if we cannot lay down our honour and our reputation at the feet of Christ, not seeking honours from frail creatures, but that which comes from God alone, and being willing to be dishonoured for his sake; if fiery trials do cool our love to Christ, or the most sharp afflictions do cause us to forget our duty to him; if we do not rather choose to endure affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season,—we either love or fear those things more than we love the favour, or fear the frowns, of our blessed Lord: and therefore cannot be his true disciples.

[3] Ver. 26. Ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῦ πατρὸς, καὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων, When he shall come in his own, and in his Father's glory, and in the glory of his holy angels.] The Divine apparitions in the Old Testament are represented by a great light, or splendour, by the Jews styled Schechinah, and the presence and attendance of holy angels; and these are styled the glory of God, or the appearance of the glory of God, and, representing to them God the Father, are here styled the glory of the Father; and it being the Λόγος, or Son of God, which usually thus appeared, and who, after his ascension, was again invested with this glory, it is here also styled his glory. (See the notes on John xvii. 5. Phil. ii. 6. Heb. i. 3.)

[4] Ver. 31. Ἔλεγον τὴν ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ, &c. And they spake of his decease, which he should accomplish ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, at Jerusalem.] Not of that destruction which he was to accomplish on Jerusalem; for, that Moses and Elias spake one word of that, we read not in the Holy Scripture; nor doth the word ἔξοδος, absolutely put, ever signify any such thing, but only when it is joined with army, king, captains, soldiers, and the like; but it is the proper word used by Scripture, and other writers, for a departure out of this life; so 2 Pet. i. 15. I will endeavour that, μετὰ τὴν ἐμὴν ἔξοδον, after my departure, ye may have these things in remembrance; Wisd. iii. 2. In the sight of the unwise they seemed to die, καὶ ἔξοδος αὐτῶν, and their departure is taken for misery; and, vii. 6. All men have one entrance into life, ἐξοδός τε ἴση, and their departure is alike; Ecclus. xxxviii. 23. Be comforted for him, ἐν ἐξόδῳ πνεύματος αὐτοῦ, when his spirit departeth. Hence Grotius notes this as one of those phrases by which the old tradition of the immortality of the soul is preserved, though ἐξέλευσις τοῦ πνεύματος is only the expiration, or going forth of the breath of man. (Psal. civ. 29. cxlvi. 4.)

[5] Ver. 33. Καὶ ποιήσωμεν, &c. And let us make three tabernacles.] Καὶ here signifies therefore, as Gen. xii. 19. xxix. 33. xlii. 22. Deut. iv. 6. 15. 37. 40. v. 32. vi. 3. vii.

9. viii. 6. xxviii. 48. Josh. xxiii. 11. xxiv. 10. 18. 1 Sam. ii. 17. Luke xii. 29. 1 Cor. v. 13.

[6] Ver. 39. Καὶ ἰδοὺ πνεῦμα λαμβάνει αὐτὸν, And, behold, a spirit taketh him.] That this person was truly possessed with an evil spirit, is evident, 1. because St. Matthew said expressly, that Christ rebuked him, and the devil departed from him, Matt. xvii. 18. 2. Because Christ commands him to depart, and return no more, Mark ix. 24.

[7] Ver. 45. Οἱ δὲ ἠγνόουν τὸ ῥῆμα, καὶ ἦν παρακεκαλυμμένον ἀπ' αὐτῶν, But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them.] They understood the words, but knew not how to reconcile them with their own traditions, that their Messiah should live for ever; or with the great things they expected from him: and therefore in after-ages they invented the distinction of Messiah ben Joseph, who was to die; and of Messiah ben David, who was to triumph, and live for ever.

[8] Ver. 51. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ, When the time was come, that he should be received up.] Though this may be said with some analogy of his death, which he was, πληροῦσθαι ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, to accomplish at Jerusalem, whither he was now bound; because that was by being lifted up upon the cross; yet that being only styled ὕψωσις, but never ἀνάλημψις, I incline rather to think, that as his ἔξοδος signifies his departure, so his ἀνάλημψις may import his glorious ascension into heaven, the fruit and consequence of his death, who, having purged away our sins by his death, is sat down at the right hand of Majesty in the highest: (Heb. i. 3.) he, for the suffering of death, being crowned with glory and honour, (ii. 9.) and διὸ, for this cause exalted. (Phil. ii. 9.) So Elias is said, ἀναληφθῆναι εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν, to be taken up into heaven, 2 Kings ii. 1. 9. Ecclus. xlviii. 9.

[9] Καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστήριξε πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ τοῦ πορεύεσθαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem.] That is, he firmly purposed to go to Jerusalem, and began to execute it by passing from Galilee, the road-way through Samaria to Jerusalem. This is the frequent import of this phrase in the Septuagint, when there is mention of the counsel, purpose, or decree of God declared to his people. So Jer. iii. 12. οὐ μὴ στηριῶ πρόσωπόν μου ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, I will not set my face against you; xxi. 10. ἐστήριξω τὸ πρόσωπόν μου, I have set my face against this city for evil; and Ezek. xxi. 2. στήρισον τὸ πρόσωπόν σου ἐπὶ Ἱερουσαλὴμ, Set thy face against Jerusalem: so vi. 2. xiii. 17. xv. 7. xx. 46. xxv. 2. xxviii. 21. xxix. 2. xxxviii. 1. Dan. xi. 16, 17.

[10] Ver. 53. And the Samaritans received him not, ὅτι τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ἦν πορευόμενον εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, because his face was as though he was going to Jerusalem.] It appeared by the road he took, and the places he went through, that he was going thither. So of Sennacherib, Hezekiah saw, ὅτι τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, that his face was to fight against Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxxii. 2. i. e. that he directed his army thither; and they that firmly purposed to go to Egypt are θέντες τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτῶν εἰς γῆν Αἰγύπτου, men that set their face to go into Egypt, Jer. xlii. 15. 17. (See also 2 Kings xii. 17.) The reason why the Samaritans, knowing thus his purpose, received him not, as they did other Galileans going thither, was, that, by going thither on a religious account, viz. to celebrate the Passover, he decided the controversy betwixt them and the Jews, touching the place by God appointed for worship, and for sacrifice, against them; which, though they regarded not when done by the Galileans, yet was it grievous to them, that such a celebrated doctor, as Christ was, should do it.

Ver. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Hæc irrepserunt ex margine, saith Dr. Mills; but they are owned by all the eastern versions, by Theophylact here, by Chrysost. de Precat. hom. 1. ed. Mor. p. 747. (See also the defence of καθ' ἡμέραν, ver. 33. Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 55, 56. But he turned and rebuked them, saying, οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου πνεύματός ἐστε ὑμεῖς, You know not what spirit ye are of.] Here interpreters truly note, that πνεῦμα, spirit, is put for the affection, or disposition of the mind; as when the Scripture speaks of the spirit of bondage and adoption, Rom. viii. 15. and of the spirit of fear, power, love, and of a sound mind, 2 Tim. i. 7. But that which is here chiefly to be observed is, the contradiction of this saying to the popish practice of persecuting, destroying, and exterminating those whom they call heretics, purely on account of their religion; for observe,

First, That whereas they who are thus persecuted by the church of Rome, are falsely supposed to be schismatics and heretics; the Samaritans undoubtedly were both. For, 1. in opposition to the temple of Jerusalem, which God himself appointed for the place where he would be worshipped, commanding all men to repair to it, they erected a temple upon Mount Gerizim, and there they worshipped, deserting the temple of Jerusalem; this was their schism. 2. They also were heretics and idolaters: for they erred in matters which concerned salvation; and this our Saviour testified in these words, Ye worship ye know not what, we know what we worship; for salvation is of the Jews. (John iv. 22.)

Secondly, observe, That whereas the Romanists do exercise this cruelty on them whom they call schismatics and heretics, chiefly for their refusing to receive and own him as Christ's vicar, who manifestly doth usurp that title; these Samaritans refused to receive our Saviour himself in his own person, and that because he seemed to be going to Jerusalem to worship; so that the honour of God, and of religion, and of Jerusalem, the place of his peculiar worship, were all concerned in this case.

Thirdly, observe, That the permission of what was here desired by St. John and Peter, would have been more effectual for the conviction of the heretical, schismatical Samaritans, than any of the punishments inflicted by the inquisition, or any arts of papal tyranny can be for the conviction of those whom they call heretics and schismatics; for these disciples did not desire, that they themselves might execute on the Samaritans this sentence, by committing them to the flames, or imploring the magistrates' assistance to consume or burn them; they only did request, that they might call upon the God of heaven to rain down fire upon them, and consume them; which, had it pleased him to do on this occasion, the rest of the Samaritans, by what this village suffered, must have been evidently convinced, by demonstration from heaven, of God's displeasure against their way of worship, and of the truth of that Messiah, and his doctrine, who procured this vengeance to be executed upon them: whereas the persecutions of that church, because they minister no conviction to the conscience, serve only to harden men's hearts, and embitter their spirits against those who use them, and to induce them more firmly to believe that such a barbarous religion cannot be of God.

From these three observations it is evident, that whatsoever may be pleaded by the church of Rome to justify her practice in burning, massacring, extirpating of heretics and schismatics, might, with advantage, have been pleaded here. * "Doth she practise her severities out of a zeal for truth, and for the honour of God and Christ, and of the true religion, and for the reclaiming heretics and schismatics, and the preventing or terrifying others from adhering to them, or being deluded by them?" Upon all these accounts you see, that the disciples had far greater cause to call for fire from heaven upon this village of Samaria: and yet our Saviour, under these circumstances, thinks fit to rebuke even the desires of doing this to one small village. How then will he rebuke the actual performance of it to many hundred thousand souls, after his solemn declaration of the repugnancy of these proceedings to the design of his most blessed advent, and to the spirit of the gospel! For the true reasons why Christ rebuked his disciples for their desire of dealing thus severely with these schismatical and heretical Samaritans were these:

First, Because this spirit of severity towards erroneous persons, in whomsoever it is found, is highly opposite to the calm temper of Christianity, as is insinuated in that reply of Christ to his disciples, Ye know not what spirit ye are of; that is, ye do not well consider under what way of dispensation ye are placed by me. † The way I come to teach men the temper, disposition, and affection I would fix within them, is not a furious, persecuting, and destructive spirit; but mild, and gentle, and tender of the lives and interests of men, even of those who are our greatest enemies. Under the ‡ old testament, indeed, they who rejected and scoffed at a prophet suffered severely for it, the prophet had commission to call for fire from heaven to destroy them presently, and curse them in the name of the Lord. (2 Kings ii. 24.) But they who reject and crucify Christ, are by him prayed for, and are, by his command, to be still preached to, and, if possible, brought to repentance; and, according to his example, are all Christians to conform themselves, acting towards contemners of their persons or rejecters of their doctrine, not according to the legal, but the evangelical dispensation; not according to the severity of Elias, but the meekness and gentleness of Christ: and therefore your desire of proceeding according to the extraordinary spirit of Elias, under the gospel-dispensation is intolerable; for that designs universal love, peace, and good-will even to enemies; it doth engage us to shew all meekness to all men; and so no difference of religion, no pretence of zeal for God, can justify this fierce, vindictive, and exterminating spirit.

Secondly, Our Saviour's second reason against this proceeding is, that it was repugnant to the end for which he came into the world, which was, not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. § "He came to discountenance all fierceness, and rage, and cruelty in men one towards another; to restrain and subdue that furious and unpeaceable spirit, which is so troublesome to the world, and the cause of so many mischiefs and disorders in it; to beget a peaceable disposition in men of the most distant tempers;" making the lamb and the wolf lie down together; (Isa. xi. 6. 9.) and no more to destroy and hurt each other; but turn their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; (Micah iv. 3.) engaging them to lay aside all bitterness, and wrath, anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, with all malice. He came to introduce that excellent spirit which consults not only the eternal salvation of men's souls, but their temporal peace and security, their comfort and happiness in this world, whose fruits are righteousness and peace; (Rom. xiv. 17.) love, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, and meekness; (Gal. v. 22, 23.) whose wisdom is pure and peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits [or works], (James iii. 17.) and which commands the wise and knowing man to shew forth, out of a good conversation, his works with meekness of wisdom, (ver. 13.) condemning all his bitter zeal as earthly, sensual, and devilish, (ver. 14, 15.) which suffers not the servant of Christ to be engaged in foolish questions, which beget strife; because that the disciple of this mild and gentle Saviour must not fight, but must be gentle towards all men, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves against the truth, though their doctrine spread as a gangrene, and overthrow the faith of some: (2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. 17, 18.) not dispatching them out of the way, as is the manner of the Romanists, but with long-suffering expecting, if God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth, which teaches us to bear the infirmities of persons weak in faith, (Rom. xv. 1.) to restore them in the spirit of meekness, (Gal. vi. 1.) to become as weak to the weak, that we may gain the weak, (1 Cor. ix. 22.) to bear with the weak, and be long-suffering to all men, (1 Thess. v. 14.) to speak evil of no man, to be no fighters, but meek, shewing all gentleness towards all men; and that upon this sole account, that we ourselves were sometimes foolish and deceived. (Tit. iii. 2, 3.)

Now both these reasons are such as equally concern all persons, magistrates as well as ministers, them who thus persecute out of misguided zeal towards God, as well as those who do it out of envy, hatred, and such carnal principles: and they seem plainly to infer, that no man should be persecuted, as in the church of Rome men are, purely for his mistake concerning, or his denial of, any article of faith revealed by the gospel, but only for seditious and treasonable doctrines, or for such crimes as, had the gospel never been revealed, might justly have been punished by the civil magistrate.

[12] Ver. 57. Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.] This being said, as Christ perceived, from the common opinion of the nation, that the disciples of the Messiah should get wealth and honour, Christ soon discourages him from executing this resolution, laying before him the mean and low condition in which he was to be followed by his disciples.

[13] Ver. 62. Οὐδεὶς ἐπιβαλὼν τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ ἐπ' ἄροτρον, καὶ βλέπων εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω, &c. No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.] Christ often compares his word to seed, and the time of gaining others to the faith to the harvest. Now of the plougher and sower of the seed, it was used to be said proverbially, He is no good ploughman or seedsman, who, being at that work, looketh back; because his furrows will not -be straight, nor his seed cast even from him: whence they require of such a one, 1. That he should stoop, for then he cannot look back; according of Pliny,* Arator, nisi incurvus, prævaricatur: 2. That he should look straight before him, not back on his associates, as Hesiod in these words,

Ὃς κ' ἔργου μελετῶν ἰθεῖαν αὔλακ' ἐλαύνοι,
Μήκετι παπταίνων πρὸς ὁμήλικας. Ἔργ. ver. 441.

This Christ applies to the spiritual husbandry; to which he that applies himself must forget the things which are behind, ἐμπροσθεν ἐκτεινόμενος, bending and stretching out himself to those which are before. (Phil. iii. 14.)

CHAP. X.

1. AFTER these things the Lord appointed other [1] seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come (after them,

2. And because he sent them to so many cities), therefore said he to them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth (more) labourers into his harvest.

3. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves (ready to devour them;

4. Yet) carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes; and [2] salute no man by the way (i. e. spend no time in fruitless civilities, which may divert you from your business).

5. And into whatsoever house ye enter, say, Peace be to this house.

6. And if the son of peace be there (one fit, by reason of his peaceable temper, to receive that blessing), your peace shall rest upon it (i. e. it shall be according to your prayer): if not, it shall turn to you again; (i. e. they shall receive no benefit by it, Psal. xxxv. 13. Isa. lv. 11.)

7. And in the same house (in which you find a Son of peace) remain, eating and drinking such things as they give (you as the reward of your labour): for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house (for better entertainment).

8. And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you:

9. And heal the sick that are therein, and say to them, The kingdom of God is come nigh to you.

10. But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11. Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on (to) us, we do wipe off, (as a testimony) against you (that we refuse all farther commerce with you): notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh to you (and you would not receive it).

12. But (and) I say to you, That it shall be more tolerable in that day (when God shall judge the disobedient and unbelievers) for Sodom, than for that city.

13. Woe to thee, Chorazin! Woe to thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes (with the deepest sorrow and humility).

14. But (and accordingly) it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the (day of) judgment, than for you.

15. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven (i. e. advanced highly above others by my doctrine, taught in thy synagogues, and miracles wrought in thee), shalt be thrust down to hell (i. e. into a state of the extremest misery.

16. And for your encouragement in the work on which I send you,) he that heareth you, (preaching in my name the kingdom of God, shall be owned as one that) heareth me; and he that despiseth you, (shall be treated as one that) despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, (as one that) despiseth him that sent me.

17. And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the [3] devils are subject to us through thy name.

18. And he said to them (when I sent you forth), I beheld Satan as lightning fall from [4] heaven (i. e. I foresaw the sudden downfall of his kingdom).

19. [5] Behold, I give to you power to tread on serpents, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you; (i. e. I promise you protection against Satan and his instruments, and whatever else may hurt you, and power to prevail over all their opposition.)

20. [6] Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not that the spirits are subject to you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven (i. e. you have a present right to a heavenly kingdom).

21. In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast [7] hid these things from the (men, in their own conceits) wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes (in their account, Rom. ii. 20.) even so, Father (hath the event been in my preaching); for so it seemed good in thy sight.

22. All things are delivered to me of (i. e. by) my Father: and no man (Gr. none) knoweth [8] who the Son is (as to his nature and dignity), but the Father; and (no man knoweth truly) who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal (the saving knowledge of) him.

23. And he turned him (self) to his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24. For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things that ye see (viz. the days of the Messiah), and have not seen them; and to hear the things that ye hear (the mysteries of the kingdom of God), and have not heard them.

25. And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him (i. e. made trial of his wisdom), saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26. And he said to him, What is written in the law? How readest thou?

27. And he (the lawyer) answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28. And he (Christ) said to him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

29. But he, willing to justify himself (as one that had already done this), said to Jesus, And [9] who is my neighbour (I am thus to love? If those of our nation only, as we teach, I have done that).

* Hist. Nat. lib. xviii. cap. 19.

30. And Jesus answering (by an apologue) said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side (taking no pity on him).

32. And likewise a Levite, when he was come at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side (shewing no compassion on him).

33. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

34. And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in (to them) oil and wine: and (he) set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said to him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

36. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour to him that fell among the thieves?

37. And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus to him, Go, and do thou likewise (treat the Samaritan with like kindness, and thou wilt do according to this precept).

38. Now it came to pass, as they went (to Bethany, John xi. 1.) that he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house.

39. And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

40. But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, dost not thou care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.

41. And Jesus answered and said to her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things;

42. But one [10] thing is (absolutely) needful: and Mary (by hearing my word, that she may do it,) hath chosen that good part, (the fruits of) which shall not be taken from her.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. ΕΤΕΡΟΥΣ ἑβδομήκοντα, The Lord appointed seventy others.] Grotius saith they were chosen according to the number of the Sanhedrin, and so were seventy-two; six of them being chosen out of every tribe; for which he cites the authority of Josephus. Now Josephus doth indeed say of the seniors sent to Ptolemæus Philadelphus, that they were ἐξ ἀφ' ἑκάστης φυλῆς,* six out of every tribe, but he says not so of the Sanhedrin: and that they were only seventy without, and seventy-one with Moses their governor, see Seld. de Synedr. lib. ii. cap. 4. §. 5. and Dr. Lightfoot here. And, 2. he proves this from the authority of Origen, who, in his book, de recta in Deum Fide,† saith, Christ chose seventy-two disciples; and from Epiphanius,* who saith, that St. Mark was one ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο, of the seventy-two. But this they both speak by the bye: and to Origen, if that be indeed his work, we may oppose Tertullian, who styles them seventy, saying,† Adlegit et alios Septuaginta apostolos super duodecim: to Epiphanius, St. Jerome,‡ who saith, the seventy palm-trees in the sixth mansion of the Jews, signified, "secundi ordinis prædicatores," the preachers of the second order, as the fountain signified the twelve apostles: and to both, we may oppose the more ancient testimonies of Irenæus,§ who saith, that after the twelve apostles, "septuaginta alios Dominus noster ante se misisse invenitur," our Lord sent seventy others before him: and of Clemens,‖ who, in his Hypotyposes, makes frequent mention of Christ's seventy disciples: of Eusebius there, and Ambrose here: and the council of Neocæsarea,¶ saying, the Chorepiscopi were constituted εἰς τύπον τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα, after the example of the seventy. But it is more material to observe, that as the first mission of the apostles was only for a season, and ceased at their return, Matt. x. 1. (see the note there); so was the first mission of the seventy, they returning quickly from it, ver. 17. and they received a new commission; of which, see note on ver. 19. Note, 2. that whereas some compare the bishops to the apostles, the seventy to the presbyters of the church, and thence conclude, that divers orders in the ministry were instituted by Christ himself: it must be granted, that some of the ancients  did believe these two to be divers orders, and that those of the seventy were inferior to the order of the apostles; and sometimes they make the comparison here mentioned; but then it must be also granted, that this comparison will not strictly hold: for the seventy received not their mission as presbyters do, from bishops, but immediately from the Lord Christ, as well as the apostles; and in their first mission were plainly sent on the same errand, and with the same power. Nevertheless, I think here is a fair foundation for that, in which St. Chrysostom, and others, place the superiority of bishops over presbyters, to wit, in this, that the power of ordination belongs to them alone. (See note on 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2.) For though the commission to preach the gospel belonged to the seventy, as well as to the twelve apostles, yet the power of conferring the Holy Ghost, by laying on of hands, belonged peculiarly to the twelve. (See note on Acts viii. 15.) This then seems to be the reason, why the conferring of the Holy Ghost for the use of the ministry, hath been perpetually esteemed peculiar to those bishops, who, in the ecclesiastical style, are always called the successors of the apostles, and they have always done it by imposition of hands.

[2] Ver. 4. Καὶ μηδένα κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν ἀσπάσησθε, And salute no man by the way.] i. e. Do nothing which may hinder you in the execution of your office. So when Elisha sent Gehazi on a message to be dispatched presently, he saith to him, salute no man by the way, 2 Kings iv. 29. the salutations of the eastern nations being prolix: so Grotius.

Dr. Mills approves μὴ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθήσῃ, taken from some few MSS. and the Latin Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 70. p. 371. But Chrysostom, Theophylact, the Syriac, and Arabic, read according to the text; and Dr. Grabe, on the place, saith, Lectio illa non ipsius Irenæi, sed solius Latini interpretis est, nam in nullo Græcorum Patrum hunc locum ita allegatum reperio.

[3] Ver. 17. Καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια ὑποτάσσεται ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου, Even the devils are subject to us in thy name.] Here Woltzogenius notes, that Christ did cast out devils by a virtue residing in himself; his disciples only in the name and by the power of the Lord: seeing then this power accompanied them in all parts of the world, it is necessary that Christ's presence should be with them every where; now such a presence is a certain indication of the Deity. (1 Kings viii. 27. Psal. cxxxix. 7. Jer. xxiii. 24. Amos ix. 3.)

[4] Ver. 18. Ἐθεώρουν τὸν Σατανᾶν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεσόντα, I beheld Satan as lightning falling from heaven.] Though Satan be reckoned among spiritual wickednesses ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly places, Eph. vi. 12. yet Christ seems not here so much to respect that, as the dissolution of that kingdom he had erected in the world; he is styled, the God of this world, 2 Cor. iv. 4. the ruler of the darkness of this world, Eph. vi. 12. and to him is ascribed the kingdom of darkness, Col. i. 13. and a principality over the children of disobedience: Christ therefore here foretells that this dominion should be in great part lost by the translation of the heathens, from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God; and Satan being thus spoiled of his dominions, may be said to fall from heaven, by a phrase familiar both to sacred and profane writers: so of the fall of the king of Babylon the prophet saith, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer? Isa. xiv. 12. Of the fall of the colleague of Antonius, Cicero * saith, "Collegam tuum de cœlo detraxisti," Thou hast pulled him down from heaven; and when Pompey was overthrown, he is said by him, "ex astris decidisse," to have fallen from the stars. (Ep. lib. i. ad Atticum, ep. 20.)

[5] Ver. 19. Ἰδοὺ, δίδωμι ὑμῖν ἐξουσίαν τοῦ πατεῖν ἐπάνω ὄφεων, Behold, I give you power to tread upon serpents.] Note here, that these words plainly seem to give a new institution to the seventy, relating, not as the former, to the cities of Israel, as the forerunners of their Lord, but to their preaching among other nations; as we may gather, by comparing these words with the commission given by Christ to his apostles, sent into the world to preach the gospel to every creature, Mark xvi. 15. 18. according to these words of Grotius, non pro hâc tantum legatione dedi, sed do nunc etiam in posterum. (2.) This power seems to be given in words, containing a manifest allusion to Psal. xci. 13. where a like protection from danger is promised to the pious man, under the metaphor of treading on the scorpion and the basilisk; and according to the LXX. and the Chaldee, of protection from the noon-day devil, or from troops of evil spirits, ver. 5, 6. And after this manner, saith Tertullian,† we often help the heathens, being invested with that power which the apostle dedicated when he despised the biting of the serpent.

[6] Ver. 20. Πλὴν ἐν τούτῳ μὴ χαίρετε, &c. Notwithstanding, rejoice not in this, that the spirits are subject to you; but rather rejoice, that your names are written in heaven.] They returned (ver. 17.) rejoicing, that even the devils were subject to them in Christ's name; which, as it tended to the glory of God, and the promotion of the gospel, was a just matter of their joy; but because to be thought worthy of salvation by God, and through faith in Christ to have a present right to an inheritance in heaven, was a blessing proper to the saints, and tended to the eternal welfare of their souls, which the casting out of devils was not, that being done by men, to whom Christ will say at the last day, I know ye not, &c. (Matt. vii. 22, 23.) therefore Christ bids them, μᾶλλον χαίρειν, to rejoice more, that their names were written in heaven, or in the book of life; which is a Jewish phrase, of the import of which see the note on Philip. iv. 3. not signifying an absolute election, but a present right to life eternal, through the obedience of faith. (See also Targum on Deut. xxxii. 33. and Psal. lxix. 29. Isa. iv. 3. and Constitut. Apost. lib. viii. cap. 1.)

[7] Ver. 21. Ὅτι ἀπέκρυψας, That thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent.] See note on Matt. xi. 25.

[8] Ver. 22. Καὶ οὐδεὶς γινώσκει τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς, All things are delivered to me of the Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father.] All things, i. e. all power both in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. all judgment, John v. 27. power over all flesh to give eternal life, John xvii. 2. Now this includes power to raise the dead, and to pass judgment on them according to their works and secret thoughts; and so a power and wisdom which is plainly Divine, and consequently the Divine nature, from which those attributes are inseparable; which is one argument for the divinity of Christ. Secondly, He saith here, no man knoweth τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς, who is the Son, which seems not to respect what he was to do or suffer, but his nature, excellence, and dignity, as the words following, τίς ἐστιν ὁ πατὴρ, who the Father is, respects his nature, his Divine excellency, and dignity, exhibited to us ἐν προσώπῳ, in the person of Jesus Christ. (2 Cor. iv. 6.)

[9] Ver. 29. Καὶ τίς ἐστί μου πλησίον; But, he willing to justify himself (as one who had performed the command of loving his neighbour as himself), said, Who is my neighbour?] Now the corrupt tradition of the Jews having restrained this neighbour to men of their own nation and religion, to whom he might retain a very kind affection, he thought this sufficient to shew, that he had satisfied that precept; Christ therefore here demonstrates to him that every person who stands in need of help, and who is capable of kindness from us, though he be of a different nation and religion, must be deemed our neighbour. (See the note on Matt. xxii. 39.)

[10] Ver. 42. Ἑνὸς δέ ἐστι χρεία, But one thing is needful.] Not one dish only to eat of, as Theophylact, and many of the fathers descant here, but the better part, or that spiritual wisdom which Mary made it her chief care to labour after. So Arrian* saith of the government of the mind, and the fixing it upon that only which is in our power, and which we cannot be deprived of, νῦν δὴ ἑνὸς δυνάμενοι ἐπιμελεῖσθαι καὶ ἑνὶ προσηρτηκέναι, ἑαυτοὺς μᾶλλον θέλομεν πολλῶν ἐπιμελεῖσθαι καὶ πολλοῖς προσδεδέσθαι, when we might contract our cares to one thing, and cleave to that alone, we choose rather to be bound to and troubled about many things.

CHAP. XI.

1. AND it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said to him, Lord, teach us (a form by which) to pray, as John also taught (one to) his disciples.

2. And he said to them, When ye pray, say (these words), Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as (it is) in heaven, so on earth.

3. Give us day by (or, after) day our daily bread.

4. And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is [1] indebted (or, hath been injurious) to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil. (See the paraphrase and notes on Matt. vi.)

5. And (to encourage them to expect a return of their prayer) he saith to them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go to him, at midnight, and say to him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6. For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him?

7. And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise, and give (them to) thee.

8. I say to you, Though he will not (be moved to) rise and give him (them), because he is his friend, yet because of his [2] importunity he will rise and give him as many (loaves) as he needeth.

9. And (accordingly) I say to you, Ask (in faith), and it shall be given you; seek (diligently), and ye shall find; knock (earnestly), and it shall be opened to you.

10. For every one that (thus) [3] asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened (by his heavenly Father).

11. (For) if a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

12. Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? (i. e. things unprofitable and hurtful to, rather than what is good and needful for him.)

13. If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children: how much more shall your [4] heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit (the fountain of all spiritual blessings) to them that ask him?

14. And he was casting out a devil, and it was (such a one as made the man) dumb. And it came to pass that when the devil was gone out (of him), the dumb (man) spake; and the people wondered (at it).

15. But some of (the pharisees among) them said, He casteth out devils through (confederacy with) [5] Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16. And others, tempting him (i. e. distrusting his power, and doubting of his commission), sought of him a [6] sign from heaven, (as the chief token of the Messiah mentioned by Daniel, vii. 14.)

17. But he, knowing their thoughts, said to them (who accused him of confederacy with Satan), Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth (into ruin).

18. If Satan (then) also be divided against himself (and he casts his own subjects out of his dominions), how shall his kingdom stand? (And thus I argue) because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

19. And (moreover) if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, (let me ask you) by whom do your [7] sons (who exorcise them in the name of the same God by whose power I profess to do it) cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges (i. e. your judgment, that they do this by the power of God, shall condemn you, who ascribe the same thing done by me to the power and assistance of Satan).

20. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt (can be made of it, that) the kingdom of God is come upon you, (i. e. that the Messiah promised to erect this kingdom is among you.

21. For) when a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are (preserved) in peace (and safety):

22. But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils; (I therefore being thus able to overcome Satan, and cast him out of his dominions, must be stronger than he.

23. And in this work, of beating down Satan's kingdom) he that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth; (i. e. he that assists me not in bringing men to the kingdom of God, scattereth them as sheep without a shepherd.

24. And to you from whom Satan hath been thus ejected, and you who continue yet to side with him against me by whom he is ejected, I direct this parable; viz.) When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places (not yet watered by the word preached to them), seeking rest; and finding none (there, the gospel following him to the gentiles, and dispossessing him there), he saith, I will return to my house whence I came out.

25. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished (and so ready to receive him).

26. Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and (so) the last state of that man is worse than the first. (Thus also will it be with you; Satan ejected by me, finding no where else persons so fitted to receive him, will return, and take more durable possession of you, and render you seven times more the children of Satan than ye were before.)

27. And it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lift (ed) up her voice, and said to him, [8] Blessed is the womb which bare thee, and (blessed are) the paps that thou hast sucked.

28. But he said, Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

29. And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, (in answer to those who sought of him a sign from heaven, ver. 16.) This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and there shall no (farther) sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30. For as Jonas was a sign to the Ninevites (being three days and nights in the whale's belly, and yet raised out of it to preach it to them), so shall also the Son of man be (raised from the dead after three days, for a sign) to this generation.

31. The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and (shall) condemn them:

for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a (person of) greater (wisdom) than Solomon is here (and yet his wisdom is despised by them).

32. The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, (these men repent not, though) a greater (prophet) than Jonas is here.

33. (But though the men of this generation despise this heavenly wisdom, it becomes not me, nor my disciples, to conceal it; for) [9] no man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in (to the house) may see the light.

34. (As) the light of the body is the eye (directing the body how to walk, so the light of the soul is the mind, directing it how to discern its duty): therefore, [10] when thine eye is single (free from worldly-mindedness and liberal), thy whole body also is full of light (directed by the love of God and of our neighbour for his sake, into the way that leads to life); but when thine eye is evil (envious and covetous), thy body also is full of darkness (all thy actions done in the body will be deeds of darkness).

35. Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee (thy mind which should direct thy actions) be not (by covetousness, and an immoderate love of the world, turned into) darkness.

36. If (by this care) thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole (of thy life) shall be full of light, as (a room is) when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

37. And as he spake (these words), a certain pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in (to his house), and sat down to (eat of his) meat.

38. And when the pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

39. And the Lord said to him, Now do ye pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and platter (i. e. take care to have a fair outside, and bodies clean from ceremonial defilement); but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? (and should not ye then be as careful to keep that clean, as ye do the outward man, by frequent washings?)

41. But rather give alms of such [11] things as ye have; and (when God and the poor have had their dues), behold, all things (ye eat of or enjoy) are clean to you.

42. But woe to you pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done (as being your own constitutions), and not to leave the other undone (as being the more weighty matters of the law).

43. Woe to you, pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues and greeting in the markets, (minding these respects from men more than the favour of God, John v. 44. xii. 43.)

44. Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves that appear not (so as to be, as being overgrown with grass and herbs), and (so) the men that walk over them are not aware of them (having specious outsides, but hearts defiled, and defiling others).

45. Then answered one of the lawyers, and said to him, Master, thus saying thou reproachest us also (for we are scribes).

46. And he said, Woe to you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers; (i. e. ye will not shew the least mercy to them who are thus oppressed with them; see note on Matt. xxiii. 4.)

47. Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them (as you yourselves acknowledge).

48. Truly ye bear witness that (ye are by nature the children of those fathers, and) ye allow (or, are well pleased with) the deeds of your fathers: (shewing the like malice against me, and mine, as they did against the old prophets; I say, you testify this, viz. that ye are the children of such fathers,) for they (your fathers) indeed killed them, and ye (their children) build their sepulchres.

49. Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute (to the death).

50. That (so) the blood of the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation (who by their hatred to the last and chiefest of them have filled up the measure of their sins);

51. From the blood of (righteous) Abel (the first prophet and preacher of righteousness, Heb. xi. 4. 2 Pet. ii. 5.) to the blood of Zacharias, (the last prophet slain by you, 2 Chron. xxiv. 22. and) which perished betwixt the altar and the temple: verily I say to you, It shall be required of this generation.

52. Woe to you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the [12] key of knowledge (by which the kingdom of God should be opened to men): ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered (obstructing their faith by your tradition and false interpretations of the Scripture).

53. And as he spake these things to them, the scribes and pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and [13] to provoke him to speak of many things (Gr. and to inquire of many things from his mouth).

54. Laying wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that (by it) they might accuse him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 4. ΚΑΙ᾽ γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἀφίεμεν παντὶ ὀφείλοντι ἡμῖν, For we forgive every one that is indebted to us.] That is, every one that offends against us, according to the usual import of that word in the Syriac, or Chaldee, where a sinner is חיב, a debtor, and sin is חיבא, a debt; thus Exod. xxxii. 30. חטאתם חטאה גדלה, ye have sinned a great sin, is, in the Targum, חבתיך חובא ובא, you have contracted a great debt: so Gen. xx. 9. xxvi. 10. xxxi. 36. Lev. iv. 3. see Buxtorf in the word חיב: and in this sense ὀφειλέτης, a debtor, and ὀφειλήματα, debts, are used, Matt. vi. 12. and Luke xiii. 4. Think ye that they on whom the tower of Saloam fell were ὀφειλῆται, debtors, that is, sinners above all men?

But then it is carefully to be observed, for the due stating the controversy of Christ's satisfaction, that sins are not properly and strictly compared to debts, seeing by sinning we do not so properly contract a debt, as a guilt, or obnoxiousness to punishment; which two things will admit these differences; (1.) That if another will pay my debt, the creditor cannot justly refuse his paying it for me, or complain he is not satisfied when the whole debt is paid; but let another be never so willing to suffer for my offence, he can make no satisfaction for it, unless the judge be willing to admit him to suffer in my stead. Hence (2.) the creditor does no act of grace by admitting the solution of another; and if that other pay the whole, he can require no conditions for my discharge: but the ruler, against whose laws I have personally offended, does me an act of grace in admitting another to suffer in my stead, and so may do this only upon some reasonable conditions. And (3.) we do not properly pay our whole debts, unless we pay what was owing in specie, or something admitted as an equivalent to it; but we may make satisfaction for our sins against our governor by any thing of less value, provided that it preserves the honour of the lawgiver, and terrifies us and others for the future from lapsing into the same offence.

Of the third and last petition of the Lord's prayer, whether they were wanting in St. Luke's original, or not, and whether (ver. 13.) we are to read πνεῦμα ἅγιον, or ἀγαθὸν δόμα, see Examen Millii, lib. ii. cap. 1. n. 12, 13.

[2] Ver. 8. Διά γε τὴν ἀναιδείαν, For his importunity.] i. e. His request so importunate as to admit of no refusal, his continual coming and crying night and day: (xviii. 1. 5. 7.) Gr. for his impudence, according to that saying of the Jews, * The impudent man overcomes the modest and the bashful, how much more God who is goodness itself!

[3] Ver. 10. Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ αἰτῶν, λαμβάνει, For every one that asketh, receiveth.] i. e. Who asks in faith, seeks with diligence, and knocks with importunity and perseverance, receives all that is needful for him: so the connexion shews, he will arise and give him, ὅσον χρῄζει, as much as he wants; (ver. 8.) and I say to you, Ask, and ye shall receive all knowledge necessary to your salvation, all that assistance which is necessary to preserve you from those sinful courses which will exclude you from salvation, or to the performance of that obedience which God hath made the condition of your salvation under the new covenant, and to your perseverance in that obedience to the end; he shall receive all things spiritually good for him: for if you, being evil, will give good things to your children, much more will your heavenly Father give, τὰ ἀγαθὰ, good things, Matt. vii. 11. his Holy Spirit, ver. 13. to those that ask him.

[4] Ver. 13. Ὁ πατὴρ ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ δώσει πνεῦμα ἅγιον, Much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him.] Ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ is the same with ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, Matt. vii. 11. so our house from heaven, 2 Cor. v. 2. is our house in heaven, ver. 1. and the Lord in heaven, 1 Cor. xv. 47. is ὁ ἐπουράνιος, the heavenly Lord, ver. 48, 49. Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, the Holy Ghost, if it here signify, as throughout the Old Testament, the spirit of prophecy, or, as generally in the New, the miraculous inward gifts and operations of the Holy Spirit; (see note on 1 John v. 6.) it must be granted, that Christ speaks here, not of what they were to ask at present; for the Holy Ghost was not yet, because Jesus was not glorified: (John vii. 39.) and so must we understand our Lord's words, xii. 11, 12. When they shall bring you before princes and governors, meditate not beforehand what you shall speak, for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in that hour; for neither were they brought before princes till after our Lord's resurrection and ascension, nor did the Holy Ghost instruct them how to speak till then. So our Lord's commission as to these words, Matt. x. 8. and all that follows in that chapter, from ver. 16. to the end, plainly respects what they were to do and suffer after Christ's ascension; if it relates to the present time, and to Christians in general, not only to the apostles, as the words, every one that asketh, and the good gifts, in Matthew, seem to argue; we, by this phrase, can only understand the ordinary assistances and operations of the Holy Spirit.

[5] Ver. 15. Ἐν Βεελζεβοὺβ, By Beelzebub, the prince of the devils.] Of the right reading of this word Beelzebub, the lord of flies, or Beelzebul, the lord of dung, as St. Jerome reads, Matt. xii. 24. see Dr. Lightfoot there. But then when both he and the great Bochartus wonder, how this god of flies should come to be styled the prince of devils, that seems to be no great wonder, he being no less than the heathen Jupiter, the prince and father of the gods, as appears from the titles of ἀπόμυιος, μύαρτος, μυώδης, all given him "à muscis abigendis," from his office of chasing the flies from the sacrifices, the temples, and cities of the heathens. (See Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 9. p. 499—501.)

[6] Ver. 16. Σημεῖον ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, A sign from heaven.] Because the Son of man was to come in the clouds of heaven, Dan. vii. 13. (See the note on Matt. xii. 38.)

[7] Ver. 19. Οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν ἐν τίνι ἐκβάλλωσι; By whom do your sons cast them out?] To what hath been said on Matt. xii. 27. add, that some think that this relates to the seventy disciples sent by Christ to preach the kingdom in every city and place whither he was afterward to come, Luke x. 2.: for they return to him with these words, Even the devils are subject to us in thy name, ver. 17. Now doubtless they were the sons of the Jews, and though they cast out devils in Christ's name, yet is not this sufficient to take off the force of Christ's argument; for it was not easy to suspect so great a number of honest men, of their own nation and acquaintance, sent by two and two into their villages and cities, should be all confederates with Satan; they therefore going through their cities to assure them, the kingdom of God is at hand, and confirming their testimony, by healing diseases, and casting out devils in Christ's name, gave in full testimony against them, who said, that Christ himself did this by a confederacy with Satan.

[8] Ver. 27. Blessed is the womb that bare thee: Ver. 28. μενοῦνγε, yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.] i. e. The blessedness of my mother ariseth not from this, that she conceived, and brought me forth into the world; but, in order to that, it is necessary for her, as well as others, to believe and obey my word. (So Theophylact.)

[9] Ver. 33. Οὐδεὶς δὲ λύχνον ἅψας, &c. No man when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, &c.] Some give here the connexion thus: Though you generally receive very little benefit by my preaching, it becomes neither me nor my disciples to conceal our wisdom, but still to let it shine forth to the world. (Matt. v. 15.) But seeing it is evident, that the same expressions are oft applied to different things in divers senses, (see note on Matt. xii. 30.)

why may not this have relation to the following verse, thus? God never gives the light of nature, or of revelation, as he hath done to you, Jews, but that it may be improved, and shine forth in them to others: now, as the light of the body is the eye, so the light of the soul is that reason, and that revelation of his mind, which God affords; and therefore it becomes you to take as great care that your light be not turned into darkness by prejudices, which blind the eyes, or by shutting your eyes against the light, or by your infidelity, or those vicious habits, which will not suffer you to come at the light, or believe in it; as that the eye of the body be not darkened, or put out.

[10] Ver. 34. Ὅταν οὖν ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου ἁπλοῦς ᾖ, Therefore when thy eye is single, thy whole body is full of light; but when, πονηρὸς ᾖ, it is evil, thy body also is full of darkness.] There is no tautology in these and the following words, but only a progression from the mind clearly enlightened and directed, and the faculties of the soul rightly disposed, to a life led according to them, or, in the Scripture phrase, a walking in the light. For Christ here compares the inward light of the soul, or the eye of it, to that of the body, shewing, that as that being pure from spots, adventitious humours, cataracts, and other blemishes, gives a clear light for the direction of the body; but when it is ill affected, by reason of these, or other maladies, the body is in the dark: so if the eye of the soul be not single, i. e. if it be not pure from covetousness, which is ἐπιθυμία τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ, the lust of the eye after worldly things, (1 John ii. 16.) from carnal concupiscence, which renders it the adulterous eye, (Matt. v. 28, 29. 2 Pet. ii. 14.) from envy, which is ὀφθαλμὸς βασκανίας, the evil or bewitching eye, (Prov. xxiii. 6. Ecclus. xiv. 3. 10.) from pride, which is ὀφθαλμὸς ὑπερηφάνων, the high look, (Psal. ci. 5.) ὀφθαλμὸς ὑβριστοῦ, the proud look, (Prov. vi. 17.) ὀφθαλμὸς ὁ μετέωρος, the lofty eye: (Isa. v. 15.) if, I say, it be not purified from these distempers, it will not direct our way aright, or preserve us from walking in the dark: for these are the lusts of the world, which are contrary to the friendship of God, making all the actions of the life perverse; and therefore they, who do such things, are said to walk on still in darkness, (Psal. lxxxii. 5. Eccles. ii. 14. John viii. 12. xii. 46. 1 John ii. 9.) to be in darkness, (1 Thess. v. 4.) and to love darkness more than light; (John iii. 19.) whereas, when the mind is free from these vices, and adorned with the contrary virtues, it directs all our actions to piety, virtue, and the love of God; as a lantern shining in darkness directs our feet; or as a candle enlightens the whole room where it is; and hence such persons are said to walk in the light, (1 John i. 7.) and to be children of the light, and of the day. (Luke xiv. 8. John xii. 36. Eph. v. 8. 1 Thess. v. 5.) This therefore is the import of these words, That a mind thus enlightened, and free from all these distempers, which darken and make blind the soul, will direct all our faculties and inclinations, and all the actions of the life aright; as a light doth the body when it walks in a dark night.

[11] Ver. 41. Πλὴν τὰ ἐνόντα δότε ἐλεημοσύνην, But give alms of all that you have, and all things shall be clean unto you.] Τὰ ἐνόντα, are τὰ παρόντα, τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, our substance, or the things which we have; or, as Stephanus, which are in our power; according to those words of Tobit, ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων σοι ποίει ἐλεημοσύνην, give alms of thy substance, iv. 7. and, ver. 8. ὡς σοὶ ὑπάρχει, as thou hast ability, according to thy abundance. Christ therefore here instructs us, that our temporal enjoyments are unclean, i. e. unlawful to be used by us till we have sanctified them by some act of charity; and this is the frequent import of the word καθαρὸς, clean, when it relates to meats, as Acts x. 14, 15. xi. 8, 9. Rom. xiv. 20. Tit. i. 15. And suitable to this, is God's command concerning the tithe of the third year, that it should be given to the stranger, the orphan, the widow, that God might bless the land: (Deut. xxiv. 13, 14.) so that till this were done, they were not to expect from him a blessing on their substance. This also is frequently prescribed as a means to procure the pardon of our sins. So Daniel saith to Nebuchadnezzar, λύτρωσαι ἐν ἐλεημοσύναις, redeem thy sins, or expiate them, by acts of mercy to the poor, iv. 27. for by mercy and truth iniquity is purged, Prov. xvi. 6. Ἐλεημοσύνη, Mercy, or charity, delivereth from death, and shall purge away all sins, Tobit xii. 9. Water will quench a flaming fire, καὶ ἐλεημοσύνη ἐξιλάσεται ἁμαρτίας, and alms maketh an atonement for sins: our mercy to his servants inclining God to be merciful to us.

[12] Ver. 52. Ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως, Ye have taken away the key of knowledge.] By which the kingdom of God should be opened to men, and they be enabled to enter into it; (see note on Matt. xxiii. 13.) obscuring and hiding, by your traditions and false interpretations, those scriptures which relate to the Messiah, and the light which those prophecies of the Old Testament afford to conduct men to it; and pretending, that for want of knowledge of the law, they are not sufficient to judge of these matters, but must be guided by your judgment of them: (John vii. 48, 49.) and thus you, not believing in the Messiah, nor entering yourselves into the kingdom of God, now come among you, and preached to you, have obstructed the faith of them, who otherwise would have believed and entered into it.

At the ordination of a Jewish rabbi to be a teacher of the law, a key was given him, to shew that he was appointed to open the Scriptures to the people. Hence Christ pronounces a woe upon those doctors of the law, who being thus designed to open those Scriptures to the people, which concerned the kingdom of heaven, or of the Messiah; they by their false interpretations, and corrupt traditions, touching the Scriptures relating to that kingdom, did shut the kingdom of heaven up against them.

[13] Ver. 53. Καὶ ἀποστοματίζειν αὐτὸν περὶ πλειόνων, And to provoke him to speak of many things.] Or to inquire of many things from his mouth: for they did this ζητοῦντες θηρεῦσαί τι ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, seeking to catch something out of his mouth. So Julius Pollux*, saith, that ἀποστοματίζειν is ἀπὸ στόματος εἰπεῖν, to speak something from the mouth, or words not written: Suidas, that it is ἀπὸ στόματος λέγειν, to speak from the mouth, or memory. So Aristotle† saith, the grammarians learn τὰ ἀποστοματιζόμενα, those things which are delivered from their master's mouth (see Stephanus on this word): Theophylact saith, it is κηδεύειν αὐτὸν καὶ ἀπὸ στόματος κρατεῖν.

CHAP. XII.

1. IN the meantime, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people (Gr. ἐν οἷς, whilst

* Lib. ii. cap. 9. §. 23. p. 94. lib. xxiii.

† Elench. lib. i. cap. 3.

Christ was saying these things, an innumerable multitude of people being gathered together), insomuch that they trod one upon another, he began to say to his disciples first of all, [1] Beware of the leaven of the pharisees, which is hypocrisy (i. e. an outward appearance of sanctity, which puffs up and deceives others; but yet is only a pretence).

2. For there is nothing covered (under hypocritical pretences), which shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be (made) known.

3. Therefore (Gr. ἀνθ' ὧν, because, or forasmuch as) whatsoever you have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed on the housetops (so that, though you should be able to conceal the evil of your hearts and actions from men, they will be laid open at the great day of your accounts).

4. And (though I send you with a message, which will so offend men, and more especially the Jews, that they will think by killing you they do God good service, John xvi. 2. yet) I say to you, my friends, Be not afraid of them who (can only) kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do (nothing to hurt the soul).

5. But I will forewarn you whom you shall (rather) fear: (viz.) Fear him, who, after he hath killed, hath power to cast (both soul and body) into hell; yea, I say to you, Fear him.

6. (For) are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and (yet) not one of them is forgotten before (that) God (whose providence watches over the smallest things in the world? You may then be assured your least concerns are not neglected by him).

7. But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows (and so the more peculiar objects of God's care and providence).

8. Also (and farther to engage you to constancy in your profession, and patient suffering for my sake) I say to you, Whosoever shall (thus) [2] confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God (he will own them before God, in whose presence the angels stand):

9. But he that (to avoid the rage of men) denieth me before men, shall be denied (i. e. renounced, as none of my disciples) before the angels (standing in the presence) of God.

10. And (as for the enemies of me and my doctrine) whosoever (of them being offended at my present humble circumstances) shall (notwithstanding all the conviction I have given them) speak a word against the Son of man (in derogation from his mission), it shall be forgiven him; but to him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost (when he cometh upon you in his gifts and miraculous operations, to assert my resurrection and confirm my doctrine), it (that blasphemy) shall not be forgiven.

11. And when they bring you to the synagogues, and to magistrates, and (heathen) powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say, (seeing it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak, Matt. x. 19.)

12. For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

13. And (then) one of the company said to him, [3] Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me (for I would gladly have thee to be arbitrator betwixt us concerning it).

14. And he said to him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? (This properly belongs not to my prophetic office, but to your civil consistories.)

15. And (upon occasion of this man's concern for his temporals) he said to them, Take heed, and [4] beware of covetousness: for (the comfort of) a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth.

16. And (to this end) he spake a parable to them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully:

17. And he thought within himself, saying (to himself) What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow (i. e. lay up) my fruits?

18. And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

19. And (then) I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20. But God said to him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be [5] required of thee, (i. e. thou shalt die this night; and) then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?

21. So (such a fool) is he that layeth up treasure for himself (on earth), and is not rich towards God (i. e. in heavenly treasures, which will alone commend him to God, and procure his favour).

22. And he said to his disciples, Therefore I say to you, Take no thought (be not anxiously concerned) for (the things necessary to preserve) your life, (viz.) what ye shall (have to) eat; neither for the body, what ye shall (have to) put on.

23. (For) the life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. (He then who gave this life and body, without your care and assistance, will not be wanting in making the provisions necessary to preserve them.)

24. Consider the (young) ravens, (excluded from their nests by the old ones, and crying to the Lord for meat, Psal. cxlvii. 9.) for (Gr. that) they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and (yet) God feedeth them (giving them food when they cry): how much more are ye better than the fowls (and so more sure to be provided for)?

25. And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit (one moment to his life, or one inch to the growth of his body; and how much less will your solicitude preserve the whole)?

26. If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest (which you are less able to compass)?

27. (Again) consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, (They appear so beautifully clothed by nature,) that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

28. If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven (and so is of a very short duration); how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith (if you distrust not his care in making these provisions for you)!

29. And seek not ye (or, seek not then) what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of [6] a doubtful (wavering) mind.

30. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after (who have no hopes of better things): and (you need not be concerned for them, seeing) your (heavenly) Father knoweth you have need of these things.

31. But rather seek ye (first) the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added to you.

32. Fear not (any want of these things), little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom (of glory).

33. [7] Sell that ye have, and give alms, (even out of the main stock, when the necessities of your brethren require it, and so) provide yourselves bags that wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, nor moth corrupteth (this being the only way to be heavenly-minded).

34. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35. Let your [8] loins be girded about, and your lights burning (i.e. as servants attending still their master's coming, and ready to execute his commands);

36. And ye yourselves like to men (servants) that wait for their lord (or bridegroom), [9] when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately.

37. Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say to you, That he shall gird himself (as a servant), and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them (i. e. he will administer to them in an unusual manner).

38. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants (whom he will so regard).

39. And this know, that (men use the like vigilance in temporals; for) if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, (it is to be supposed) he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40. Be ye therefore ready also (and shew like care in spirituals): for the Son of man cometh in an hour that ye think not (of).

41. Then Peter said to him, Lord, speakest thou this parable to us (disciples and apostles only), or even to all?

42. And the Lord said, (This duty is incumbent on, and will be done by, as many as expect a reward from me for their prudence and fidelity, τίς ἄρα) [10] who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season (as their wants require)?

43. Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

44. Of a truth I say to you, That he will make him ruler over all that he hath (i. e. advance him to great honour and glory at his coming).

45. But if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming (as many of the Jews did, revolting from his service), and (therefore) shall begin to beat the men-servants and maidens (the persevering Christians, as the apostatizing Jews did), and to eat and drink, and to be drunken; (i. e. return to a desolate course of life, 2 Pet. ii. 2. 22.)

46. The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and (for his perfidiousness) shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47. And that servant who [11] knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself (for his coming), neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

48. But he who knew (it) not, and did commit things worthy of stripes (as sinning against the law of nature), shall be beaten with few stripes. For to whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of them they will ask the more.

49. (I farther tell you, that) I am come to send fire on the earth (to publish that doctrine which will cause great heats and contentions); and (yet so profitable is it to the world, that) what will I [12] if it be already kindled? (Gr. what do I desire, even that it were already kindled?)

50. But (and) I have a baptism to be baptized with (i. e. a death to suffer); and how am I straitened (as one in pain) till it be accomplished!

51. Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth (i. e. to free you from the troubles of the world)? I tell you, Nay; but rather (to preach that doctrine which will cause) division:

52. For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided (on the account of this doctrine, viz.) three against two, and two against three.

53. The father shall (by reason of it) be divided against the son, and the son against the father; and the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; and the mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

54. And he said also to the people, When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and (usually) so it is.

55. And when ye see (hear) the south-wind blow, ye say, There will be heat; and (so) it cometh to pass.

56. Ye hypocrites, ye can discern (by) the face of the sky (what weather), and (by the face) of the earth (what season it is like to be); but how is it that ye do (Gr. how then do ye) not discern (from what I do and teach that) this (is the) time (of the Messiah's advent)?

57. Yea, and why even of [13] yourselves judge ye not (from the agreement of my doctrine with the principles of reason) what is right?

58. When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, (it is good counsel,) as thou art in the way, (to) give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison:

59. (For) I tell thee, Thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite: (why then neglect you that repentance towards God, and faith in the Messiah, which can alone preserve you from that infernal prison from which there is no escaping?)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΡΟΣΕ'ΧΕΤΕ ἑαυτοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν φαρισαίων, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὑπόκρισις, Beware of the leaven of the pharisees, which is hypocrisy.] i. e. Take heed ye be not guilty of pharisaical hypocrisy; for though you should be able to conceal the evil of your hearts and actions from the eyes of men, the time will come when they shall be revealed and made known, (ver. 3.) ἀνθ' ὧν, eo quod, propterea quod, idcirco quod, for that, or forasmuch as, or because, in the great day of your accounts, that which you have spoken or done with the greatest secrecy, shall come to light, and be revealed openly. So Luke i. 20. Thou shalt be dumb, ἀνθ' ὧν, because thou hast not believed my words; Luke xix. 44. They shall lay thee even with the ground, ἀνθ' ὧν, because thou knowest not the time of thy visitation; Acts xii. 23. The angel of the Lord smote him, ἀνθ' ὧν, because he gave not glory to God. And thus it answers to the Hebrew על אשר which is mostly rendered by the LXX. ὅτι, διότι, and sometimes ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, as 2 Sam. xii. 16. ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, because he hath done this thing; 1 Kings ix. 9. ἀνθ' ὧν, because they have forsaken the Lord their God; 2 Kings xviii. 12. ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, because they have not hearkened to the voice of the Lord; Jer. xvi. 11. ἀνθ' ὧν, because your fathers have forsaken me: so xxii. 9. Ezek. xxix. 39. ἀνθ' ὧν, for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel.

[2] Ver. 8. Πᾶς ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ ἐν ἐμοι, &c. Every one that shall confess me before men, him also shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God: Ver. 9. But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God.] The critical note here is, that as the Hebrew ב is very frequently only the sign of the dative case, (see Nold. de Partic. p. 165, 166.) so is ἐν, both in the Old and the New Testament: so Gen. xl. 14. ποιήσεις ἐν ἐμοὶ ἔλεος, thou shalt shew me kindness, Psal. lxxxii. 8.: so Rom. xi. 2. ἐν Ἠλίᾳ, Elijah; 1 Cor. ix. 15. I have not written this that it should be so done, ἐν ἐμοί, to me; xiv. 11. ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος, he that speaketh shall be a barbarian to me: so in Euripides, ἐν βέλει πληγείς, smitten with a weapon, ἐν γαλάκτι χαίρων. (See Stephanus.) And it is also used where the sense requires an accusative case, as σὺ ἐνελέξω ἐν Ἀβραὰμ, thou hast chosen Abraham, Neh. ix. 7. Esd. ii. 51. ἐμυκτήριζον ἐν ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ, they mocked his messengers, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. the leprosy of Naaman shall cleave ἐν σοὶ καὶ ἐν τῷ σπέρματί σου, to thee and to thy seed, 2 Kings v. 27. I will hear what the Lord will say ἐν ἐμοὶ, to me: so ἐν πόλει ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, a city—Jerusalem, LXX. Moreover, these words (ver. 9.) afford us a full confutation of the pernicious doctrine of Mr. Hobbes, against that self-denial, and taking up the cross, our Lord so expressly and frequently requires from all Christians, and Mr. Hobbes, out of his more abundant wisdom, fully doth excuse us from: for, Faith (saith he) being internal and invisible, we need not put ourselves into danger for it; and therefore he alloweth subjects, being commanded by their sovereigns, to deny Christ. His words are these, Profession with the tongue is only an external thing, wherein a Christian, believing firmly in his heart the faith of Christ, hath the same liberty which the prophet Elisha allowed to Naaman the Syrian, who believed in his heart, but by bowing before the idol Rimmon, he denied the true God in effect, as much as if he had done it with his lips. Moreover, he giveth licence to a Christian to commit idolatry, or do an idolatrous act, for fear of death or corporal danger; To pray (saith he) to a king voluntarily for fair weather, or for any thing which God alone can do for us, is Divine worship and idolatry; but if the king compel a man to this by the terror of death, or other great corporal punishments, it is not idolatry; his reason is, because it is not a sign that he doth honour him as God inwardly, but that he is desirous to save himself from death, or from a miserable life: thus doth he, with those gnostics of whom St. Peter speaks, bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought him. But (1.) this doctrine renders self-denial, or taking up the cross, a thing impossible: for where the magistrate is not against the free profession of our faith, where he enjoineth nothing opposite to the command of Christ, we cannot suffer for the sake of Christ and of his gospel; and where the magistrate compels us by punishments or threats to deny Christ, or do what he hath otherwise forbid, Mr. Hobbes tells us, we may lawfully obey, and therefore need not suffer. (2.) No man, according to this doctrine, can suffer according to the will of God, as the apostle Peter doth suppose. (1 Pet. iii. 17.) No man can suffer for conscience towards God, or for well-doing, as the same apostle speaks; because it is not the will of God we should thus suffer, since he permits us to deny our faith, saith Mr. Hobbes, and practise contrary to what he hath forbid, when faith or practice will expose us to corporal punishments, or to the fear of death. (3.) No man, according to this doctrine, can promise to himself any reward for what he suffers in the cause of Christ, because he never did require him to suffer; whereas a crown of glory is every where in Scripture promised to the patient sufferer, his light afflictions are said to work for him a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; and it is said to be a righteous thing with God, to recompense to them that suffer for him, rest with him.

Moreover, this doctrine gives the lie to our Saviour, who plainly tells us, that whosoever shall deny him before men, he will deny him before his heavenly Father: (Matt. x. 33.) that whosoever shall be ashamed of his words and doctrine in a perverse and adulterous generation, of him his Saviour will be ashamed, when he comes before his Father and his glorious angels. (Mark viii. 3. 8.) But to this it is replied by Mr. Hobbes, that what a subject is compelled to do in obedience to his sovereign, and doth it not in order to his own mind, but in order to the law of his sovereign, that action is not his, but his sovereign's; nor is it he that in this case denieth Christ, but his sovereign. Ans. 1. Seeing the persecuting world is that adulterous generation of which our Saviour speaks, and the world persecuteth by the civil power; to be ashamed of Christ and of his word in this adulterous generation, is certainly to be ashamed to confess him, and to own his doctrine, by reason of the ignominy or troubles we may suffer for so doing from the civil power. 2. That to refuse to bear our cross, and even lose our lives for Christ's sake and the gospel's, is to be ashamed of Christ, is evident from the connexion of the words: for Christ informeth his disciples, (ver. 31.) that he must suffer many things of the chief priests and rulers of the Jews; and, ver. 34. he tells them, All that would be his disciples, must also be content to bear the cross, and lose their lives for his sake and the gospel's, when men saw fit to treat the disciples as they had done their Master, which, saith he, whosoever doth refuse to do, will be the greatest loser; οὗ γὰρ ἂν, for whosoever will be ashamed of me, &c. Is it not therefore evident, that to refuse even to lose our life for Christ's sake and the gospel's, when rulers shall think fit on that account to take it from us, is to be ashamed of Christ and of his doctrine? And therefore Mr. Hobbes wisely said nothing to this text. But (2.) in his pretended answer to those words of Matthew, he manifestly wrests our Saviour's words, who plainly speaks of denying him by words in presence of, or in compliance with, the magistrate: for (ver. 18.) he declares to his disciples, that they should be brought before kings and rulers for his sake, and by them should be scourged, (ver. 17.) imprisoned, (ver. 19.) and killed, (ver. 21.) But notwithstanding all their menaces and persecutions, publish, saith he, my doctrine openly to all the world; what I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in the light; and what you hear in the ear, that speak on the housetop: (ver. 27.) and be not discouraged from so doing by fear of them who may kill the body, which magistrates, who have the power of the sword, have only a right to do; and which they cannot do for our internal faith, of which they cannot judge, but only for outward profession, or confession of it, which, saith Christ, I command you to make before them without fear, (ver. 31.) for whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess—deny me before men—deny; (ver. 32, 33.) so saith our Lord. It is no such matter, saith the great Malmsburian philosopher, you are fools if you offer yourselves to be thus treated by the magistrate for the name of Christ; you need not run this hazard, you may deny, as well as preach Christ's doctrine on the housetop, if so commanded by the magistrate: and therefore you need not fear him, because you need do nothing to provoke him; you may be sound believers, though ye deny, blaspheme, or disobey Christ, when by their menaces or precepts the magistrates compel you so to do; and therefore you, notwithstanding all your blasphemies, will be acceptable to Christ; but he will punish those persecuting rulers as those who only do indeed deny him. Now whether this be to interpret or contradict our Saviour's words, let any rational man judge. (3.) This doctrine is a flat contradiction to St. Paul, who doth expressly teach as well confession of the Lord Jesus with our mouths, as belief of him with our hearts to be required to salvation; for with the mouth confession is made unto salvation; (Rom. x. 10.) adding, that if we do deny Christ, he also will deny us; but if we suffer for him, we shall reign together with him. (2 Tim. ii. 12.) It also thwarts the doctrine of St. John, who having told us of some Jewish rulers, who, when convinced that Jesus was the Christ, would not confess him for fear of punishment, and of disgrace, by being turned out of the synagogue, saith, they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, (John xii. 43.) which whosoever doth can be no sound believer, and no true lover of his Lord. (John v. 42. 44.) Moreover, by this doctrine we must condemn the three children who refused to worship the golden image which Nebuchadnezzar did erect, whereas God by their wonderful deliverance approved their disobedience to the command of the king; and all those martyrs and confessors, who rather chose to suffer than deny their Lord, or worship idols, when by the heathen magistrate they were commanded so to do, must be condemned as fools and criminals; whereas the miracles they wrought, and the Divine assistance which they found under their sufferings, sufficiently convince us that God approved of their actions. Lastly, the instance of Naaman the Syrian, as it may be rendered from the Hebrew, is wholly impertinent to this purpose; for there he doth not ask this prophet's leave to sin again, but only asks his pardon that he had done it; In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my lord went into the house of Rimmon to bow down himself there, and leaned on my hand, I bowed down myself there; that I bowed down myself—the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing: and so the margins of some Bibles read; and that which may be fairly offered to confirm this reading is, that these very Hebrew words here used are elsewhere found, not in the future, but in the preterperfect tense, the Lord pardon me, beboa, in going to the house of Rimmon, saith the text here; a Psalm of David, beboa Nathan, when Nathan went unto him, li. 1. uhistahvati, and I bow down myself, saith our translation here, uhistavau, and they bowed down themselves, Exod. xxxiii. 10.

[3] Ver. 13. Εἰπὲ τῷ ἀδελφῷ μου μερίσασθαι τὴν κληρονομίαν μετ' ἐμοῦ, Master, speak to my brother to divide the inheritance with me.] Here Dr. Lightfoot shews that this was usually done either by the consistory of three, or by some chosen by them betwixt whom the cause depended, as arbitrators in the case, as Grotius and Dr. Hammond have suggested; therefore there is no ground for Mr. Le Clerc to say this man did not desire him to perform the office of a judge or arbitrator between him and his brother, but to use his prophetical authority to oblige his brother, who detained the whole inheritance, to divide it with him; for if so, why doth not Christ answer, that this was no part of his prophetic office, but only, who made me a ruler or a judge? Now it is probable that Christ refused to take this office upon him, not only to avoid the envy and calumny of the Jewish rulers, who might be apt to say, he took upon him an office to which he was not called, in prejudice to them who were appointed for that work; but chiefly because he had but little time remaining, which he could better spend in dividing to them the word of life, and in promoting their eternal interest.

[4] Ver. 15. Φυλάσσεσθε ἀπὸ τῆς πλεονεξίας, &c. Beware of covetousness: for a man's life consists not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth.] Hence we learn, that the desire of having more than we do really need, not to supply the necessities of others, or to promote God's glory, but that we may keep, and treasure them up, and enjoy them, is one species of covetousness: for these words are certainly produced as a dissuasive from the sin of covetousness, which sure they could not be, were not the desire of having more, one species or symptom of that sin. 2. From the words following we learn, that to be more solicitous concerning temporals than we are for spirituals, and to be anxious about them, when we are not yet rich towards God, is another sign of covetousness. This may probably be concluded from the concern of this person for the dividing of his inheritance, rather than that our Lord should instruct him in the way of life, it being this which gave occasion to this admonition, to beware of covetousness; and it more clearly follows from the example of the fool, who was so much concerned to hoard up his goods, but not at all concerned to be rich towards God; i. e. to have his treasure with God in the heavens, and to esteem it his chiefest riches to be an heir of the kingdom of God, (ver. 32.) and to employ his riches so as to procure God's favour, and his own future happiness: for this is a plain indication of a heart that values these temporal concernments more than God's favour, or celestial riches; which in St. Paul's judgment renders the covetous person guilty of idolatry.

[5] Ver. 20. Ταύτῃ τῇ νυκτὶ τὴν ψυχήν σου ἀπαιτοῦσιν ἀπὸ

σοῦ.] i. e. Either thy soul shall be required of thee by God that gave it, and whose depositum it was, as the Jews speak; (see note on 2 Tim. i. 12.) or else it shall be required by evil angels, according to that other opinion of the Jews, that the souls of the just when they die are carried into the garden of Eden, "per manum angelorum," by the ministry of holy angels, and the souls of the wicked to the place appointed for them, by evil spirits. (See the note on xvi. 22.)

[6] Ver. 29. Καὶ μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε, Neither be ye of doubtful mind.] Μετέωρος, saith the Glossary of Stephanus, is ὁ μὴ στατερὸς τὸν νοῦν, ταλαντευόμενος τῇ γνώμῃ, Budæus, one fluctuating and unstable in his mind, judgment, or counsel: hence μετέωρος δίκη is a suspended judgment, μετέωρος ἀρχὴ, a doubtful or controverted empire; μετέωροι, saith Suidas, are οἱ πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ἔτι σαλεύοντες, those that are anxious and fluctuating as to future events, or whatever may befal them; in which sense, say Thucydides and Plutarch, μετέωρος ἦν ἡ Ἑλλὰς, Greece was in suspense touching the event of the war; and Josephus, that the Jews were μετέωροι ἐπὶ τῷ μέλλοντι πολέμῳ, anxious about the war with the Romans. Accordingly μετεωρισμὸς, the thing forbidden here, is, saith Theophylact, ὁ περισπασμὸς, καὶ τοῦ λόγου ἄστατος περιφορὰ, a distracting and unstable fluctuation of the mind or reason, about provision for the body, which Christ would here remove from the children of God, as being well assured that his wisdom knoweth what is needful for them, (ver. 30.) and his fatherly care would certainly provide for them what was so.

[7] Ver. 33. Πωλήσατε τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ὑμῶν, καὶ δότε ἐλεημοσύνην, Sell that you have, and give alms.] i. e. Be ready when God calls, and the exigencies of Christ's members do require it, so to do, and be so far from the sordidness of the rich man, who would not give of his superfluities to the needy, as in these cases to do it out of the main stock, as knowing this heavenly kingdom is to be obtained, not by hoarding up treasures here on earth, but by distributing them to Christ's needy members. If it be asked how moths can corrupt treasures, seeing they eat not through gold, or silver, I answer, that precious clothes are also reckoned among treasures, Ezra ii. 69. Neh. vii. 70. Job xxvii. 16. (See the note on Jam. v. 2, 3.)

[8] Ver. 35. Ἔστωσαν ὑμῶν αἱ ὀσφύες περιεζωσμέναι, καὶ οἱ λύχνοι καιόμενοι, Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning.] The servant, when he was to minister to his master, that his clothes might not hinder him, girded them about him. So Luke xvii. 8. Gird thyself, and serve me: and when Christ ministereth to his apostles, he takes a towel, and girdeth himself, John xiii. 14. and then washeth their feet. Hence, saith Philo,* we are commanded to eat the passover, τὰς ὀσφύας περιεζωσμένοι ἑτοίμως πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν ἔχοντες, with our loins girt as being ready for service. Moreover, they waiting to expect their master's coming home at night, were to have their lamps burning, and ready to receive him. (Matt. xxv. 7.) To servants so provided, and ready for service, our Lord here promiseth a new and unusual honour, like that of the Romans in their Saturnalia; the Cretans† in their Hermæa; and of the Babylonians in their feast called Saccas, where the servants sat at table, and their masters waited on them; Their lord (saith he) shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and he will come forth to serve them, ver. 37. he coming into the world, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, Matt. xx. 28.

[9] Ver. 36. Πότε ἀναλύσει ἐκ τῶν γάμων, When he will return from the marriage.] Ἀναλύσει ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐπανέρχεται, Phavorinus; Ἀναλύειν, ὑποστρέφειν, ἀνακάμπτειν, Gloss. i. e. the word signifies to return. And though in profane authors this is more rare, yet in the apocryphal books this is perpetually the sense of the word: as when Tobit saith, in the night, ἀνέλυσα, I returned from the burial, ii. 9. No man was known, ἀναλύσαι ἐξ ᾅδου, returning from the grave, Wisd. ii. 1. The air being parted presently εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἀνελύθη, returns to itself, v. 12. and xvi. 14. The Spirit when it is gone forth, οὐκ ἀναλύει, returneth not again. (See 2 Macc. viii. 25. ix. 2. xii. 7. xv. 28.)

[10] Ver. 42. Τίς ἄρα ἐστὶν ὁ πιστὸς οἰκονόμος; Who then is that wise servant?] Our Lord here does not answer directly to the question of St. Peter, yet he sufficiently doth it by declaring that this is to be done of every servant who expects to be rewarded or treated as one faithful to him, and especially of the guides of the church, Mark xiii. 37.

[11] Ver. 47. Ἐκεῖνος δὲ ὁ δοῦλος, &c. And that servant who knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes: Ver. 48. but he that knew not, &c.] This being one great difference betwixt the pastors of the church and other Christians, they must expect a severer punishment, as sinning against greater evidence, and knowledge of their duty; for to whom much is given, of them much will be required: whereas they who through slowness of understanding, or neglect of pastors, and multitude of worldly business, are ignorant of their duty, and so neglect it, will find a milder punishment; for ignorance may be pitied, but contempt deserves no mercy.

[12] Ver. 49. Πῦρ ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη, I came to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled?] Here it is to be noted, that the particle εἰ hath two significations, both agreeable to this place. (1.) That, see note on 1 Tim. v. 10. (2.) It is a particle of wishing: so Numb. xxii. 29. εἰ εἶχον μάχαιραν, I wish I had a sword; εἰ κατεμείναμεν, we wish we had continued beyond Jordan, Josh. vii. 7. εἰ ἤκουσας, Psal. lxxxi. 13. and Isa. xlviii. 18. O that thou hadst hearkened to my precepts; Luke xviii. 42. εἰ ἔγνως, O that thou hadst known. So then the sense of these words is this,—I come to deliver to the world a doctrine, which will incense the world against me and my followers, and subject us to great sufferings, signified in Scripture by fire, Psal. lxvi. 12. Isa. xliii. 2. Ecclus. li. 4. and therefore called fiery trials, 1 Pet. iv. 12. and will baptize me in my own blood; but yet I am so far from being moved from prosecuting my Father's pleasure, by the prospect of them, that I wish the time of my suffering were at hand, and my gospel preached to the world.

[15] Ver. 57. Τί δὲ καὶ ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν οὐ κρίνετε τὸ δίκαιον, And why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?] i. e. Take an example from yourselves; you are not wont to neglect the means by which you may be preserved from that prison here, from which you cannot escape till your whole debt be paid; why then neglect you that repentance towards God, and faith in the Messiah, which can alone preserve you from that infernal prison, from which you cannot escape? You can observe the signs of heaven for your temporal advantage; why therefore do you not observe the clearer signs of the Messiah's coming, and calling you to faith and repentance by his doctrine?

CHAP. XIII.

1. THERE were present at that season (when Christ spake the foregoing words) some that told him [1] of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices (slaying them when they came to offer sacrifice, for rejecting the authority of the Roman emperor).

2. And Jesus answering said to them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the (other) Galileans, because they suffered such things?

3. I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish (for the same cause, and many of you after the same manner: see note).

4. Of those eighteen, on whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5. I tell you, Nay: but, except you repent, ye shall all [2] likewise perish.

6. He spake also this parable (to the same purpose, saying), A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7. Then he said to the dresser of the vineyard, Behold, [3] these three years I come seeking fruit, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? (And the like sentence may you of this nation expect from God for your unfruitfulness.)

8. And he answering said to him, Lord, (be pleased to) let it alone this year also, till I dig about it, and dung it:

9. And if it bear fruit, well (thou wilt see cause to spare it): and if (it do) not, then after that thou shalt cut it down: (and such is now God's sparing mercy to you, he is making farther trial of you, whether what I or my apostles, preaching after my ascent to heaven, can do, will make you fruitful; and if after all our labours you continue still unfruitful, you must expect to be cut off.)

10. And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11. And, behold, there was (there) a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together (with it), and could in no wise lift up herself.

12. And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said to her, Woman, thou art (now to be) loosed from thine infirmity.

13. And he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14. And the ruler of the synagogue answered (i. e. said, with relation to this cure) with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the sabbath-day, and said to the people, There are six days in which men ought (i. e. by the commandments are allowed) to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the sabbath-day.

15. The Lord then answered him and said, Thou [4] hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the sabbath (day) loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

16. (This you do on that day for a beast to free it from a little thirst,) and ought not (then) this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom [5] Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath-day?

17. And when he had said these things, all his adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

18. Then said he, To what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19. It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden, and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it; (for thus, from a very small beginning, will it grow up into the greatest of all kingdoms, as that becomes the greatest of all herbs, Matt. xiii. 32.)

20. And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21. It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened (for so shall the doctrine of the kingdom spread till it hath seasoned all the regions of the earth).

22. And he went through the cities and villages, teaching, and journeying towards Jerusalem.

23. Then said one to him, Lord, are there [6] few that (shall) be saved? And he said to them (that heard him, Be not so much concerned to know how it will be with others, as to)

24. [7] Strive to enter (in) at the strait gate (which leadeth to life, while ye have opportunity to do it): for [8] many, I say to you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able, (because they do it too late; for)

25. When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us; and (or, then) he shall answer and say to you, I know you not whence ye are; (be careful therefore now, O ye Jews, to believe and obey the word, before the kingdom of God be taken from you, and the gate of the gospel-banquet be shut, so that you after knock in vain for entrance, Matt. xxv. 10. 13. for)

26. Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. (He will answer,)

27. But he shall say (καὶ ἐρεῖ, and will say), I tell you, I know not whence you are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28. (And then) there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye (the seed of Abraham) shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God (enjoying the blessings promised to the members of that kingdom), and you yourselves thrust out (of it).

29. And (then) they (of the gentiles) shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God (shall partake of the blessing of the gospel, and be owned as children of his kingdom).

30. And, behold, (thus shall it happen, that) there are last (i. e. the gentiles called at the last hour, Matt. xx. 7.) which shall be first (in this kingdom), and there are first (i. e. the Jews to whom the gospel was first preached, and who are styled God's first-born, Exod. iv. 22.) which shall be last

(i. e. cast out of this kingdom, and not recalled till the last, or at the close of the world).

31. The same day there came certain of the pharisees, saying to him, Get thee out (of Galilee, Herod's jurisdiction), and depart hence: for (else) Herod will kill thee.

32. And he said to them, Go and tell that [9] fox (from me, a prophet sent from God, and therefore authorized thus to style him), Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures (in prosecution and confirmation of my prophetic office) to-day and to-morrow (i. e. for a short time more), [10] and the third day I shall be perfected (i. e. by death be consecrated to my priestly office, and so he needs not be concerned to put me to death, who shortly am to die as a sacrifice for the sins of the world).

33. Nevertheless I must walk (on in my journey, ver. 22.) to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following (till I reach to Jerusalem, and I may do it without fear of being killed by Herod): for it cannot be that [11] a prophet perish out of Jerusalem (where the Sanhedrin, who think themselves the only judges of him, sit).

34. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent to thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together (under my protection), as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not (be gathered)!

35. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate; and (ἐξ, for) verily I say unto you, (After awhile) ye shall not see me, (Matt. xxiii. 38.) until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; (till εἴπητε, you would say, i. e. you would be glad to see your Messiah coming to deliver you, and to say to him what your pharisees cannot now hear with patience, xix. 39. but shall only see him coming to avenge himself upon you, Matt. xxvi. 64.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΕΡΙ᾽ τῶν Γαλιλαίων, ὧν αἷμα Πιλάτος ἔμιξε μετὰ τῶν θυσιῶν αὐτῶν, Whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices.] It is not to be doubted, saith Grotius, but that the sedition of Judas Gaulonites, as it had its rise in Galilee, so found it many followers and abettors there, who coming up to Jerusalem, insinuated into the people that they were the Lord's people, and therefore were to own him only as their king, and to pay tribute, not to Cæsar, but to his temple; it therefore seemeth credible, saith he, as some of the Greek fathers think, that such as these were the Galileans, whose blood Pilate mingled with their (paschal) sacrifice, as finding they were then sowing these seeds of sedition against Cæsar; and if this were at the Passover, then the words following, ye shall all likewise perish, agree wonderfully with that account of their destruction which Josephus and Eusebius give us, that when they were come up from all places to observe the Passover, they were enclosed in the city by the Romans; and upon the very day appointed for killing the passover, many of them were slaughtered like sheep in the very temple, for this very cause, that they shook off the Roman yoke, and refused to pay tribute to Cæsar.

[2] Ver. 5. Ὁμοίως ἀπολεῖσθε, Ye shall likewise perish.] That is, saith Grotius, among the ruins of the city, of which that tower was a part, they perishing in Jerusalem, (ver. 4.) or rather among the ruins of the towers of the city and the temple. To illustrate these conjectures of the learned Grotius, let us a little consider what Josephus hath delivered of this matter: he therefore saith, that this Judas, with one Zadoc a pharisee, incited the Jews to rebellion, saying,* τὴν ἐπιτίμησιν οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ἄντικρυς δουλείαν ἐπιφέρειν, that the paying tribute was a sign of slavery; and under this pretence they exhorted the whole nation to maintain their liberty, καὶ ἡδονῇ ἀκρόασιν ἐδέχοντο ἄνθρωποι, and this the Jews received with pleasure, and this became the seed of their future calamities. Hence they continually demanded ἀναιρεῖν τὰ τέλη,† that the tributes might be taken away. When Coponius was procurator of Judea, one Simon a Galilean reproved them, ‡εἰ φόρον τε Ῥωμαίοις ἐπιτελεῖν ὑπομενοῦσι, καὶ μετὰ τὸν Θεὸν οἵσουσι θνητοὺς δεσπότας, that they would endure to pay tribute, and suffer mortal lords to rule over them: when Felix was procurator, some magicians and thieves met together calling the people to liberty, and § Θάνατον ἐπιτιμῶντες τοῖς πειθαρχοῦσι τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἡγεμονίᾳ, threatening death to those who obeyed the Roman government: when Campanus was procurator, one Dortus solicited the people ‖ἐπὶ τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἀποστασίᾳ, to shake off the Roman yoke; so ready were they to embrace the doctrine of this Galilean. That many of the Jews perished, as did these Galileans, the same Josephus testifies, saying, that under the president Cumanus twenty-five thousand ¶κατὰ τὸ ἱερὸν ἀπώλοντο, perished in the temple at the feast of Passover. That under Florus  συχνὸς φόνος, there was a multifarious slaughter of them fighting in the temple, and that one Manahem was slain as he worshipped there. That many of the zealots perished in the temple, ††καθαιμάσσοντες τὸ θεῖον ἔδαφος, and washed the holy ground with their blood. That the Idumeans coming in to their help, eight thousand and five hundred of the party of Ananus high-priest were slain; so that ‡‡ἐπεκλύσθη καὶ τὸ ἔξωθεν ἱερὸν πᾶν αἵματι, the whole outward temple was washed over with blood. In that threefold sedition which arose in Jerusalem between Eleazer keeping the inward temple, John with his associates seizing the outward temple, and Simon the upper city, §§φόνοις ἐμαίνετο πανταχοῦ τὸ ἱερὸν, the temple was every where polluted with slaughters, the weapons flew every where, and fell upon the priests, and those who officiated at the altar; many who came from far to worship, πρὸ τῶν θυμάτων ἔπεσον αὐτοὶ, fell before their sacrifices, and sprinkled the altar with their blood; insomuch that the blood of the dead carcasses made a pool in the holy court. At the feast of unleavened bread Eleazer, with his companions, opening a gate for the people that came to worship and to offer sacrifice, John, taking that opportunity, sends in with them many of his party, having short swords under their garments, who invaded Eleazer's party, and filled that temple with the blood of the zealots and of the people. And when Titus fought against the temple, ‖‖περὶ μὲν τὸν βωμὸν πλῆθος ἐσωρεύετο τῶν νεκρῶν, a multitude of dead bodies lay round the altar, and the blood ran down the steps of the temple, and many perished by the ruins of the towers or porches.

These three years have I come seeking fruit of this fig-tree, and found none.] These three years seem not to signify only the time of our Lord's preaching among the Jews; for they were not destroyed the next year, but about thirty-six years after our Lord's ascension; they rather seem to be mentioned, because the fruit of some fig-trees came not to maturity till the third year; the time he expected afterward includes the whole time of the apostles preaching to them at Jerusalem, and to their dispersions, and to the gentiles, to gather and set up his church among them; and then was the end of the Jewish church and temple, and the great destruction of that nation to come. (Matt. xxiv. 14.) Nor were the Jews then given over, but were, after our Lord's ascension, to be under the dispensation of the Holy Ghost; and, upon the rejection of that call, was Christ's prediction, that their house should be left to them desolate, to take place: whence, after the Holy Ghost was fallen down upon them, the apostles were to begin their preaching at Jerusalem, and to go thence throughout all Judea, (Acts i. 8.) and to preach to them remission of sins; (Acts xiii. 38.) and this they did with such success, as to convert many myriads of them: (Acts xxi. 20.) and the apostle Paul declares it necessary for them to preach the word of God first to them. (Acts xiii. 46.)

[4] Ver. 15. Ὑποκριτὰ, Thou hypocrite.] This Christ pronounceth upon the ruler of the synagogue, partly because he placed his holiness chiefly in the observation of ritual precepts, or the rest of the body on the sabbath-day, preferring that before the great things of the law, which Christ still representeth as a sign of hypocrisy; (Matt. xxiii. 23.) partly because he pretended a great zeal for the law of God, when he was rather acted in this matter by black envy at the glory of Christ, which he, that saw his heart, well knew.

[5] Ver. 16. Ἣν ἔδησεν ὁ Σατανᾶς, Whom Satan hath bound these eighteen years.] That sometimes by concurring with, and sometimes without natural causes, many diseases were, by Divine permission, brought on men by evil spirits, the gospel and histories of Job and Saul inform us; for that Saul, after the departure of a good spirit, fell εἰς πάθη δεινὰ καὶ δαιμόνια, into demoniacal passions, and had, ἀπὸ τῶν δαιμόνων ταραχὴν, perturbations from demons, or, as the Scripture speaks, by an evil spirit from the Lord, (1 Sam. xvi. 14. 23.) we learn from Josephus.* And, by confession of Maimonides,† Satan was the cause of all that Job suffered, not only in his substance, but in his body: (Job ii. 7.) and the Targum on Psal. xci. 6. numbers troops of demons, among those who inflict plagues and death upon men.

[6] Ver. 23. Εἰ ὀλίγοι οἱ σωζόμενοι; Are there few that be saved?] This question seems to be propounded agreeably to that sentiment of the Jews, that all Israelites should have their portion in the world to come: to which Christ was not pleased to give an answer that might satisfy the curiosity of the man, but rather an instruction that might benefit him; it being not our concern to know how many will be saved, but how we may be saved.

[7] Ver. 24. Ἀγωνίζεσθε εἰσελθεῖν διὰ τῆς στενῆς πύλης, Strive to enter in at the strait gate.] Here Christ shews, that the number of them who may be saved, is not defined by any decree of God excluding all others from it, or rendering them unable to attain it: for then Christ must in vain exhort them to use their diligence to enter in at the strait gate, which leadeth to eternal life; and yet by saying, ἀγωνίζεσθε, strive, as men in agony, to do it, he shews, that this requires great constancy, diligence, and courage, and a strong conflict with the world, the flesh, and the devil; and so such only will obtain it.

[8] Πολλοὶ ζητήσουσιν εἰσελθεῖν, καὶ οὐκ ἰσχύσουσιν, For many shall seek to enter, and shall not be able.] Not for want of power, or sufficient grace on God's part, but for seeking too late to enter; viz. when the door is shut, ver. 25. The sense therefore runs thus, Be careful, O ye Jews, now to believe, and obey my word, before the kingdom be taken from you, and the gate of the gospel-banquet be shut, so that you after knock in vain for entrance. (Matt. xxv. 10. 13. see the note on Matt. viii. 11, 12.)

[9] Ver. 32. Εἴπατε τῇ ἀλώπεκι ταύτῃ, Go tell that fox.] To impose this ignominious but agreeable name on Herod, is not contrary to the command, not to speak evil of the ruler of thy people; it being the office of a prophet, not to spare kings when they reprove their offences: (Jer. i. 10.) Christ therefore here uses his prophetical power, in giving this tyrant a name so suitable to his actions.

[10] Καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ τελειοῦμαι, And the third day I am perfected.] The word signifies, I am consecrated to my priestly office, by dying as a sacrifice for the sins of the world: so the old scholia, τελειοῦμαι, σπένδομαι, θυσιάζομαι, I am perfected, i. e. I am offered, I am sacrificed. For the confirmation of this sense, see the notes on Heb. ii. 10. ix. 10.

[11] Ver. 33. Οὐκ ἐνδέχεται τὸν προφήτην ἀπολέσθαι ἔξω, A prophet cannot perish out of Jerusalem.] Because he was only to be judged by the great Sanhedrin, and they were only to pass judgment on him in that place: so Dr. Lightfoot here.

CHAP. XIV.

1. AND it came to pass, as he went into the house of one of the [1] chief pharisees (or, of the rulers, who was of the pharisees) to eat bread on the sabbath-day, that they watched him, (whether he would heal on the sabbath-day, that they might accuse him, Mark iii. 2.)

2. And, behold, there was a certain man (then) before him which had the dropsy.

3. And Jesus [2] answering (to their thoughts), spake to the lawyers and pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day (or not)?

4. And (but) they held their peace. And (then) he took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5. And (he) answered them (who held this unlawful), saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath-day? (And shall that kindness be denied to a son of Abraham in his distress on that day, which you afford on it to your distressed beast?)

6. And they could not answer him again to these things.

7. And he put forth a [3] parable to those that were bidden (to sit down with him), when he marked how they (the pharisees) chose out the chief rooms (at feasts, on the account of their pretended wisdom), saying to them,

8. When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding (or a marriage-feast), sit not down in the highest room, lest a more honourable man than thou be (also) bidden of him;

9. And (so) he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say to thee, Friend, go up higher: then [4] shalt thou have worship (i. e. honour) in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted (both by God and man).

12. Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a [5] dinner or a supper (do it not from a prospect of an invitation by way of recompence; and therefore ordinarily) call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and (so) a recompence be made thee.

13. But when thou makest a feast (do it out of charity to the needy; and therefore) call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14. And thou shalt be blessed; for (ὅτι, that) they (are called by thee, who) cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the [6] resurrection of the just.

15. And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said to him, [7] Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God (i. e. that shall partake of the pleasures and enjoyments of the kingdom of the Messiah).

16. Then (to convince him that the generality of the Jews were, for their unbelief, to be excluded from that kingdom) said he to him (by way of parable), A [8] certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17. And sent his servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready (as God sent first the Baptist to invite the Jews, and then the apostles, and seventy disciples, to tell them the kingdom of God was at hand, and to persuade them to enter into it).

18. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. (For) the first said to him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come (i. e. they either out of great love to the pleasures or the advantages of this world rejected the kind invitation).

21. So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry (that they, who were so lovingly invited, would not come), said to his servants (the apostles sent with a fresh commission after Christ's resurrection to go to Judea, and the dispersions of the Jews, Acts i. 8. saying), Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor and maimed, the halt and the blind (i. e. the gentiles and the dispersed Jews).

22. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room (for more guests).

23. And the lord said to the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges (i. e. to the heathen nations), and [9] compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24. For I say unto you, That none of those men that are bidden (and refuse to come) shall taste of my supper (i. e. enjoy the blessings of my kingdom).

25. And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said to them,

26. If any man come to me, and [10] hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also (i. e. if he prefers not my service before all these), he cannot be my disciple.

27. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me (i. e. that will not obey me, and suffer any hardship for my sake), cannot be my disciple.

28. (Consider therefore well of these things before you enter on a Christian life:) for which of you, intending to [11] build a tower sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29. Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him,

30. Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish (his building: so before we enter on a Christian life, we should sit down, and consider seriously what it will cost us to be indeed Christians, and whether we be steadfastly resolved to do and suffer all that Christianity requires).

31. Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand, to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32. Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an embassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33. So likewise, whosoever he be of you that (engageth not so manfully in his Christian warfare against sin, Satan, and the world, that when I call him to it, he) [12] forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

34. [13] Salt is good (i. e. a Christian life is very advantageous): but if the salt have lost his savour (if the Christian apostle and professor hath lost his Christian conversation), wherewith shall it be seasoned (i. e. what can be used farther to recover him)?

35. It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out (i. e. such an unsavoury Christian can neither do good to himself nor others). He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΕΙ'Σ οἰκόν τινος τῶν ἀρχόντων τῶν φαρισαίων, Into the house of one of the pharisees.] Gr. Into the house of one of the pharisees, who was a ruler in the Sanhedrin; for they are called ἄρχοντες, rulers, Luke xxiv. 20. John iii. 1. Acts iii. 17. 1 Cor. ii. 8. (See the note there.)

[2] Ver. 3. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε πρὸς τοὺς νομικούς. And Jesus answering spake to the lawyers and pharisees; and, ver. 5. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς πρὸς αὐτοὺς εἶπε, and he answering them said.] Here ἀποκριθεὶς, answering, is twice used, where neither any question was put, nor any thing said to him; but then it is still an answer to some λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, inward conception, or reasoning, or to some action expressive of their sentiments concerning him: sometimes it is used, when he perceived their inward thoughts and reasonings about his actions, words, or person: thus, when the pharisees were consulting how they might apprehend him for the parable he spake against them; ἀποκριθεὶς, he answering, spake another parable, shewing what destruction would come upon them for crucifying him: (Matt. xxii. 1.) so Jesus perceiving their thoughts, ἀποκριθεὶς, answering, said to them, Luke v. 22. so he answers to what Simon said within himself, Luke vii. 39, 40. sometimes he answers to their actions, as discovering their apprehensions of him: thus, when they came to take him, Jesus, ἀποκριθεὶς, answering, said to them, Are you come as against a thief? Mark xiv. 48. so to the barren fig-tree, ἀποκριθεὶς, he answering, said, Let never fruit grow on thee more, Mark xi. 14. so reflecting on the infidelity and impenitence of those cities, among whom he had done his mighty works; and of those pharisees, who believed neither him nor the Baptist, ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, he answering, said, Father, I thank thee, Matt. xi. 25. so when Peter had smitten off the ear of Malchus, ἀποκριθεὶς, Jesus answering, with relation to that action, saith, Suffer ye so far, Luke xxii. 52. so Peter answers, not to what he had heard, but to what he had seen, Matt. xvii. 4. so Elisabeth answers, without being spoken to, the discourse of the women about the name of her son, Luke i. 60. and the angel answers to the fear of the women, Matt. xxviii. 5. and the high-priest to Christ's silence, I adjure thee to tell us, Matt. xxvi. 63. and St. John the evangelist to Christ's words, He that receiveth you, receiveth me; Master, we saw one cast out devils in thy name, &c. Mark ix. 38.

[3] Ver. 7. Ἔλεγε δὲ πρὸς τοὺς κεκλημένους παραβολὴν, &c. And he put forth a parable to them that were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms.] i. e. Christ being in the house of a prince of the pharisees, (ver. 1.) and observing how solicitous they were to choose the upper rooms on the account of their reputed wisdom, because Solomon had said, (Prov. iv. 8.) Exalt wisdom, as Dr. Lightfoot here shews; that he might cure this swelling pride in them, and teach them humility, (ver. 11.) he propounds this parable, as it is fitly called, according to the definition of a parable by the Greeks: that it is πρόθεσις ὁμοιωματικὴ ἐπὶ σαφηνείᾳ τῶν ὑποκειμένων, a comparative resemblance of things, for the illustration of what is spoken of; or, as Phavorinus, παραπλησίων πραγμάτων παράθεσις, a collation of things resembling each other. This parable being taken from a like example of a nuptial banquet.

[4] Ver. 10. Τότε ἔσται σοι δόξα, Then shalt thou have honour in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.] i. e. This will ordinarily be the result of thy humility; and though it ought not to be our chief design in any virtuous action, yet hence it follows, that this may be one motive to the performance of such actions. (Phil. iv. 8.)

[5] Ver. 12. Ὅταν ποιῇς ἄριστον, ἢ δεῖπνον, &c. When thou makest a dinner, or a supper, call not thy friends and thy brethren, &c. but call the poor, the maimed.] Some think Christ speaks here of the sacred banquet made by the Jews on their peace-offerings, and other feasts, to which they are bid to call the poor, the widow, and the Levite, Deut. xiv. 29. but this seems a mistake; for Christ speaks not of any special stated feast, but of such banquets as he was then at: nor hath he one word of the widow and the Levite, who were to be guests there, but of the blind, the lame, the maimed, of which the law saith nothing; nor doth he say, For this the Lord shall bless thee upon earth, as Deut. xiv. 29. but, Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

Note, secondly, that Christ doth not absolutely forbid us to invite our friends, our brethren, or kinsfolk, to testify our mutual charity and friendship, and how dear our relations are to us; only he would not have us invite them out of a prospect of a compensation from them again; but to prefer the exercising our charity to them, who cannot recompense us. As comparative particles are sometimes in sense negative, (see the notes on Mark xv. 11. John iii. 19.) so negative particles are oft in sense only comparative; Prov. viii. 10. Receive my instructions, veal, and not (that is, rather than) silver: Joel ii. 13. Rend your hearts, veal, and not (i. e. rather than) your garments: John vi. 27. Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endureth, &c. (See Exod. xvi. 19. Prov. xvii. 12. Jer. vii. 22, 23.) So here, μὴ φώνει, be not so much concerned to call thy friends, as to call the poor. Nor,

Thirdly, Doth he lay upon us a necessity by this precept to call the lame, the blind, or maimed, to our tables, but either to do this, or what is equivalent to us in respect of charge, and more advantageous to them and their families, viz. to send them meat or money to refresh them at home. Note also, that Dion Chrysostomus,* who flourished in the time of Trajan, seems to have taken this observation hence, That they did ἀνελευθέρως πράττειν τὰ περὶ τοὺς ξένους τοὺς πένητας, act sordidly as to poor strangers, who did μόνους τοὺς πλουσίους ὑποδέχεσθαι ξενίοις, καὶ δώροις, παρ' ὧν δῆλον ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ προσεδόκουν τῶν ἴσων ἐντυχεῖν, entertain the rich only friendly, with their hospitalities and gifts, from whom they expected to receive as much again.

[6] Ver. 14. Ἀνταποδοθήσεταί σοι ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει, Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.] See here the time of recompensing even those works of charity which are most acceptable to God, and for which we are chiefly to be rewarded at the great day. (Matt. xxv. 34.)

[7] Ver. 15. Μακάριος, &c. Blessed is he who shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.] It appears from the ensuing parable, that the kingdom of God here doth not signify the kingdom of heaven in the highest sense, but only the kingdom of the Messiah, of which the carnal Jew here speaks according to the received sense of his nation, as of a glorious temporal kingdom, in which the Jews should lord it over the gentile world, enjoy their wealth, and be provided with all temporal blessings and delights, in which they placed their happiness.

[8] Ver. 16. A certain man made a great supper, &c.] We are called of God, saith Philo,† to partake of a banquet; not which shall satiate us with the pleasures of the belly, and fatten the body; but with which the mind being nourished, and leaping for pleasure, rejoiceth, and is glad. See the exposition of this parable, Matt. xxii. 1, 2.

[9] Ver. 23. Καὶ ἀνάγκασον εἰσελθεῖν, And compel them to come in.] How vainly these words are brought to prove, that men may be compelled, by the secular arm, to embrace the true faith, appears (1.) from the nature of a banquet, to which no man is compelled by force, but only by the importunity of persuasion, and from which no man's business doth by force restrain him, but only by the inconvenience of attending on it; and yet one of the guests saith, ver. 18. ἀνάγκην ἔχω, I am compelled to be absent. (2.) From the scope of the parable, which respects the calling of the gentiles, which only Mahometans think fit, by force of arms, to compel to the faith. We do, ἀναγκάζειν, compel not only by example, but by exhortation, Mark vi. 25. Luke xxiv. 29. as here: and Christ, saith Theophylact, here not only commands them to call, but to compel them, though it be free to every one to believe that we may learn, ὅτι μεγάλης τοῦ Θεοῦ δυνάμεώς ἐστι τὸ πιστεῦσαι τὰ ἔθνη, that it is the work of God's great power to make the gentiles believe. (See the note on Gal. ii. 14. and Grotius here, and xxiv. 29.)

[10] Ver. 26. If any man come to me, καὶ οὐ μισεῖ, and hate not his father and mother, &c.] It being impious to hate father or mother, wife or children, and impossible to hate ourselves, (Eph. v. 29.) to hate here can only signify comparatively, viz. to love them less than God; and therefore what is here, and hateth not father and mother, is Matt. x. 37. and loveth father and mother more than me: for what we love less, we are comparatively said to hate, as in the case of God and mammon, Matt. vi. 24. So ἐμισεῖτο Λεία, Leah was hated, Gen. xxix. 31. 33. Now Leah surely was not hated by good Jacob, but loved less than Rachel. (See note on Rom. ix. 13.)

[11] Ver. 28. Τίς γὰρ ἐξ ὑμῶν, θέλων πύργον οἰκοδομῆσαι, &c. For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost? Ver. 31. What king, going to war, consulteth not first whether he be able?] Two things do usually hinder men from embracing that narrow way which leadeth to eternal life; (1.) The difficulties of the duties positively required of all Christians; viz. the love of enemies, requiring us not only to forgive their injuries from the heart, but also to overcome their evil with our good: the reparation of any injury done to another in his good name or fortunes, not only by begging his pardon, but by restoring what we got injuriously, and endeavouring to repair his credit; the restraining of the tongue from all evil speaking, and uncharitable censures, and of our appetites from all carnal desires, the exact government of our passions, and the moderation of our affections to all worldly things; a heart restrained by the fear of God from doing evil, and constrained by the love of him to yield sincere obedience to his holy laws. (2.) The greatness of the temptations we must resist, and of the injuries and losses we may suffer, by persevering in this way, from the violent assaults of Satan, and the continual solicitations of the flesh, the examples and allurements of the world, the persecutions of it, the loss of all things, and even life itself. Christ therefore by these resemblances adviseth us, before we enter on this Christian life, seriously to consider of and weigh these things, to form within us the most steadfast resolutions to perform the one, and arm ourselves with fortitude and patience against the other, that so we may not afterward be moved by them to depart from it.

[12] Ver. 33. So likewise, whosoever he be of you, ὃς οὐκ ἀποτάσσεται πᾶσι τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ ὑπάρχουσιν, who forsaketh not all that he hath, &c.] Christ doth not here require that we should actually renounce these things, for then we must renounce even life itself, (ver. 26.) but that our heart and our affections should be so taken off from them, that we do always love them less than him, and that we in preparation of mind be always ready to part with them when we cannot keep them, without making shipwreck of faith, and a good conscience.

[13] Ver. 34. Καλὸν τὸ ἅλας, &c. Salt is good; but if the salt hath lost its savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?] This excellently connects with the discourse preceding, thus: The gospel I require you to adhere to, is that salt with which every oblation that is acceptable to God must be seasoned, (Mark ix. 48, 49.) the preachers of it are the salt of the earth. (Matt. v. 13.) As then salt, when it hath lost its savour, becomes good for nothing, but to be cast out into the dunghill: so the Christian professor, who lives not according to the prescripts of the gospel, can do no good to himself or others; and if he fall off from it, can hardly be recovered. (Heb. vi. 6. x. 27.) When Mr. Le Clerc and others object against this comparison or similitude, that salt cannot lose its savour, they consider not, that in the boiling up of the saline particles, of which salt is made, there is left a caput mortuum, which is insipid.

2. And the pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man (now) receiveth sinners, and (at other times) eateth with them.

3. And (upon this murmuring) he spake this parable to them, saying,

4. What man of you, having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5. And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders (and returns home with it), rejoicing.

6. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying to them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep that was lost: (now this is a just resemblance of the joy of God for the conversion of a sinner; for)

7. I say to you, That likewise [2] joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance (i. e. no conversion from a life of sin to that of holiness).

8. Either what woman (is there), having ten pieces of silver, (who,) if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till sho find it?

9. And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece that I had lost: (which is another true resemblance of the joy of God at the recovery of a lost soul; for)

10. Likewise, I say to you, There is joy in the presence of the [3] angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

11. And he said (also by way of parable to the same purpose), A [4] certain man had two sons:

12. And the younger of them said to his father, Father, [5] give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided to them his living (i. e. gave him the portion allotted for the livelihood of his younger son).

13. And not many days after the younger son gathered all (his estate) together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14. And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15. And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country (to become his servant); and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave to him (enough to satisfy his hungry appetite).

[Now here the younger son represents the gentiles gone far off from God their Father, Eph. ii. 13. living in riot and drunkenness, 1 Pet. iv. 3. and committing whoredom with idols, against the light of their reason, Rom. i. 20, 21. labouring under a famine of the word, and employed in the vilest drudgery by sin and Satan, in which no satisfaction can be found.]

17. And when he came to himself (i. e. to consider his own miserable state), he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I (am ready to) perish with hunger!

18. I will arise and go to my father, and will say to him, Father, I have sinned against (the God of) heaven, and before thee (by departing from thee),

19. And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants: (and this represents the case of a penitent sinner; considering his present misery, his vileness and unworthiness, humbly acknowledging his sin to God, resolving on amendment of life, and actually returning to God, as many of the gentiles did, when the gospel was preached to them.)

20. And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion (on him), and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21. And the son said to him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

22. But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet (in token that I own him as my beloved son):

23. And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:

24. For this my son was dead (in sin), and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry: (and this is a lively representation of God's great love and mercy to sinners returning to him; forgetting all their former provocations, and treating them, as soon as they began to break off their sins by repentance, and to turn to him, with a most fatherly affection, and with expressions of the greatest joy.)

25. Now his elder son was in the field (following his father's business): and as he came and drew nigh to the house (of his father), he heard music and dancing.

26. And he called one of the servants, and asked (him) what these things meant (i. e. what was the cause of all this mirth).

27. And he said to him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28. And he was angry (at the kindness shewed by his father to his younger brother), and would not go in (to the house): therefore came his father out, and entreated him.

29. And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years I (have) serve (d) thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30. But as soon as this thy son was come (back to thee), which hath devoured thy living with harlots (committing spiritual whoredom), thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31. And he said to him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine; (in the first place the blessing of the Messiah being first promised to the Jews, and from them derived to others; see treatise of the Millenium, chap. 2. sect. 2.)

32. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and (he) was (as the) lost (sheep and piece of money), and is found (by the great Shepherd of souls).

[Now this elder brother is a true emblem of the Jews, and especially of the scribes and pharisees, murmuring at God's kindness to the sinners of the gentiles, in admitting them after so long idolatry to the blessings of the gospel, and to equal privileges with them without circumcision, and obedience to that law of Moses, under which they had still lived, and refusing to enter into the kingdom of God, and come into the faith, by reason of the kindness God thus shewed to the gentiles. See note on Rom. xi. 28.]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1, 2. Ἦσαν δὲ ἐγγίζοντες αὐτῷ πάντες οἱ τελῶναι, καὶ οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ἀκούειν αὐτοῦ. Καὶ διεγόγγυζον οἱ φαρισαῖοι, &c. Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners to hear him. Ver. 2. And the pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, &c.] For the better understanding of these three parables, note,

First, That publicans, gross sinners, and heathens, were by the scribes and pharisees judged unfit to be conversed with, even though it were with a design to reduce them from their evil courses, they thinking God had cast off the care of them, and had no design to grant them repentance unto life; whence they abhorred their company, as thinking it a defilement to be touched by them, and never would concern themselves to make them better, and were offended that our Lord was thus employed, Matt. ix. 11. Luke v. 30. Acts x. 28. xi. 18, 19. Note,

Secondly, That publicans and heathens, sinners and heathens, are joined usually together, as being accounted persons of the same desperate wickedness, and equally unworthy to be conversed with, as in those words of Christ, Matt. v. 46, 47. do not even publicans the same? or, as other copies read, οἱ ἐθνικοὶ, do not heathens do the same? which in Luke vi. 33, 34. is, do not οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ, sinners do the same? and, Matt. xviii. 17. if he refuse to hear the church, let him be to thee as a heathen and a publican; and in those words of St. Paul, Gal. ii. 15. we that are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the gentiles. That they thought God took no care of the gentiles, is evident from the words of Esdras, saying to God, Thou hast said they are nothing, but are like unto spittle, and hast counted the abundance of them as a drop falling from a vessel, 2 Esd. vi. 56, 57. and the prayer of Mordecai, Lord, give not thy sceptre to them that are not, Esther xiv. 11. (See note on 1 Cor. i. 28.) Hence the converted Jews at first preached not to them, as judging it unlawful to go in unto, or converse with, the uncircumcised, (Acts x. 28.) and wondered that God should give the gentiles repentance unto life, (Acts xi. 18, 19.) and only would converse with them when they shewed a willingness to be made proselytes to their religion. Some, therefore, here do think, that the word sinners here may signify the gentiles, which will be more probable, if Christ were then beyond Jordan, as they collect from John x. 40. or in Galilee of the gentiles, from whence we find him going to Jerusalem, Luke xvii. 11. otherwise it will not be so easy to discern how all the gentiles should draw nigh to hear him, or he should be eating with them, ver. 12. Note,

Thirdly, That these parables, and especially the last, are designed against the scribes and pharisees, who thought so abjectly of publicans and sinners, and so perversely of the whole gentile world; and to convince them of their inhumanity, and shew them that their deportment was very alien from God's merciful inclination to them, and that they ought not to be unmerciful to them, to whom God was so well inclined to shew mercy, or deny their charity to them, to whom he was so ready to afford it: for he spake this parable to them, saying, Which of you? ver. 3, 4.

[2] Ver. 7. Οὕτω χαρὰ ἔσται ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, &c. So joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, see note on ver. 10. ἢ ἐπὶ ἐννενηκονταεννέα δικαίοις, οἵτινες οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσι μετανοίας, more than over ninety and nine just persons, who need no repentance.] Here note, that ἤ is here put for μᾶλλον ἤ, as usually it is both in the Old and New Testament, and in profane writers: so Gen. xxxviii. 26. δεδικαίωται Θαμὰρ ἢ ἐγὼ, Thamar hath been more righteous than I; Psal. cxviii. 8. ἀγαθὸν ἐλπίζειν ἐπὶ Κυρίῳ ἤ, it is better to trust in the Lord than in princes; 1 Cor. xiv. 19. in the church I would speak five words, so as to teach others, ἤ μυρίους, rather than ten thousand in an unknown tongue: so Luke xviii. 14. See Stephanus giving examples of this from Homer, Aristotle, Diogenes Laertius, and St. Chrysostom. Note,

Secondly, That there being no person in the world so just, as absolutely to need no repentance; because there never was a person in the world, besides our Saviour, who did righteousness, and sinned not; the best of men being subject to some faults and infirmities, of which they stand obliged to repent: that our Lord may not here be thought to have supposed a case that never was, let it be observed, that the repentance of a sinner usually imports an entire change in the whole course or tenor of his life, from the service of sin to the service of God, from yielding obedience to it in the lustings of it, to yielding our members instruments of righteousness unto holiness; and this is the repentance of the sinner mentioned in the text; and in this sense it is manifest the righteous person, or new creature, needeth no repentance. (2.) There is a repentance, which consists in a godly sorrow, for the particular failings and infirmities we may have committed through surprise, a sudden fear, a violent temptation, or a single deviation from the general course and tenor of our lives; such was that of David and St. Peter, and the humiliation of good Hezekiah for the pride of his heart: and in this sense it is not to be thought that in this state of imperfection and continual conflict we have with the flesh, there should be any righteous person who needs no repentance. And this interpretation I prefer before that of St. Ambrose, Hilary, and Chrysostom, who, by the ninety and nine sheep not lost, and the ninety-nine persons who need no repentance, understand the holy angels that fell not; by the lost sheep all mankind lost in Adam, whom to recover the Son of God became incarnate, and in the gracious work of our redemption, brought him home upon his shoulders: the joy in heaven for this returning is, say they, the joy of God, and of his holy angels for the recovery of lost mankind; in which sense the words are strictly true, the holy angels need no repentance, because they never fell from their obedience. And this interpretation was so generally approved in the church, that in Tertullian's* time it was appealed to as a proof of it, that in the bottom of their sacramental cups, Christ was engraven carrying the lost sheep upon his shoulders.

Thirdly, It is inquired with what reason it can be said, there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety-nine righteous persons who need no repentance: for is it not better not to offend, than to sin and repent? Is not innocence better than amendment? And if repentance be not better than righteousness, why is there more joy in heaven over the penitent than over the righteous? Yea, why over one penitent sinner, than over ninety-nine just persons?

Now to this some answer, according to the forementioned opinion of the ancients, that the lost sheep, returning prodigal, and the one sinner that repenteth, comprehend all mankind redeemed from a state of misery by Christ; now this may fitly be represented as matter of the greatest joy to God, and the whole court of blessed angels, they being represented as stooping down to look into this mystery, 1 Pet. i. 12. and learning from the church the wisdom of God in it, Eph. iii. 10. and therefore, in this sense, do doubtless know and rejoice in our redemption. (2.) Others answer, that the sheep not lost, the ninety-nine righteous persons, and the elder son, who said, he never had offended, represent the Jewish nation, and especially those scribes and pharisees, who trusted in their own righteousness, and despised others: (see Matt. ix. 12.) the lost sheep and returning prodigal represent the gentile world, which, by the preaching of the gospel, were to be converted to the Christian faith. Now, the church of the gentiles being more numerous than was that of the Jews, the desolate having more children than she that had a husband, her conversion may fitly be represented as matter of the greatest joy.

Against these expositions this visible objection may be made, that whereas the righteous are here represented as ninety-nine, the penitent as one single person, these expositions make them equal to, if not more numerous than, the righteous. But to this it is answered, that in the parables of the gospel, it is usual to represent all of the same kind, though they be sometimes the greater number, by one man. Thus, in the parable of the wedding-supper, the man that had not on his wedding-garment, represents, according to most interpreters, all wicked men, and in our Lord's intention it importeth the whole race of unbelieving Jews, Matt. xxii. 11. the slothful person, who hid his talent in a napkin, is represented as one man, Matt. xxv. 24. they who improved their talents as three persons; and yet who knows not but there are fewer that improve, than they who do receive the grace of God in vain? and all that came in at the last hour, and received their penny, that is, all the converted gentiles, are reckoned as one man in those words of Christ, I will give ἐσχάτῳ τούτῳ, to this last man even as to thee. (Matt. xx. 14.)

But that which is principally to be considered for the full clearing of this difficulty is this, viz. that this passage of our Lord being spoken of God after the manner of men; is to be understood after the manner of men, or suitably to the nature of human passions, and the usual occasions of moving them. Now we are much affected with the obtaining what we have long and passionately desired, with the regaining that which we have looked upon as almost lost and desperate, with the security of that which we looked upon as in imminent danger; at the first obtaining what we passionately desired, regaining what we looked upon as lost, securing what was in great danger, our joy is strong, and our delight transporting; and afterward it sensibly abates: So it is with us, that we are not so sensibly moved with the continuance of a good which we have long enjoyed, as at the first recovery of it, after it was lost; we may have still a real value for what we do possess, a settled pleasure and contentment in it but the sudden joy and transport is at the recovery of it. So a continued course of goodness may in itself be most valuable, and yet the recovery of a lost sinner, the reviving of one dead in trespasses and sins, the seeing him snatched as a firebrand out of the fire, when he was ready to fall into it, may be the more affecting, and give us a more fresh and lively joy. Thus, v. g. it cannot but be comfortable to a loving father, to see his children in a state of perfect health; but if one of them fall sick, and beyond expectation of recovery, to see him out of danger, ministers more present joy, than doth the constant health of all the rest. And this is the reason given in the parable of the prodigal son, why the kind father rejoiceth more at his return, than at the continuance of his elder brother always with him; that it was the recovery of one given over for dead, the finding one looked upon as lost: It is meet (saith the father) upon this occasion that we should make merry: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; was lost, and is found. Our Saviour, therefore, to encourage the repentance of the sinner, represents God after the manner of men, as if he did conceive such a joy at it, as earthly parents are wont to do at the return of a wild extravagant child to himself, and his duty.

[3] Ver. 10. Οὕτω, λέγω ὑμῖν, χαρὰ γίνεται ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων, &c. Likewise, I say to you, There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.] Hence most interpreters conclude, that the angels and blessed spirits are acquainted with the conversion of a sinner; and seeing true conversion is wrought in the heart, hence the Romanists infer, that they must have knowledge of that also. But,

First, Here is not one word of blessed spirits, but of angels only; and whereas papists argue for an equality of knowledge in them to that of angels, because it is said they are as the angels of heaven, Matt. xxii. 50. I answer, Christ doth not say they are equal to angels now, but at the resurrection they shall be so. Nor doth he say this absolutely, or as to the faculties of their souls, but as to their freedom from secular actions and passions, and as to the state and condition of their bodies; for so the text runs, they that are counted worthy of the resurrection neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; i. e. they are equal to the angels as to immortality, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. (Luke xx. 35, 36.)

Secondly, This text affirms not, that the joy here mentioned, is the joy of angels, but only that it is the joy of God, ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων, before, or in the presence of the angels, which stand continually before his face. Now as an earthly king may rejoice before his court, and they know not the special motive of his joy, so may the King of heaven rejoice before the angels of his presence, and they know not the reason of that joy, and much less the particular convert that gave occasion to it. In a word, it is confessedly God, who is compared to the shepherd, seeking his lost sheep, and to the father rejoicing for the return of his prodigal son; and therefore the similitude requires, that the joy conceived when a lost sheep is found, or a prodigal son comes home, should be ascribed to him.

Note also, that this consideration should inflame the zeal, and quicken the industry, of the spiritual shepherd for the conversion of sinners, as knowing this is a work so highly acceptable to the God of heaven, and that for which he sent the great Shepherd of the sheep into the world.

[4] Ver. 11. Ἄνθρωπός τις εἶχε δύο υἱούς, A certain man had two sons.] Here observe, (1.) that the elder son in this parable representeth not the just or righteous; for they are not angry, either that sinners do return to God, or that he graciously entertains them when they do so, but rather are industrious to bring them home to him, and rejoice at their return: he rather represents the Jews murmuring, and being angry, that the gentiles, who before were, μακρὰν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, far off from God, (Eph. ii. 13.) were by faith, without circumcision, or obedience to their law, brought nigh to him, and made partakers of the same privileges God offered, or afforded to them. The gentiles are represented as the younger son, going into a far country, as being far from God, and squandering away their goods by riotous living, as depraving that knowledge they had of the true God, from tradition, and his marvellous works, by gross idolatry, on which account the Jews represented them as born of harlots, (see note on John viii. 41. as here, ver. 30.) and serving them, which, by nature, were no gods, by holding the truth in unrighteousness, and giving up themselves to all uncleanness; (Eph. iv. 19,) yea, labouring under a famine of the word of God, and of his saving truth, and giving up themselves to the meanest services, such as that of keeping of hogs was deemed by the Jews and the Egyptians, who suffered not such to come into their temples, or sacred houses; they having now, through Christ, access unto the Father, being adorned with the wedding-garment of faith, and the robe of righteousness, fed with the banquet of the true paschal lamb, and admitted to wear their Father's ring, as a testimony that they were now his genuine sons.

Nor is it a sufficient objection against this, that the gentiles were never sons before, or, if ever they were so, they must be so before the Jews, and so the elder sons: for God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the gentiles, he being the common Father of the world, and we being all his offspring; yea, they are called the sons of God before the flood, Gen. vi. 2. and were so afterward before the name of Jew was known. And the Jews here represent the elder son, because they being afterward abdicated for their idolatry, God gave to the Jews the primogeniture, and styled them his sons, and his first-born, (Exod. iv. 22, 23.) and accordingly bestowed upon them the privileges of the first-born, choosing them above all nations of the world.

If it be again objected, that this elder son saith, ver. 29. these many years have I served thee, and never transgressed I at any time thy commandments, which could not be true of the Jews; I answer, neither could they say, God never gave them a kid, or treated them with the like kindness, the gospel being first preached to them; this therefore only signifies their high conceit of themselves, that they were righteous. And so much for the chief import of the parable. To touch a little on some other circumstances of it,

First, From those words, he went into a far country, and spent all his substance, Theophylact notes, that he who estrangeth himself from God, loseth all those seeds of virtue and goodness, which either nature or revelation hath implanted in him.

Secondly, From his being put to feed swine; observe, to what vile and sordid employments they are put, who serve sin and Satan.

Thirdly, From these words, he would have filled his belly with husks, but could not; observe, that there can be no satisfaction to any man who wants the favour of God.

Fourthly, From those words, when he came to himself; observe, that he who lives a sinful life is beside himself: for, being a rational creature, and having a judgment and conscience to direct his actions, he acts against his reason, his judgment, and his conscience.

Fifthly, From those words, he arose, and went, ver. 20. Theophylact notes, that it is not sufficient to make good resolutions, saying, I will go, (ver. 18.) but we must practise suitably.

Sixthly, From those words, ver. 21. his father seeing him, ran to him; observe, that when God sees men truly willing to return unto him, he is still ready to receive them, and even prevent them with his grace.

Seventhly, From those words, ver. 24. this my son was dead; observe, that wicked men are dead in the worst sense: for, as Philo saith, he that lives a sensual life, τέθνηκε τὸν εὐδαίμονα, is dead as to a happy life.

Eighthly, From those words, Father, I have sinned, ver. 21. spoken after the kindness of his father; note, that after sin is pardoned, it becomes the sinner ingenuously to acknowledge and confess it.

Ninthly, As for the phrase, I have sinned against heaven and against thee, it is a Jewish phrase, Shamaim, as Buxtorf says,* being frequently used to signify God. Accordingly they say, there is one who sins against earth (i. e. man), but not against heaven (i. e. God); and there is one that sins against heaven, but not against earth; but he who speaketh with an evil tongue, sins against heaven and earth. Though Theophylact here saith, he had sinned against heaven by preferring earthly things before heavenly.

[5] Ver. 12. Δός μοι τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος τῆς οὐσίας, Give me the portion of goods that falleth to me.] So Demosthenes* uses τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἡμῖν μέρος, for the portion allowed to us: and Aristides, τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἐφ' ὑμᾶς μέρος, for the portion that belongs to you. (De Concord. ad Rhodios.)

CHAP. XVI.

1. AND he said also to his [1] disciples, There was a certain [2] rich man who had a steward; and the same was accused to him, (it being said) that he had wasted his goods.

2. And he called him, and said to him, How is it (thou hast dealt with me) that I hear this of thee? give (up) an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer (permitted to be) steward.

3. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do (to live)? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig (for a livelihood); to beg (for it) I am ashamed.

4. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am out of the stewardship, they (whom I befriend) may receive me into their houses.

5. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said to the first, How much owest thou to my lord?

6. And he said, A hundred measures of oil (i. e. about a thousand gallons). And he said to him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, A hundred measures of wheat. And he said to him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore (and likewise he said to the rest).

8. And the lord [3] commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely (i. e. he represented him as one that acted according to the wisdom of this world; and was so far worthy to be imitated by the children of light, as to make this their chief care, when, by death, they are removed from their stewardship, that they may be received into everlasting habitations): for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light (more provident and dexterous to provide for this life, than they are to provide for eternity).

9. And I (likewise) say to you, [4] Make yourself friends of the mammon of unrighteousness (i. e. make such provisions for yourselves of those riches, which the men of this world get by falsehood and injustice); that, when ye fail, they may receive you (i. e. that, when you die, ye may be received) into everlasting habitations.

10. He that is faithful in that which is least (i. e. in the enjoyments of this world, so as to employ them in works of charity, and to the ends for which he is intrusted with them) is faithful also in much (i. e. he will be so in the great concernments of another life); and (likewise) he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

11. If therefore ye have not been faithful (stewards) in (dispensing) the unrighteous mammon (or, the false and deceitful riches of this world, to the uses for which they were given you), who will (it is not to be expected God should) commit to your trust the true riches?

* Περὶ στεφ.

12. And if ye have not been faithful in that which is (to be) [5] another man's, who shall give you that which is your own? (i. e. that inheritance, which shall never pass from you to others.

13. And there is great reason to caution you against that affection to the world which obstructs your love to God; for) [6] no servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot (then) serve God and mammon (also).

14. And the pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him (looking on this as a ridiculous doctrine).

15. And (but) he said to them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men (i. e. seek to approve yourselves to, and expect to be owned by, them as righteous persons); but God knoweth (the falsehood of) your hearts: for that (fair outside) which is highly esteemed among men (who see no farther) is (an) abomination in the sight of God, (who seeth the filth and hypocrisy of your hearts.

16. Nor is it to be wondered that you hear these higher precepts of charity from me and John; for) the [7] law and the prophets (which engaged you to do your duty, chiefly by temporal promises) were until John: since that time the kingdom of God (which promises treasures in heaven) is preached, and every man (that enters into that kingdom) presseth into it (i. e. forces his way into it, by breaking through the love of temporal concerns).

17. And (this I say not to depreciate the law, which as to its moral precepts shall obtain for ever; for) it is easier for heaven and earth to pass (away), than (for) one tittle of the law to fail. (See Matt. v. 18.)

18. (And, to give you another instance of the sublimer precepts of the gospel, the law permits divorces, but under the gospel-dispensation) whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (against her): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery, (as cohabiting with another man's wife.

19. And, to shew them the mischief of riches not charitably employed, he told them, by way of parable,) [8] There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus (i. e. one without help), which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

21. And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table (but was denied them): moreover the dogs (being more compassionate than the rich man's servants) came and licked his sores.

22. And it came to pass, that the [9] beggar died, and was carried by the angels (who are ministering spirits to good men) into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried;

23. And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24. And he [10] cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

25. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26. And besides all this, [11] between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they who would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence (i. e. good men have all their evils, and bad men all their good things in this life; and hereafter the happiness of the one, and the misery of the other, will be unchangeable).

27. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28. For I have five brethren; (and am desirous) that he may testify to them (the happiness of the blessed and the misery of the wicked), lest they also come into this place of torment.

29. And Abraham saith to him, They have Moses and the prophets (to testify to them these things); let them hear (and obey) them.

30. And he said, Nay, father Abraham (they prevailed not with me, and therefore may not do so with them): but if one went to them from the dead, (I suppose) they will repent.

31. And he said (again) to him, If they [12] hear (i. e. obey) not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one arose from the dead (to preach repentance to them; for he could come with no greater authority, deliver no better motives to repentance, and he could give them no greater assurance of the truth of what he said than they did).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, And he said also to his disciples.] i. e. Not only to the twelve, but to those who followed him, attending on his doctrine, as did the publicans and sinners, (xv. 1.)

[2] Ἄνθρωπός τις ἦν πλούσιος, ὃς εἶχεν οἰκονόμον, &c. There was a rich man who had a steward, and he was accused to him as wasting his goods.] Kimchi on Isaiah xl. saith, "The fruits of the earth are like a table spread in a house; the owner of this house is God; man in this world is, as it were, the steward of the house, into whose hands his Lord had delivered all his riches; if he behave himself well, he will find favour in the eyes of his Lord; if ill, he will remove him from his stewardship." And so the scope of this parable seems to be this, That we are to look upon ourselves, not as lords of the good things of this life, so as to get and use them at our pleasure, but only as stewards, who must be faithful in the administration of them.

[3] Ver. 8. Καὶ ἐπῄνεσεν ὁ Κύριος τὸν οἰκονόμον τῆς ἀδικίας, ὅτι φρονίμως ἐποίησεν, And the lord commended the unjust steward, that he had done wisely.] i. e. Discreetly, according to the wisdom of the men of this world, whose concern is only for the good things of this life; he commended him as we do such persons, when we say, Such a one is a shrewd man for the world, he understands well the way of dealing in it: he commends him not absolutely, as a fit example to be followed in this injustice, fraud, and wasting of his master's goods, but comparatively, as being worthy to be so far imitated by the children of light, as to make this their chief concern, that when by death they are removed from their stewardship, they may be received into everlasting habitations, or into a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens: (2 Cor. v. 1.) this being an instruction needful for them, because the children of this world are wiser in their care to make provisions for themselves, than are the children of light; i. e. they who enjoy the light of the gospel, to make provisions εἰς γενεὰν ἑαυτῶν, for their age, to secure the true riches and the celestial habitations prepared for them.

[4] Ver. 9. Κἀγὼ ὑμῖν λέγω, ποιήσατε ἑαυτοῖς φίλους ἐκ τοῦ μαμωνᾶ τῆς ἀδικίας, I say therefore unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness.] That the mammon of unrighteousness is the false mammon, according to the common import of the word ἀδικία, for falsehood, [of which see Jer. xxvii. 15. 29. 31. and the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 6.] may be gathered from the true riches opposed to it, ver. 11. But then it remains to be required, whether it be called here the mammon ἀδικίας, or false mammon, because it deceives them who trust to, and seek for, satisfaction from it, and comparatively to the true riches; or else as the unjust steward is styled οἰκονόμος ἀδικίας, unjust, because he betrayed his trust, and dealt falsely with his master; to which sense the preceding verse and the parable seem plainly to direct, and the use of the phrase mammon dishekar, in the Targumists, do constrain us to interpret it, as being usually put for gain gotten by unfaithfulness to our trust, or falseness in the discharge of our office. So of the sons of Eli it is said, that they had respect to mammon dishekar, the mammon of falsehood, 1 Sam. viii. 3. and xii. 3. Samuel inquires, from whose hand have I received mammon dishekar? and, 2 Sam. xiv. 14. a just judge will not receive mammon dishekar: so Prov. xv. 27. he destroys his house who heaps up to himself the mammon of falsehood: see to the same sense, Isa. v. 23. xxxv. 15. Ezek. xxii. 27. Hos. v. 11. Amos v. 12. But then, whereas it is hence inferred, that our Lord here speaks of making restitution of such goods, and spending some of the remainder in acts of charity; which, when Zaccheus had resolved to perform, Christ saith, This day is salvation come to this house; (xix. 9.) though this be a good sense, and fit to be preached to those publicans and sinners who came to attend upon his doctrine, yet it is not necessary; for Christ's intendment may be only this, to advise his followers to be so far from getting wealth by such unfaithfulness and falsehood as the men of the world do, as rather to expend what Providence hath intrusted them with, in acts of charity and mercy, that so they may lay up for themselves treasures in the heavens, or be received into heaven when they die: for ἐκλείπειν bears this sense in Scripture. So Gen. xxv. 8. ἐκλείπων ἀπέθανεν Ἀβραὰμ, Abraham gave up the ghost and died; Jer. xlii. 17. ἐκλείψουσι ἐν τῇ ῥομφαίᾳ, they shall die by the sword; and ver. 22. ἐν λιμῷ ἐκλείψετε, ye shall die by the pestilence; Wisd. v. 13. οὕτως καὶ ἡμεῖς γενηθέντες ἐξελίπομεν, so we are born to die. (See Gen. xxxv. 29. xlix. 33. Job xiii. 19. Psal. ciii. 10. Isa. xxxviii. 12. Jer. ix. 10. xliv. 12. 18. 27. Lam. i. 20. Zeph. i. 2, 3. Psal. lxxiii. 19. lxxxix. 7. 9. ci. 4.) Δέξωνται ὑμᾶς, they may receive you, is impersonally put for you may be received: so Luke vi. 38. give, and δώσουσιν, it shall be given into your bosoms; xii. 20. τὴν ψυχήν σου ἀπαιτοῦσιν, thy soul shall be required.

[5] Ver. 12. Καὶ εἰ ἐν τῷ ἀλλοτρίῳ πιστοὶ οὐκ γένεσθε, τὸ ὑμέτερόν τις ὑμῖν δώσει, And if you have not been faithful in that which is another's, who will give you that which is your own?] The eleventh verse seems to bear this sense: If you have not been faithful in those temporal concerns, which minister temptations to unrighteousness, but have either sought to obtain them by fraud and unfaithful dealings, when they have been committed to your trust, or by withholding more than is right, or that which the great Lord of them required you to expend upon his needy servants, how can you reasonably expect the true riches, which are only promised to the upright and charitable person? And again: If you have been thus unfaithful in those things which you cannot properly call your own; because they may, by various accidents, be devolved on, and must at last be left to others, what reason have you to expect that which is your own, as being the inheritance of the children of light, and that which they are to enjoy for ever? where the concerns of this world are styled ἀλλότρια, things which belong not to us; because we have no assurance of the enjoyment of them, and know that we must leave them to others; and this is said agreeably to the philosophy of the heathens: thus in Arian the dying man is said τὰ ἀλλότρια ἀποδιδόναι, to render up that which belongs to others, lib. i. cap. 1. and every one is bid, τὰ ἴδια τηρεῖν, τῶν ἀλλοτρίων μὴ ἀντιποιεῖσθαι, to keep that which is in his power, and not desire external things, lib. ii. cap. 16. p. 215. and lib. iii. cap. 24. we are taught that the things we may be hindered of, or which may be taken from us, are τὰ ἀλλότρια; and so (saith he) are all those things which we must leave to others, or restore them to God that gave them, lib. iv. cap. 5. so Hermes, lib. iii. Sim. 1. τί εἰς τὴν ἀλλοτρίαν ἑτοιμάζομεν ἀγροὺς, οἰκοδομὰς, Why do we, who know the city in which we are to dwell, prepare for ourselves fields, houses, &c. in another city? this being a sign that we expect not to return to our own city, to the Jerusalem above; which is here styled by St. Luke our own, by Hermes ἡ πόλις ἡμῶν, because prepared for and promised to us Christians; here we are only travellers, there is our city; (Phil. iii. 20.) here we are only dispensers, there heirs; here we enjoy things for a season, there for ever.

[6] Ver. 13. Οὐδεὶς οἰκέτης δύναται δύσι Κυρίοις δουλεύειν, &c. No man can serve two masters,——ye cannot serve God and mammon.] The coherence of these words seems to lie thus: I have just reason to caution you thus against that affection to the world, which obstructs your charity, and tempts you by fraud and falsehood to acquire it; because it will not permit you to love God truly, or to be faithful servants to him; and whereas you covetous pharisees deride me for this doctrine, (ver. 14.) as thinking yourselves highly favoured of God for other things, viz. your long prayers, your washings, your exactness in paying tithes, your niceness in observing your vain traditions, and your separation from the men of the world, know, that however you may think well of yourselves upon these accounts and highly be esteemed of others, whilst ye continue covetous and full of rapine and uncleanness, (Matt. xxiii. 25.) hypocrisy and injustice, (ver. 27.) ye are abominable in the sight of God.

[7] Ver. 16—18. Ὁ νόμος καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἕως Ἰωάννου, &c. The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every one presseth into it.] Here the coherence seems to run thus: It is not to be wondered that you now hear, from John and me, higher precepts of charity, and contempt of the world, than you find in the law or prophets, who moved you to your duty by the promises of temporal blessings in the land of Canaan; since now the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every one, that enters into it, forces his way by breaking through the love of temporal concerns and sensual pleasures: for, to give you another instance of like nature, whereas the law admitted of divorces at the pleasure of the husband, by reason of the hardness of your hearts, the gospel forbids this now on any other score than that of fornication, which from the nature of the sin dissolves the marriage; yet, that you may not cavil at me as a dissolver of the law, I declare that all the moral precepts of it shall obtain, and be of perpetual obligation under the gospel-dispensation.

[8] Ver. 19. Ἄνθρωπος πλούσιος ἦν, There was a rich man, &c.] That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident, (1.) because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. (2.) From the circumstances of it, viz. the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history? as for the judgment of antiquity in this case, they who owned this as a history, owned the whole so to be, thinking the soul to be corporeal, as Tertullian did, and that there was διαφορὰ κατὰ τὰς μορφὰς, some discretion, or resemblance of men as to their shapes after death, which was the sentiment of Irenæus,* proving from this very instance, that souls, when they have put off the body, do yet "characterem corporum custodire," preserve the shape or character of the body to which they were united, as Tertullian† before from the same instance had inferred, "effigiem animæ, et corporales lineas," the shape and corporeal lineaments, and also "corporalitatem animæ." Much as Thespesius‡ returning to life represents τὰ τῶν ψυχῶν χρώματα, the colours of souls, and saith that there be οὖλαι καὶ μώλωπες ἐπὶ τῶν παθῶν ἑκάστου, ulcers and scars of their passions left upon them by which they are discerned; whereas they, who renounced these opinions, as false and ridiculous, declared that this was not a history, but only a representation, § That after the separation of the soul from the body, she could receive no advantage from any man, and that it was foolish to think it a history; and this they also gather, because there was to be no future retribution before the general resurrection. And whereas against this it is objected, that the proper name Lazarus shews it to be a history; it is answered, that the name Lazer being only the contraction of Eliezer, is the same with Ani Achad, a poor man in the Gemara, as being in sense ἀβόηθος, one that hath no help, or one who hath God only for his help. Note, Secondly, That though this parable contains something suitable to the opinion of the Jews touching the state of souls after death, yet doth it not respect their state immediately after death, but the punishments that wicked men are to suffer after the resurrection of the dead, or ἐν ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, at the last day, saith Theophylact. For, as Cicero says of the fables, by which the poets represent the punishments of evil souls, that "corpora cremata cum scirent, tamen ea fieri apud inferos fingebant, quæ sine corporibus nec fieri possint, nec intelligi," though they know their bodies have been burnt, yet they do represent them suffering such things in the infernal regions which neither can be done or suffered, or even understood to be so without bodies: so it is plainly here in the forementioned instances produced to prove this a parable.

[9] Ver. 22. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἀποθανεῖν τὸν πτωχὸν, &c. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom.] Here are two things said agreeably to the tradition of the Jews touching good men, which was, (1.) that their souls were in the garden of Eden, in Paradise, or in Abraham's bosom; thus of R. Judah, when he died, they say, this day he sits in Abraham's bosom (see Lightfoot on the place); and Josephus* saith of good men, that they are gathered εἰς πατέρων χώραν, to the region of the patriarchs, and that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, do παραδέχεσθαι, receive their souls. (2.) That they are carried thither by good angels; so the Targum on Cant. iv. 12. saith, No man hath power to enter into the garden of Eden, but the just, whose souls are carried thither by the hand of angels. (See Cartw. on Luke ii. 29. p. 2994.) They add, that, when evil men die, the evil angels come and say, There is no peace to the wicked: so Dr. Lightfoot here; and in like manner Socrates† in Phæd. saith, λέγεται, it is reported that as soon as any man dies, every one's demon, whom he chose to himself whilst he lived, brings him to a certain place where all are to be judged, and then he goes to hades, μετὰ ἡγεμόνος ἐκείνου ᾧ προτέτακται τοὺς ἐνθένδε ἐκεῖσε πορεύεσθαι, with the governor to whom it was appointed to bring them that depart hence to those places.

[10] Ver. 24. Καὶ αὐτὸς φωνήσας εἶπε, πάτερ Ἀβραὰμ ἐλέησόν με, And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me.] As the Baptist taxeth their vain imaginations in hoping to be preserved from Divine judgments whilst they lived, because they were the children of Abraham; so our Lord here may perhaps strike at a like imagination got among them, that hell-fire had no power over the sinners of Israel, because Abraham and Isaac came down thither to fetch them hence; (see the note on Rom. ii. 13.) declaring, even from the mouth of Abraham, that no help was by them to be expected from him, when they were in that place.

[11] Ver. 26. Μεταξὺ ἡμῶν καὶ ὑμῶν χάσμα μέγα ἐστήρικται, Betwixt us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that none can pass to us from thence.] The words seem plainly to refute the opinion of Origen, that there would come a time when the punishments of the wicked would have an end, and they should at last live with God and his saints.

[12] Ver. 31. Εἰ Μωσέως καὶ τῶν προφητῶν οὐκ ἀκούουσιν, &c. If they hear not Moses nor the prophets, they would not be persuaded though one rose from the dead.] If they hear not, i. e. obey not, Moses and the prophets, whom they own to be persons sent from God, and delivering his message, one rising from the dead would not persuade them to break off their iniquities; for he could come with no greater au-

§ Παραζολὴ καὶ τοῦτο, ἀλλ' οὐκ ὡς τις ἀνοήτως ἂν οἴῃ, εἶδεν πεᾶγμά ἐστιν ἤδη γεγονός. Theoph. thority than they did, he could deliver no other message to the sinner than they had done, that if they turned not from their evil ways they should die, and be obnoxious to eternal shame and misery; (Dan. xii. 2.) he could give them no more assurance of the truth of what he said, than did the word of that God who cannot lie; no reason therefore could be conceived why they should hearken to one risen from the dead, and calling them to repentance, rather than to those prophets whom they acknowledged to be sent from God. And of this we have a clear instance in the resurrection of our Lord from the dead; for of this they had the testimony of our Lord's predictions, of their own prophets, of the guards that kept the sepulchre, of their own senses, of the apostles, and five hundred witnesses, and all this confirmed by the miraculous effusions of the Holy Ghost on those that believed on him, and a continual throng of miracles wrought in his name; and yet all this was insufficient to reclaim that wicked generation from their infidelity, and to provoke them to repentance. The practical observations made from this parable are,

First, That this rich man is not accused of getting riches by injustice, but only of faring deliciously and luxuriously, with the neglect of others oppressed with misery and want before his eyes. How then will many Christians escape the same place of torments who indulge in the same luxury and carnal pleasures, and are as little touched with an affectionate sense of the wants and miseries of others?

Secondly, That they who have their good things in this life, i. e. that which they chiefly valued, pursued, and delighted in whilst they lived here, are to expect no comfort, nothing but evil, after death.

CHAP. XVII.

1. THEN said he to his disciples, It is impossible (through the unrestrained wickedness of men) but that offences will come (i. e. things will be said and done which will hinder some from embracing, and cause others to fall off from, the faith): but woe to him through whom they come!

2. It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should (thus) offend one of these little ones (that believe in me).

3. Take heed (therefore) to yourselves (that ye be not guilty of any degree of this offence; and therefore) if thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if (upon his reproof) he repent, forgive him.

4. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent (of what I have done against thee); thou shalt (as oft) forgive him.

5. And the apostles said to the Lord, [1] Increase our faith (that so we may be enabled to perform those duties contrary to flesh and blood, or that we may more successfully minister to the welfare of souls without offence).

6. And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say to this sycamine-tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you (i. e. the least sincere and active faith, would enable you to do the most difficult things in order to the promotion of the Christian faith).

7. But (then) which of you, having a servant ploughing or feeding cattle, will say to him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8. And will not rather say to him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

9. Doth he thank that servant, because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10. So likewise you, when ye shall have done [2] all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have (only) done that which was our duty to do: (i. e. whereas the performance of the greatest things, which I your Master do require, may seem to you a very eminent piece of service, know, that in obeying all my precepts, you only do the office of good and faithful servants, obeying the commands of your great Master as ye ought to do, and so must look on the reward promised, not of debt but of grace).

11. And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the [3] midst (or confines) of Samaria and Galilee.

12. And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

13. And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us (and heal us).

14. And when he saw them, he said to them, [4] Go shew yourselves to the priests, (as when a cure is wrought the lepers are to do by the law, Lev. xiv. 2.) And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

15. And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified (or praised) God,

16. And fell down on his face at his (i. e. Christ's) feet, giving him thanks: and he (who did this) was a Samaritan.

17. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? (doubtless there were:) but where are the (remaining) nine (of them)?

18. There are not found (any of them) that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19. And he said to him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.

20. And when he was demanded of the pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with [5] observation (i. e. with outward pomp and splendour, visible in earthly kingdoms).

21. Neither shall they (have need to) say (of it), Lo here! or, lo there (it is)! for, behold, the kingdom of God is [6] within (already among) you.

22. And he said to his disciples (or followers), The day will come, when ye (of this nation) shall desire to see [7] one of the days of the Son of man, (the Messiah coming to deliver Israel, iv. 21.) and ye shall not see (one of them) it.

23. And (when) they shall say to you, See here! or, see there (for him)! go not after them, nor follow them.

24. [8] For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth to the other part under heaven; so (visible) shall also the (coming of the) Son of man be in his day.

25. But first he must suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

26. And as it was in the days of Noe (a preacher of righteousness to the old world), so shall it be also in the days of (the coming of) the Son of man.

27. They (then) did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage (not expecting the threatened judgments), until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

28. Likewise also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded.

29. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

30. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed (a sudden and unexpected destruction shall then fall upon the men of this nation).

31. In that day, he that shall be upon the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back (i. e. let him endeavour to escape without delay, or staying to carry his goods with him).

32. [9] Remember (therefore) Lot's wife (what her delay and looking back brought upon her).

33. Whosoever shall seek to save his life (by apostacy from the faith) shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life (for my sake) shall preserve it.

34. I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed, (so remarkable shall be the providence of God in preserving his faithful servants, that) the one (of them) shall be taken (away by death), and the other shall be left (safe).

35. Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

36. Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

37. And they answered and said to him, Where, Lord (shall this be)? And he said to them, [10] Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together (i. e. wheresoever the Jews are, there will the Roman army, whose ensign is the eagle, come to destroy them).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 5. ΠΡΟΣΘΕΣ ἡμῖν πίστιν, Increase our faith.] In the beginning of this chapter, our Lord requires his apostles to be careful, that they do not offend one of his little ones; secondly, to be so charitable to their offending brother, as to rebuke him for his sins; and, thirdly, to pardon their offending brother, though he should daily multiply his provocations, provided that he only say unto them, I repent, (ver. 4.) Now these three duties of an inoffensive conversation, fraternal correction, and full forgiveness of a brother daily multiplying fresh indignities and provocations, being so difficult, and contrary to their natural inclinations, and faith being the foundation of all Christian virtues, the apostles in order to the performance of these duties beg the increase of faith. Moreover, seeing faith is wrought in the heart, which God alone can search, and can immediately work upon, by thus repairing to Christ to increase their faith, they must ascribe to him, as Woltzogenius here confesseth, a Divine virtue, which being proper to the Deity, and incommunicable to a finite nature, must consequently shew that Christ had in him a Divine nature.

[2] Ver. 10. Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ὅταν ποιήσητε πάντα τὰ διαταχθέντα ὑμῖν, λέγετε, ὅτι δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν, &c. So likewise you, when you have done all things that are commanded you, say, that we are unprofitable servants, for we have done that (only) which it was our duty to do.] Here Christ destroys two doctrines of the schools, the merit of good works, and works of supererogation. For (1.) we being in respect of God unprofitable servants, (for can a man be profitable to God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself? is it any advantage to him that we are righteous, or is it gain to him that we make our ways perfect? Job xxii. 2, 3. If thou be righteous, what givest thou him, or what receiveth he at thy hands? xxxv. 7. seeing thy goodness reacheth not him, Psal. xvi. 2.) sure we cannot merit from him by doing that, which is unprofitable to him: (2.) because we only can do that, which it is our duty to perform; for (1.) we are all God's servants: now it being the duty of a servant to do all his master's pleasure, and what he hath declared to be grateful to him, and this being only "ministerium servi," the proper business of a servant, which he lies under a necessity of doing, that he may please the lord, even reason shews he cannot put it to account to his superior, or be supposed to merit by it, as Seneca* grants; and that it may not be said that this is the condition only of slaves, and not of servants in the general, which we all are to God and Christ, (1 Cor. vii. 22. Rom. xiv. 4. Coloss. iii. 24. Eph. vi. 9.) it is to be observed from these words, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, so also ye, that Christ speaks this to his disciples, who are not to be reckoned as his slaves, but servants, whose duty it was to have their loins girt, and their lamps burning, upon that account; (Luke xii. 35, 36.) who therefore doing all that he required, were still unprofitable servants, in the sense forementioned, and did only what they ought. Christ therefore here seems to speak to them thus, It is the duty of servants after they have done their work in the field, to minister to their lord as he shall require, and when they have done what he requires, they for that service merit not so much as thanks, because they only do their duty: if then I treat you more liberally, rather as friends than servants; if I condescend to minister to you, (Luke xii. 37.) and place you over all that I have, (ver. 44.) you are not to imagine that I am indebted to you, or owe you such favours, but rather are to acknowledge, when you have done all, that you are still unprofitable servants, and only have performed your duty. (See here Examen Millii, in locum.)

[3] Ver. 11. Διὰ μέσου Σαμαρείας καὶ Γαλιλαίας, As he went to Jerusalem, he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.] It is well known that Samaria lay betwixt Galilee and Judea, and so our Lord, taking his journey to Jerusalem, must go first through Galilee, then through Samaria; why therefore is it here said, that he passed through Samaria and Galilee? To this it may be answered, that בתוך in medio, is often the same as μεταξὺ, between, and so is διὰ, as διὰ νήσων, inter insulas: so here the Arabic and Syriac, between Samaria and Galilee; i. e. between the confines of both countries; Christ, in this journey, going to the Scythopolitan bridge, saith Lightfoot, by which he passed into Peræa, and so on by Samaria into Judea.

* "Ministerium esse servi, quem conditio sua eo loco posuit, ut nihil eorum, quæ præstat, impulet superiori,——Si servo, quo minus in numen meriti perveniat, necessitas obest." Sen. de Ben. lib. iii. cap. 18.

[4] Ver. 14. Πορευθέντες ἐπιδείξατε ἑαυτοὺς τοῖς ἱερεῦσι, Go shew yourselves to the priest.] By sending them thus to the priests, who were to make their offerings in the temple, Christ decides the cause betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans, sending the Samaritan, not to Mount Gerizim, but to Jerusalem.

[5] Ver. 20. Οὐκ ἔρχεται ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ παρατηρήσεως, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation.] i. e. Not with that royal splendour, or worldly pomp and grandeur, which render it conspicuous in the eyes of the world, as you expect it should; so that a man may be able to say from the lustre of its first appearance, Lo, it is here! or, it is there!

[6] Ver. 21. Ἰδοὺ γὰρ, ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐντὸς ὑμῶν ἐστιν, Behold, the kingdom of God is within you.] i. e. Amongst you: for it is certain that our Lord speaks not of the power it had gained over the hearts of the Jews, and much less of the pharisees, to whom he speaks; but that the kingdom of the Messiah began now to appear, and the gospel of the kingdom was now preached among them; so that Christ says thus, This kingdom, which you inquire after, as if it had not yet appeared, because you see not that outward splendour you expect when the Messiah comes, is even now among you, and is come unto you; so ἐντὸς ὑμῶν and ἐν ὑμῖν, are used frequently in the Old Testament. So Gen. xxiii. 9. Give me it for a place of burial ἐν ὑμῖν, among you: see ver. 6. xxxiv. 10. ἐν ἡμῖν κατοικεῖτε, ye shall dwell among us; Exod. xvii. 7. is the Lord ἐν ἡμῖν; among us, or not? so Josh. iii. 5. ix. 22. Micah iii. 11. Hence also it is evident, that the kingdom here cannot signify Christ's coming to destroy Jerusalem: for, of that certainly the Jews did not think that it should suddenly appear; of that our Lord could not say, it was now among you, or that it came not with observation, it being attended with so many glorious signs of their approaching ruin, and the presence of the Roman army.

[7] Ver. 22. Ἐλεύσονται ἡμέραι, ὅτε ἐπιθυμήσετε, &c. And the days shall come, when you shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and shall not see it.] One of the days of the Son of man seems here to signify the time of their visitation by him, (chap. xix.) when he came to offer them all the blessings of the kingdom of God, upon their faith and repentance; this offer, saith Christ, in your extremity you will be glad to hear, but shall not hear it.

[8] Ver. 24. Ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ ἀστραπὴ, &c. For as the lightning (or splendour) shineth from one part of the heaven to the other part under the heaven; so shall also the (coming of the) Son of man be in his days.] Christ had told them, that the kingdom of God was already come among them, and had appeared in the purity of his doctrine, and the miracles by which it was confirmed, though not with such an outward splendour, as might enable them to point it, and say, Lo, it is here, or there, ver. 20, 21. He tells them in the twenty-fifth verse, that this Son of man should suffer, and be rejected by them, and so the glory of it would be for awhile eclipsed: and here, that after his resurrection it would shine with such a fresh and glorious brightness, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost on his disciples, as would render it equal to the splendour of the sun shining from one part of heaven to the other, and cause it to be propagated almost as quick as lightning through the world, so that there shall be no need to attend any man, saying, It is here, or there, seeing it would be quickly and conspicuously set up among all nations, (Matt. xxiv. 15.) and that then this Son of man, so fastidiously rejected by them, would also appear suddenly and gloriously, to revenge upon them their infidelity, and the affronts which they had offered to him.

[9] Ver. 32. Μνημονεύετε τῆς γυναικὸς Λὼτ, Remember Lot's wife.] What befel her for looking back to Sodom, lest you likewise perish in this slaughter of the unbelieving Jews, by looking back to what you have in your houses, or in the fields, (ver. 31.)

[10] Ver. 37. Ὅπου τὸ σῶμα, &c. Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.] That is, wherever the Jews are, there will the sword of the Romans, whose ensign is the eagle, be ready to devour them, and their army will assemble to destroy them.

CHAP. XVIII.

1. AND he spake a parable to them to this end, that men ought [1] always to pray, and not to faint, (or cease from the performance of that duty, because they are not presently heard; see 2 Cor. iv. 1.)

2. Saying, There was in a city a judge that feared not God, neither regarded man (to do justice, or to shew mercy to him):

3. And there was a widow in that city; and she came to him, saying, Avenge me of (or, do me justice against) my adversary.

4. And he would not for awhile: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man (so as to be moved by either of those motives to do this);

5. Yet because this widow troubleth me (with her importunity), I will avenge her (or do her right), lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6. And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith (on account of the widow's importunity).

7. And shall not God [2] avenge his own elect (i. e. Christian sufferers), which cry day and night to him, though he bear long with them (who afflict them, and so for a season seemeth not to hear them)?

8. I tell you, that he will avenge them speedily (after a little time, Heb. x. 37. Rev. i. 1.) [3] Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh (to do this), shall he find faith on the earth (that he will come to execute his vengeance on the Jews)?

9. And he spake this parable to certain who trusted in themselves that they were righteous (as the pharisees generally did), and despised others (as they did the publicans, counting them sinners unfit to be conversed with).

10. Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a pharisee, and the other a publican:

11. The [4] pharisee stood and prayed thus with (by) himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican (perhaps guilty of all these crimes.

12. I am so far from these things, and so exact in my duty, that I do more than is commanded; for) [5] I fast twice in the week, (and) I give tithes of all I possess (even of mint and cummin, Matt. xxiii. 23.)

13. And (but) the publican, [6] standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes to heaven (as judging himself unworthy so to do), but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

14. I tell you, (that) this man went down to his house justified (i. e. approved of God, and pardoned), [1] rather than the other: for every one that exalteth him shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

15. And they (who believed he was a true prophet) brought to him also infants, that he would touch (or lay his hands upon) them (and pray, Matt. xix. 13.) but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them (that brought them).

16. But Jesus (being much displeased at this action of his disciples, Mark x. 14.) called them to him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

17. Verily I say to you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God (with affections as free from covetous and vain-glorious desires) as (those of) a little child, shall in no wise enter therein (his love of honour, John v. 44. and of the world, ver. 24. being great obstructions to it).

18. And a certain ruler (who had a good opinion of him, and some religious concern for future happiness) asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19. And Jesus said to him, Why callest thou me good? (Seeing) none is good, save one, that is God (dost thou own me as one commissionated by God to teach the way of life? I will then do it from his word).

20. Thou knowest the commandments; viz. Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother: (do this, and thou shalt live.)

21. And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22. Now when Jesus heard these things, he said to him, Yet lackest thou one thing (viz. a heart so free from the love of riches, as to be ready to part with them at my command for heavenly blessings; I therefore say to thee), sell all that thou hast, and distribute (it) to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and (then) come, (and) follow me.

23. And when he heard this, he (went away, and) was very sorrowful: for he was very rich (and unwilling to part from his estate).

24. And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches (and trust in them, Mark x. 24.) enter into the kingdom of God!

25. For it is easier for a camel (or, a cable) to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man (thus affected to his riches, that he cannot part with them for treasures in heaven) to enter into the kingdom of God.

26. And they that heard (this saying) said, Who then can be saved?

27. And he said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God (he can take off men's hearts from this love of the world, though the persuasions of men cannot do it).

28. Then Peter said, Lo, we (thy apostles) have left all, and followed thee; (what shall we have therefore? Matt. xix. 27.)

29. And he said unto them, Verily I say to you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

30. Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time (from the joys of a good conscience and the Holy Ghost, the sense of God's favour, and the hopes of treasures in heaven, and the affection of good Christians to him), and in the world to come life everlasting.

31. Then he took to him the twelve, and said to them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and (then) all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

32. For he shall be delivered to the gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spit on:

33. And they shall scourge him, and put him to death: and the third day he shall rise again.

34. And they understood none of these things; (i. e. they knew not how to reconcile them with their apprehensions of his temporal kingdom, and their traditions, that the Messiah should not die, John xii. 34.) and (so) this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

35. And it came to pass, that, as he was come nigh (Gr. was nigh) to Jericho, a certain blind man (named Bartimeus, Mark x. 46.) sat by the way-side begging, (and another with him, Matt. xx. 30.)

36. And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant (i. e. what was the reason of that concourse).

37. And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

38. And (upon this) he cried, saying, Jesus, thou son of David, (whose office it is to give sight to the blind, Isa. xxxv. 5.) have mercy on me.

39. And they that went before rebuked him (saying), that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

40. And Jesus stood (still), and commanded him to be brought to him: and when he was come near, he asked him,

41. Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do to thee? And he said, Lord, (I desire) that I may receive my sight.

42. And Jesus said to him, (Thou shalt) receive thy sight: thy faith hath saved thee, (i. e. hath made thee whole, Mark x. 52.)

43. And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God (for his mercy to him): and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise (also) to God.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΡΟΣ τὸ δεῖν πάντοτε προσεύχεσθαι, καὶ μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, 'That men ought always to pray, and not to faint.] Of the notion of praying always, see note on Thess. v. 15. Here it signifies, not to pray oft every day, but to pray perseveringly day after day, without giving off our suit; and then μὴ ἐκκακεῖν will be, not to faint under the pressures and persecutions they suffered, either from the persecuting Jews, or others by their instigation; from which they are here supposed to pray for deliverance, (ver. 7.) or not to despond under them: for ἐκκακεῖν is not so properly to be slothful, as malis succumbere, animo concidere, malis cedere, to faint and despond, say the lexicons; and this especially when it relates, as here, to tribulations: so, Eph. iii. 13. μὴ ἐκκακεῖν ἐν θλίψεσι is well rendered, not to faint under tribulation; and, 2 Cor. iv. 16. οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, we faint not under those afflictions, which make the outward man perish, but continue steadfast in the faith: ver. 1. we faint not; though we are troubled on every side, and perplexed, we despair not of help from God, ver. 8. so Gal. vi. 9. μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, not to grow weary of well-doing, is μὴ ἐκλύειν, not to faint; which two things are put together in St. Paul's injunction to the Christian sufferer, not to grow weary or faint in his mind, Heb. xii. 3. and so 2 Thess. iii. 13. μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, not to be weary of well-doing, being an exhortation to them, who received the word with much affliction, 1 Thess. i. 6. and were in danger by it to fall from their steadfastness, iii. 2, 3. 5. may reasonably be supposed to have the same import.

[2] Ver. 7. Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς οὐ μὴ ποιήσει τὴν ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ μακροθυμῶν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς; And shall not God avenge his elect, that cry unto him day and night, though he bear long with them?] Here note,

First, That the elect in general signify all Christians chosen out of the world through faith in Christ, to be the church and people of God: (see note on 2 Pet. ii. 9.) when it relates particularly to the Jews, it signifies those of them, who believed in Christ, and upon that account are styled the election of grace, and absolutely the election, Rom. xi. 5. 7. under which character St. Peter writes unto them, 1 Pet. i. 1. (see note on Matt. xxiv. 22.) and this seems to be the import of the word here: for μακροθυμῶν some copies read μακροθυμεῖ, and so interpreters read the whole by way of interrogation, And will he be slack towards them? i. e. towards his elect; and this well agrees with the following words, I tell you, he will avenge them speedily; and with the words ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, which have no other substantive to refer to but the elect; and with the like passage, Ecclus. xxxv. 17—19. The prayer of the humble (or afflicted) pierceth the clouds; and till it come nigh he will not be comforted, and will not depart till the Most High shall behold to judge righteously, and execute judgment. For the Lord will not be slack, οὐδὲ μὴ μακροθυμήσει ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, neither will the Almighty be patient towards them, till he hath smitten asunder the loins of the unmerciful, and repaid ἐκδίκησιν, vengeance to the heathen; till he hath judged the cause of his people, and made them rejoice in his mercy.

Yet, because the common reading is μακροθυμῶν, and because sinners, and especially the unbelieving Jews, are reckoned as the objects of God's long-suffering, and not the elect, as when St. Paul saith to them, Despisest thou the riches of his goodness, patience and long-suffering? (Rom. ii. 4.) and as persons God endureth with much long-suffering; (ix. 22.) and St. Peter saith, God was long-suffering towards them, not being willing they should perish, but should all come to repentance; (2 Pet. iii. 9.) others make the sense run thus, Shall he, who is thus long-suffering towards the worst of men, and the persecutors of his people, be slack to avenge the cause of his people whom he loves, and to whose prayers his ears are always open?

[3] Ver. 8. Πλὴν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐλθὼν ἆρα εὑρήσει τὴν πίστιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, Nevertheless, when the Son of man comes, shall he find faith upon earth?] i. e. When the Son of man comes to exercise this vengeance on the Jewish nation, how few shall he find in the Jewish nation that will believe it? As for the unbelieving Jews, though Christ and his forerunner had told them so frequently and plainly of their approaching ruin; and though they had so many signs of it, recorded in Josephus, he tells us they were still expecting deliverance from God: and they, among them, who believed and professed the Christian faith, being pressed with continual sufferings, began to grow weary and faint in their minds, and to ask, Where is the promise of his coming? Yea, some of them began to forsake the assemblies of the saints, (Heb. x. 25.) and many of them became apostates, and fell back to their old Judaism; so that all the epistles directed to them are manifestly designed to keep them steadfast in the faith. (See the preface to those Epistles, and note on 2 Thess. ii. 3.)

[4] Ver. 11. Ὁ φαρισαῖος σταθεὶς πρὸς ἑαυτὸν, The pharisee standing by him.] As fearing to be polluted by the touch of the impure publican, (Luke vii. 39.) on which account they had their frequent washings when they came from the markets. (Mark vii. 4.) He standing thus prays, God, I thank thee, (thanksgiving being reckoned as one part of prayer, 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16. 1 Tim. ii. 1.) that I am not as other men are, nor as this publican. Here he offends, (1.) that he concludes himself good; because he is not so bad as other men: whereas he should have done this only from the evidence of his own sincerity in heart and actions; it being only from this approving our own works, that we can have rejoicing in ourselves, and not in another, Gal. vi. 4. (2.) In judging so ill of others, many of whom he could have no certain knowledge of, and particularly in his judgment on this publican; from whose submissive gesture and penitential actions he might have charitably concluded, that he came to the temple with a true penitent heart.

[5] Ver. 12. Νηστεύω δὶς τοῦ σαββάτου, I fast twice in the week.] The public and private fasts of the Jews were upon the second and fifth days of the week, i. e. Monday and Thursday: and therefore the ancient Christians, that they might not be outdone by them in any part of devotion, in lieu of those days, chose the fourth and sixth days of the week for their fasting-days: Stationibus quartum et sextum Sabbati dicamus. (Tert. de Jejun. cap. 14. Can. Apost. 61. Const. Apost. lib. v. cap. 15. 20. p. 263. lib. vii. cap. 23. Epiph. Hær. 51. n. 26. Expos. Fidei, n. 22. Philostorg. lib. x. §. 12. Pseudo-Ignat. Ep. ad Philip. §. 13.)

Theophylact here notes of this pharisee, that, in opposition to the rapine and injustice of others, he declares his exactness in paying tithes: and, in opposition to the luxury and adultery of others, his care to keep under his body, by fasting twice a week.

[6] Ver. 13. Ὁ δὲ τελώνης μακρόθεν ἑστὼς, But the publican standing afar off.] He stood afar off, perhaps in the court of the gentiles, looking upon himself unworthy to draw nigh to God, or to stand in the holy place: he could not lift up his eyes to heaven, from the sense of the same unworthiness; he smites upon his breast, punishing himself out of a deep sense of his guilt; this being the sign of a mind vehemently afflicted; (xxiii. 48.) and, lastly, he humbly confesses, that he was a sinner, and earnestly begs mercy; and therefore it is said,

[7] Ver. 14. Κατέβη οὗτος δεδικαιωμένος εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ, ἢ ἐκεῖνος, He went down to his house justified rather than the other.] Here ἤ is again put for μᾶλλον ἤ. So Hos. ii. 7. καλῶς μοι ἦν τότε ἢ νῦν, It was better with me than now; Jonah iv. 3. 8. καλὸν τὸ ἀποθανεῖν ἢ ζῆν, It is better for me to die, than live. (See note on xv. 7.)

CHAP. XIX.

1. AND Jesus entered (into) and passed through Jericho.

2. And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, who was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

3. And he sought to see Jesus who (i. e. what kind of man) he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4. And he (therefore) ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore-tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

5. And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said to him, Zaccheus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house.

6. And he [1] made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7. And when they (the pharisees) saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner (thinking that a matter of defilement and reproach to him, not considering the design on which Christ came into the world).

8. And Zaccheus stood (up), and said to the Lord, Behold, Lord, (not the fifth part only, but) the [2] half of my goods I (now resolve to) give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation (or oppression, see note on Luke iii. 14.) I (will) restore him four-fold (i. e. beyond the rigour of the law).

9. And Jesus said to him, This day is salvation come to this house (Zaccheus having done like a true convert), forsomuch as he also is a [3] son of Abraham, (i. e. a Jew.

10. And this is suitable to the design of my coming, and justifies my eating and conversing with him:) for the Son of man is come to seek (after) and to save that which was lost.

11. And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, (which shortly was to be the scene of misery, ver. 41, 42.) and because they thought that the kingdom of God (or, of the Messiah) should immediately appear.

12. He said therefore, (The kingdom of God is like to) a [4] certain nobleman (who) went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return (and thus shall I go to heaven and be installed in my mediatory kingdom, and then return to execute the severest judgments on this nation for their non-proficiency).

13. And he called his ten servants, and delivered to them ten pounds, and said to them, Occupy till I come (i. e. improve them till I come and take an account of your proficiency).

14. But his citizens (the Jews) hated him, and sent a messenger after him, (disclaiming and rejecting his authority, and) saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15. And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called to him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16. Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17. And he said to him, Well (done), thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities (i. e. be thy reward proportionable to the increase of thy talent).

18. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19. And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities (i. e. be thy reward answerable to the improvement of thy talent).

20. And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin (making no use of it):

21. For I feared thee, because (I judged) thou art an austere man; thou takest up what thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow (requiring an increase far exceeding what thou gavest).

22. And he saith to him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge (and condemn) thee, thou wicked servant; (for) thou (ownest that thou) knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23. Wherefore then gavest not thou my money to the bank (i. e. didst not thou improve my talent), that at my coming (back) I might have required (and received) my own with usury (or improvement)?

24. And he said to them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25. [5] And they said to him, Lord, he hath ten pounds (but he answered, Therefore I give him more).

26. For I say to you, That to every one that (improveth what he) hath shall be given (more); and from him that hath not (so as to improve it), even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27. But those mine enemies (of the Jewish nation), that would not I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

28. And when he had thus spoken, he went before (his disciples), ascending up to Jerusalem.

29. And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples,

30. Saying, Go ye into the village over-against you; in which at your entering you shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat; loose him, and bring him hither.

31. And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus ye shall say to him, (We do it) because the Lord hath need of him.

32. And they that were sent went their way, and found (all things) even as he said to them.

33. And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said to them, Why loose ye the colt?

34. And they said, The Lord hath need of him (and then they let them go with him).

35. And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their garments on the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36. And as he went, they (the multitude) spread their clothes in the way (as at the triumphant entrance of a prince).

37. And when he was come nigh (to Jerusalem, being) even at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and to praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works which they had seen (done by Christ);

38. Saying, Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord; (may) peace (be procured by him to us) in heaven, and glory (to God who lives) in the highest (place).

39. And some of the pharisees from among the multitude said to him, Master, rebuke thy disciples (for these acclamations).

40. And he answered and said to them, I tell you, that if these (my disciples) should hold their peace, the [6] stones would immediately cry out (i. e. my kingdom would be proclaimed by far more unlikely means).

41. And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and [7] wept over it,

42. Saying, (Happy had it been for thee) [8] if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day (of visitation, Luke i. 68.) the things which belong to thy peace (and welfare)! but now (through thy infidelity) they are hid from thine eyes.

43. For the days shall (shortly) come upon thee, that thine enemies shall [9] cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44. And shall lay thee [10] even with the ground, and thy children with thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not (i. e. didst not improve aright to faith and repentance) the time of thy visitation.

45. And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46. Saying to them, It is written, (Isa. lvi. 7.) My house (shall be called, or) is the house of prayer: but ye have made it (by your fraudulent, covetous dealings, and extortions) a den of thieves.

47. And he taught daily in the temple. But the chief priests, and scribes, and chief of the people, sought to destroy him;

48. And could not find what they might (safely) do (because of the multitude): for all the people were very attentive to hear him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 6. ΚΑΙ᾽ σπεύσας κατέβη, καὶ ὑπεδέξατο αὐτὸν χαίρων, And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.] By this joy, and by his diligence to see him, he shewed what a high esteem he had for that holy Jesus whom the scribes and pharisees despised.

[2] Ver. 8. Ἰδοὺ, τὰ ἡμίση τῶν ὑπαρχόντων μου, Κύριε, δίδωμι τοῖς πτωχοῖς, &c. Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have wronged any man, I restore him four-fold.] By two things Zaccheus shews the sincerity of his reformation and conversion; (1.) that he is ready to repair any injury that he had done to any man by oppression or false accusation, which is the proper import of the word συκοφαντέω, not only by adding a fifth part, as the law required in case of theft, when what was purloined was voluntarily restored, (Numb. v. 7.) nor by restoring double, as the trespasser was to do by law, when that which was taken away was found in his hands, (Exod. xxii. 4.) but by restoring for money and goods what the rigour of the law required only in the case of an ox or sheep killed after it was stolen, (Exod. xxii. 1.) i. e. four-fold; doing not only what justice required for compensation of the injury (for no man can be righteous till he, if he be able, hath satisfied for the injury done to his brother), but inflicting on himself this surplusage by way of penalty for his sin; and as a testimony of his great displeasure against himself for committing it. And (2.) whereas the law and tradition of the Jews required only that a fifth part of their income should be spent in charity, he bequeaths half his estate to charitable uses.

[3] Ver. 9. This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is υἱὸς Αβραὰμ, a son of Abraham.] Not only by faith, of which sonship the Jews, to whom Christ spake, had then no notion, but by birth; for the pharisees do not murmur against Christ that he did eat with one uncircumcised, but that he did it with a sinner: it would also have been no indication to the Jews that he was a son of Abraham, that he believed in Christ: and, lastly, his respect to the law of Moses, in making restitution, shews he was no stranger to that law. Moreover, though the phrase, salvation is come unto this house, doth not necessarily argue that his whole family believed, and the pronoun ipse, and the reason here assigned, seem personally to respect Zaccheus, the master of the house; yet it is piously observed, that Christ here promiseth salvation to the house, because it was the duty, and usually the practice, of the master of the family, to reduce his whole house to the faith he had embraced; as in the case of the centurion, Acts x. 2. of Lydia, Acts xvi. 14, 15. of the gaoler, ver. 33, 34. of Crispus the ruler of a synagogue, Acts xviii. 8. and of the nobleman, John iv. 46. 53.

[4] Ver. 12. Ἄνθρωπός τις εὐγενὴς ἐπορεύθη εἰς χώραν μακρὰν, λαβεῖν ἑαυτῷ βασιλείαν, καὶ ὑποστρέψαι, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive a kingdom, and to return.] Here observe,

First, That it is ingeniously conjectured by Mr. Le Clerc, that Christ took the rise of this parable from the custom of the kings of Judea, Herod the Great, and Archelaus his son, who usually went to Rome to receive the kingdom of Judea from Cæsar, without whose permission and appointment they durst not take the government into their hands; and in the case of Archelaus there is indeed some resemblance of this; for the Jews sent their complaints after him, shewing their unwillingness that this nobleman, or εὐγενὴς, the son of Herod the Great, to whom the kingdom of Judea was assigned by his father's will and testament, should reign over them; and that at his return, ἐθναρχίαν παραλαβὼν, he receiving the kingdom, tyrannized over them for ten years; but with this signal difference, that upon their second complaint to Cæsar, they prevailed against him, and procured his banishment to Vienna.

Secondly, That the parable here, as it respects our Lord Christ going into a far country to receive a kingdom, and return, either respects his going to heaven to sit down at the right hand of God in majesty and glory, and so take possession of his mediatory kingdom, and the return to punish the unbelieving and obdurate Jews; or going by his apostles and disciples to erect a kingdom among the gentiles, and then coming as it were back to punish the Jews, according to these words of his, The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached throughout all the world for a testimony to all nations, and then shall the end (of the Jewish polity) come. (Matt. xxiv. 14.) Note,

Thirdly, That this parable doth certainly respect the Jewish nation; as appears (1.) because they are here said to reject Christ's kingdom, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us; and upon this account are styled his enemies, and devoted to destruction by him, which agrees still only to the Jews, ver. 27. (2.) To them is threatened the punishment of the unprofitable servants, to wit, to be cast out into outer darkness, &c. (Matt. viii. 12. xxii. 13. xxv. 30. Luke xiii. 28.) In fine, it is expressly said, he therefore spake this parable to them, because they thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear, (ver. 11.)

Fourthly, The only difficulty remaining is, how to apply the pounds here, and the talents mentioned Matt. xxv. to any of the Jews; but this seeming difficulty is removed by a careful observation of the words, which shew they were distributed, not to his citizens, but τοῖς ἰδίοις δούλοις, to his own proper servants, Matt. xxv. 14. to his servants, ver. 13. i. e. to his apostles, five; and to the seventy disciples, or those who had received lesser spiritual gifts, two talents; to the Jews, who are also styled his own, John i. 14. only one talent (viz. the law and the prophets, promising to them the Messiah, and pointing out his advent and his characters to them); which they might and ought to have employed, so as to have believed, and fitted themselves to receive and to improve the gifts of the Holy Ghost, as others did.

Fifthly, Observe, that as the dreadful destruction of the unbelieving Jews was an emblem of the last judgment, so Christ's reckoning with them is a representation of that reckoning he will make with all men at the great day, for all the talents they have respectively received; and, with respect to that, this lord is said, Matt. xxv. 12. to come, μετὰ χρόνον πολὺν, after a long time.

[5] Ver. 25.] Though this verse is in St. Jerome, Theophylact, and in all the versions, and confirmed by the words following, λέγων αὐτοῖς, yet saith Dr. Mills, Lubens, nisi repugnarint omnes codices, pro irreptitio habuerim. (Proleg. p. 155.)

[6] Ver. 40. Οἱ λίθοι κεκράξονται, If these hold their peace, the stones will cry out.] This is a proverbial expression, signifying that if these followers of Christ should hold their peace, some more unlikely way should be found out for the proclaiming the Messiah, even by those who are reckoned the most stupid and insensate people, as by you the gentiles are. So " lapidi loqueris," thou speakest to one who hath little sense to hear or understand; lapis being metaphorically put for a stupid and brutish person: so when Aristippus* was asked by one, what his son would be better for instruction, he answered, that then ἐν τῷ θεάτρῳ οὐ καθήσεται λίθος ἐπὶ λίθον, one stone, that is, one stupid person, would not sit above another in the theatre. So ἠλιθιάζειν καὶ ἠλίθιον φθέγγεσθαι, in Aristophanes, is to be stupid, and speak without sense, ἀναίσθητοι γὰρ οἱ λίθοι, for stones have no sense: so the scholiast, p. 352. G.

[7] Ver. 41. Καὶ—ἔκλαυσεν ἐπ' αὐτῇ, And he wept over it.] I hope Epiphanius† may be mistaken, when he tells us, these words, and the like in John xi. 35. were blotted out, as being denied to be in the most correct copies; for it is certain, and confessed by him, that they were to be found in Irenæus, and in Origen† twice,* who saith, our Lord wept, εὐλόγως, with good reason, over Jerusalem: for he did it out of a profound charity, and deep commiseration of the evils coming upon Jerusalem; in both which virtues he came to be an example to us; and therefore can do nothing in it unworthy of himself.

[8] Ver. 42. Λέγων, ὅτι εἰ ἔγνως καὶ σὺ, Saying, (Happy hadst thou been) if thou hadst known in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace, &c.] Here the critics note, that εἰ often signifies utinam, and so the words will contain an ardent wish, that the people of Jerusalem had been thus wise, conceived after this manner, O that thou hadst known! but though this be true, (see note on Luke xii. 40.) yet the particle, ὅτι, that, makes it not applicable to this place; and therefore I think it better to supply the deficient sense, by the words contained in the parenthesis. Here then observe, (1.) that Christ here plainly shews, and takes it for granted, that the people of Jerusalem, in this day of their visitation by the Messias, might have savingly known the things belonging to their peace, since otherwise our Saviour's tears may rather have been looked upon as the tears of crocodiles, than of charity and true commiseration; and either his assertion, that they might have been happy, would have been contrary to truth; or his wish, that they had thus known the things belonging to their peace, contrary to his Father's will and decree; both which are palpably absurd: and seeing the will of Christ was always the same with that of his Father, it follows also, that God the Father had the same charitable affection to them, and so had laid no bar against their happiness by his decrees, nor been wanting in any thing on his part necessary towards their everlasting welfare. (See the note on Matt. xxiii. 37.)

[9] Ver. 43. The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side.] How exactly this was done, we learn from Josephus, saying,‡ that when Vespasian besieged Jerusalem, his army compassed the city round about, and kept them in on every side, and though it was judged a great and almost impracticable work to compass the whole city with a wall; yet Titus animating his soldiers to attempt it, they in three days built a wall of thirty-nine furlongs, having thirteen castles in it, and so cut off all hopes that any of the Jews within the city should escape.

[10] Ver. 44. And shall lay thee even with the ground,—and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another.] How this also was exactly done, Josephus teacheth, by saying, that § Titus having commanded his soldiers to dig up the city; this was so fully done, by levelling the whole compass of it except three towers, that they who came to see it were persuaded it never would be built again.

the chief priests and the scribes came upon him, (and rose up against him) with the elders,

2. And spake to him, saying, Tell us, by what authority doest thou these things (which only prophets, and persons allowed and approved by authority, shall do)? and who is he that gave thee this authority?

3. And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and (if you) answer me (you may thence know by what authority I do these things):

4. The baptism of John, was it from (the God of) heaven, or of men (only)?

5. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, (It was) from heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not (when he testified that I was the Christ)?

6. But if we say, Of men; all the people will (be ready to) stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7. And they answered, That they could not tell whence it was.

8. And Jesus said to them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

9. Then began he to speak to the people this parable: A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen (the Jewish doctors), and went into a far country for a long time (i. e. left them a long time, to manage and to make it fruitful).

10. And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, (requesting) that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen (the guides and rulers of the Jewish church) beat him, and sent him away empty.

11. And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12. And again he sent the (a) third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out; (killing God's prophets, and stoning them that were sent to them, xiii. 34. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16.)

13. Then said the Lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14. But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be our's.

15. So they (the Jews) cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him (Christ, the Son of God). What therefore shall the Lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16. He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And [1] when they (the pharisees) heard it, they said, God forbid (that this should happen to us).

17. And he beheld them, and said, (If this will not be so) what is then (the import of) this that is written, (Psal. cxviii. 22.) The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner? (Now you are these builders, and I, whom you reject, am that corner-stone.

18. And) whosoever shall fall upon (or stumble at) that stone shall be broken (i. e. shall do it to his ruin); but on whomsoever it shall fall (as it will most severely on you of this nation), it will grind him to powder: (i. e. subject him to the heaviest judgments, both here and hereafter; for they who through weakness, or the prejudices of their education, or reverence to their guides, shall stumble at this stone, and not believe, shall be hereafter punished, yet with much fewer stripes than those Jewish doctors, who obstinately and against full conviction hated and rejected the Messiah, and would not he should reign over them, chap. xiv.)

19. And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and (but) they feared the people: for they perceived that he spake this parable against them (representing them as the persons who would thus treat the Son of God, and should thus suffer by him for so doing).

20. And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of (i. e. advantage against him from) his words, that so they [2] might deliver him (up) to the power and authority of the governor.

21. And they asked him, saying, Master, we know th at thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God truly, (without favour to or fear of any, though the greatest in power and dignity: we therefore inquire of thee,)

22. Is it lawful for us (Jews) to give tribute to Cæsar, or no?

23. But he perceived their craftiness (in designing from his answer to represent him to the governor as an enemy to Cæsar, xxiii. 2. or to the people, as an enemy to their liberty), and (therefore) said to them, Why tempt ye me?

24. Shew me a (Roman) penny; (and tell me) whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, (It is) Cæsar's (image that is stamped upon it).

25. And he said to them, (This, by your own rules, is an evidence that Cæsar's government hath obtained among you,) render therefore to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's (the tribute due to him as your governor under God), and to God the things that are God's (i. e. the tribute due to his temple).

26. And (when he had thus said) they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at (the wisdom of) his answer, and held their peace.

27. Then came to him certain of the sadducees, who deny that there is (to be) any resurrection (of the body); and they asked him,

28. Saying, Master, Moses wrote to us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed to his brother.

29. There were therefore (with us) seven brethren: and the first (of them) took a wife, and died without children.

30. And the second took her to wife, he (also) died childless.

31. And the third took her; and in like manner (the residue of) the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

32. Last of all the woman died also.

33. Therefore in the resurrection (of the body from the dead, Mark xii. 23.) whose wife of them is she (to be)? for seven had her to wife.

34. And Jesus answering, said to them, (This question proceeds from a gross ignorance of the future state; for) the children of this world (only) marry, and are given in marriage:

35. But they that shall be counted worthy to obtain that world (which is to come), and (attain to) the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36. Neither can they die any more: for they are (as to duration) equal to the angels; and are [3] children of God, (who are to live with him for ever, John viii. 35.) being the children of the resurrection.

37. Now that the dead are (to be) raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he (i. e. God) calleth (to him, saying, I am) the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob (long after they were dead).

38. For he is not a God of the dead (i. e. of them who are so dead, as not to be the sons of the resurrection), but of the living (i. e. of them whose bodies shall live again): [4] for all live unto him.

39. Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, thou hast well said (in relation to the sadducees).

40. And after that they durst not ask him any questions at all.

41. And he saith to them, How say they (of the scribes) that Christ is David's son?

42. And (when) David himself saith in the book of Psalms, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand,

43. Till I make thine enemies thy footstool, (by subduing them, and putting them under thy feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25.)

44. David therefore (in these words) calleth him Lord, how is he then his son?

45. Then in the audience of all the people he said to his disciples,

46. Beware of the scribes, which [5] desire (affect) to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

47. Which devour widows' houses, and, for a shew (of devotion) make long prayers: the same shall receive greater damnation (for their hypocrisy).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

[1] Ver. 16. 'ΑΚΟΥΣΑΝΤΕΣ δὲ εἶπον, μὴ γένοιτο, And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.] In Matt. xxi. 41. Mark xii. 9. Christ inquires of them what the lord of the vineyard will do to these husbandmen? And they answer, He will destroy them, and let out his vineyard to other husbandmen: here Christ himself declares, what the lord of the vineyard will do to those husbandmen; and they seem to say, God forbid that he should do so. Now this seeming contrariety is by some solved thus, That the pharisees do not, by these words, deny that the lord of the vineyard would destroy those husbandmen; but knowing that the parable was spoken against them, they say, μὴ γένοιτο, Far be it from us, husbandmen, to do a work so worthy of this punishment; and this sense Christ's reply seems to require, viz. τί οὖν ἐστι τὸ γεγραμμένον, i. e. If the priests and pharisees will not do this, what means that which is written? what means that saying of the Psalmist, which even you, Jews, interpret of the Messiah, The stone which the builders refused? is become the head stone of (in) the corner, Psal. cxviii. 22. To strengthen this interpretation, let it be considered, that our Lord spake this parable against them, Matt. xxi. 45. Mark xii. 12. They therefore deny what they understood, that they should destroy the Son of the Lord of the vineyard, i. e. the Messiah, as not believing Christ to be the Messiah, but an impostor; but they deny not that they, who should do this, were worthy of this punishment: or, (2.) because St. Luke peculiarly notes, ver. 9. that this parable was spoken to the people, this may be their answer, Far be it from our rulers to do so vile a thing as may bring down this judgment on us; whilst the rulers and pharisees, who thought themselves far from being such husbandmen as they knew Christ suggested they would be, stick not to say such husbandmen deserve indeed to be destroyed, as thinking they should never be concerned in their ruin.

Either of these solutions I like better than that of Mr. Le Clerc, who will have these words in the beginning of this verse (He will come, and will destroy these husbandmen, and let out his vineyard to others) to be the words not of Christ, but of the Sanhedrin; and yet will have the words immediately following in the same verse (ἀκούσαντες δὲ εἶπον, μὴ γένοιτο, and understanding, they said, within themselves, God forbid) to be also the words of the same Sanhedrin: for could they, understanding that these words were spoken against them, first give this severe sentence against themselves, and then in the same breath contradict themselves? And, secondly, why must εἶπον be rendered, they said within themselves, and not in the hearing of Christ, who, when they had said this, looks upon them, and inquires of them, What then is it which is written? ver. 17.

[2] Ver. 20. Εἰς τὸ παραδοῦναι αὐτὸν τῇ ἀρχῇ καὶ τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, To deliver him up to the power and authority of the governor.] And therefore they put to him the question about paying tribute to Cæsar, hoping that, by denying it to be due to him from the Jews, they might accuse him as an enemy to Cæsar; for they knew that his decision of questions, relating only to their law and controversies, would not offend those Gallios.

[3] Ver. 36. Καὶ υἱοί εἰσι τοῦ Θεοῦ, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, And being sons of the resurrection, are sons of God.] For this υἱοθεσία, sonship, imports the redemption of the body from corruption, Rom. viii. 23. and they that are sons, are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, and to be glorified with him, ver. 17. see the note there; and the strength of Christ's argument depending on this notion, (note on Matt. xxii. 31, 32.) Jamblichus very likely from hence makes it the reward of good souls going out of the body, to be converted εἰς ἀγγέλους καὶ ἀγγελικὰς ψυχὰς, into angels and angelic souls, apud Stob. Ecl. Phys. p. 144.

[4] Ver. 38. Πάντες γὰρ αὐτῷ ζῶσιν, For all live to him.] Woltzogenius interprets these words thus, They live in respect of God's power and decree, that they shall live again; and hence he argues, that the souls of good men live not after death till the resurrection: for, saith he, Christ argues thus, If Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were not to live again, God, who styles himself their God, would be the God of the dead; whereas if their souls lived, and enjoyed a state of happiness, God would not be the God of the dead, though they never rose again. To this I answer,

Ans. 1. First, That when it is said, God is not the God of the dead, the meaning is, he is not the God of them who are to abide in a state of death, and never to enjoy the resurrection of the just; i. e. he owns not them for his, who are not to be the sons of the resurrection, (ver. 36.) and will not be called their God, as having not prepared for them a heavenly city. (Heb. xi. 16.) Hence the Scriptures say of them, that they are passed from death unto life, (John v. 24.) and that they shall not die; because Christ will raise them up at the last day. (John vi. 50.) And, in the opinion of the Jews, they only seem to die in the eyes of fools, because their hope is full of immortality, (Wisd. iii. 2—4.) and they proverbially say, the just live when they are dead; and, in this sense, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, would not live to God, though their souls lived with him, unless their bodies also rose again.

Ans. 2. Secondly, God here styles himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, i. e. not of their souls only, but of their persons; in which sense the Jews always understood these words; now thus he would be the God of the dead, though their souls lived, unless their bodies also rose again.

[5] Ver. 46. Θελόντων περιπατεῖν ἐν στολαῖς, Affecting to walk in long garments,] Down to their ancles, or to their feet, that no part of their bodies might be seen; for this, says Dr. Lightfoot, upon the place, was the talith that the disciples of the wise men wore. Good here is the observation of Mr. Le Clerc from Pope Celestine, touching the clergy, that they are to be discerned "à plebe vel cæteris, doctrinâ, non veste; conversatione, non habitu; mentis puritate, non cultu;" not so much by their apparel, as by their learning; not only by their habit, but their conversation; not by the adornment of their body, but by purity of mind.

CHAP. XXI.

1. [1] AND he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2. And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites.

3. And he said, Of a truth I say to you, That this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:

4. For all these have, of their abundance, cast in unto [2] the offerings of God (i. e. the treasure designed for the use of his temple): but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had (i. e. all that she had to live upon that day).

5. And as some spake of the temple, (shewing) how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said:

6. [3] As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in which there will not be left one stone upon another, which shall not be thrown down (from its place).

7. And they asked him, saying, Master (thou speakest dreadful things of this place), but (tell us) when shall these things be? and what sign will there be (to inform men) when these things shall come to pass? (We hope thou only speakest of the desolation which shall overturn all things at the end of this world.)

8. And he said, Take heed that ye (of this age) be not deceived: for (after my departure) many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time (of your redemption) draweth near (but must be all false Christs): go ye not therefore after them.

9. But (and) when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end (of the polity and temple of the Jews) is not by and by.

10. Then said he to them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11. And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs (of approaching judgments) shall there be from heaven.

12. But before all these (things), they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and (casting you) into prisons, (you) being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13. And it shall turn to you for a testimony (of my presence with you; they being not able to resist the wisdom of your doctrine, ver. 15. or gainsay the miracles by which you do confirm it).

14. Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer (to their inquiries and accusations):

15. For I will give you (in that hour, Mark xiii. 11.) a mouth (full of such power) and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist. (Acts vi. 10.)

16. And (through the persecutions, which shall then be great; and the apostates, which shall then be many, Matt. xxiv. 10. 13.) ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you they shall cause to be put to death.

17. And ye shall be hated of all (sorts of) men for my name's sake.

18. But (notwithstanding, if ye continue faithful to the end, Matt. xxiv. 13.) there shall not [4] one hair of your head perish (i. e. you shall not perish in that destruction, which shall then come upon the unbelieving Jews).

19. In your patience possess ye your souls (ἐν τῇ ὑπομενῇ ὑμῶν κτήσασθε τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν, you shall have your lives preserved as the reward of your Christian patience).

20. And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with (the Roman) armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21. (And) then let them that are in Judea flee to the mountains (of Peræa); and let them that are in the midst of it depart out (of Judea); and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22. For these be the days of vengeance (upon Judea), that all things which are written may be fulfilled (upon them).

23. But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days (and so are not in a condition thus to flee)! for there shall (then) be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24. And they shall (many of them) fall by the edge of the sword, and (many of them) shall be led away [5] captive into all nations: and [6] Jerusalem shall be trodden down of (or trodden by) the gentiles, till the times of the gentiles be fulfilled (i. e. till the glorious conversion of the gentiles, at the coming in of the Jews, who shall then also be gathered to their own city and country).

25. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars (i. e. in the heavens where they move); and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; [7] the sea and the waves roaring (see the note);

26. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after these things that are coming on the (habitable) earth: for the powers of heaven (the ecclesiastical and civil government) shall be shaken.

27. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud (or, as upon a cloud) with power and great glory.

28. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption (from your troubles) draweth nigh.

29. And he spake to them a parable (to this effect); Behold the fig-tree, and all the (other) trees;

30. When they now shoot forth (their leaves and branches), ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God (or, the coming of Christ, as a king, to execute his vengeance on his disobedient subjects of the Jewish nation) is (also) nigh at hand.

32. Verily I say to you, (The men of) this generation shall not pass away, till all (that I have spoken) be fulfilled.

33. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away (unperformed).

34. And [8] take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and (with the) cares of this life (which will unfit and indispose you for your flight, or your care to avoid these things), and so that day (will) come upon you unawares.

35. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth (or, land of Judea).

36. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man (thus coming to avenge himself on that nation).

37. And in the daytime he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38. And all the people came early in the morning to him (being) in the temple, to hear him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 1. HE looked, and saw men casting their gifts into the treasury.] That which was thus cast into the treasury was designed, saith Theophylact, not only for relief of the poor, but for sacred uses, and εἰς κοσμὸν τοῦ ναοῦ, for the ornament of the temple; and this might give ground to Josephus to say, the temple was built, not only with the bounty of Herod, that not being sufficient for the work, but with all that was contained in the holy treasury, and with the tributes sent from all parts of the world; and so that, which men thought could never be finished, was, through patience and length of time, accomplished. (De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 14. p. 916.)

[2] Ver. 4. Ἔβαλον εἰς τὰ δῶρα τοῦ Θεοῦ, Cast in unto, i. e. among, the offerings of God.] For it seems a mistake to say, that δῶρα, gifts, signifies the treasury itself, which, in Hebrew, is called korban; for that is δῶρον, not δῶρα in the plural; and, according to this sense, βάλλειν τὰ δῶρα εἰς τὸ γαζοφυλάκιον, must be, to cast the treasury into the treasury, (ver. 1.)

[3] Ver. 6. Ταῦτα ἃ θεωρεῖτε, As for these things which you behold,] Quod ad hæc attinet. So Plautus, "Naucratem, quem convenire volui in navi non erat," Amphitr. act. 4. sc. 1. "Hos, quos videtis hîc stare captivos duos," Capt. Prol. et act. 1. sc. 2. "istos captivos duos—his indito catenas; item Terentius, Eunuchum, quem dedisti nobis quas turbas dedit?" See like examples from the Old Testament, Psal. xviii. 30. civ. 17. Eccl. ii. 14. Hos. iii. 11. xii. 7. Neh. i. 3.; in the New, Acts vii. 40. x. 36. 1 John ii. 27. Apoc. ii. 26. vi. 8. where as for, or "quod attinet ad," is understood.

[4] Ver. 18. Καὶ θρὶξ ἐκ τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν οὐ μὴ ἀπόληται, And there shall not one hair of your head perish.] This, saith Grotius, is a proverbial expression, used 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 2 Sam. xiv. 11. 1 Kings i. 52. Acts xxvii. 34. signifying that they should sustain no loss, i. e. all circumstances considered; for, to suffer some loss for the present, to gain eternal life, is the greatest advantage; whilst that, which seems at present to be lost, is laid up with God, to be restored to us with usury: and this limitation seems necessary, not only from the former words, some of you they shall cause to be put to death, (ver. 16.) but also from the event; for, as most of the apostles were cut off before the destruction of Jerusalem; so the protomartyr Stephen was taken away by the Jews: James the less, and other Christians, by Ananus* the high-priest. But yet I cannot acquiesce in this interpretation; (1.) because this proverb, in all the places cited, contains a promise, that the persons spoken to should not die, or perish in the danger they lay under, or as they apprehended they might do; so no hair of any man's head shall perish, Acts xxvii. 34. is the same as, there shall be no loss of any man's life, ver. 22. One hair of Jonathan's head shall not perish, 1 Sam. xiv. 45. is, in the same verse, οὐ θανατωθήσεται, he shall not be put to death: A hair of thy son's head shall not fall to the earth, 2 Sam. xiv. 11. is, in the same verse, they shall not destroy thy son: One hair of Adonijah shall not fall to the earth, 1 Kings i. 52. is, in the same verse, he shall not be put to death. Christ, therefore, seems to promise, that whatever might befal them at other times; yet, in these days of vengeance upon the Jews, or at the time of the destruction of the city and the temple, none of those Christians, which endured to the end, should perish in that siege. And this the following words seem to insinuate, in patience possess your souls; that is, saith Tertullian, "Per tolerantiam salvos facietis vosmet ipsos," by patience you will preserve yourselves, ver. 19. so Matt. xxiv. 13. He that endureth to the end shall be saved. (See here, ver. 8.) Accordingly the Pseudo-Clemens, in his Recognitions, saith, that this was an evident token of this great mystery, that† every one that believed in this prophet, and was baptized in his name, "ab excidio belli, quod incredulæ genti imminet ac loco ipsi, servaretur illæsus," should be kept safe from the destruction which should happen to that unbelieving nation, and to their temple, by the war. And Theodoret‡ saith, there was a fame, that when Vespasian and Titus came to fight against them, τοὺς τηνικαῦτα πιστοὺς ἐξ ἀποκαλύψεως τὴν πόλιν καταλιπεῖν, the faithful that were there, by revelation, left the city, according to our Lord's admonition, Luke xxi. 20. and that of them Zachary foretold, the rest shall not perish. Add to this what is noted on Matt. xxiv. 13.

[5] Ver. 24. Καὶ αἰχμαλωτισθήσονται εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, And shall be carried captive into all nations.] Accordingly, Josephus informs us, that the number of those, who were taken captives by the Romans during the war, was § ἐννέα μυριάδες καὶ ἑπτακισχίλιοι, ninety and seven thousand; of which some of the fairest and tallest Titus reserved for his triumph; of the rest, that were about seventeen years old, he sent some to Egypt to work in the mines, πλείστους δ' εἰς τὰς ἐπαρχίας διεδωρήσατο, most of them he dispersed through the Roman provinces, to be destroyed, in their theatres, by the sword and wild beasts; but they that were under seventeen years of age, ἐπράθησαν, were sold.

[6] Καὶ Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἔσται πατουμένη ὑπὸ ἐθνῶν, ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν, And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles, till the time of the gentiles be fulfilled.] That is, say some interpreters, till the full number of the gentiles, which God shall call, be completed. This, I confess, is a very ancient interpretation of these words; but it is contrary to the express word of the apostle Paul, who declares, that, at the conversion of the Jews, there shall be a greater and more glorious conversion of the gentiles, than that which happened at the fall of them; that their fulness should be much more the riches of the gentiles than their fall was, (Rom. xi. 12, 13.) and that their coming in should be to the gentiles as life from the dead, and should so much more enrich them, than their casting off, (ver. 15.) I therefore do interpret these words thus, Jerusalem shall be inhabited, not by the Jews, but by the gentiles ruling there, till the season for the full conversion of the still heathen-gentiles shall come in; i.e. till the time of the conversion of the Jews, and the flowing in of all nations to them. See this exposition confirmed in the appendix to the eleventh chapter to the Romans, and Dr. Hammond's sense of the words confuted there. (See here, Examen Millii.)

Ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν.] These two words are in St. Jerome, Theophylact, and in all the versions, and yet rejected by Dr. Mills, Proleg. p. 133.

[7] Ver. 25. Ἠχούσης. θαλάσσης καὶ σάλου, The sea and the waves roaring.] To this I would refer those words of Josephus; at that time, ἀμήχανος ἐκρήγνυται χειμών, an immense storm of the sea brake out, and violent winds, with most vehement showers, and terrible lightnings and thunders, καὶ μυκήματα σειωμένης τῆς γῆς ἐξαίσια, and vast roarings of the shaken earth: (De Bello Jud. lib. iv. cap. 17. p. 881.) or rather to that violent storm, called malemboreas, which happened to the Jews at Joppa, got in boats to the sea, in which their boats perished, with a violent noise, the people howling, and the waves roaring at the same time; of which Josephus gives a very tragical description, De Bello Jud. lib. iii. cap. 29. p. 855.

[8] Ver. 34—36. Προσέχετε δὲ ἑαυτοῖς, &c. But take heed to yourselves, &c.] Here our Saviour calls upon the believing Christians, to take care and use the greatest vigilance that they do not miscarry in this dreadful season, by reason of that excess and luxury, which may render them unmindful of it; or those cares, which may render them unwilling to part with their temporal concerns, lest they should be involved in that ruin, which would come on others as a snare, suddenly and unexpectedly; and that they should add to this vigilance, constant prayer to God, that they might be found worthy to escape these tremendous judgments, and might stand safely and boldly before the Son of man, when he comes to execute them on the unbelieving Jews. Whence note,

First, That God's promise of a deliverance to the Christians then, was only conditional, provided that they took care to avoid those sins, which might render them obnoxious to these judgments, and to do those things which might render them worthy to escape them.

Secondly, That there is to be a connexion of our endeavours with the Divine aid and providence for our preservation; and that we are not to expect preservation immediately from him, without the use of those means, which he hath put into our power to effect it.

CHAP. XXII.

1. NOW the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which (from the beginning of it) is called the Passover.

2. And the chief priests and scribes sought [1] how they might (safely) kill him; for they feared the people.

3. Then [2] entered Satan into Judas, surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve (which attended him).

4. And he went away (from the twelve), and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him to them.

5. And they were glad (of the motion), and covenanted to give him money, (even thirty pieces of silver, Matt. xxvi. 15.)

6. And he [3] promised (to make good his word), and he sought opportunity to betray him to them in the absence of the multitude (as ἄτερ ὄχλου, without tumult).

7. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must (according to the law) be killed.

8. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat (of it).

9. And they said to him, (or, for they had said to him, Matt. xxvi. 17. Mark xiv. 12.) Where wilt thou that we prepare (it)?

10. And he said to them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11. And ye shall say to the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12. And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13. And they went, and found (it) as he had said to them, and they made ready the passover.

14. And when the hour (of eating it) was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15. And he said to them, With [4] desire I have desired (i. e. I have earnestly desired) to eat this passover with you before I suffer:

16. For I say to you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it (that which was typified by it) be fulfilled in the kingdom of God (procuring your spiritual redemption by the oblation of the true paschal Lamb).

17. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18. For I say to you, I will not (any more) drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19. And he took bread, and gave thanks (over it), and brake it, and gave (it) to them, saying, This (bread given) is (the memorial of) my body which is given for you: [5] this do (break bread henceforth thus) in remembrance of me, (giving my body to be broken for you, 1 Cor. xi. 24.)

20. [6] Likewise also (he took) the cup after (the end of the paschal) supper, saying, (The wine contained in) this cup is (the memorial of) the new testament (or covenant ratified) in my blood, which is shed for you, (for the remission of your sins, Matt. xxvi. 28.)

21. But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth (or delivers) me (up to the chief priests) is with me on the table.

22. And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was [7] determined (by that God, who, by his prophets, hath foretold my sufferings): but (yet) woe to that man by whom he is betrayed!

23. And they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

24. And there was also a [8] strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest (in Christ's kingdom).

25. And (to remove the causes of that strife) he said to them, The kings of the gentiles exercise lordship over them (at pleasure); and they that exercise authority over them are called benefactors, (or, they who are called benefactors, or princes, exercise authority upon them as their subjects: see Matt. xx. 25. Mark x. 42.)

26. But ye shall not be (or do) so (i. e. ye shall not exercise such dominion over others in my kingdom): but he that is greatest among you, let him be (subject) as the younger (are to the elder, 1 Pet. v. 5.) and he that is chief, (let him be) as he that doth serve.

27. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I (the head of this kingdom) am among you as he that serveth (and so shall you be among others).

28. Ye are they that have continued with me in my temptation (i. e. my low and afflicted state on earth).

29. And (though I permit you no dominion over others at pleasure, but a ministry only for their good, yet) I appoint you to a [9] kingdom, as my Father hath appointed to me (giving you power in my name to preside over my church, making laws, as I have done in his name, by which they shall be governed);

30. That ye may eat and drink at my table (and so have the honour of grandees) in my kingdom, and (may) sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (and so may have the highest power in it).

31. And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath [10] desired to have you, that he may sift (i. e. toss and shake) you (by temptations), as wheat (is tossed and shaken in a sieve).

32. But I have prayed for thee (who wilt suffer most by his temptations), that thy faith fail not (utterly): and when thou art converted (i. e. returned from thy fall), strengthen thy brethren (subject to the like temptations).

33. And he said to him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34. And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day (in the morning), before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

35. And he said to them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, (We lacked) nothing.

36. Then said he to them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it (with him), and likewise his scrip; and he that hath no sword, [11] let him sell his garment, and buy one (i. e. now the times will be so perilous, that I have need to warn you to arm yourselves, as much as may be, by faith and patience, against the danger of them).

37. For I say to you, This that is written (of me) must yet be accomplished in (upon) me, (viz.) And he was reckoned among the transgressors, (Isa. liii. 12.) for the things (written) concerning me (will) have an end (or accomplishment).

38. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough (to answer my design, for I intended only, by this monition, to warn you of the distresses that were now approaching, that you may be prepared for them).

39. And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40. And when he was at the place, he said to them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation (i. e. that you be not overcome by it).

41. And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed,

42. Saying, Father, if thou be willing, let this [12] cup pass from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done.

43. And (upon this prayer) there [13] appeared to him an angel from heaven, strengthening him, (by letting him know he should be heard in that he feared, Heb. v. 7.)

44. And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were [14] great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping; for (their great) sorrow (had dispirited them, and so rendered them sleepy).

46. And (he) said to them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

47. And while he yet spake, behold (there came to apprehend him) a multitude, and (with them) he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, (who) went before them, and he drew near to Jesus to kiss him (this being the sign given, by which they that were with him should know Jesus).

48. But Jesus said to him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? (Art thou guilty of such vile hypocrisy as to make this the signal of thy treachery?)

49. When they which were about him saw what would follow, they (not rightly apprehending the meaning of his words, ver. 46.) said to him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

50. And one of them (not staying for an answer) smote the (a) servant of the high-priest, and cut off his right ear.

51. And Jesus answered (i. e. spake with relation to that action) and said, [15] Suffer ye (me) thus far (to be at liberty as to restore the man to his ear). And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52. Then Jesus said to the chief priests, and [16] captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53. When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but [17] this is your hour, and the (hour of the) power of darkness (i. e. the devil and you, his instruments, are now permitted to compass my death).

54. Then they took him, and led him, and brought him into the high-priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55. And when they (the servants) had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down amongst them.

56. But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him.

57. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

58. And after a little while another saw him, and said (as he had heard from another maid), Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59. And about the space of an hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilean.

60. And Peter said, Man, I know not (any thing of) what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

61. And (then) the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said to him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

62. And (upon this) Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

63. And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him.

64. And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, (Thou, who callest thyself a prophet) prophesy, (or, tell us) who is it that smote thee?

65. And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

66. And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief priests, and the scribes, came together, and led him into their council, saying,

67. Art thou the Christ? tell us (whether it be so or not). And he said to them, If I tell you, ye will not believe (me):

68. And if I also ask you (questions to convince you that I am so, as formerly I have done, xx. 3.) ye will not answer me, nor let me go;

69. (Yet this I do assure you, that) hereafter (ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, from this time of my death) shall the Son of man (soon) sit on the right hand of the power of God.

70. Then said they all, Art thou then the [17] Son of God? and he said to them, Ye say that (which) I am.

71. And they said, What need we any farther witness? for we ourselves have heard, (out) of his own mouth, (that he styles himself the Son of God, and so blasphemes, by making himself equal with God, John v. 18. x. 33.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII.

[1] Ver. 2. ΠΩΣ ἀνέλωσιν αὐτον, How they might take him away.] i. e. Without a tumult of the people. (Mark xiv. 2.)

[2] Ver. 3. Εἰσῆλθε δὲ ὁ Σατανᾶς εἰς Ἰούδαν, Then entered Satan into Judas.] That is, two days before the Passover: for, first, as for that supper in which our Saviour gave him the sop, at which Satan entered, the Scripture doth expressly tell us, that it was held πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα, before the feast of the Passover, John xiii. 1. And when our Saviour, having given him the sop, said, What thou doest, do quickly; some of our Lord's disciples thought that Christ had bid him buy those things which were needful for the paschal feast, (ver. 29.) whence it is evident that feast was not yet celebrated by them; and here St. Luke saith, Satan entered into Judas, and he consulted with the high-priests, and with the soldiers, how he might deliver him up unto them: and then it follows, ver. 7, 8. then came the days of unleavened bread, and Christ said to his disciples, prepare the passover for us, that we may eat; so that Satan must have entered into Judas before the passover was prepared. The apostle declares, that Satan ἐνεργεῖται, inwardly worketh in the children of disobedience, (Eph. ii. 2.) and leads them captive at his will. (2 Tim. ii. 26.) When therefore Judas had, through the temptation of his covetousness, robbed even the poor of the charity designed for them, (John xii. 6.) Satan suggests unto him another way to satisfy his avarice, even the betraying of his Master for a sum of money; and when this suggestion prevailed with him to go to the high-priests with that question, What will you give me to betray him? (Matt. xxvi. 15.) then Satan fully entered into him, and carried him on, without remorse, to the performance of that horrid enterprise.

[3] Ver. 6. Ἐξωμολόγησε, And he promised.] i. e. Consented to do the thing: for that this doth not only signify to confess, and to give thanks; but also to consent and engage, is evident, not only from the institution of Theophilus, where we read thus, προμίττεις, προμίττω, τοῦτ' ἔστι, ὁμολογεῖς, ὁμολογῶ, that is, ὁμολογεῖν to promise; but from Phavorinus, who renders ὁμολογῶ, συντίθεμαι, σύμφημι, I promise, I consent, of which import of the word we find many instances from Plato, Xenophon, Demosthenes in Constantine; so that ἐξωμολόγησε is here well rendered, he promised, or consented to the price: nor is it to be wondered that St. Luke, born at Antioch, where there was an academy, and studying in the universities of Greece, should use this word, not as the Septuagint, but as those Grecians did.

[4] Ver. 15. Ἐπιθυμίᾳ ἐπιθύμησα, &c. With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.] I cannot here see, what Grotius and others affirm, that Christ gives here a reason why he would anticipate the paschal supper, our Lord himself giving a reason of these words in the following supper, viz. that he would eat no more of it, till that which was typified by this paschal lamb was fulfilled in the kingdom of heaven; that is, till he, who is styled our paschal Lamb, was offered, and, by his death, had procured to men a liberty from that death, by the fear of which they were formerly kept in bondage, (Heb. ii. 15.) and, in perpetual memory of his oblation, and the benefits purchased by it, had instituted a new paschal supper, in which his disciples should eat at his table with him. That our Lord did not antedate the paschal supper, see in the discourse on that subject.

[5] Ver. 19. Τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, Do this in remembrance of me.] That is, say the papists, sacrifice this, very absurdly; for who ever read in any Greek author, that σῶμα ποιεῖν signified to sacrifice a body? nor do the Latins say, facere victimam, but facere victima, understanding sacra. Moreover, it is said also of the cup τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, do this, (1 Cor. xi. 25.) and yet it is not the cup by which the new covenant is sacrificed, but by which it is established; nor do the papists say this cup is sacrificed, but only that it is consecrated by those words.

[6] Ver. 20. Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὸ ποτήριον, μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι, &c. Likewise also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament of my blood.] Here is a double metonymy; (1.) that of the cup for the wine contained in it; (2.) that of the sign for the thing signified by it, the wine being the symbol of that blood in which that new covenant was established. And this, saith the evangelist, was said after the paschal supper, to signify that this cup pertained not to the solemnity of the Passover.

[7] Ver. 22. Καὶ ὁ μὲν υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου πορεύεται κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, And the Son of man goeth, as it was determined (of him): but (yet) woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed!] Κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, i. e. according to the prophecies concerning the death of Christ, made by counsel and appointment of God. From the woe, denounced upon him that should betray the Messias, we learn, that he was highly criminal in so doing, and therefore could not be under an absolute necessity of doing so: therefore, who, from these words, gather that Judas was, from the beginning of this action to the end, under an absolute necessity of doing as he did, by virtue of the decree of God impelling him to this action, render Judas free from guilt; and to them, saith Grotius, we may say as Irenæus* did to Florinus, maintaining that some souls were not by choice, but by nature, good; and others were, by nature, evil: these doctrines are not sound, nor consonant to the sentiments of the church; nay, they induce the greatest impiety; these things, neither the ancients, which were before us, and which were the disciples of the apostles, delivered, nor durst our heretics assert. Since God is good, saith Plato,† we must by no means allow any body to say, he is the cause of the evil done by any; but must by all means repel and reject such opinions; and indeed all the ancients unanimously held, that neither prophecies, nor the prescience nor the decrees of God, laid any necessity upon the will of man; for they who assert this, saith Origen,‡ absolve sinners from all guilt, and lay the charge of all the evils which they do upon God, as, by his decree, prescience, or prediction, laying upon them that necessity, which will not suffer them to do otherwise. They also (saith he) take away τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν, the freedom of our will, and with that all praise and dispraise, or all difference betwixt things worthy of praise or reprehension. § This doctrine also cuts off all that is said of the equity of the Divine judgment, and of the threats made against, or the punishments inflicted on, the wicked, and of the promises of a better life, and the reward of them that do well.—For (saith Clemens of Alexandria‖) there is no difference betwixt faith and infidelity, nor is either of them worthy of praise or dispraise, if they have προηγουμένην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ τὰ πάντα δυνατοῦ φυσικὴν ἀνάγκην, an antecedent physical necessity from God: nor are praises or reprehensions, rewards or punishments, just,¶ μὴ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐχούσης τὴν ἐξουσίαν τῆς ὁρμῆς καὶ ἀφορμῆς, if the soul hath not a freedom of desiring or abstaining from things, but is carried on to them by an unwilling necessity. God, saith Irenæus,* hath always preserved to man his freedom and power over his own actions, "ut justè damnentur, qui non obediunt ei," that they may justly be condemned who do not obey him: for man (saith Justin Martyr†) would neither be worthy of praise or reward, οὐκ ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ἑλόμενος τὸ ἀγαθὸν, did he not of himself choose what is good, but was so by nature; nor, being evil, could he be justly punished, if he were not so of himself; ‡ἀλλ' οὐδὲν δυνάμενος εἶναι ἕτερον παρ' ὃ ἐγεγόνει, but could be no other than what he was made; for we are crowned or punished διὰ τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν, for that which it is in our power to do. And this they especially apply to this fact of Judas. For (saith Chrysostom) neither is prescience the cause of wickedness, nor does it induce a necessity of doing it: for Judas was not a traitor, because God foresaw it; but he foresaw it, because Judas would be so. (See the note on Acts ii. 23. iv. 28.)

[8] Ver. 24. Ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ φιλονεικία, There was also contention, which of them should be accounted the greatest.] i. e. Which of them should be so: for that δοκέω is oftentimes an expletive, see 1 Cor. vii. 40. I see not any reason why interpreters should here say, this account of their contention is misplaced, since in the other evangelists it is mentioned after Christ's admonition concerning his passion, viz. Matt. xx. 25. Mark x. 42. Here Christ saith more than he did there.

[9] Ver. 29. Κἀγὼ διατίθεμαι ὑμῖν, &c. And I appoint you to a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed to me.] Christ speaks not here of the heavenly kingdom common to all the faithful, but of a kingdom proper to his apostles, viz. that as his Father had given him power to make laws, by which all his subjects should be governed, and to which they should be subject, so did he give to his apostles power to deliver to Christians those evangelical laws, which they should all be obliged to obey. Now hence it follows, that the gospels and epistles of the apostles must be owned as the laws of Christ; and whereas the nobility in a kingdom use to be known by two things, the honour and the power imparted to them—their honour in eating at the king's table; their power in having a share in the government under the king—therefore our Saviour represents the honour of his apostles by eating and drinking with him at his table, and their power by judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

[10] Ver. 31, Ὁ Σατανᾶς ἐξῃτήσατο ὑμᾶς, &c. Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: Ver. 32. but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not.] Here note,

First, For the consolation of good men, that Satan cannot afflict or tempt them without Divine permission. (Job i. 12.)

Secondly, That Satan is said σιτιάσαι, to sift those whom he tempts and afflicts; because afflictions toss and shake them, as wheat is tossed and shaken in a sieve.

Thirdly, That Christ prayed, that the faith of Peter might not fail, not because he was constituted by him the head of the church; but because he was so infirm in faith as to deny his Master thrice; whence he deserved to make shipwreck of his faith by the subtraction of Divine grace, and had actually done so, had not his sudden conversion obtained the pardon of his sin.

Note, lastly, That it is the duty of those, who truly have repented of their faults, to commiserate the fall of others, and be solicitous for their confirmation in the faith.

[11] Ver. 36. Καὶ ὁ μὴ ἔχων, &c. And he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.] This is not a command to buy a sword, or to use one to repel force with force, as is apparent, partly because Christ saith here, two swords are enough, ver. 38. which sure they could not be for the repelling those that were to come against them; and partly because he reprehends Peter for using one in this manner, Matt. xxvi. 52. It is therefore only a monition, that the times were now to be so perilous, that, if things were to be acted by human power, there would be more need of swords and purses than ever: and by saying that two swords were enough, some good interpreters think, he designed they should understand, he spake not this to bid them provide swords, but rather to acquaint them by symbols after the oriental manner, with the approaching danger, that they by faith and patience might be the better armed against it. According to the descant of Theophylact, οὕτω προνοεῖσθε ἑαυτῶν ὡς κινδύνοις καὶ πολέμοις προσκρούσοντες. So provide for yourselves as persons that may expect to meet with perils and wars.

[12] Ver. 42. Εἰ βούλει παρανεγκεῖν τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, Father, if thou be willing to remove this cup from me.] He, by the Jewish phrase of a cup, expresseth his death: so R. Caijah comforts R. Lakis upon the death of his son, by saying, This is the path which hath been trod since the beginning of the creation; many have drunk, and many shall drink, of this cup.

[13] Ver. 43. Ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ ἐνισχύων αὐτὸν, And there appeared to him an angel from heaven strengthening him.] In St. Jerome's* time these words seem to be wanting both in some Latin and Greek copies, as is insinuated in these words cited in the margin: nor hath Ambrose any thing of this angel in his commentary on this chapter. But Epiphanius,† answering an objection of the Arians, contending Christ could not be God, ὅτι ἐπεδέετο καὶ ἰσχύος ἀγγέλων, because he wanted the help of angels, acknowledged, that this was written in the Gospel of St. Luke, making no mention of any variation of the copies; whence it may be conjectured, this variation happened after the conflict with the Arians. But whereas Woltzogenius saith after them, that this anxiety and consternation of our Lord, which required that he should be strengthened by an angel, proves he was not God; he might as well have hence concluded, that he was not filled with the Spirit above measure; and before he made this conclusion, he should have confuted Grotius, saying here, that the Divinity dwelling in him had subtracted his influence; whence Christ, being left to his human nature, needed the comfort of an angel: for otherwise, he who with a word made the whole band of soldiers fall to the earth, (John xviii. 6.) and healed the ear of Malchus with a touch (ver. 51. of this chapter), sure gave sufficient indications of the Divinity residing in him.

[14] Ver. 44. Ἐγένετο δὲ ὁ ἱδρὼς αὐτοῦ ὡσεὶ θρόμβοι αἵματος, And his sweat was as it were great drops of blood.] I own that these words do not certainly signify that the matter of this sweat was blood, but only that it was thick and viscous, like to blood falling from the nose in a small clot, at the end of bleeding; but I see nothing why this might not be so great an agony, as to force blood out of his capillary veins to mix with it, this being no unusual thing: for Aristotle* says, ἤδη τινὲς ἵδρωσαν αἱματώδη ἱδρῶτα, some have sweat a bloody sweat; and again,† ἤδη τισὶν ἱδρῶσαι συνέβη αἱματώδει περιττώματι διὰ καχεξίαν, some, through an ill habit of body, have sweat a bloody excrement. And Diodorus Siculus‡ saith of the Indian serpents, that if any one be bitten by them, he is tormented with excessive pains, καὶ ῥύσις ἱδρῶτος αἱματοειδοῦς κατεῖχε, and seized with a bloody sweat.

[15] Ver. 51. Ἐᾶτε ἕως τούτου, Suffer ye thus far.] I do not think that Christ spake this to his disciples, bidding them to permit his enemies to deal thus with him, and not to do any thing for his rescue, but rather that he spake thus to the soldiers, Permit this injury, or assault, offered by one of my apostles, which I will presently repair: for it follows, and he healed him; and this he said and did, partly to shew, that he who had such a power to heal and throw down his enemies was taken willingly, and not for want of power to preserve himself, and partly to preserve his apostles from their assaults.

[16] Ver. 52. Καὶ στρατηγοὺς τοῦ Ἱεροῦ, And captains of the temple.] It is past doubt with me, saith Dr. Lightfoot, that these captains of the temple were not the Roman soldiers placed in the tower of Antonia, of whose conspiring against the life of Christ we read not; but the captains of the several watches of the temple: for, say the Jews, the priests kept watch in three places in the temple, and the Levites in twenty-one; and to every one of these watches there was a chief, they consisting of many, and to them all one, who was eminently ἀρχηγὸς, the captain, or chief ruler of the temple. But these, say some, could not be Jews, because they kept watch at the Passover, and on the sabbath. To this I answer, that the Jews did not think their feasts or sabbaths were profaned by service done in and for the temple on that day. (See the notes on Matt. xii. 5.) That the Jews had then such watches, we learn from those words of Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 65. ἔχετε κουστωδίαν, Ye have a watch: that the office of the priests and the Levites was called a warfare, see note on 1 Cor. ix. 7. That these captains were not Romans may probably be argued even from their name, captains of the temple; which name is never given by Josephus to the governors of the soldiers in the tower of Antonia; they being by him called φρούραρχοι,§ the governors of the castle; whereas the officer is still called ὁ στρατηγὸς, the ruler of the temple, both by the Scripture, (Acts iv. 1. v. 24. 26.) and by Josephus:‖ and by Dr. Lightfoot he is supposed to be the same with the man of the mount, so often mentioned in the Jewish writers, or the ruler of the mountain of the house. And by what we read of him, both in Josephus and the Scripture, he seems to be an officer of the high-priests, appointed to bring them who offended in the temple (as the apostles

[17] Ver. 53. Αὕτη ὑμῶν ἐστιν ἡ ὥρα, καὶ ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ σκότους, This is your hour, and the power of darkness.] i. e. This is the time in which it is permitted to you to exercise your malice, and execute your bloody designs against me, and in which Satan is permitted to rush upon me with his most furious temptations.

[18] Ver. 70. Σὺ οὖν εἶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, Art thou then the Son of God?—I am. Ver. 71. What need we any farther witnesses? Matt. xxvi. 63. 65. Behold, ye have heard his blasphemy.] They conclude Christ guilty of blasphemy, and, consequently, of death, because he styled himself the Son of God, not in their sense, in which they allowed that of the Psalmist to belong to him, Thou art my Son, Psal. xxvii. 12. but in his own; i. e. because being a man he made himself God. (John x. 33.) Whence it is manifest, (1.) that in the sense of the Jews, to own himself the Son of God, and to make himself God, was the same thing. (2.) Hence also it is certain, that the Jews of that age did not think the Messias was to be God, but only a man, who could not challenge to himself divinity, seeing they never conclude him a blasphemer, because he said he was the Christ, but only because he said he was the Son of God; by that making himself equal with God, (John v. 18.) and because he declared he shortly was to sit at the right hand of Power. (Matt. xxvi. 64.)

CHAP. XXIII.

1. AND the whole multitude of them (of the Sanhedrin) arose, and led him to Pilate.

2. And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and [1] forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, (see xx. 25. by) saying that he himself is Christ a King.

3. And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? He answered and said, Thou sayest it (i. e. it is as thou hast said).

4. Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5. And they were the more fierce (upon these words of Pilate), saying, He stirreth up (all) the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from [2] Galilee to this place.

6. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked them, whether the man was a Galilean.

7. And as soon as he knew that he belonged to Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself was also at Jerusalem at that time.

8. And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9. Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him (to) nothing.

10. And the chief priests and scribes stood (before Herod) and vehemently accused him.

11. And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe (as a mock king), and sent him again to Pilate.

12. And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

13. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests, and the rulers, and the people,

14. Said to them, Ye have brought this man to me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him:

15. No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him (to whose jurisdiction he belongs); and, lo, nothing (as to one) worthy of death is done to him (by Herod).

16. I will therefore [3] chastise him (as if he were to die), and (then I will) release him (as the fittest person to be released at this feast).

17. (This he said) for (because) of necessity he must release one to them at the feast (of the Passover).

18. And (but) they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release to us Barabbas:

19. Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.

20. Pilate therefore (being) willing to release Jesus, spake again to them (of releasing them).

21. But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22. And he said to them the third time, Why (are ye so desirous of his death)? what evil hath he done? (For my part) I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and (then) let him go (as the fittest person to be released at this feast).

23. And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed (at last with Pilate to consent to his crucifixion).

24. And (so) Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required.

25. And he released to them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison (viz. Barabbas), whom they had desired; but he delivered (up) Jesus to (be dealt with according to) their will.

26. And as they led him away (bearing his cross, John xix. 17. finding him weak, and not well able to sustain it), they laid hold on one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

27. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28. But Jesus turning to them said, Ye daughters of Jerusalem, (ye have cause to) weep not for me, but for yourselves, and for your children.

29. For, behold, the days are [4] coming, in which they shall (find cause to) say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps that never gave suck.

30. Then shall they begin (to feel such calamities as will cause them) to [5] say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us (from the wrath of God, Rev. vi. 16.)

31. For if they do these things in a [6] green tree, (i. e. to me a righteous person, Ezek. xx. 47. xxi. 2, 3.) what shall be done in the dry? (i. e. to those wicked persons who, like the dry tree, are fit to be burned in the fire.)

32. And there were also two other malefactors led with him to be put to death.

33. And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors; one on the right hand, and the other on the left (hand of Jesus).

34. Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do, (i. e. who it is they crucify, Acts xiii. 27.) And they (viz. the soldiers) parted his raiment, and cast lots (for his upper garment, John xix. 23, 24.)

35. And the people stood beholding (him). And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him (now) save himself, if he be the Christ, the chosen of God.

36. And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him [7] vinegar,

37. And saying, If thou be (indeed) the King of the Jews, save thyself.

38. And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew (viz.), THIS (man) IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39. And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be (the) Christ, save thyself and us (also).

40. But the other [8] answering rebuked him, saying, Dost thou not fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? (i. e. Dost thou not fear him now that thou art under the sentence of death?)

41. And we indeed (are sentenced to die) justly; for we receive (only) the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss (whereby to deserve this sentence).

42. And he said to Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom (to be the judge of all men, and to exercise all power in heaven and earth).

43. And Jesus said to him, [9] Verily I say to thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise (and there enjoy the greatest blessing which belongeth to the members of my kingdom).

44. And it was about the sixth hour (when he was crucified), and there was darkness over all the earth (or land of Palestine) until the ninth hour.

45. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple (which parted the inward temple from the sanctuary) was rent in the midst.

46. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

47. Now when the centurion saw what was done, he [10] glorified God, (by) saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48. And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things that were done, smote their breasts, and returned (to their houses full of trouble for it).

49. And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things (and were sad).

50. And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just:

51. The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them (who condemned Jesus); he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews: (and he was one) who also himself waited for the kingdom of God (i. e. expecting it should suddenly appear).

52. This man went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53. And (by his permission) he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre which was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid (taking this care, that our Lord's body might not be cast into the common place assigned for malefactors).

54. And that day was the preparation (i. e. Friday), and the sabbath drew on.

55. And the women also, which came with them from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments (to embalm him); and rested (from doing this) on the sabbath-day, according to the commandment.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIII.

[1] Ver. 2. ΚΑΙ᾽ κωλύοντα Καίσαρι φόρους διδόναι, And forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar.] That here they lie against their own conscience, is evident from Matt. xxii. 21. But yet this lie was covered under two specious pretences; first, that he professed himself King of the Jews, which these hypocrites here abuse, to render him odious to the Romans, though they themselves still gave this title to the Messiah: secondly, that he was a Galilean, and so likely to embrace the opinion of Judas Gaulonites, who held it was not lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar. (See ver. 6.)

[2] Ver. 5. Ἀπὸ Γαλιλαίας, From Galilee.] They seem here to mention Galilee, to incite Pilate against him, as a seditious person, (see the note on xiii. 1.) and to confirm their suggestion that Christ was so; and also to insinuate, that he was an enemy to Cæsar, forbidding to pay tribute to him: they of Galilee being prone to sedition, and rebellious upon that account, whence some of them were slain by Pilate.

[3] Ver. 16. Παιδεύσας οὖν αὐτὸν ἀπολύσω, I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.] Note, that this chastisement was not in order to his crucifixion, and therefore not that punishment the Romans used to inflict upon malefactors, as a preparative to their crucifixion, (of which, see Lipsius de Cruce, lib. ii. cap. 2.) for Pilate intended it in order to his release; he therefore seems willing to inflict upon him the punishment so common among the Jews towards those who did perversely against their law and their traditions, that he might exempt him from that death they did so studiously endeavour to expose him to.

[4] Ver. 29. The days will come in which ye shall say, μακάριαι αἱ στεῖραι, Blessed are the barren.] This they undoubtedly had occasion to say at the siege of Jerusalem, and during the war against the Romans, not only on the account of the loss of their children, and the sale of them, who were under seventeen years, for bond-slaves; but chiefly on the account of that famine in Jerusalem, which forced Mary, the daughter of Eleazer, to eat her own sucking child: upon which, saith Josephus,* there was a vehement desire of the famished persons to die, καὶ μακαρισμὸς τῶν φθασάντων πρὶν ἀκοῦσαι καὶ θεάσασθαι κακὰ τηλικαῦτα, and he counted himself blessed that he could die before he saw or heard such evil things.

[5] Ver. 30. Τότε ἄρξονται λέγειν τοῖς ὄρεσι, πέσετε ἐφ᾽ ἡμᾶς, Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us.] That this is a proverbial expression, used Hos. x. 8. not to be fulfilled by what the Jews should then say, but by what they should afterward suffer, is evident in itself, and confessed by the Jews; for the Targum upon Hosea speaks thus, He will bring such judgments upon them, which will render their condition as miserable, as if the mountains should cover them, and the hills fall upon them: see the like words, Rev. vi. 15, 16.

[6] Ver. 31. Ὅτι εἰ ἐν τῷ ὑγρῷ ξύλῳ ταῦτα ποιοῦσιν, ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ τί γένηται; For if these things be done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry?] The good and just man is, by the prophets and Jews, represented under the metaphor of a green tree, or a tree whose leaves do not wither, Psal. i. 3. of a green olive-tree, Psal. lii. 10. of a green fir-tree, Hos. xiv. 8. of a tree whose leaves are ever green, Jer. xvii. 8. Whereas of the wicked it is said, his branch shall not be green, Job xv. 32. Thus God by Ezekiel threatens, that he will cut off every green tree, and every dry tree in Jerusalem, Ezek. xx. 47. that is, as it is interpreted, xxi. 3. that he will cut off the righteous and the wicked; and it is proverbial among the Jews, that two dry sticks will burn a green one; i. e. that the company of two wicked men will corrupt, and bring judgments upon a good man.

[7] Ver. 36. Ὄξος προσφέροντες αὐτῷ, The soldiers offered him vinegar.] Dr. Lightfoot shews from Ælius Spartianus, Capitolinus, and Trebellius Pollux, that vinegar was the usual drink of the soldiers: two cups were therefore offered to Christ, one of wine mixed with myrrh, before he was nailed to the cross, (Mark xv. 23.) and this was offered by the Jews, as the custom was to do towards men condemned to capital punishments; the other of vinegar by the soldiers, in a scoffing manner, after he was nailed to the cross.

[8] Ver. 40. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ἕτερος, ἐπετίμα αὐτῷ, &c. But the other answering rebuked him, &c.] Almost all interpreters that I have read here say, that this thief began his repentance upon the cross; and hence others are apt to conceive, that though they repent only at the last gasp, they may enter into paradise, as he did; but this is but a precarious supposition at the best, and like to prove a broken reed to the Christian that depends upon it. For,

First, It is not certain that this thief only then began to act the penitent; for any thing we know to the contrary, he might have begun that work in prison long before, and so the whole foundation of their hopes, who depend upon this instance, is built upon a great uncertainty.

Obj. And whereas in favour of this opinion it is said, that both the thieves upbraided him, and therefore this thief must do so at the first, and after that repent:

Ans. I answer, That St. Luke here expressly says, that one of them only did it, and that the other did rebuke him for it; and therefore, to reconcile him with St. Matthew, let it be observed, that it is usual in the evangelists to ascribe that to many which agrees only to one of them: (see the note on Matt. xxvii. 38.) so that is said to be written in the prophets, which is only written in one of them, as will be evident from comparing Mark i. 2. Mal. iii. 1. John vi. 45. Isa. liv. 13. Acts xiii. 40. Hab. i. 5. (See Glassius, lib. iii. tr. 1. de Nomine Can. 27.)

Secondly, This probably was the first time that this thief had the knowledge of Christ, or was acquainted with him; he therefore haply had no call, no day of grace, before this hour, and so he brake no vows or covenants, abused no grace vouchsafed, sinned against no such light and strong convictions, resisted no such strivings of the Spirit, as they who live under the gospel-dispensation must have often done. What comfort therefore can this example give to them, who, having once been washed in the laver of regeneration, still wallow in the mire; who, having often heard the joyful sound, have slighted all the promises, despised all the threats, been deaf to all the callings of the word, abused all the means of grace, and resisted all the motions of the Spirit? and to whom Christ may say as to the Jews, how oft would I have gathered you under my wings, and ye would not?

Thirdly, Observe, that this thief improved his time at last in that extraordinary manner, as perhaps no man ever did before, or will hereafter; he then believed Christ to be the Saviour of the world, when one of his disciples had betrayed, another had denied him, and all of them had forsook him; to be the Son of God, the Lord of life, when he was hanging on the cross, suffering the pangs of death, and seemingly deserted by his Father; he proclaims him the Lord of paradise, when all the Jews condemned him, the gentiles crucified him, as an impostor and a malefactor; he feared God, acknowledged the justice of his punishment, and did with patience submit unto it; he condemned himself, and justified the holy Jesus, declaring that he had done nothing amiss; he was solicitous, not for the preservation of his body, but the salvation of his soul; not only for his own, but the salvation of his brother thief, whom he so charitably reprehends, so earnestly requesteth not to proceed in his blasphemous language, so lovingly inviteth to the fear of God: so that the glory which he did to Christ by his faith and piety upon the cross, seems such as the whole series of a pious life in other men can hardly parallel.

[9] Ver. 43. Ἀμὴν λέγω σοι, σήμερον μετ' ἐμοῦ ἔσῃ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, Verily I say unto thee, To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise.] That the word σήμερον, to-day, is not to be connected with I say, as if the sense were this, I say to thee to-day; but with the words following, so as to contain a promise, that the thief should even that day be in paradise, as to his better part, appears from the familiar phrase of the Jews, who say of the just man dying, היום ישב to-day he shall sit in the bosom of Abraham. Secondly, To be sure Christ spake in that sense in which the thief could, and in which he knew he would, understand him; now he being a Jew, would surely understand him according to the received opinion of his nation concerning paradise; now they plainly held it to be the place into which pious souls, separated from the body, were immediately received. Hence sprung that oracle of the Chaldees,* Seek paradise, the glorious country of the soul: hence their kind wish for the dying or dead person, Let his soul be in paradise. Now hence it follows, (1.) that the souls of men die not with their bodies, but remain in a state of sensibility. Christ here commends his into the hands of God, ver. 46. where the souls of the just are, Wisd. iii. 1. in peace, ver. 3. and in hope, ver. 4. (2.) That the souls of good men after death are in a happy state, a state of joy and felicity; for paradise, saith Philo,† is σύμβολον ψυχῆς ὑπὸ πλήθους καὶ μεγέθους χαρᾶς ἀνασκιρτώσης, the representation of a soul leaping for fulness and greatness of joy; and it is, according to Tertullian,* a place of Divine delights. So that, as the thief could only be there that day by the presence of his soul, so could not his soul be there without the greatest joy and felicity. (See Examen Millii bis in locum.)

[10] Ver. 47. Ἐδόξασε τὸν Θεὸν, &c. He glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.] For whosoever doth confess that Jesus is the Christ, doth it to the glory of the Father, (Phil. ii. 11.) by giving him the glory of his truth in giving testimony to him.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. NOW upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they (i. e. the women, mentioned xxiii. 35.) came to the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, [1] and certain other (women came) with them.

2. And (being come) they found the stone rolled away from (the mouth of) the sepulchre.

3. And they entered in (to the outward sepulchre), and (stooping down to look into the inward, they) found not the body of the Lord Jesus (there).

4. And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

5. And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said to them, Why seek ye the living among (i. e. the place of) the dead?

6. He (whom ye seek) is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake to you when he was yet in Galilee, (that he would rise the third day, Matt. xvii. 23.)

7. Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8. And they remembered his words,

9. And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things to the eleven, and to all the rest.

10. (And) it was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things to the apostles.

11. And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12. Then arose Peter, and ran to the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering [2] in himself at that which was come to pass.

13. And, behold, two [3] of them (who belonged to Jesus) went the same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

14. And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15. And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

16. But their eyes were [4] held, (either miraculously, or by his appearance in another form, Mark xvi. 12.) that they should not know him.

17. And he said to them, [5] What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

18. And one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering said to him, Art thou only a [6] stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19. And he said to them, What things? And they said to him, (The things) concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word (in miracles and doctrine) before God and all the people:

20. And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him (up) [7] to be condemned to death (by Pontius Pilate), and (thereupon) have crucified him:

21. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done (i. e. the very day in which he promised to rise again).

22. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre (of Jesus);

23. And when they found not his body, they came (to us), saying that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24. And certain of them that were with us (viz. Peter and John), went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

25. Then he said to them, [8] O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that (which) the prophets have spoken!

26. Ought not Christ (according to the Scriptures) to have suffered these things, and (then) to enter into his glory?

27. And beginning at [9] Moses and (going through) all the prophets, he expounded to them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.

28. And they drew nigh to the village whither they went: and he (kept on walking, and so) [10] made as though he would have gone farther.

29. But they (by their entreaties) [11] constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is towards evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, [12] he took bread, and blessed it, and brake (it), and gave (of it) to them.

31. And their eyes were opened (that which obstructed the discerning of him being removed), and they [13] knew him; and he vanished (or conveyed himself secretly) out of their sight.

32. And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us (i. e. was there not in us a great warmth of affection), while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?

33. And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them,

34. (And heard them) [14] saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35. And they told (them) what things were done in the way (to Emmaus), and how he (the Lord) was known of them in breaking of bread.

36. And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and said to them, Peace be to you.

37. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had [15] seen a spirit (rather than a real body, because they knew not how he came in to them).

38. And he said to them, Why are ye troubled? and why do (such) thoughts arise in your hearts?

* Apol. cap. 47.

39. Behold my (pierced) hands and feet, (and see) that it is I myself (that speak to you): [16] handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

40. And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet.

41. And while they yet (firmly) believed not for joy, and wondered (how this could be, thinking it was too good to be true, and rather might be a pleasant dream, Psal. cxxvi. 1.) he said to them, Have ye here any meat?

42. And they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of a honeycomb.

43. And he took it, and did [17] eat it before them (for farther confirmation to them that he had a real body).

44. And he said to them, These (things) are (done according to) the words which I spake to you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written [18] in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me.

45. Then (by the special operation of the Holy Ghost) [19] opened he their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures (concerning his death and resurrection, which as yet they knew not, John xx. 9.)

46. And said to them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

47. And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem (i. e. that all men should be called to repent, Acts xvii. 30. and to believe in him, for the remission of their sins).

48. And ye are (to be) [20] witnesses of these things.

49. And, behold, (in pursuance of that end) I (shall shortly) send the promise of my Father (i. e. the Holy Ghost promised by him, Joel ii. 28.) upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with (this) power from on high. (Isa. xxxii. 15.)

50. And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.

51. And it came to pass, while he blessed them, (that) he was parted from them, and (was) carried up into heaven.

52. And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy:

53. And (they) were [21] continually in the temple (at the hours of prayer), praising and blessing God. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΙ' τινες σὺν αὐταῖς. And some other women of Jerusalem with them.] Viz. Joanna and Μαρία τοῦ Ἰακώβου, Mary the mother of James, as we read Mark xv. 40. So in Herodotus Ἄδραστος ὁ Γορδιέω τοῦ Μιδέω, Adrastus the nephew of Gordius and father of Midas: in Ælian,* Ὀλυμπίας ἡ Αλεξάνδρου, Olympias the mother of Alexander; and in Stephanus,† ἡ δὴ πόλις ἀπὸ Δαιδάλου τοῦ Ἰκάρου ἡ ἐν Λυκίᾳ, a city in Lycia, built by Dædalus, the father of Icarus: so Acts vii. 16. παρὰ τῶν υἱῶν Ἐμμὸρ τοῦ Σύχεμ, of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem, for so he was.

[2] Ver. 12. Πρὸς ἑαυτὸν θαυμάζων, Wondering in himself.] So Luke xviii. 11. πρὸς ἑαυτὸν προσηύχετο, he prayed by himself.

[3] Ver. 13. Δύο ἐξ αὐτῶν, Two of them.] Not of the apostles, for these two returning told what passed betwixt Christ and them to the eleven apostles, ver. 33. 35. but two of the rest that were with them, ver. 9. 33. The village Emmaus, to which they were going, was not that Emmaus near Tiberias, so called from the hot baths there, for that was in Galilee; but a village in the tribe of Judah, sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, say St. Luke and Josephus;* thirty, saith his translator.

[4] Ver. 16. Οἱ δὲ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν ἐκρατοῦντο, But their eyes were held.] That they knew him not might be, not because their eyes were held by a miracle, but because he appeared to them, ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in another form or shape, than that which formerly he had when he conversed with them, Mark xvi. 12. and which when they knew him might be changed; for that their eyes did not perceive him, through grief, as Mr. Le Clerc conjectures, is not very likely, for though they were sad, (ver. 17.) we read not that they wept; and seeing it elsewhere said, that the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam to see the angel, Numb. xxii. 31. and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man to see chariots of fire, 2 Kings vi. 17. and the Lord opened the eyes of the host of the king of Syria, ver. 20. which was withheld from seeing, or struck blind, ver. 18.—I say, seeing in all these cases doubtless an extraordinary power was exerted, I believe rather according to the plain import of the words, that God withheld the eyes of Hagar from seeing the well, and then opened her eyes, Gen. xxi. 19. by taking away that impediment, and that here Christ some way withheld their eyes from perceiving him, and then removing that impediment opened their eyes that they knew him.

[5] Ver. 17. Τίνες οἱ λόγοι οὗτοι; What manner of communications are these?] Christ asks, saith Woltzogenius, not because he knew not what they said, for what could he be ignorant of, who knew men's hearts and reins? but to give them an occasion to begin the discourse.

[6] Ver. 18. Σὺ μόνος παροικεῖς ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ; Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem?] Παροικεῖν here may signify to be "extra patriam," one of another country, and, as so, a stranger to the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem. So the seed of Abraham were πάροικοι ἐν γῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, strangers in another country, Acts vii. 6. Moses was πάροικος, a stranger in the land of Midian, ver. 29. the gentiles, not yet called to be fellow-citizens with the saints, are ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι, strangers and aliens, Eph. ii. 19. and, according to this metaphor, the patriarchs are said παροικεῖν, to sojourn in the land of promise, as in a strange country, Heb. xi. 9. the Christians to live in this world, ὡς παροίκους, as strangers and pilgrims, 1 Pet. ii. 11. the time they spend here is the time παροικίας αὐτῶν, of their sojourning, 1 Pet. i. 17. So also the philosophers† held, that heaven was their own country, that they were τῆς πόλεως τῆς ἀνωτάτης πολῖται, citizens of the city above, and strangers in this world: hence any one, who is ignorant of what is done in any place, is styled a stranger in it: so Antoninus ‡ saith, they are ξένοι κόσμου, strangers in the world, who knew not what is done in it: and Cicero § speaks thus to Atticus, I desire thee "ne illuc hospes veniam," that I may not come thither as a stranger; that is, as ignorant of things done there: and again, it is something for him that comes to Rome, "non esse hospitem et peregrinum," not to be ignorant of what is done there; and, in his familiar epistles, he writes for instructions in what is done in the commonwealth, "Ne hospes planè veniam,"* that he might not come thither as a stranger. So here, Art thou a stranger? i. e. Art thou ignorant of things well known to all that dwell at Jerusalem?

[7] Ver. 20. Εἰς κρίμα θανάτου, To the sentence of death.] So 1 Kings iii. 28. All Israel heard τὸ κρίμα τοῦτο, this judicial sentence of king Solomon: τὸ κρίμα τοῦ Μωὰβ, is God's sentence against Moab, Jer. xlviii. 46. and τὸ κρίμα Βαβυλῶνος, his sentence against Babylon, li. 9. Let my sentence τὸ κρίμα μου, come forth from thy presence, saith the Psalmist, xvii. 3. (See the note on Rom. iii. 4.)

[8] Ver. 25. O fools!] Hence note, that the command, Matt. v. 22. is not always transgressed by this expression; but only then, when it is used without cause, from an undue commotion of spirit, or a mind evilly affected towards our brother.

[9] Ver. 27. Καὶ ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ Μωσέως, &c. And beginning from Moses, he expounded the things concerning himself.] If the things concerning him relate to his sufferings and future glory, mentioned in the preceding verse, we may hence learn, that the Mosaical sacrifices, and especially the solemn anniversary expiation, typified the sufferings of Christ; as also did the oblation of Isaac, and the lifting up of the brazen serpent.

[10] Ver. 28. Προσεποιεῖτο πορρώτερω πορεύεσθαι, He made as if he would have gone farther.] Yea, perhaps he would have done so, had they not been urgent with him to abide with them, ver. 29. or he seemed to them by continuing on his course to be willing so to do: so Mark vi. 48. ἤθελε παρελθεῖν αὐτοὺς, he would have passed by them: not that Christ intended this, but that he seemed to them by continuing his course on the sea to be willing so to do: here therefore was no dissimulation in Christ; but only in the disciples and apostles a mistaken conjecture from his walking. Now, though words ought to be the certain interpreters of our minds; and therefore ought not to be used so as that we may be deceived by them; yet walking hath no certain signification, nor was instituted to be a certain indication of the mind, and so there seems here to be no just occasion for the long discourses, which some hence make of lying, simulation, or dissimulation; here being no instance of that kind.

[11] Ver. 29. Καὶ παρεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, And they constrained him, saying.] They laid this constraint upon him only by their earnest desire: so Lot, κατεβιάζετο, constrained the angels to lodge with him, Gen. xix. 3. so Jacob constrained Esau to accept his presents, Gen. xxxiii. 11. so Judg. xix. 7. 2 Kings ii. 17. v. 16. Matt. xi. 12. Luke xvi. 16. Acts xvi. 5. see note on Gal. ii. 14.

[12] Ver. 30. Λαβὼν τὸν ἄρτον εὐλόγησε, καὶ κλάσας ἐπεδίδου αὐτοῖς, He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave it to them.] This he did, say the papists, when he celebrated the sacrament, Luke xxii. 19. therefore here also he celebrated the sacrament, though in bread only. This he did, say I, when he fed the four and five thousand; for then ἄρτους εὐλόγησε καὶ κλάσας ἔδωκε, he blessed the bread, and, breaking it, gave it to his disciples to give to the multitude: (Matt. xiv. 19. Mark vi. 41. viii. 6.) and will they say, that then also he celebrated the sacrament before the institution of it? 2. To make of bread a sacrament, it is absolutely necessary, according to them, that Christ should say, This is my body, which here he said not; if they rejoin, that this is to be understood, I say, with as much reason, that wine, the usual concomitant of a supper, is to be understood; and so here will be no example of communicating in one kind. 3. If Christ here celebrated a sacrament without wine, he also consecrated without wine; which yet the papists say is never to be done.

[13] Ver. 31. Καὶ ἐπέγνωσαν αὐτὸν, And they knew him.] Christ having now removed the obstruction from their eyes; for he would conceal himself from them for a season, that he might more freely discourse with them; when he had done that sufficiently, he would be known to them, for the confirmation of their faith. And, when they had obtained the certain knowledge of him, ἄφαντος ἐγένετο, he withdrew himself again out of their sight, either by a sudden change of place, or by a cloud cast over his body: whence we can no more argue, that he had only an airy body, than that he had the like when ἐκρύβη, he hid himself, passing through the Jews, when they were about to stone him, John viii. 59. Where this word is used of Pelops in Pindar,* it signifies one that was lost, and no where to be found, though much sought after by the men his mother sent to look after him; and I grant to Mr. Clerc, that a man may be lost, and not found by them that seek after him, without a miracle, but ἄφαντος ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἐγένετο, he became invisible to them, or disappeared from them, seems to carry the matter higher, though it may be otherwise.

[14] Ver. 34. Λέγοντας, Saying.] They found the eleven, saying at their very entrance, The Lord is risen, or those that were with them, ver. 33. thus greeting them before they could speak.

[15] Ver. 37. Ἐδόκουν πνεῦμα θεωρεῖν, They supposed they saw a spirit.] i. e. A phantasm, or a spirit assuming the shape of Christ, and appearing to them in it; viz. because they heard no noise of any doors opening, or of feet moving towards them: and so, though they doubted not of Christ's resurrection, (ver. 34.) yet might they, for these reasons, doubt of this appearance of him in the midst of them without knocking at the door for entrance, or giving any indications of his coming to them.

[16] Ver. 39. See my hands and feet, ψηλαφήσατέ με, handle me.] Christ proves that he had a true body from the evidence of their sight and touch: and the apostles testify to the truth of the resurrection of his body, as being that which their eyes had seen, and their hands had handled, 1 John i. 2. Therefore those senses must be sufficient to testify the truth of any body, and much more the truth of the substance of bread remaining after the sacrament, confirmed also by the taste and smell; and the denial of this must render the argument of Christ here, and the testimonies of the apostles, infirm: our Saviour goes on in confirmation of the same thing, by saying, A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. Now certain it is, that our Lord's argument must be firm; it therefore must be certain, that evil spirits cannot assume such a body as will not yield unto the touch, but only a mere phantom, or an aerial appearance of a body, which cannot cheat the touch and eyes of men. And, 2. that good spirits, if they can assume a more solid body, yet cannot put illusions upon men in things belonging to their faith, or be sent by God for such ends.

* Lib. ii. n. 21.

* Olymp. 1. 72.

[17] Ver. 43. He did eat before them.] Not to satisfy any hunger his body could have after his resurrection, but to prove to them that his body was truly raised; and seeing it cannot be supposed, that Christ in this action designed any illusion, it follows from his truly eating, that his body had those parts by which meat is chewed, and a stomach to receive it.

[18] Ver. 44. All things must be fulfilled which are written ἐν τῷ νόμῳ Μωσέως, καὶ προφήταις, καὶ Ψαλμοῖς περὶ ἐμοῦ, in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and the Psalms, concerning me.] This division of the books of the Old Testament obtained in our Saviour's time, as Josephus* witnesseth, who saith, We have only twenty-two Divine books; of which five are the books of Moses, thirteen the writings of the prophets, four contain hymns to God and documents of life; of which hymns the Psalms obtained the first place.

[19] Ver. 45. Τότε διήνοιξεν αὐτῶν τὸν νοῦν, &c. Then he opened their minds, that they might understand the Scriptures.] It is one thing to open τὰς γραφὰς, the Scriptures themselves, or to explain them; and another, to open their understandings to perceive them; Christ did the latter, probably by giving them now some first-fruits of that spirit of prophecy, which fell more plentifully on them at the day of Pentecost.

[20] Ver. 48. Ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε μάρτυρες τούτων, And ye are witnesses of these things.] Christ's resurrection being a matter of fact, must be proved by the testimony of eye-witnesses, who, if they be honest men, and such as suffer the greatest prejudices in fortune, reputation, and life, for this testimony, we have the greater reason to believe it; for their honesty must render them unwilling to testify a falsehood; their interest and prudence would not suffer them, without any necessity laid upon them, to testify a lie; much more to testify the grossest falsehood to their utmost damage, and without any prospect of advantage: but farther, if they confirm this testimony by all kinds of signs, miracles, and wondrous powers, exercised by themselves and others, who embraced their testimony; if this was done in all places on all kinds of persons, for a whole age or ages, this renders it impossible they should thus attest a lie; and therefore Christ bids them stay at Jerusalem till they were thus empowered by virtue from on high to confirm this testimony, Acts i. 8.

Ver. 52. Προσκυνήσαντες αὐτὸν.] These words are rejected by Dr. Mills, though they are owned by Jerome, Theophylact, and all the versions, and wanting only in his imaginary old Vulgar.

[21] Ver. 53. Καὶ ἦσαν διαπαντὸς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, And they were continually in the temple.] Some, from these words, conceive they dwelt in some ὑπερῷον, upper room, or apartment of the temple, belonging to some priest or Levite, such as are mentioned 2 Kings xi. 2, 3. 2 Chron. xxii. 11, 12. But it is not easy to conceive, the Sanhedrin and rulers of the people would have permitted this; and yet notwithstanding all their hatred of and opposition to them, we never read they thus dislodged them: they therefore may be said to have continued always in the temple, as constantly resorting thither at the hours of prayer, as the sacrifices offered morning and evening are styled ὁλοκαυτώματα διαπαντὸς, continual sacrifices, 1 Chron. xvi. 40. 2 Chron. ii. 4. (See note on 1 Thess. v. 17. and Acts ii. 46.)

PREFACE.

BY way of preface to this Gospel, I shall endeavour to shew,

First, Against some ancient heretics and modern Socinians, that not Cerinthus, but St. John the evangelist, was the true writer of this Gospel.

Secondly, At what time he writ it, and upon what occasion. And,

Thirdly, Why Christ still speaketh in this Gospel, as one that did and could no nothing of himself, but acted all things by commission from, and by the authority and power of, God the Father. And,

§. 1. That not Cerinthus, but St. John the evangelist, was the true writer of this Gospel may be concluded,

First, From these words, xxi. 23. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die; ver. 24. this is that disciple which testifies of these things, and wrote these things. For (1.) hence it is evident, that he who wrote that Gospel was a disciple of our Lord, which Cerinthus never was. (2.) That he was that disciple whom Jesus loved, and who leaned on his breast at supper, and who said, Lord, who is it that betrayeth thee? ver. 20. Now this is the constant periphrasis of St. John the evangelist throughout this Gospel, viz. John xiii. 23. xix. 26. xxi. 7. the whole Christian world having still applied these sayings to St. John; who, being in this Gospel still mentioned by this periphrasis, and never by his proper name, as he is in the other evangelists, no better reason can be given of this, than that he was the writer of this Gospel, and therefore named not himself. And (3.) it was that disciple of whom the fame went abroad among the brethren that he should not die: now this was so constantly applied to St. John the evangelist, that some of the ancients declare he died not at all, but was translated; and others, that he only lay sleeping in his grave. (See Dr. Cave in the life of St. John, sect. 8, 9.) And it was he alone of the twelve apostles who tarried till our Lord came to the destruction of Jerusalem, which he outlived many years. (See note on xxi. 22.)

Secondly, For this we have the testimony of all the ancient fathers in the church, they all concurring in this as an unquestionable truth, that this Gospel was written by St. John, the apostle of our Lord. This follows from what hath been already proved in the general preface; viz: that the four Gospels were generally received by the universal church of God, as Gospels written by those authors whose names they bear. Add to this, that the Gospel of St. John was, saith Eusebius,* always reckoned among τὰς ἀναντιῤῥήτους γραφὰς, the books not controverted among Christians. And again, that the Gospel of John must be received as being known to all the churches of the world; and a third time, that this Gospel, with his first Epistle, was, without controversy, admitted both by the ancients and by those of his time. Irenæus † informs us, that Ἰωάννης ὁ μαθητὴς τοῦ Κυρίου, John, the disciple of our Lord, who leaned upon his breast, writ his Gospel at Ephesus. Clemens ‡ of Alexandria saith, Ἰωάννην πνεύματι θεοφορηθέντα, that St. John being moved by an afflatus of the Spirit, writ this spiritual Gospel. Origen § reckons the Gospel of St. John among the τὰ ἀναντιῤῥήτα, the Gospels received without dispute by every church under heaven. And Tertullian, among the apostles which instruct us in the faith, reckons St. Matthew and St. John; among the apostolical men that do it, Mark and Luke. (Contr. Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 2.)

Thirdly, They who ascribed this Gospel to Cerinthus were guilty of a great absurdity, as Epiphanius‖ observes; for how could those things be wrote by Cerinthus, which do, in direct terms, contradict his doctrine: he asserted, as Tertullian¶ and others of the ancients testify, the doctrine of the Ebionites, that Christ was born as other men, and was a mere man without the Divinity; whereas the author of this Gospel declares him to be the Word, which, in the beginning, was with God, and was God; and that all things were made by him, and not by a virtue far separate and distant from God, as, saith Irenæus,* Cerinthus held. Cerinthus therefore could not be the author of this Gospel, unless we will suppose that he forged a gospel under the name of an apostle, on purpose to condemn his own opinions. And this consideration is strengthened by the tradition of many of the primitive fathers and others, who say expressly, this Gospel was written by St. John the disciple of our Lord, to † remove that error which Cerinthus had dispersed among men; or that he writ it against the doctrine of the Ebionites.

And, lastly, whereas some Unitarians have the confidence to conclude this Gospel was written by Cerinthus, because he and his followers did use this Gospel, it appears from Irenæus ‡ and Epiphanius, that they did constantly reject it, and use only the Gospel of St. Matthew, and not that entirely.

§. 2. The other objections of the same persons against this Gospel are the fruits of ignorance. For whereas,

First, They say, that "the other evangelists agree, that immediately after his baptism our Lord was led into the wilderness to be tempted forty days; this forger of St. John's Gospel saith, the next day after (his baptism) our Saviour spake with Andrew and Peter, and the day after went to Galilee."

Ans. This is a miserable mistake, of the next day after the Baptist returned his answer to the pharisees inquiring who he was, and why he baptized, (John i. 29.) for the next day after Christ's baptism. The series of the story lieth thus; Christ, being newly baptized, goes into the wilderness, and leaveth John at Jordan on Judea side. In the time of our Lord's temptation, John, having finished his work at Jordan, goes over into the country beyond Jordan, out of the precincts of Judea, and into the Scythopolitan region, and baptized at Bethabara, at a water distinct from Jordan, and somewhat above it; thither some pharisees are sent to him by commission from the Sanhedrin, to inquire of the authority by which he baptized; the next day after they had made this inquiry, Christ cometh in sight, and John bears record to him; and the next day after that he renews his record, saying, in the presence of Andrew, Behold the Lamb of God, ver. 29. 37. and he, following Christ, finds out Simon, and bringeth him to Christ.

Obj. 2. "The other three evangelists suppose all along that our Saviour preached but one year, and therefore they reckon but one Passover, but (the pretended) St. John counts three years, and three Passovers before his death, which seems to be an unaccountable contradiction."

Ans. But here again we find nothing but mistakes: for none of the three evangelists suppose that our Saviour preached but one year. This, at the first, was the opinion of the Valentinians,* and other gnostics, not of the apostles or evangelists, and it is confuted by Irenæus from the Passovers of St. John; though some of the fathers fell into the same error, not on account of these evangelists, but of the prophet Isaiah, saying, he was sent to preach the acceptable year of the Lord, Isa. lxi. 2. that is, the year of jubilee. (See note on Luke iv. 19.)

Secondly, Though the other evangelists mention expressly but one Passover at the close of Christ's life, of which they speak to shew he was the true paschal lamb; yet are they so far from contradicting, that they confirm St. John's account of more Passovers during the time of our Lord's preaching: for (1.) St. Matthew, xii. 1. St. Mark, ii. 23. St. Luke, vi. 1. speak of our Lord's disciples plucking ears of corn on the sabbath-day, and rubbing them in their hands, and eating the corn; whereas, till after the Passover was over, and the first-fruits' sheaf offered, which was always done the second day after the Passover, it was not lawful to eat either parched corn or green ears: (Lev. xxiii. 14.) this therefore is a sufficient indication of one Passover then past. And this is still clearer from the words of St. Luke, who says they did this ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, on the first sabbath after the second day of the Passover, or after the oblation of the first-fruits' sheaf (see the note there): so that Epiphanius† saith truly, ἵνα δείξῃ ἐντεῦθεν, hence it is proved, that not St. John only, but St. Luke, and the other evangelists, mention more than one Passover. St. John mentions another Passover, vi. 4. in these words, and the feast of the Passover was near; and then immediately follows the mention of the feeding five thousand people with five loaves and two little fishes; now this miracle is recorded Matt. xiv. 15. Mark vi. 35. Luke ix. 12. and so they all suppose our Lord was also preaching at this other Passover.

§. 3. As for the second inquiry, at what time, and upon what occasion, this Gospel was written by St. John, Irenæus saith only in the general, that he writ his Gospel during his stay at Ephesus in Asia; but whether he wrote it there before his banishment from thence by Domitian, or after his return from it, or in the isle of Patmos, to which he was exiled, he saith not. The fathers‡ of the fourth and fifth centuries do all agree, that he writ it either in that isle,§ or after his return from it, when he was ninety years old, saith Epiphanius;‖ when he was a hundred, saith Chrysostom:¶ so that according to the account of all these ecclesiastical writers, St. John must have writ this Gospel a considerable time after the destruction of Jerusalem.

And yet the latter writers and commentators upon this Gospel have almost generally gone off from this opinion, asserting that St. John writ this Gospel *in the thirty-second or thirty-third year after our Lord's ascension. And,

§. 4. Touching the occasion of the writing of it, St. Jerome * having told us that St. John writ this Gospel "rogatus ab Asiæ episcopis adversus Cerinthum, aliosque hæreticos," at the desire of the bishops of Asia against Cerinthus, and the heresy of the Ebionites, who held that our Lord was a mere man; "unde et compulsus est Divinam ejus nativatatem edicere;" and so he was compelled to speak of his Divine original; in which opinion most of the latter writers agree with him: he adds another cause of writing this Gospel, current before and in his time, viz. that† having perused and approved the other three Gospels, he supplied what was wanting in them, especially as to what our Saviour did before John was cast into prison. Accordingly Clemens of Alexandria and Eusebius say, that St. John observing that the other evangelists had written τὰ σωματικὰ, that is, the series of our Lord's generation, according to the flesh, he writ a spiritual Gospel, beginning from the Divinity of Christ, this being reserved for him, as the most excellent person, by the Holy Ghost. (See and compare Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24. with lib. vi. cap. 14.) And that he did this to supply those excellent discourses, and those signal miracles, which the other evangelists had omitted, seems manifest from the whole tenor of this Gospel.

§. 5. I proceed to the third inquiry, why Christ still speaketh in this Gospel, as one who did and could do nothing of himself, but acted all things by commission from, and by the power and authority of, God the Father.

This is a matter of very great importance; for it is observable, that whereas Crellius, in his book de uno Deo Patre, sect. 2. reckons up thirty-six arguments against the Divinity of Christ; and Woltzogenius, in his Præparatio ad utilem lectionem librorum Novi Testamenti, reckoneth up sixty against it; one half of them are taken from some passages of this Gospel. And the same author, in his prolegomena to this Gospel, saith, that in no writing of the evangelists, or apostles, are there more arguments against the Divinity of Christ, than in this Gospel. Nor have I yet been so happy as to see one author, who hath given sufficient, clear, and satisfactory answer to the arguments produced from this Gospel against that necessary article: I could heartily wish that men so skilled in the controversies betwixt us and the Socinians, as Dr. Edwards, of Jesus College, is, would rather give us a clear answer to the arguments of Crellius de uno Deo Patre, against the Divinity of Christ, which is too much wanted, than furnish us with antidotes against Socinianism, by producing arguments against it, whilst that and such-like books, unanswered, seem to be antidotes against antidotes.

I have endeavoured in my annotations on this Gospel to do this, by asserting that our blessed Lord did execute his prophetic office by virtue of that unction of the Holy Ghost, which he received at his baptism; and that all the things, which the Socinians urge from this Gospel as arguments against his Divine nature, were spoken by him as acting in that office here on earth; not by an immediate efflux, or exertion of his Divinity, but by virtue of the Holy Ghost, conferred upon him without measure. And that I may not seem singular in this assertion, I shall strengthen it with the suffrage of some of our most able and judicious divines, and then confirm it from the plain testimonies of Scripture, and our Lord's own words. Now of those able and judicious divines, who concur with me in this notion, the first is Dr. Barrow, who, in his sermon on these words, Acts ii. 38. Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, saith thus,* "The Holy Spirit not only conducted God our Saviour into his fleshly tabernacle, and, with unmeasurable communications of himself, did continually reside within him, but also did attend him in the conspicuous performance of innumerable miraculous works of power and goodness, exceeding not only any natural, but all created power: such as were, by mere word and will, healing the sick, and restoring the maimed, ejecting evil spirits, discerning the secret thoughts of men, foretelling contingent events, reviving the dead, raising himself from the grave; which works, some expressly, others by parity of reason, are ascribed to the Holy Spirit: for if (saith our Lord) I by the Spirit of God cast out devils, Matt. xii. 28. and God, saith St. Peter, anointed him with the Holy Ghost, and with power, Acts x. 38."

The second is the judicious Dr. Scott,† who speaks thus, "When Christ came down into the world, to transact personally with men, he generally acted by the Holy Spirit: for at his baptism we are told, that the Holy Ghost descended on him in a bodily shape, Luke iii. 22. upon which it is said, that he went away full of the Holy Ghost, Luke iv. 1. After which it is plain that it was by the Holy Ghost in him that he prophesied, and wrought his miracles; for so Isa. lxi. 1. the prophet attributes the whole prophecy of Christ to the Spirit of the Lord, which was upon him; and in Matt. xii. 28. our Saviour himself affirms, that he cast out devils by the Spirit of God; and therefore he saith that the Jews, by attributing his miraculous works to the devil, blasphemed against the Holy Ghost, Matt. xii. 31. because it was by the power of the Holy Ghost that he wrought them."

The last is Dr. Lightfoot, who, in his note on Mark xiii. 32. saith, "We must distinguish between the excellences and perfections of Christ, which flowed from the hypostatical union of the two natures, and those which flowed from the donation and anointing of the Holy Spirit. From the hypostatical union of the natures flowed the infinite dignity of his person, his impeccability, his self-sufficiency to observe the law, and to satisfy the Divine justice; from the anointing of the Spirit flowed his power of miracles, his foreknowledge of things to come, and all kind of knowledge of evangelic mysteries: those rendered him a fit and perfect redeemer; these a fit and perfect minister of the gospel."

To illustrate and confirm this assertion, let it be considered,

First, That Jesus Christ, while he was on earth, delivered all his doctrines and precepts in his Father's name, or as one sent from him, and authorized to speak what he delivered in his name, according to those words of his forerunner, he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God, John iii. 34.

He himself often declares in express words, that he was come in his Father's name, John v. 43. that the Father had sent him, viii. 29. that he came not of himself, but he sent him, ver. 42. that he came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, vi. 38—40. 57. that the works which he did bare witness of him, that the Father had sent him, v. 36, 37. that he spake those things which he had heard of, and seen with, his Father, viii. 26. 38. and that the Jews were guilty of a great sin, in that they believed not in him whom the Father had sent, v. 38. Of this doctrine he saith, my doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me; and if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself, vii. 16, 17. (see the note there:) that he spake not from himself, but from him that sent him, ver. 18. that as his Father had taught him, so he spake these things, viii. 28. that he had told the Jews that truth which he had heard of God, ver. 40. that the word which they heard was not his, but the Father that sent him, xiv. 24. that he had not spoken of himself; but the Father which sent him gave him commandment what he should say, and what he should speak: whatsoever he spake therefore, even as the Father said to him, so he spake, xii. 49, 50.; and of his disciples he speaks thus to his Father, I have given to them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou hast sent me, xvii. 8.: from all which sayings he concludes, that he that heareth me, heareth him that sent me; and he that believeth in me, believeth in him that sent me, xii. 44. xiii. 20. Consider,

Secondly, That he preached his doctrines, and delivered his sayings to the world, by virtue of that Spirit with which he was anointed; so we learn plainly from those words of John the Baptist, iii. 24. He whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure to him. (See the note there.) So also he himself declares, in his first sermon preached at Nazareth after his temptations; for having read those words of Isaiah, lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives—to preach the acceptable year of the Lord; he began to say to them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears, Luke iv. 18, 19. 21.

Moreover, it seems essential to a prophet to act as he is moved, assisted, and incited by the Holy Ghost; for a prophet, saith Philo,* ἴδιον μὲν οὐδὲν ἀποφθέγγεται, speaks nothing from himself, but all things from another: no prophecy being, saith St. Peter, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, of the proper motion, or incitation of the prophets, they speaking still as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2 Pet. i. 20, 21.) And it is essential to a prophet sent from God, and speaking in his Father's name, to speak that only which he had received from him, even as other prophets did, that is, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost; whence by this Spirit our great Prophet is said to be sanctified, or consecrated to his office, and sent into the world, (x. 36.)

Thirdly, The miracles he did on earth in confirmation of this mission and his doctrine, were also done by the assistance of the Holy Ghost. So we learn plainly from these words of the apostle Peter, Acts x. 37, 38. Ye know how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power (or, with the power of the Holy Ghost), who (thereupon) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil: for God was with him. And Christ himself affirms in one place, that he did cast out devils by the finger (i. e. the power) of God, Luke xi. 20. and in another, that he did cast them out by the Holy Ghost, Matt. xii. 28. from the collation of which two places we may rationally conclude, that what he elsewhere saith, he did by the power of God, was done by the Spirit of God abiding in him: thus, when our Lord came from the wilderness, where he was tempted of the devil, he goes through all Galilee, healing every disease and every malady in the people: and the fame of him goes out through all Syria: and they brought to him all sick people, and all that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those that were possessed with devils, and those that were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them, Matt. iv. 23, 24. Now by what power he healed all these diseases and maladies, which raised this fame of him in Galilee, St. Luke insinuates, by saying, He returned in the power of the Holy Ghost into Galilee, and the fame of him was spread throughout all that region, Luke iv. 14.

* Vol. iii. serm. 45. p. 524.

† Vol. ii. par. ii. cap. 7. p. 60, 61.

* Quis Rer. div. Hæres. p. 404.

Moreover, our Lord declares he did his miracles by the Father abiding in him, bidding the Jews believe his works, that they might know and believe that the Father was in him, and he was in the Father, John x. 37, 38. and chap. xiv. he proves, that he is in the Father, and the Father in him; because (saith he) the Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works, ver. 10. and, ver. 11. he adds, believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the works' sake. Now these works being done, as hath been proved, by the Holy Ghost, it follows that he must be here said to be in the Father, and the Father in him, because the Spirit of the Father, styled the power of the Most High, Luke i. 35. resided in him without measure. And having promised to send the Holy Ghost upon them, and said they should do greater works than he had done, because he went to the Father, to send this promise of the Father, ver. 12. 17. he adds, ver. 20. In that day ye shall know, that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you. Now it is certain, that Christ was in his apostles by his Spirit abiding with them, (ver. 16.) and that they were in him by the same Spirit uniting them to their head Christ; (Eph. ii. 22. iii. 16, 17. iv. 16.) and therefore Christ must be here said to be in the Father by the Spirit of his Father: (see the note there, and see more proofs of this, note on John xvii. 19, 20. 22.) so that from these things I conclude, that Jesus Christ being then in the state of humiliation, and emptied of the form of God, acted, in things relating immediately to his prophetic office, not as God, but only as a prophet sent from God; not by the power of his Divine nature, but of that Spirit by which he was anointed and sanctified to that office: though being also God, of the same essence derived from the Father, he might do many other things by virtue of his Divinity; by that discerning what was in the hearts of all men; by that walking on the sea, and stilling the stormy winds with a word, which he did only in the presence of his disciples; and by that doing many other things of a like nature.

Moreover, his Divinity being part of that doctrine which he was to publish, he might upon occasion assert it, by saying, God was properly his Father, and he was properly his Son; and that he and his Father were one, and that all men were to worship the Son even as they worshipped the Father; with other things of a like nature, relating to his Divinity.

The objection of the Socinians against this hypothesis, is fully answered, note on Matt. iii. 16.

POSTSCRIPT.

I COME now to the chief controversy betwixt me and Mr. Whiston, which is concerning the time of Christ's preaching and his baptism.

He saith, prop. 8. That the beginning of our Saviour's ministry, both as to preaching and miracles, commenced soon after that of John the Baptist, towards the beginning of the famous fifteenth year of Tiberius, long before his own baptism; i. e. according to his computation, near two years before it.

Now to this proposition I oppose the contradictory assertion of Cyril of Jerusalem,* viz. That Jesus Christ preached not before his baptism, but then only began to preach when the Holy Ghost bodily descended on him in the shape of a dove: and this probably he might know from the tradition of the Jewish converts, who might be baptized with him. Agreeable to this assertion is that of Eusebius of Palestine,† That our Lord beginning to be thirty, came to John's baptism, καταρχήν τε ποιεῖ τηνικαῦτα τοῦ κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κηρύγματος, and from thence he began to preach the gospel. Epiphanius,‡ who was born in Palestine, of Jewish parents, saith, That our Lord came to the baptism of St. John the Baptist in the thirtieth year of his incarnation, καὶ ἀπεντεῦθεν, and from that time preached the acceptable year of the Lord. And lastly, Irenæus saith,§ That he neither could have disciples nor could teach before he began to be thirty, "Magistri ætatem non habens;" but then he came to his baptism, "triginta quidem annorum existens, cum veniret ad baptismum, deinde magistri ætatem perfectam habens," being then of perfect age to be a teacher. And hence arose that canon‖ of the church, to ordain a presbyter τριάκοντα ὄντα ἐτῶν, when he was thirty years old. This being by all the fathers (one alone excepted) gathered, and thought certain, from St. Luke, that Christ came to his baptism when he was in his thirtieth year; see the note on Luke iii. 33. where this is proved, and the sense of the words of St. Luke is fully considered: and, saith Langius,¶ That which hath this full consent of antiquity, and is agreeable to Scripture, is certainly the truth.

Secondly, It is the express assertion of St. Luke, that the Baptist began his ministry in the fifteenth year of Tiberius; for then, saith he, the word of the Lord came to him, and he came forth preaching the baptism of repentance, Luke iii. 2, 3. and it is the general assertion of all antiquity, that Christ was baptized in the same year; it is therefore impossible that either John should so long begin to preach, or that Christ should preach so long as he saith he did, before his baptism. And,

Thirdly, That which Mr. Whiston offers from Eusebius* in favour of his opinion, is a perfect demonstration against it; for he saith, St. John writ his Gospel to supply the defects of the other evangelists, who had omitted τὴν περὶ τῶν ἐν πρώτοις καὶ κατ' ἀρχὴν τοῦ κηρύγματος ὑπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ πεπραγμένων διήγησιν, the narrative of the things done by Christ at the beginning of his preaching: now, saith the same Eusebius, in the same book, Christ beginning to be thirty years old, came to John's baptism, καταρχήν τε ποιεῖ τηνικαῦτα, &c. and from thence he began to preach the gospel: moreover, he makes the defect of the other evangelists to consist in this; that they said nothing of the time of the beginning of Christ's preaching (which, saith he, was from his baptism by John in Jordan), till after John's imprisonment; whereas the evangelist St. John begins there (i. e. at the beginning of Christ's preaching after his baptism), saying, This beginning of miracles did Jesus; and goes on through all the time of John's baptizing afterward, till his imprisonment, as he shews by saying, John was baptizing in Enon, near Salim, for John was not yet cast into prison, John iii. 23. Who sees not now that Eusebius places all the time of Christ's preaching, mentioned by St. John from the second to the fifth chapter, betwixt Christ's baptism and St. John Baptist's being cast into prison? Now this being the way that Jerome, Eusebius, and all the ancients, who undertook to answer the cavils of Porphyry and others, who questioned the truth of the Gospels, took to reconcile the evangelists in this matter, demonstrates that they knew and believed nothing of this new revelation, that our Saviour preached above two years before his baptism.

To proceed now to the arguments from Scripture concurring with the suffrage of antiquity, I assert,

First, That John the Baptist did see the Holy Spirit descending from heaven, and abiding upon Christ at his baptism. This is evident (1.) from the nature of the thing, it being almost inconceivable that there should be such a glorious opening of the heavens, and such a visible descent of the Holy Ghost in a bodily shape, and that he who stood by all the while, and saw Christ come out of the water, should not discern what was more visible, as being a more glorious appearance.

Secondly, This seems farther evident from the words following, καὶ ἰδοὺ, and behold a voice from heaven, saying, οὗτος, This is my beloved Son; for as, in the like case, καὶ ἰδοὺ, and behold a voice out of the cloud, saying, οὗτος, This is my beloved Son, hear him, Matt. xvii. 5. was an advertisement to the disciples present there, that God from heaven gave them this testimony concerning him who was transfigured before them: so the καὶ ἰδοὺ οὗτος, and behold this, &c. Matt. iii. 17. must be an advertisement to the Baptist, that he on whom the Holy Ghost thus descended was the Son of God. And hence John's testimony is thus related, i. 32—34. He that sent me to baptize said, On whomsoever thou (baptizing) seest the Spirit descending, and abiding on him, he it is that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost; and I saw (this) and (hearing also at the same time the voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son) I testified, that this is the Son of God.

Nor is it any objection to the contrary, that St. Mark, i. 11. and St. Luke, iii. 22. give the words of the voice from heaven thus, Thou art my beloved Son: for as neither of them hath the advertisement to behold, which St. Matthew hath, so he that saith to another of Christ in his audience, This is my beloved Son, saith in effect to him, Thou art so.

Hence I infer, that the Baptist saw not the Holy Ghost descending upon Christ as a dove before Christ's baptism, and consequently, that his testimony of this matter, John i. 32. must relate to what he had seen at his baptism, since otherwise the Baptist must have seen him twice descending thus upon Christ, in the very same shape, and after the same manner; whereas if, by the first vision, the sign of the Messiah promised to him was so fully given him, that he declares that he had seen it, and by it was enabled to testify Christ was the Son of God, what need was there of a second vision, or to what end was it designed?

Secondly, There is no reason to say, that the Holy Ghost descended twice in the same shape, and with the same circumstances, from heaven upon Christ, as this opinion doth suppose, since by the first descent upon him he must be sufficiently sanctified, and consecrated to his office. Moreover, he speaks of himself, John iii. 17. as of one sent into the world by the Father, and therefore sanctified already, John x. 36. And the Baptist speaks of him not only as one who testified what he had seen and heard (at his baptism), but also as one sent from God, and filled with his Spirit above measure, and who had all things put into his hands, complaining that no man received his testimony, though God the Father had set his seal upon it, ver. 31. 34. Now is it reasonable to conceive, as Mr. Whiston's opinion forces us to do, that all this should be said by Christ, and by the Baptist, before that baptism in which alone the Father had declared him to be his beloved Son?

Obj. It is objected, that when Christ came to be baptized of John, he not only knew him, but speaks thus to him, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? Which words imply, not only his knowledge who he was, but also that he baptized as well as himself; yet, after his baptism was over, and not before, Jesus went up out of the water, and the heavens were opened, &c. Since then the Baptist said, I knew him not, but had this signal given me whereby to know him, viz. the descent and abode of the Holy Ghost, how comes he to be so well acquainted with him before his baptism, as the words above mentioned do imply?

Ans. 1. To this I answer, first, That as these words, He it is that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, do not intimate that Christ did then, or whilst he was on earth, do this, but only that he was to do it after his resurrection and ascension: (John vii. 39. Acts i. 5. 11. 16.) so the words of the Baptist, I have need to be baptized of thee, do not intimate the Baptist's knowledge, that Jesus then baptized (partly because it is not true, since Jesus baptized not whilst John was at Jordan, but only when he was baptizing at Enon, John iii. 23. partly because Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples only, John iv. 2. and surely John, who had commission from God to use this baptism, and probably had baptized these disciples, could not need their water-baptism); they therefore only signify, that Christ was the person who should afterward baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire, and that John needed that baptism which would enable him to work miracles, and to speak with unknown tongues.

Ans. 2. Secondly, I answer, That John the Baptist, being filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, (Luke i. 15.) knew by the afflatus of that Spirit, that he who then came to him was the very person on whom the Holy Ghost should descend so gloriously, and on whom he should abide, that he might impart him to others, such matters being frequently imparted to holy prophets by an immediate intimation of the Holy Ghost. So Simeon being told, he should not die till he had seen the Lord's Christ, Luke ii. 26. had also an afflatus declaring to him, that our Lord was the Christ, ver. 27. 32. So Samuel being told by God, that on the morrow a man should come to be captain over his people Israel, 1 Sam. ix. 15. when Saul appears, had another afflatus, resembling that of the Baptist's here, viz. Behold the man of whom I spake to thee, ver. 17. In a word, the Baptist being moved to say, when he baptized with water, that another was coming after him, who should baptize them with the Holy Ghost, God tells him, that of this he should see an evidence by the visible descent of the Holy Ghost upon that person, who, from his fulness, was to impart of this Spirit to all believers; and, when our Lord came to be baptized, tells him again, this was that very person.

Ans. 3. Thirdly, It is not said, I knew him not, but οὐκ ἤδειν αὐτὸν, I had not known him, John i. 31. 33. and this is so said as to give us just reason to believe that this was said after our Saviour's baptism; for the words of the Baptist bear properly this sense, And I had not known him, but that I came for this cause to baptize with water, that he might be made manifest to Israel (by me): then follow the words of the evangelist, ver. 32. And John bare record, saying, I saw (Gr. have seen) the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him (which, as I have proved, the Baptist saw at his baptism), and no man can prove that he saw this before. Then follow again the words of the Baptist, ver. 33. And I had not known him (viz. by this sign of the Spirit's descending on him, but (that) he who sent me to baptize with water, the same (had) said to me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. Now why is the Baptist so particular in saying twice, that he had not known him, except he who sent him to baptize had given him this sign; if this sign had not been given him at his baptizing of Christ, but long before? Why doth he say, he came to baptize, that he might be made manifest to Israel (viz. by him baptizing); if he were not to be made manifest to him by his baptizing him, but long before? Why, lastly, should a thing of so great moment to the confirmation of Christ's mission, and the Baptist's testimony of him, at this descent of the Holy Ghost upon Christ in this manner, so long before his baptism, be never hinted in the least in any place of the New Testament, the Scripture being as silent in it as in the ascent of Christ into heaven after his baptism, which the Socinians have imagined? To make this farther evident, consider that the Baptist only saith in the other evangelists, ἔρχεται, one cometh, or, is coming after me, who shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost; but the evangelist St. John begins his testimony thus, John bare record, and cried, saying, This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is preferred before me, i. 15. Plainly, according to the observation of the ancients, beginning his testimony after Christ's baptism, whither the other evangelists had only brought him: for when St. Matthew had introduced John, saying, One cometh after me, &c. whose fan is in his hand, &c. he immediately adds, τότε, then cometh Jesus to be baptized of John in Jordan; the words, then, this is he of whom I said this, must intimate, that this was spoken after Christ's baptism, and not almost two years before it. Moreover, when the priests and Levites sent from Jerusalem to Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing, asked him, Why he baptized? the Baptist answers, I baptize with water; but there standeth (Gr. ἔστηκεν, hath stood) one among you, whom ye know not; he it is, who, coming after me, is preferred before me. Now, first, when had Christ stood in the midst of them, but when he came from Galilee to Jordan, to be baptized of John, seeing we find not in all the evangelists, that Jesus ever went any whither but to a feast at Jerusalem, when he was twelve years old, till he went from Nazareth to Galilee, to be baptized of John in Jordan? Mark i. 9. Matt. iii. 13. Whereas the evangelist St. John represents him first at Cana, then going thence to Capernaum, as to his abode, then to the Passover, then to Samaria, which shews, that this was done after his baptism. Secondly, These words, whom ye know not, fairly intimate, that the Baptist then knew him, as also doth the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος, that is he, who, coming after me, &c. and the words spoken the next day, This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is preferred before me; which, as I have shewed, were then said, when Christ came to be baptized of John; whereas the Baptist saith, I had not known him, had not God given me this sign of the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him, to know he was that very person. And therefore, when Christ came to his baptism, God saith first to John by an afflatus, This is the very person on whom thou shalt see this sign, and then instantly, upon his baptism, affords it to him: moreover, the evangelist adds, these things were done at Bethabara, where John was baptizing; they therefore must be spoken before the Baptist left that place to go to Enon, and therefore after Christ's baptism; for that the Baptist ever returned afterward to Jordan, where Christ was baptized, we read not.

Obj. 1. Christ was then only baptized when all the people had been so, Luke iii. 21.

Ans. To this I answer, That Christ was baptized of John in Jordan, Mark i. 7. whereas John continued afterward at Enon, and the people came and were baptized of him there, John iii. 23. so that when St. Luke saith, when all the people were baptized, Jesus was baptized also; it is evident he meaneth only all the people then present, or baptized at Jordan by him, Matt. iii. 5, 6. And hence the Scripture makes an exact distinction betwixt John's baptizing at Jordan and afterward at Enon, and perhaps at other places, by saying, John x. 40. that Christ went again beyond Jordan, to the place, ὅπου Ἰωάννης ἦν πρῶτον βαπτίζων, where John was first baptizing, making it evident that John still followed his office after he had baptized Christ, baptizing still in other places: false therefore is the inference from St. Luke's mentioning the imprisonment of John before he speaks of Christ's baptism, that our Saviour was baptized at Jordan at the conclusion of John's ministry, that being only the place of John's first baptism; after which he comes to Enon, in the half tribe of Manasseh, within the precincts of Samaria, and baptizeth; and the people come to him there and were baptized; for John was not yet cast into prison, John iii. 24. St. Luke therefore speaks of John's imprisonment by a long anticipation, that he might put all he had to say of the Baptist together; which, perhaps, St. John intended to intimate, by saying the Baptist was not yet cast into prison.

Obj. 2. All the other evangelists, after Christ's baptism, say nothing of him more, but that he was tempted in the wilderness; and then when John was cast into prison, ὑπέρστεψεν, he returned into Galilee, came to Nazareth, and so to Capernaum. (Matt. iv. 12, 13. Mark i. 14. Luke iv. 14.) Whence it seems to follow, that Christ was baptized but a little before John was cast into prison.

Ans. 1. But how much more natural is the observation of the ancients, that the evangelist St. John observing this, begins where they had ended, viz. at the first appearance of our blessed Lord after his baptism, John i. 29. and gave the testimony of him recorded ver. 15. and ver. 26, 27. a little before that?

Ans. 2. All the other evangelists speak only of the Baptist as the forerunner of Christ, or as one sent before him to prepare his way, and to preach the baptism of repentance to the people, πρὸ τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ, before the entrance of Christ upon his office, Acts xiii. 24. which, all these three evangelists having told us what he did, and by what arguments he enforced his repentance on them, they all immediately subjoin our Lord's coming to Jordan to be baptized of him, and the history of his ensuing baptism: the Baptist being therefore only his forerunner till Christ by his baptism was anointed with the Holy Ghost, and consecrated by this unction to his office, they had no more to say of the Baptist afterward; and so they only speak of what Christ began to say after that John was cast into prison, viz. The time is fulfilled, &c. Mark i. 14, 15. But the evangelist St. John speaks of the Baptist, not as the forerunner of, but as one sent to be a witness to Christ, i. 6. which he was enabled to be only by what he saw and heard at Christ's baptism, ver. 31. 33. before which time he only spake indefinitely of one coming after him; but when he had baptized him, he saith demonstratively, This is he of whom I spake; and therefore he had reason to speak of him as long as he bore witness of him, as he afterward amply did at Enon, and of our Lord's performances before John was cast into prison; they being also testimonies of Christ's mission, and that he was the Son of God, and yet entirely omitted by the former evangelists. And whereas,

Thirdly, It is said by the other evangelists, that Christ returned again into Galilee; this well agrees with St. John, saying, after he had ended his whole history of the Baptist, that Christ, ἀπῆλθε πάλιν, went again, or receded into Galilee, to avoid the fury of the pharisees, iv. 3. And it seems worthy of observation, that after Christ was baptized he came to Capernaum, saith St. Matthew, that what was spoken by the prophet of the land of Zabulon and Nephthalim, in the borders of which Capernaum lay, might be fulfilled; whereas, if Christ did what St. John mentions, chap. ii. before his baptism, he must have been there before, and probably have taken up his abode there, John ii. 12. and must have done many miracles there before; since, when he came to Nazareth, they spake thus to him, What things we have heard done in Capernaum, do also in thy own country, Luke iv. 23. and so he needed not to come thither again after his baptism to fulfil that prophecy.

Obj. 3. From the connexion of the words of St. Luke concerning Christ's temptation in the wilderness, iv. 1. with those following, ver. 13, 14. And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him throughout all the region round about; it is argued, that these two things must be immediately connected.

Ans. 1. This is said, not considering that both St. Matthew and St. Mark assure us, that this was only done after that John was cast into prison; which, as I have shewed already, was long after our Lord's baptism at Jordan.

Ans. 2. There is nothing more common in St. Luke than such connexion of things done a considerable time after one another: thus, when he had spoken of Christ's circumcision, he immediately speaks of his appearance at the temple when he was forty days old; and yet Mr. Whiston will have his flight into Egypt, and his return thence, to intervene. He introduceth John, saying, I baptize with water, but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose, i. 16. and then follows Christ's baptism, ver. 21. and yet the Baptist tells us, this was he of whom he had said this, John i. 17. and so, according to the opinion of Mr. Whiston, he must have said this almost two years before our Saviour's baptism. Again, he speaks of the Baptist's imprisonment by Herod, iii. 20. before Christ's baptism; and yet it is certain that he could not baptize Christ in Jordan after he was in prison. In fine, having spoken of Christ's presentment in the temple after he was forty days old, ii. 39. he adds, ver. 40. That the child, being filled with wisdom, increased and waxed strong in spirit, which supposes him then of some years capable of wisdom.

Obj. 4. But, saith Mr. Whiston, this opinion that Christ was baptized before he did the things mentioned in the four first chapters of St. John, put a chasm of almost two years betwixt Christ's baptism and his return to Galilee after the imprisonment of the Baptist.

Ans. 1. It is somewhat surprising to find that, which hath been the observation of all the fathers, who have writ upon this subject, from Clemens Alexandrinus * to Theophylact, that is, for a thousand years, turned now into an objection; their observation is this—that the other evangelists have passed over all that our Saviour did after his baptism till John was cast into prison; but the evangelist St. John, passing by all that they had said of Christ to his baptism and temptation, begins where they left off, and having told us of many things done after by Christ, he adds, that John was not yet cast into prison; clearly shewing, that, according to the tradition they had received, the evangelist speaks, in these four chapters, of what happened between the interval of Christ's baptism and St. John's imprisonment.

Ans. 2. Moreover, seeing there must be a like chasm of time in these evangelists, who speak not one word of Christ's leaving Nazareth till he came thence to be baptized of John; or of his preaching, miracles, or baptizing others before he was himself baptized, what absurdity is it to place this chasm after Christ's baptism, as the ancients do,* who also positively say, that Christ preached not before he was baptized, rather than, against the suffrage of all antiquity, to place it before his baptism? This will be farther evident from the words of St. Peter rightly interpreted, viz. of those who have accompanied with us all the time that our Lord Jesus went in and out among us (ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ βαπτίσματος Ἰωάννου, he beginning so to do from the baptism of John till the day that he was taken up from us), must one be chosen to be a witness of his resurrection, Acts i. 20, 21. For (1.) I have proved, note on ver. 20. that to go in and out is to perform his prophetic office. (2.) Those words, beginning from the baptism of John, cannot be expounded truly of Christ's entrance on his office at the beginning of John's baptism; for then the Baptist could not be Christ's forerunner, nor could he represent Christ as one that was to come after him; nor could he say, he came to baptize, that he might be made manifest to Israel, seeing his preaching and his miracles, by which he manifested his glory, (John ii. 11. iii. 2.) according to the opinion of Mr. Whiston, must be done long before his baptism; and much less could St. Paul say so emphatically, that John was sent προκηρύττειν πρὸ προσώπου τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ, to preach first the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel before the entrance of Christ upon his ministry; (Acts xiii. 24.) but, as Grotius truly saith, they are to be understood of the time, "ex quo Jesus fuit à Johanne baptizatus," from Christ's being baptized by John; for it is reasonable to conceive, St. Peter speaks of his baptism, of whose ascension he speaks in the same place, since otherwise the terminus à quo, the baptism, and the terminus ad quem, his ascension, will not respect the same person, it being, doubtless, Christ's ascension that is spoken of. In a word, if Christ preached two years before his baptism, he preached a year and a half before his forerunner; for it was only in the fifteenth of Tiberius, that the word of the Lord coming to the Baptist, he went out and preached the baptism of repentance. (Luke iii. 2, 3.) Now in this very fifteenth of Tiberius the baptism of Christ is placed by all the ancients, saying, that he was baptized duobus Geminis consulibus, which fixeth his baptism to that very year. And hence Mr. Whiston's inference, that St. John's preaching and Christ's must begin in the same year, is confirmed by all antiquity, declaring that Christ was baptized, and afterward began to preach, in the same fifteenth year of Tiberius; and the epocha of the Baptist's preaching ought to be made the beginning of the gospel; because, as St. Luke truly saith, John did εὐαγγελίζεσθαι τὸν λαὸν, preach the gospel to the people, he preaching that men should believe on him that should come after him, that is, on Jesus Christ. (Acts xix. 4.) He not only baptized with the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, but pointed to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. (John i. 29.) Now, this faith, and this remission of sins through the blood of Christ, are the two great doctrines of the gospel.

And whereas, to avoid the testimony of St. Luke, who, when he had spoken of Christ's baptism after the people were baptized, and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him in the shape of a dove, and of the voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, which in St. Matthew and St. Mark are expressly said to follow Christ's baptism, immediately adds, And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age; Mr. Whiston saith, This relates not to the time of his baptism, but of his ministry long before his baptism: in this, as he contradicts all the ancients, so he makes St. Luke to relate first what happened at Christ's baptism, and, in his own opinion, at the end of the Baptist's ministry; and then, in the immediate ensuing words, to speak of what was done almost two years before; than which nothing can be more improbable. 2. They who refer the word ἀρξάμενος to the beginning of Christ's ministry or preaching, as some chronologers and others do, still refer it to his ministry after his baptism; so that Mr. Whiston is still left alone with his new notion of Christ's ministry long before his baptism, and his groundless distinction betwixt Christ's private and his public ministry, for which there is neither foundation nor colour in Scripture or antiquity. And, 3. whereas Mr. Whiston will not allow the word ἀρχόμενος to refer to Christ's years, but will rather have it to refer to κηρύξαι, or some such word, i. e. to a word not used, i. e. to a matter not so much as hinted by him, as I have in my note justified the Greek from the censure of the critics, and strengthened our version with the concurrence of all the Greek fathers who accord with it, and thence infer, that Christ was beginning his thirtieth year at his baptism: so it may be confirmed by the concurrence of Jerome,* and of all the ancient versions, with the sense of our translation.

Lastly, Whereas he cites, for confirmation of his opinion, the words of the Jews, saying, Luke xxiii. 5. He stirreth up the people, teaching through all Judea, beginning from Galilee to this place; and those of St. Peter, Acts x. 37. The word which ye know was published through all Judea, beginning from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached:

Ans. 1. I answer, that these words agree exactly with our hypothesis, who say, that after Christ's temptation, he returns to John, and receives his testimony, that he was the very person of whom he had before indefinitely spoken, yea, that he was the Son of God, John i. 34. which he had heard only at his baptism, and that he was the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, of all which things the other evangelists had given no account; then he goes into Galilee, manifesting his glory there; from thence to Jerusalem, then to Judea, where he baptizeth by his disciples, as John did, into the faith of the Messiah, whose kingdom was shortly to be set up, and for which they were to prepare themselves by the baptism of repentance, and then again goes back to Galilee. (See the note on John iii. 22. 26.)

Ans. 2. St. Peter plainly saith, that this word was spoken by Jesus of Nazareth, (1.) when he had been anointed by the Holy Ghost and power, which after his baptism he was: for then he returned from Jordan full of the Holy Ghost, (Luke iv. 1.) and into Galilee, ἐν δυνάμει τοῦ πνεύματος, in the power of the Spirit, (ver. 14.) whereas before his baptism, nothing of this nature is said of him. (2.) That he is said to begin from Galilee after the baptism which John preached, i. e. after that baptism was concluded by the imprisonment of the Baptist. Now, though our Lord was baptized above a year before, and by his disciples did baptize after the manner of John; and to the same ends, whilst John himself continued so to do, and no longer; yet it was after the ceasing of the baptism of John, that he begins in Galilee to preach the kingdom of God, and declare that it was now coming. Thus St. Mark tells us, that after John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time (of the coming of the Messiah to erect it) is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel: (Mark i. 14, 15.) and in like manner St. Matthew, that from that time (that the Baptist was cast into prison) Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (Matt. iv. 17.) The time before, recorded by the evangelist St. John, was spent in doing such miracles, and teaching such doctrines, as might prepare them to receive and believe in him, when he began to preach the doctrine of his kingdom, and to set it up. And hence we find, that though Christ had disciples or followers before, yet he had called none before to follow him, or be continually with him, as afterward he did, Matt. iv. 19. 21. Mark i. 17. 20. Here therefore seems to be a clear account of this whole matter; Christ cometh from Nazareth to Jordan to be baptized of John, that he might see the sign God had promised, and hear him styled from heaven the Son of God; and so by testifying these things might make him manifest to Israel; he hereupon declares what he had seen and heard, and so pronounces Christ the Son of God: then Christ goes on during the baptism of John at Bethabara, at Enon, and perhaps elsewhere, to work miracles, and to declare that God had sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world (but not yet saying that he was that Son), and by his disciples to baptize men as John did, to fit them for, and to prepare them to embrace, the doctrine of his kingdom, when it was to be set up. When therefore John was cast into prison, and so his ministry was finished, and gave place to that of Christ's; Christ goes into Galilee, and there begins to preach that doctrine, which was to commence at the cessation of John's baptism, and succeed to it: and therefore the three first evangelists, passing by what Christ did after his baptism to fit men for this kingdom, begin what they had farther to say of him when Christ himself began to preach the doctrine of that kingdom. And Christ himself saith, with relation to that epocha, From the days of John the Baptist till now the kingdom of heaven suffers violence, Matt. xi. 12. and Luke xvi. 16. ἀπὸ τότε, From the time of John the kingdom of heaven is preached, and all men press into it.

Note also, that whereas in the preface to the Gospel of St. John, I have said, the Passovers during the time of our Saviour's ministry were but four, I find now reason to conceive, with the right reverend bishop of Worcester, Dr. Allix, and Mr. Whiston, that they were five.

First, From our Saviour's baptism, which by the suffrage of all antiquity, was in the fifteenth of Tiberius, which began on the nineteenth of August, and so Christ's first Passover must begin in the same fifteenth of Tiberius, and so his last Passover, which according to the Greek chronicle of Eusebius was in the nineteenth of Tiberius, and according to Phlegon in the fourth year of the twenty-second Olympiad, must be his fifth Passover.

Secondly, Christ was baptized in the fifteenth of Tiberius,* duobus Geminis consulibus, i. e. C. Rubellio Gemino et C. Fusco Gemino Coss. He dying therefore in the nineteenth of Tiberius, must die, Servio Sulpitio Galba et L. Cornelio Sulla Coss. That is, in the fifth year following. And this I also gather from Dion,† who saith, that Tiberius died after twenty-two years, seven months, 7 Kal. April, or the twenty-sixth of March; Cn. Proculo et Pontio Negrino Coss. Now reckon the consuls backward to the nineteenth of Tiberius, and you come to Galba and Sulla.

CHAP. I.

1. [1] IN the beginning (of the creation) was the Word, and the Word was [2] with God, and the Word was [3] God.

2. The same was in the beginning with God: (i. e. that Divine person of whom I am to speak, neither began to be when he was born into the world, nor when the world and all things in it were made; for he then was, and so was not a creature, but was God, of the same nature with him, though as to personality distinguished from the Father.)

3. [4] All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made, (whether it be in heaven or in earth, visible or invisible, Colos. i. 16.)

4. In him was [5] life (eternal, he having first brought it to light, 2 Tim. i. 10. promised it to those that believe in him, John vi. 40. purchased it by his death, Rom. v. 21. and being the giver of it); and the (doctrine of that) life (which he taught) was the light of men (directing them to it).

5. And the light (now) shineth in darkness (the ignorant and vicious world); and the darkness comprehendeth it not; (i. e. the lovers of darkness will not receive it, John iii. 19.)

6. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John (the Baptist).

7. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light (this Word was to exhibit), that [6] all men through (that testimony of) him might believe (in him).

8. He (himself) was not that Light (which came into the world), but (he) was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9. That (person to whom he bare witness) was the true Light, which [7] enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world.

* Euseb. Chron. Tertul. adv. Jud. cap. 8. † Lib. lviii. p. 732.

10. He was in the world (from the beginning, preserving the men of it by his providence, and not leaving them without a witness of his care of them, Acts xiv. 17.) and the world was made by him, (so that all men might by his works discern his eternal power and Godhead, Rom. i. 20.) and (yet) the world (though that wisdom he had given them) [8] knew him not. (1 Cor. i. 21.)

11. He came unto his [9] own (people, the Jews, to whom he was sent), and (but) his own received him not.

12. But as many as received him, to them gave he (the) [10] power (or privilege) to become the sons of God, (by adoption to life eternal: see note on Rom. viii. 23.) even to them that believe on his name:

13. Who were born (to that inheritance), [11] not of blood (by circumcision rendering them the seed of Abraham), nor of the will of the flesh (by carnal descent from their parents), nor of the will of man (by his adoption), but of (the will of) God, (receiving us for his children through faith in Christ Jesus; for we are all the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. iii. 26. and by his Spirit sanctifying us: for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, Rom. viii. 14.)

14. And (that mortal men might attain this life) the Word was made [12] flesh, and [13] dwelt among us (and we beheld his [14] glory, the glory [15] as of the only-begotten Son of the Father) (i. e. his power in doing such works as none but he could do), [16] full of grace (to procure that pardon of sin and justification which the law could not give) and truth, (in opposition to those types and shadows of spiritual blessings, and good things to come, of which Christ exhibited the substance and the truth, Heb. x. 1. giving us an inheritance in the celestial Canaan, and an entrance into the true tabernacle, ver. 19.)

15. John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, (when I said) He that cometh after me is (to be) preferred [17] before me; for he was before me (both as to being and as to dignity).

16. And of his fulness have all we received, and (even) [18] grace for (according to the measure of the) grace (of Christ, Eph. iv. 7.)

17. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth (the grace of that gospel which is styled truth, see note on Rom. ii. 1.) came by Jesus Christ.

18. (Nor is there any other means of coming to the knowledge of the truth, and the enjoyment of that grace; for) [19] no man hath seen God at any time (i. e. as to his essence, or that glorious light in which he dwells, and to which no mortal eye can approach, 1 Tim. vi. 16. or as to any full discovery or perfect idea of his attributes); the only-begotten Son, who is [20] in the bosom of the Father, (i. e. most intimately acquainted with his secrets, and is the image of the invisible God, Col. i. 15.) he hath declared him (i. e. his will and attributes to us in the most perfect manner).

19. And this is the record of John (concerning Jesus, which he gave to him) when the (Sanhedrin of) the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? (i. e. art thou the Christ?)

20. And (then also) he [21] confessed and denied not (the truth); but confessed, (saying of himself) I am not the Christ.

21. And (when he had so said) they asked him, What then (art thou)? Art thou [22] Elias (the Tishbite, whom we expect to anoint him)? And he said, I am not. (Then they inquired farther,) Art thou that prophet (raised from the dead whom we expect? Matt. xvi. 14.) And he answered, No.

22. Then they said to him, Who (then) art thou? (tell us) that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23. He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias, (xl. 3, 4.)

24. And they which were sent were of (the sect of) [23] the pharisees (and so exact, as they supposed, in all the rites and traditions which ought to be observed).

25. And they asked him (therefore), and said to him, [24] Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not the Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet? (or, by what authority doest thou this?)

26. John answered them, saying, [25] I baptize (you) with water, (to call you to repentance, as I was sent by God to do, ver. 33.) but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not;

27. He it is, who, coming after me, is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose (i. e. to whom I am unworthy to be a servant).

28. These things were done in [26] Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

29. The next day John seeth Jesus coming to him, and saith, Behold, (here is) the (true) [27] Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world (by making a full expiation for the guilt of them)!

30. This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man that is preferred before me; for he was before me.

31. [28] And I knew him not (till God revealed it to me, or when I said this): but (knowing) that he should (suddenly) be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come (came I first) baptizing with water.

32. And John bare record, saying, I saw (Gr. have seen) the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him, (and by this sign, given me of God, I knew him to be the Christ, from whom that Spirit should be derived on others, ver. 26.)

33. And (before) I (thus) knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same (had) said to me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35. Again the next day after, John stood, and two of his disciples;

36. And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith (to them), Behold the Lamb of God!

37. And the [29] two disciples heard him speak (this), and they followed Jesus.

38. Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith to them, What seek ye? They said to him, Rabbi, which is to say, being interpreted, Master, where dwellest thou (that we may be there with thee)?

39. He saith to them, Come and see. (And) they came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day (and the night following): for it was about the tenth hour (or four in the afternoon).

40. One of the two, which heard John speak, and followed him, was [30] Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41. He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith to him, We have found the (promised) Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.

42. And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, [31] Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, A stone, (or, a rock, upon whose preaching the foundation of my church shall be laid; see note on Matt. xvi. 18.)

43. The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and (as he was going, he) findeth Philip, and saith to him, Follow me.

44. Now Philip was [32] of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter (and so came next to be found by him).

45. Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith to him, We have found him of whom Moses in the law, (Deut. xviii. 18.) and (of whom) the prophets, did write (as of the Messiah, which was to come), Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46. And Nathanael said to him, Can there any good thing come out of (such a wicked, Luke iv. 28. and despicable place, see note on Matt. ii. 23. as) Nazareth? Philip saith to him, Come, and (thou wilt) see (sufficient reason to believe there may).

47. Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and (instantly) saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile (but plain honesty towards men, and sincerity of affection towards God)!

48. Nathanael said to him, Whence knowest thou me (so entirely as to pronounce thus of my inward man, seeing thou hast not before seen nor conversed with me)? Jesus answered and said to him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee (and this thou mayest believe, seeing I tell thee where thou wast, and how Philip called thee, though I never heard him call thee, nor saw thee there with my bodily eyes).

49. Nathanael answered and said to him, Rabbi, (this knowledge, so proper to a Divine person, convinceth me that) thou art the [33] Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.

50. Jesus answered and said to him, Because I said to thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these (stronger and more convincing arguments than these to confirm thy faith in this particular).

51. And (then) he saith to him, Verily, verily, I say to you (my disciples, That) [34] hereafter ye shall see heaven open, (as Jacob did, Gen. xxviii. 12.) and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man (i. e. such extraordinary signs of the Divine presence with, and his direction and assistance in, all my works and words, as Jacob had of God's presence with him, when he saw the angels ascending to receive God's commands, and descending to be with him, and direct him in his way).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ λόγος. In the beginning was the Word.] Here note,

First, That ἐν ἀρχῇ, in the beginning, cannot here signify in the beginning of the gospel, but, as Grotius saith, it being taken from the word berischeth, Gen. i. 1. translated by the Septuagint, ἐν ἀρχῇ, must signify "cùm primum rerum universitas cœpit creari," from the beginning of the creation, as appears,

First, From the following words, declaring positively, that all things were made by the Word here mentioned, ver. 3. even the world itself, ver. 10. and negatively, that without him there was not any thing made that was made; which plainly shews, that the evangelist is here speaking of the creation, rise, or beginning, of all things created. And this interpretation is strengthened by all those other Scriptures, which speak of a glory this Word had with the Father before the foundation of the world, and represent him as one begotten before the whole creation, as being πρὸ πάντων before all things: so that they all were both at first created, and still subsisted by him, (Col. i. 15—17.) and that he in the beginning framed the heavens and earth, even those heavens and that earth that shall decay and perish. (Heb. i. 10, 11.)

Secondly, The Socinian gloss makes a very plain and flat tautology in the words of the evangelist: for the sense of them, according to it, must be this—that Christ was, when John Baptist preached that he was, or, which is all one, that he was when he was, or when he was preaching his own gospel. Now, how can it be worthy of an inspired apostle to assert, that the Word had a being when he began to preach, or when he was twenty-nine years old, that is, when the Baptist came to make him manifest to Israel, this being as true of any other man living, as of the Word, even of Judas who betrayed him, and of Pilate who condemned him, and being told as plainly by all the foregoing evangelists?

Thirdly, Can we imagine that the apostle, speaking of Christ as the Word, before he had begun his prophetic office, from which they do ascribe this name to him, and at the least as soon as he was made flesh, should constantly use this phrase, which belonged only to him as executing that office, and when, that office being ended, he assumed his kingly office, should again ascribe this title to him, by saying, his name is the Word of God; (Rev. xix. 13.) and yet in his large account of his prophetic office throughout this whole Gospel, he never should be once mentioned by him under that name or title, which then so properly belonged to him? And,

Fourthly, All the philosophers, who spake περὶ τοῦ λόγου, of the Word, spake of it as that principle καθ' ὃν ἀεὶ ὄντα, τὰ γινόμενα ἐγένετο, by whom ever existing all things were made: this was the doctrine of the Platonists, saith Amelius, as it was also of Zeno, who styles the Λόγος Eternal, and all the other heathens, who speak of this Logos; and of all those Jews, who spake of him in the language of Philo, as πρεσβύτατος, the most ancient of all beings; and of all those Targumists who tell us, the Word was made by the Memra Jehovah, Word of God; and as the Jerusalem Targum, that it was he who said to the world, Let it be, and it was:—I say, all these Jews and heathens could not understand the apostle otherwise than Amelius did, when he said, This barbarian hath placed the Logos ἐν τῇ τῆς ἀρχῆς τάξει καὶ ἀξίᾳ, in the order and dignity of a principle by whom all things were made.

Secondly, Note also from the same Grotius, that to be in the beginning, is, in the Hebrew language, put for being from eternity, for "sic mos est Hebræis æternitatem populariter exprimere," the being in the beginning, and before the world was, importing a being before time, and therefore from eternity: so Prov. viii. 23. I was set up from ever- lasting, or ever the earth was, מראש מקדמי ארץ ἐν ἀρχῇ πρὸ τοῦ τὴν γῆν ποιῆσαι· Micah v. 2. whose goings forth are, mekedem, from the beginning, from everlasting. And God that abideth mekedem, Psal. lv. 19. Hab. i. 12. is ὁ ὑπάρχων πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, he that is from everlasting: and so it may here signify, and, being spoken of him who was from eternity, must import.

Was the Word.] The plainest reason why this essential Son of God is styled the Word, seems to be this; that as our words are the interpretation of our minds to others, so was this Son of God sent to reveal his Father's mind to the world.

[2] And the Word was, πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, with God. And, ver. 2. he was in the beginning with God.] Πρὸς Θεὸν, i. e. μετὰ Θεοῦ, Theophyl. that is, reason was in God, saith Mr. Le Clerc, but he gives no instance where the preposition πρὸς in the New Testament signifies in; whereas there be many instances where it hath the signification of παρὰ and μετὰ, with, as when it is said, Matt. xiii. 56. his sisters are πρὸς ἡμῶν, with us; Matt. xxvi. 18. I keep the Passover πρός σε with thee; Mark ix. 19. How long shall I be, πρὸς ὑμᾶς; with you? and, xiv. 49. I was always πρὸς ὑμᾶς, with you: see 1 Cor. ii. 3. xvi. 6. so in this evangelist: Eph. i. 2. πρὸς τὸν πατέρα, with the Father: so iii. 21. v. 14. And thus in Ignatius* Christ is mentioned as πρὸς αἰῶνων παρὰ πατρὸς ὤν, καὶ ἀφ' ἑνὸς πατρὸς προελθὼν, being with the Father before the world, and proceeding from him alone.

Nor will this phrase admit of either of the senses imposed on it by the Socinians; v. g. not of that, which saith, he was with God, that is, he was known to God alone: for (1.) this is not absolutely true, he being known before his prophetic office was begun to the angels, saying to the shepherds, Luke ii. 11. To you is born this day a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord; to the Virgin Mary, to whom the angel had revealed, that he was the Son of the Highest, one that should sit on the throne of David, and was to be called Jesus, Luke i. 30. 33. to Zachary, Joseph, Simeon, Anna, and the wise men. (2.) It is a gloss without example of any such import of the phrase, and without any probability; for who would think that, by saying only Titius was with Sempronius, I should mean that he was known to him alone? And (3.) this is as true of antichrist, of hypocrites latent among believers, of a secret thief, or murderer; but can it therefore properly be said, that they are with God? Wherefore this gloss being so plainly absurd, they fly to a second; viz. that Christ, before he entered into his prophetic office, was taken up into heaven, to be instructed in the mind and will of God, as Moses was into the mount, and upon that account it is here said that he was with God. But here lies the great difference betwixt Christ's supposed ascent to heaven, and that of Moses into the mount; that when Moses was called up into the mount, the people had public notice of it; and he took Aaron and his sons, and seventy elders of Israel with him, who saw the glory of God; (Exod. xxiv. 10.) and all Israel beheld the glory of God, as a devouring fire on the top of the mount; (ver. 17.) and after the forty days were over, it is said, that Moses came down from the mount, and the children of Israel saw him with his face shining. (Exod. xxxiv. 30.) Now, if Christ was taken up into heaven as Moses was into the mount, why was it not made public at that time? Why no witnesses? Why no appearance of the glory, to satisfy mankind of the truth of it? And yet we find, that when he was transfigured on the holy mount, he took Peter, and James, and John, with him, which circumstance is carefully mentioned by three evangelists; and Peter, who was one of the witnesses then present, lays great weight upon this being done in the presence of witnesses. For (saith he) we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory.—And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. (2 Pet. i. 16—18.) Now let any one compare this with the account which they give of Christ's ascension into heaven; the transfiguration was intended only for a particular testimony of God's favour before his sufferings; but even in that he took care there should be very credible witnesses of it. And is it then possible to believe there should be such an ascension of Christ into heaven, for no less a purpose than to be instructed in his embassage, and to understand the mind and will of God as to his office; and yet not one of the evangelists give any account of the circumstances of it? They are very particular as to his birth, fasting, baptism, preaching, miracles, sufferings, resurrection, and ascension; but not one word among them all as to the circumstances of this his being taken up into heaven for so great a purpose. Now if it were necessary to be believed, why is it not more plainly revealed? Why not the time and place mentioned in Scripture, as well as of his fasting and temptation? Who can imagine it consistent with the sincerity and faithfulness of the writers of the New Testament, to conceal so material a part of Christ's instructions and qualifications, and to wrap it up in such doubtful expressions, that none ever found out this meaning till the days of Socinus? In a word, had either of these senses been intended by the apostle, why speaks he so obscurely, and says not, as the Socinians, that he was taken up into heaven, or was known to God alone, but so as to have given so great occasion to that dangerous error, as they supposed it, of all Christians before Socinus, that Christ had a being before the world, or before any thing that was made, and therefore could not be a creature? For the words following, all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made, must exclude him from being of the number of things made; and therefore evidence that he was so in the beginning with God, as to be before all created beings.

[3] And the Word was God.] He was so, say the Socinians, by office, not by nature, as being the legate and ambassador of God; but,

First, They have not yet, nor can they shew, that any thing is in the Scripture absolutely, and in the singular number, called God, for any other reason than that the Divine nature was imparted to it. It is said indeed of Moses, Thou shalt be to Aaron Beheloim, in the place of God, τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, saith the Septuagint, in things pertaining to God, Exod. iv. 16. and vii. 1. God saith, See I have made thee Elohim, a God to Pharaoh, viz. by giving thee authority to speak unto him in my name; but then in neither of these places is he called Jehovah, nor absolutely Elohim, but only with respect to Aaron and Pharaoh, to whom he was to speak God's message. Grotius saith, that the same person is styled Jehovah in the Old Testament, who, in the New, is styled an angel; and that the same person is sometimes called in the Old Testament an angel, and sometimes Jehovah; so also doth Mr. Le Clerc on Gen. xvi. 13. xviii. 1. xx. 1. but without just ground: for the angels being God's retinue, and always present with him when he made his glorious appearances, there is no reason to say the angel was God, because he appeared with him, or sometimes speaks or acts by his appointment, or in his presence; but only that God and his glorious angels appeared at the same time, and that they sometimes spake as from the Schechinah; v. g. Exod. iii. 2. we read that an angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in the bush, and St. Stephen saith, that the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in the bush, Acts vii. 30. but neither of them say, that angel was Jehovah, or that the Lord was not present there himself; but, on the contrary, say expressly, that Moses heard the voice of the Lord saying to him, I am the God of Abraham; St. Stephen, Acts vii. 53. and St. Paul, Gal. iii. 19. say, the law was delivered by the angels; but hence it doth not follow, that any angel was so employed in the delivery of the law as to take upon him the person of God, or that any creature said, I am the Lord thy God, &c. And when it is said, that some have entertained angels unawares, Heb. xiii. 2. I own that Abraham and Lot did so; but hence it doth not follow, that any angel spake as if he were Jehovah, or that Abraham spake to them as such, or owned one of them to be the Judge of the whole earth: I rather think, with the Bishop of Ely, that it may be granted, that the three that appeared to Abraham were created angels; but then they appeared only as the retinue of the Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, styled the Lord, ver. 1. 13.: for after the same men, who came in, and did eat with Abraham, and rose from the table, were departed, (ver. 16. 22.) Abraham stands still before the Lord, that is, before the Divine Majesty, (ver. 1.) and styles him the judge of the whole earth. And this agrees well with the opinion of the Jews, who, as they acknowledge that the three men whom Abraham entertained were created angels, so also do they own, that there was then a separate appearance, or Divine Majesty, which talked with Abraham. And this takes off the observation of Crellius, and others in this place, that the name Jehovah is given to angels: for, according to this interpretation, the name Jehovah is not given to any of the three angels, which were entertained by Abraham, but only to the Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, which appeared with them, and spake to Abraham, from ver. 10. to 17. and to whom, after the departure of these three, one into heaven, and two to Sodom, Abraham still speaks to the end of that chapter. It was an angel of, or messenger from, the Lord, that spake to Hagar, Gen. xvi. as appears from his saying (not I, but) Jehovah heard thy affliction; when therefore we read, ver. 10. that the angel of the Lord said to her, Multiplying, I will multiply thy seed, it is to be understood thus—he said this to her in the name and words of the Lord, speaking not his own, but the Lord's words; and therefore R. Uziel here saith, She gave thanks before the Lord, whose Word had spoken to her. Thus Solomon sent to Hiram, saying, either by letters, as Hiram returned his answer in writing, 2 Chron. ii. 11. or commanding his servants to say in his name, David my father; for David was not the father of the messengers, and so they could not say, My father. So the centurion sent first by the rulers of the Jews, desiring Christ to heal his servant, and after, by other friends, saith to Christ, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof; i. e. he desires them to say these words as from him, Luke vii. 2. 10. these two are, by Le Clerc, produced as instances of messengers and legates, speaking as if they were the very persons from whom they were sent; whence he and others infer, that an angel sent from God may say, I am Jehovah, I am the God of Abraham, as Exod. iii. and I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt; thou shalt have no other gods but me; whereas in truth they are but instances of messengers and friends, speaking in the name of them that sent them, the words which they had bid them say, as from them, and had put into their mouths; and so in like manner the words of the angel, speaking to Hagar, and others, what belonged to God alone, must only be the words which God had commanded them to say in his name, and as from him: and this is a sufficient answer to all that is produced by Grotius, Le Clerc, and the Socinians, to prove that angels, representing God, are sometimes styled Jehovah, and speak as if they were the Lord of heaven and earth, or the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Secondly, That the Word is here properly styled God, is evident from the context: for (1.) when it is said in the precedent words, the Word was with God, and when this is repeated in the following verse, the Socinians themselves own that the word God signifies him, who truly and properly is so. The apostle then must either understand the same God, as to essence, when he saith, the Word was God, or leave all Christians liable to a great and dangerous mistake, by reason of the ambiguity of his words. Moreover, the word God, in this chapter, is used eleven times in its proper sense; nor can one instance be produced from the whole New Testament, where, in the singular number, it is used in any other sense: is it then reasonable to conceive it is here used in that improper sense, in which it never is again once used throughout this Gospel, or the whole New Testament, rather than in that sense in which it is continually used in all other places?

Obj. Yes, say the Socinians, because it is here said, the same was in the beginning with God? whereas God, properly taken, cannot be said to be with God, that is, with himself.

Ans. But to this I answer, (1.) that nothing formally, and in the same conception, can be said to be with that which is one with itself; but yet that which is essentially the same, but hath this title from an internal relation to another, as being God of God, or as having the Divine essence communicated to it, may be said to be with him: for (1.) the wisdom of God is identically God, according to the old axiom, "quicquid est in Deo, est ipse Deus," whatsoever is in God is God, and yet παρ' αὐτῷ, with him are wisdom and power, saith Job xii. 13. I was, παρ' αὐτῷ, with him, says Wisdom, Prov. viii. 27. 30. all wisdom is from the Lord, and μετ' αὐτοῦ, with him, Ecclus. i. 1. Thus Philo* observes, that when God saith he made man after the image of God, Gen. i. 27. speaking ὡς περὶ ἑτέρου Θεοῦ, as of another God, he speaketh of, and πρὸς τὸν δεύτερον Θεὸν, ὅς ἐστιν ἐκείνου Λόγος, to that second God, who is his Word.

Secondly, The primitive fathers do very plainly and frequently say, that the Word was strictly, and from all eternity, in God the Father; and yet that, before the creation of the world, there was a προβολὴ καὶ ἀπόῤῥοια, a projection, or efflux of this Word from the Father, which made him Λόγος προφορικὸς καὶ προελθὼν, a Word emitted, or coming forth from the Father; but yet, because he came not so forth from him as to be separated from him, but was "semper apud Deum et nunquam separatus à Patre," not separated from the Father,* they thought it was here said, against the Valentinians, that he was with the Father. So Justin Martyr saith, he συνὼν, was with the Father, as being ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς προβληθὲν γέννημα, a progenies, projected from the Father, Apol. i. p. 44. D. Ap. ii. p. 66. E. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 285. D. 359. A. 284. B. 357. A. So speaks Athenagoras, p. 10. C. D. and Theophilus, p. 100. B. making him from eternity Λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, an internal Word, and then saying that he was Λόγος ἐξερευξάμενος πρὸ τῶν ὅλων, a Word emitted before all things: and Tatian, that the Word which was ἐν αὐτῷ προπηδᾷ, p. 145.: and Tertullian speaks as of a time, cum nondum Deus sermonem suum emiserat, adv. Praxeam, cap. 5. 6. 8. adv. Hermog. cap. 18. 20. 45. and Lact. lib. ii. cap. 8. p. 177, 178. and lib. iv. cap. 6. p. 364—366. see Dr. Bull, sect. 1, 2.

Thirdly, This also is extremely evident from the third verse; whence ariseth this argument, He that made all things is God, in the proper acceptation of the word, Heb. iii. 4. but by the Word here spoken of were all things made, and without him was not any thing made that was made: he in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of his hands, Heb. i. 10, 11. he created all things visible and invisible, Col. i. 16. he therefore must be God in the proper acceptation of the word.

Fourthly, It is very manifest, that the apostle here designs to tell us what the Word was, and where, before he came into the world, and what and where he was when he came into the world, as may appear from comparing his words together, thus,

In the beginning was the Word, ver. 1.	He came to his own, ver. 11.
The Word was with God, ver. 1, 2.	He dwelt with us, ver. 14.
The Word was God, ver. 1.	The Word was made flesh, ver. 14.
He was in the world, ver. 10.

And, lastly, whereas these words, expounded according to the Socinian sense, were utterly unintelligible to the Jews, and all the philosophers, who ever made mention of the Logos; according to our sense, which maketh the Word truly God, and a first principle of the creation, they agree perfectly with what they have asserted of the Logos. I say,

First, That they agree fully with the opinion of the Jews, nothing being more evident than that Philo † frequently styles the Λόγος God, and by the Targumist he is very often styled God; as when Jacob saith, in the Chaldee of Onkelos, Gen. xxviii. 21. the Word of Jehovah shall be my God; and Lev. xxvi. 12. My Word shall be to you for God the redeemer. And nothing is more frequent with Onkelos, and all the Targumists, than, for Jehovah, to put the Word of Jehovah; and of this Dr. Allix * gives above a hundred testimonies: from all which observations it is evident, that the evangelist used the language of his nation when he here said, the Word was God.

Secondly, They accord as fully with the doctrine of the ancient philosophers, who lived before the times of this evangelist. Thus Porphyry † saith, that Plato extended the Divine essence into three hypostases, the supreme God called Optimus, μετ' αὐτὸν δὲ καὶ δεύτερον δημιουργὸν, and after him a second God, the maker of all things; and Plato ‡ himself bids us swear by τὸν τῶν πάντων Θεὸν ἡγεμόνα —— τοῦ τε ἡγεμόνος καὶ αἰτίου πατέρα, God, who is the governor of all things, and by the Father of him, who is the ruler and the cause. Zeno § the stoic saith, There be two principles of all things, matter, which is the patient, τὸ δὲ ποιοῦν τὸν ἐν αὐτῷ λόγον Θεὸν, and the efficient, God the Word, which, being eternal, goes through all matter, forming every thing. And hence Amelius, ‖ having read these words of our evangelist, cried out, that the barbarian, by saying that this Logos was πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Θεὸν εἶναι, was with God, and was God, and that all things were made by him, was of the same opinion with Heraclitus and Plato, who made him an eternal principle.

In a word, not only the orthodox but all the heretics did perfectly agree in this import, if Sandius ¶ may be credited, who saith expressly, that all heretics agreed with the orthodox and catholics in this, that the Word was God, and was before all ages, and that the world was made by it. And as for the orthodox, scarce is there any Christian writer of bulk, from Justin Martyr to the Nicene council, except Arnobius, who doth not insist upon this text as a plain proof of the Divinity of Christ.

[4] Ver. 3. All things were made by him.] The Socinian comment, which restrains all things here to all things belonging to the gospel-state; and saith, that all things were said to be made by him, because all things were renewed, i. e. all believers were made new creatures by him, is sufficiently refuted by what hath been already proved; viz. that this Word is here said to have been in the beginning, not of the new, but of the old creation, and that he was properly and truly God, and so the maker of all things in heaven and earth; and from the parallel places produced already, that God made all things by Jesus Christ, Eph. iii. 9. that he created all things in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible, Col. i. 16. that by him God made the world, Heb. xiii. that he, in the beginning, laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens were the work of his hands, ver. 10, 11. and here, ver. 10. that he was in the world, and the world was made by him, even the world into which he came, which doubtless was the material world, that world which knew him not: and therefore could not be renewed by him.

In a word, all the ancient Jews and paraphrasts agree in the common interpretation of the words, viz. that the Word was the maker of the material world, and all things in it: this doctrine is taught very frequently by Philo,* that it was the Logos by which the whole world was made.

The Targumists† say it was this Logos, or Memra, which first said to the world, Be, and it was, and which shall again cause it to cease to be; it was the Word which created the world and man in it. And where it is said,‡ God created the world, it is usual for them to say, he did it Bememrah, by his Word.

This was taught by Aristobulus,§ a Jew, who lived in the time of Ptolomæus Philometor, as a doctrine received from Solomon, and delivered by him, Prov. viii. for he is represented by him there, αὐτῇ σοφίᾳ καὶ αὐτῷ Θεοῦ λόγῳ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀνατιθεὶς τῆς τοῦ παντὸς συστάσεως, ascribing the beginning of the frame of the universe to the wisdom and the word of God: so that Eusebius‖ had just cause to say, that the Hebrews, κατὰ τὸν ἄναρχον καὶ ἀγέννητον τοῦ Θεοῦ τῶν ὅλων οὐσίαν, after the essence of the God of all things, which was without beginning, and unbegotten, introduced a second essence and Divine power, ἀρχὴν τῶν γενετῶν ἁπάντων, which was the principle of all things that were made, λόγον καὶ σοφίαν, καὶ θείαν δύναμιν αὐτὴν προσαγορεύοντες, calling him the Word, and Wisdom, and a Divine Power. And that on this account the evangelical doctrine of St. John, renewing that of the prophets and his country, ταύτῃ διασαφεῖ, illustrates it by saying, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; all things were made by it, &c.

As for the heathen philosophers, they did so plainly agree in that of Plato, that the Logos was the αἰτία, cause; and that of Zeno, that he was τὸ ποιοῦν, the efficient of the world, that the primitive fathers pleaded this in favour of the Christian doctrine, that even the Logos was in their common language δημιουργὸς, the maker of the world. Many philosophers affirm (saith Origen¶) that there is one God who created the world; in this they agree with the law of Moses, "aliquanti etiam hoc addiderunt, quod cuncta, per verbum facta, et fecerit, et regerit;" and many add, that God both made and governed all things that were made by his Word; "in hoc non solum legi sed et evangelio consona sentiunt," in this they speak things consonant not only to the law, but to the gospel.—We teach that the Word was the artificer of all things, saith Tertullian; "hunc etiam Zeno determinat factitatorem," and Zeno saith the same. Cyril, in his book against Julian, gathers up from the heathens many things of a like nature, to shew ὅτι τὸν ἐξ αὐτοῦ κατὰ φύσιν γεννηθέντα υἱὸν τὸν δημιουργὸν αὐτοῦ λόγον ἐγνώκασι καὶ αὐτοὶ, lib. i. p. 33. C. that they owned the Son essentially begotten of the Good, that is the Father, to be the Word that made all things. And Eusebius* introduceth Plotinus and Numenius speaking of a second god, whom they called Νοῦς, as the artificer of all things; and Plato himself speaking of that world, ὃν ἔταξε ὁ Λόγος ὁ πάντων θειότατος, which the most Divine Word framed.

As for the Christian fathers, they from the beginning have asserted this as the rule of truth delivered to them from the apostles, and confounding the heretics,† "quia unus est Deus, qui fecit omnia per verbum suum, verbum nempe quod extra eum non sit, sed in sinu Patris existit," that there is one God, who made the world by that Word who is not separated from him, but is in the bosom of the Father. (See this largely proved note on Heb. i. 2.) Though therefore it will still admit of a dispute whether the latter Jews did by their Memra mean the promised Messiah, yet two things cannot reasonably be doubted; viz. (1.) that the Jews did by their Memra understand a Divine person, who was from the beginning, and who gave beginning to all things, and that the heathens had the same notion of their Logos. (2.) That the Christians did understand these words of the evangelist in the sense now received by the orthodox, viz. as asserting the pre-existence and Divinity of the Word made flesh, and the production of all things by him. Whence,

Thirdly, It must follow, that the evangelist, who was a Hebrew of the Hebrews, must here have spoken of the Logos in the received sense of Jews and heathens: for this being apparently the notion, which then obtained both among the Jews and gentiles, if they had been mistaken in it, it is incredible that the inspired evangelist coming after them should so conspire with them as to express the very same thing in the same style, and almost in the same words, much more that he should do it without giving the least caution to this purpose, that he meant quite another thing by it, than what the Platonists and some Jews meant by such words as these. For instance, that by the Word he meant, not, as they did, one that was for ever, but a person that never was in being till some few years since; and that by all things that were made, he meant not, with them, all the whole universe, but only all persons that were reformed by the faith of Christ; and that by the beginning, he meant not the beginning of the world, as they did, but only the beginning of the gospel, as the Socinians interpret these expressions. If, I say, the Word, of which St. John speaks, did not pre-exist from all eternity, and was not properly the creator of the world, certainly he would have prevented their concluding the contrary from his words by some very plain caution; because he used that style, and those words, under which the contrary had been taught by men of great reputation; and so he would not have affirmed the same things with them concerning the Word, without any farther interpretation or addition, saying this only, that Jesus was that Word. Again, all Christians, whether orthodox or heretical, being either Jews or gentiles, it is still more incredible that both should have conspired in this import of these words, had it not been received from the tradition both of the converts among Jews and gentiles, that this was really the import of them, or with such confidence have appealed to the prophetic and country theology of the Jews, and the concurring sentiments of the heathens, with the words of this evangelist, if they had understood them in a sense so much different from that, both of the Jews and heathens, as that is which the Socinians now put upon them: if then the universal church from the beginning did not err in their interpretation of these words, it is certain we, who continue to receive that sense and import of them, which they have from the beginning handed down unto us, must still retain the true and genuine signification of them.

Οὐδὲ ἓν, ὃ γέγονεν. Vide Examen Millii in locum.

[5] Ver. 4. In him was life.] That this is to be understood not of life natural, but of that life eternal which he revealed to the world, 2 Tim. i. 19. to which he taught the way, xiv. 6. which he promised to believers, x. 28. which he purchased for them, vi. 51. 53, 54. which he is appointed to give them, xvii. 2. and to which he will raise them up, v. 29. as having ζωὴν ἐν ἑαυτῷ, life in himself, ver. 26. may be argued, (1.) from the like expression, 1 John v. 11. This is the promise that God hath given us, eternal life, and that life is in his Son; whence he is styled the true God and eternal life, ver. 20. the resurrection and the life, xi. 25. the way, the truth, and the life, xiv. 6. (2.) From these words, ver. 7. John came to bear witness of this Light, that all men might believe on him, viz. to eternal life, 1 Tim. i. 16. for so John witnesseth, iii. 15. 36. And this answers the only objection against this interpretation, that the evangelist speaks not of the Word incarnate till ver. 14. and that in that respect alone was he the teacher of eternal life, for John bare witness of him when he was the Word incarnate: it was thus also he came into the world, and came to his own, and made believers the sons of God, ver. 11—13. and yet all these things are spoken of him before it is said, ver. 14. the Word was made flesh.

And hence it follows, that this life must be the light of men, by giving them the knowledge of this life, and of the way leading to it, and in which they that walk are said to walk in the light, 1 John i. 7. to abide in the light, ii. 10. and to be the children of the light, according to those words of Christ, whilst ye have the light, walk in the light, and believe in the light, that ye may be the children of the light, xii. 35, 36. I am the light of the world, he that follows me shall have the light of life, viii. 12. ix. 5. xii. 46. and then the words following, the light shineth in darkness, must respect the heathen world, styled darkness, Eph. v. 8. (see the note on Rom. xiii. 12.) and the blind Jews; and the darkness must be said not to comprehend it, because the vicious part of the world would not own, but hated the light, and loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil, and so they were reproved by it, iii. 19—21.

[6] Ver. 7. He came to testify of this Light, that all men might believe on him.] See here the design of the Baptist's testimony, not only that some few elect, but that all men might believe in Christ.

[7] Ver. 9. Which enlightens πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον, every man that comes into the world.] The words in the Greek are ambiguous, and may be rendered, which coming into the world enlightens every man, or as our translation doth; but that which countenanceth our translation, is the Hebrew way of speaking, that a man born, is a man coming into the world; see Dr. Lightfoot here, and the words of Christ, saying, For this cause was I born, and came into the world: (xviii. 37.) and though Justin Martyr, Apol. p. 84. and Origen, Hom. 14. in Jer. p. 138. interpret this of the light of nature, saying, with some of the Greek scholiasts, ποιεῖ νοεῖν τὸ δέον πάντα ἄνθρωπον, he makes every man to know what he ought to do, since all men are by nature λογικοὶ, all have the knowledge of good and evil, all may, from the consideration of the creatures, advance to the knowledge of a Creator; yet it is certain, that Christ coming into the world, could not thus enlighten any man, they being all thus enlightened from the beginning of the world: in this sense none of them could be called darkness, or said not to know, receive, or apprehend this light, (ver. 4. 10.) or when light is come into the world, to love darkness more than light: (iii. 19.) now hence it follows, that Christ must be said, ver. 4. to be the light of men, by giving them the knowledge of eternal life, and of the way that leadeth to it, and in which they that walk are said to walk in the light, 1 John i. 7. and to abide in the light, ii. 10. and to be the children of the light, John xii. 35, 36. To this Light the Baptist beareth witness, that all men might believe in him, ver. 7. to eternal life, iii. 36.; and therefore with this light he, coming into the world, enlighteneth every man, viz. who doth receive him, (ver. 12.)

[8] Ver. 10. And the world was made by him, and (yet the men of) the world knew him not.] i. e. Owned him not either as their Maker or their Redeemer. Of this see note on ver. 3. and on Heb. i. 2.

[9] Ver. 11. He came to his own.] i. e. To the Jewish nation to whom he was promised, and to whom only he was personally sent; he being therefore styled a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made to the fathers, (Rom. xv. 8.) from whom according to the flesh he came, (Rom. ix. 5.) and they received him not; i. e. they generally would not own him as their Messiah and their Saviour.

[10] Ver. 12. But to as many as received him he gave ἐξουσίαν, power to become the sons of God.] Ἐξουσία here signifies the right, privilege, dignity, and prerogative: as when the apostle warns the strong Christians to see to it, lest their ἐξουσία, privilege or freedom from the Jewish rites, be used as a stumbling-block to the weak, (1 Cor. viii. 9.) and saith, (ix. 5, 6.) have we not ἐξουσία, a right, or privilege, by virtue of our office, to eat and drink? This privilege to be the sons of God is, as Grotius well notes, a right to the inheritance of the saints: for, if children (saith the apostle), then are we heirs, heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ; (Rom. viii. 17.) a right to a blessed resurrection, the sons of God being the sons of the resurrection; (Luke xx. 36.) a right to abide always in our Father's house; (John viii. 35.) a right to a state of immortality and incorruption, the υἱοθεσία, sonship, including the redemption of the body from corruption, (Rom. viii. 23.)

[11] Ver. 13. Being born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man.] i. e. We are born sons, not by virtue of the blood of circumcision, by which the Jews entered into covenant with God, and became his sons; not by reason of that carnal generation, which makes us sons by nature of such parents, who by their fleshly lustings are incited to beget us; not by the will of man, adopting another for his son and heir for want of natural issue; but this sonship ariseth from the good pleasure of God receiving us for his sons, through faith in Christ Jesus. Some observing that the apostle saith, God made all men ἐξ ἑνὸς αἵματος, of one blood; (Acts xvii. 28.) refer this birth of blood to our natural production, and our being born of the will of the flesh, to the birth of the Jews by that circumcision which was made in the flesh; I prefer the former exposition, because, though circumcision be made in the flesh, it proceeds not ἐκ θελήματος σαρκὸς, from the will, desire, or lusting of the flesh, but was done by them in obedience to the command of God.

[12] Ver. 14. And the Word was made flesh, &c.] i. e. Man, according to the usual import of that phrase; as when it is said, Gen. vi. 12. all flesh had corrupted their ways; Psal. lvi. 4. I will not fear what flesh, that is, what man, can do to me, ver. 12.; Isa. xl. 5. all flesh shall see the salvation of God; and, ver. 6. all flesh is grass, and all the glory of man is as the flower of the field; Jer. xvii. 5. cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm. (See Matt. iv. 22. Rom. iii. 20.) And this phrase is used, say the fathers,* not only to express the great affection of the Word to man, declared in taking on him even his vilest part, but also to shew he came to heal, and to recover from corruption that flesh, which, by the sin of Adam, was made obnoxious to death and corruption; and that this flesh, which so inseparably was united to the Divine nature, must be capable of salvation, which the gnostics and Valentinians denied, and the Ebionites, who denied the union of the two natures.

The Socinian gloss upon these words is this, that Christ was born mortal, subject to infirmities, sufferings, and death, and so frail and infirm as flesh. But,

First, It is to be noted from Novatian,† that this is the gloss of those heretics, who denied the distinction betwixt the Son of God and man, lest they should be obliged from these words to own his Divine nature; that is, this is a Socinian gloss. Note,

Secondly, That this gloss is contrary to the true import of the words: for it makes the words frail, infirm, and mortal, and all these epithets, to predicate of, and belong to, the Word. Now who can reasonably imagine that he, who had before told us, the Word was God, and so immortal, the maker of the world, and all things in it, and so infinite in power, ver. 3. 10. should instantly add, the Word was flesh, i. e. frail, infirm, obnoxious to death, and yet should immediately say again of this infirm, frail being, We have seen his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten Son of God, and of his fulness have we all received grace for grace; that he was one in the bosom of the Father, and who alone had seen the Father, (ver. 14. 16. 18.) Mr. Clerc interprets the words thus, And that reason was made conspicuous by the man in whom it was, telling us that flesh signifies a conspicuous nature, in opposition to that which is spiritual, as 1 Tim. iii. 16. but there it is not said as here, the Word was made flesh, but Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, God was manifested in, or made conspicuous in, the flesh, that is, in the human nature, which is the import of the word flesh in all the other places where it is attributed to Christ, by way of distinction from his higher original; as when the apostle saith, the Son of God was of the seed of Abraham, κατὰ σάρκα according to the flesh, Rom. ix. 5. and that the Son, whom he had proved to be God, Heb. i. was partaker also of flesh and blood, Heb. ii. 14. for it is manifest that in all these places, flesh signifies not the frailty or infirmity of flesh, according to the Socinian gloss, nor flesh as conspicuous and visible, according to Mr. Clerc's gloss; but the human nature absolutely taken, according to the exposition of all the ancient fathers; of Ignatius,* who saith, he was a physician, σαρκικὸς καὶ πνευματικὸς, fleshly and spiritual, ἐν σαρκὶ γενόμενος Θεὸς, being God in flesh; of Justin Martyr,† who saith, he was the Son and the Λόγος, ὃς σαρκοποιηθεὶς ἄνθρωπος γέγονεν, who, by his incarnation, was made man; of Irenæus,‡ saying, "Deus igitur homo factus est," God therefore was made man; of Tertullian,§ saying, that "Christus vere hominem indutus, Deus perseveravit," Christ, putting on the manhood, remained God; and of Origen,‖ who saith that Christ, being in the form of God, and a Son of the Jerusalem, which is above, left his father and mother for his church, διὰ αὐτὴν γὰρ γέγονε καὶ αὐτὸς σὰρξ, being made flesh for her; it being said, The Word was made flesh.

Moreover, the wisdom of God was made conspicuous in the gospel, that being the wisdom of God, (1 Cor. ii. 7.) and by the church, by which the manifold wisdom of God was made known, even to the angels. (Eph. iii. 10.) If then that were the reason why the Word is said to be made flesh, the gospel and the church might also be said to be made flesh. It follows,

[13] Καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, And dwelt, or pitched its tabernacle, among us.] This word ἐσκήνωσεν hath such an apparent affinity, both in sound and sense, with the Hebrew shacan, used in the Old Testament, when mention is made of God's dwelling by the Schechinah, or his glorious presence, in the tabernacle, and often shining forth there, and thence ἐν δόξῃ, in glory; (see the notes on Rom. i. 23. Phil. ii. 6.) that we have reason to believe this phrase relates to the Divine nature, or to the fulness of the Deity dwelling in Christ's human nature. This Schechinah, say the Jews, was wanting in the second temple, and this defect was now repaired by the habitation of the Divine nature in the temple of Christ's body, so as never to be separated from it, according to the prediction of the prophet Haggai, (ii. 7.) The Desire of all nations shall come, and I will fill this house with glory. As then God said, with respect to the times of the Messiah, I come to thee, ושכנתי, καὶ κατασκηνήσω, and will dwell in the midst of thee; that is, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, ואשרי שכנתי, and will put my Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, among you, Zech. ii. 10, 11. so did he fulfil his promise, by sending this Emmanuel, or Word made flesh, among them.

[14] And we have seen τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, his glory.] viz. Appearing in, and shining from, the tabernacle of Christ's body, as the glory of the Lord did from the tabernacle of old: for the glory of God, in the Old Testament, doth not barely signify the miracles wrought by God, but either the glory appearing in the cloud of glory, as Exod. xvi. 7. 10. by which God testified his presence with them, and Numb. xiv. 22. and ver. 21. or it signifies the miracles done by the glory of God then appearing; and in 2 Pet. i. 16. it signifies the bright cloud, or glory of God, appearing at our Lord's transfiguration; not any miracle then wrought, of which we have no mention in the history of Christ's transfiguration: here therefore the apostle saith, We have seen the glory, or the Divinity of the Word, conspicuous in the miracles wrought by him.

[15] Δόξαν ὡς μονογενοῦς παρὰ πατρὸς, The glory as of the only-begotten Son of the Father.] Where note,

First, That the particle ὡς, as, is not here a note of similitude, ἀλλὰ βεβαιώσεως, but of confirmation: that this Son truly was the only-begotten of the Father, as Chrysostom here notes: so Neh. vii. 2. αὐτὸς ὡς ἀνὴρ ἀληθὴς, he was a faithful man; Matt. xiv. 5. all men held John ὡς προφήτην, to be a prophet indeed. (See the notes on Rom. ix. 32.) This particle ὡς sometimes answers to the Hebrew ach, and signifies certè, or truly; as Psal. lxxiii. 1. ach tob, ὡς ἀγαθὸς, truly God is loving to Israel: sometimes to caph, when it is used, say the Jewish writers, לאמת הדבר, to confirm a thing. (See Noldius de Particulis, p. 376. 2 Cor. ii. 17. 1 Pet. i. 19. iv. 11.) This glory is said to be the glory μονογενοῦς, of the only-begotten of the Father, i. e. of him who was begotten of him after that singular and extraordinary manner, that this title can agree to him alone, as being, saith Lucian, the unchangeable image, οὐσίας, καὶ βουλῆς, καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, of the essence, counsel, power, and glory of God. Hence is the Logos styled by Philo, ὁ πρωτόγονος υἱὸς, de Agricult. p. 152. B. ὁ πρωτόγονος καὶ γεννηθεὶς, de Confus. Ling. p. 258. A. the begotten and first-born Son of God, ὁ ἐνδιάθετος υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, the internal Son of God. (Lib. de Nom. Mut. p. 824.) By Plato* he is styled ὁ ἔγγονος τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ καὶ ὁμοιώτατος ἑαυτῷ, one begotten of the Good, and most like to him. And Porphyry says, that, according to the doctrine of Plato, of the Good, i. e. of the Father, was begotten, in a manner unknown to men, an Understanding, in which are all things. (Apud Cyril. contr. Jul. lib. viii.)

[16] Πλήρης χάριτος καὶ ἀληθείας, Full of grace and truth.] Here πλήρης, the nominative case, is put for the genitive: so Eph. iii. 17. that Christ may dwell ἐν καρδίαις ὑμῶν, ver. 18. ἐῤῥιζωμένος for ἐῤῥιζωμένων, and Rev. i. 5. ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ὁ μάρτυρ, for τοῦ μάρτυρος. See examples of the like construction in profane authors, produced by Grotius on Mark vi. 40. and by Schmidius. Note also, that it appeareth from the following words, ver. 17. For the law came by Moses; but grace and truth by Jesus Christ, that this Son of God is said to be full of grace and truth, in opposition to the law of Moses. Now grace, in the New Testament, implies two things; both which are declared to be wanting in the law of Moses: (1.) the mercy of God in the free pardon of our sins, or our justification or freedom from the guilt of sin, from which we could not be justified by the law of Moses, Acts xiii. 38, 39. For by the law (saith the apostle) can no man be justified, Gal. iii. 11. Rom. iii. 20. We being justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Jesus, ver. 24. whence it is said to them, who seek to be justified by the law of Moses, that they are fallen from grace, Gal. v. 4. (2.) Grace doth in Scripture signify the gifts of the Holy Spirit freely conferred upon believers, who is therefore styled ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι, the gift by grace, Rom. v. 15. and his gifts are represented by the word grace, as when St. Peter saith, As every man hath received the gift, so let him minister, as good stewards, ποικίλης χάριτος Θεοῦ, of the manifold grace of God, 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. and St. Paul, Rom. xii. 6. Having therefore gifts differing κατὰ τὴν χάριν, according to the grace given us, whether prophecy, &c. (See Gal. ii. 8, 9. Eph. iii. 7.) Now this promise of the Spirit was the consequence of faith in Christ: (Gal. iii. 14.) hence are these two assigned as the great differences betwixt the law and the gospel; that the first was the administration of the letter only, the other of the Spirit: the first the administration of condemnation, the second of justification, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8. Again, the law is said to have been only a shadow of things to come, and an image of those things of which Christ exhibited the body, truth, and substance, Col. ii. 17. Heb. viii. 5. x. 1. (see the note there:) and hence truth is here said to come by Christ; and he is here represented as full of truth.

[17] Ver. 15. He that cometh after me, is (to be) preferred before me; for he was before me, πρῶτός μου ἦν.] Here the critical note is this, that πρῶτος, first, here signifies, before; so 1 John iv. 19. he loved us, πρῶτος, before; Matt. xvii. 20. Elias shall come πρῶτον, before Christ; John xix. 39. Nicodemus, who came πρῶτον, before to Christ by night; 2 Thess. ii. 3. there shall come an apostasy πρῶτον, before Christ's coming; and, John xv. 18. they hated me, πρῶτον ὑμῶν, before they hated you.

Secondly, As for the words ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν, I find no instance where they signify, He was preferred before me: and therefore rather choose to retain the proper import of the words, and give the sense of the whole thus, This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is before me; and this I said, because he indeed was before me, as being in the beginning with God, ver. 2.

[18] Ver. 16. And of his fulness we have all received, καὶ χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος, even grace for grace.] i. e. Of the fulness of grace in him to procure pardon for us, and of that fulness of the Spirit, which was in him without measure, John iii. 34. Luke iv. 1. according to the measure of the gift of Christ: so Jer. xi. 17. the Lord hath pronounced against thee, κακὰ ἀντὶ κακίας, evil for the evil of the house of Israel and Judah: so κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ, evil for evil done to us, or according to it, Rom. xii. 17. 1 Thess. v. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 9. so ἀντὶ τούτου, "ob hanc rem," ἀνθ' ὧν, for the sake of which: (see many examples of this kind in Stephanus:) so Theoclymenus* saith to Helena, Let us forget what is past, and be reconciled, that so χάρις ἀντὶ χάριτος ἐλθέτω, we may receive kindness upon kindness; and one in Theognis† desires rather to die than to suffer, ἀντ' ἀνιῶν ἀνίας, sorrow upon sorrow: so that this phrase, grace for grace, may either signify the abundance and continual influence of Divine blessings conferred upon us; or, with relation to the spring and fountain of them, we have received grace, or tokens of the Divine favour, agreeably to the grace of God vouchsafed to us in sending his Son, and suitably to the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, mentioned 2 Cor. viii. 9. and frequently in the beginning aud the close of St. Paul's Epistles, as that from which we derive all spiritual blessings in heavenly things. (Eph. i. 2, 3.)

[19] Ver. 18. No man hath seen God at any time, οὐδεὶς ἑώρακε.] Here Grotius thinks, that ἑώρακε, hath seen, is put for hath known, as iii. 32. and Eph. iii. 11. giving the sense thus, No man hath known the secret counsels of God at any time, concerning the redemption of mankind, which Christ now declareth to the world; but though this sense of the words be good, yet the phrase in the Old and the New Testament representing God as one, whom no man can see, and live, as Exod. xxxiii. 20. 23. and who dwells in light inaccessible, to which no mortal eye can approach, and whom no man hath seen, or can see, 1 Tim. vi. 19. and the seeing of him in the cloud, the symbol of his glorious presence, being called the seeing of him face to face, Gen. xxxii. 30. Numb. xiv. 14. and being deemed such a vision as would cause God to take away their lives, Judg. vi. 22, 23. xiii. 22. Isa. vi. 5.) I would rather refer this here to the presence of the Word with the Father, mentioned i. 1. and his being with him in heaven in that glory, in which he there dwells, and his coming down from thence as from the bosom of the Father, to declare heavenly things to us, which, saith he, none can do but the Son of man who is in heaven, iii. 12, 13. (See the note there.) For if this being in the bosom of the Father, did only signify his friendship and intimate acquaintance with God, it may be ascribed to Abraham, who was the friend of God, James ii. 23. to Moses, who talked with him face to face, as a man speaking to his friend, Exod. xxxiii. 11. and to the apostles, who had the mind of God revealed to them, 1 Cor. ii. 16. Whereas, in the other sense, it will be proper and peculiar to Christ, to be in the bosom of the Father, as St. John seemeth here to represent it.

[20] Εἰς τὸν κόλπον, In the bosom.] Note, that εἰς τὸν κόλπον is here put for ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ. So εἰς πόλιν, in the city, Matt. ii. 23. εἰς τὸν καιρὸν αὐτῶν, in their times, Luke i. 20. εἰς ἣν, in which, Acts vii. 4. εἰς χολὴν, in the gall, Acts viii. 23. (See Mark i. 39. ii. 1. v. 34. Luke viii. 48. ix. 61. xi. 7. xvi. 8. Acts vii. 53. xiii. 42. Eph. i. 10. Heb. xi. 9.)

[21] Ver. 20. He confessed, and denied not; but confessed.] Such pleonasms are frequent in the Scripture. So 2 Kings xviii. 36. The people held their peace, and answered nothing; Isa. xxxviii. 1. Thou shalt die, and not live; Ezek. vii. 6. An end is come, the end is come, it is come; and especially in the writings of this evangelist; so 1 John i. 1. 3. That which we have heard, that which we have seen, that which we have beheld with our eyes; and, xii. 27. is true, and is no lie. (See here, ver. 3.)

[22] Ver. 21. Art thou Elias? And he said, I am not. (See the note on Matt. xi. 14.) Art thou that prophet?] Jeremy, saith Grotius, there being a rumour among them, that he was to return to them. (See the note on Matt. xi. 9, 10.) When the people were musing among themselves, whether the Baptist were the Christ, he takes off that suspicion of his own accord, Luke iii. 15. Here he returns an answer to the inquiries of the pharisees.

[23] Ver. 24. And they that were sent, were of the pharisees.] i. e. Of the patrons of tradition, who thought themselves so exact in all the ordinary rules, which were to be observed, that this new rite of baptizing, by way of preparation for the Messiah, of which their traditions were wholly silent, must be extraordinary; and therefore they inquire,

[24] Ver. 25. Τί οὖν βαπτίζεις; Why then baptizest thou?] Why usest thou towards us, Jews, who are already holy and in covenant with God, a rite only used by us towards heathen proselytes, to cleanse them from their impurity and to prepare them to enter into covenant with God? Note also, that τί here is put for διά τι, why, or for what cause, as Matt. xvii. 10. τί οὖν, why say the scribes? vi. 28, τί μεριμνᾶτε, why take ye thought? so vii. 3. xvi. 8. xix. 7. xxii. 18. John iv. 17. vii. 19. ix. 27. x. 20. xviii. 21. 23. xx. 13. 15.

[25] Ver. 26. I baptize with water to repentance.] i. e. I am the messenger of which Malachi speaks, who am sent before the Lord to prepare his way, by bringing you to repentance and amendment of life, and therefore baptize you with water, to mind you of that purity of heart which is requisite to the reception of him: so that by my baptizing you with water, to produce in you that purity, will be fulfilled the promise of God by Ezekiel, xxxvi. 25. I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; and, by his baptism, will be fulfilled the words following, ver. 37. I will put my Spirit within you.

Ver. 27. Ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν.] See this reading vindicated, Examen Millii in locum.

[26] Ver. 28. In Bethabara.] That is, according to the import of the word Beth y bara, about the place where the Jews passed over Jordan to go into the land of Canaan: it is situated, saith Dr. Lightfoot,* beyond Jordan, in the Scythopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Syrophœnicians.

[27] Ver. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, ὁ αἴρων τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, who taketh away the sins of the world.] This Grotius refers to the reformation of men's lives; whereas it plainly respects the lamb slain as a piacular victim, (1 Pet. i. 19.) to redeem us to God by his blood, (Rev. v. 9.) or to procure for us redemption, that is, the remission of sins, (Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14.) and to exempt all that believed in him from that sentence of death which came upon the world for the sin of Adam. To illustrate this, let it be noted, (1.) that when a sacrifice was offered for sin, he that brought it laid his hand upon the head of the victim, according to the command of God, Lev. i. 4. iii. 2. iv. 4. and by that rite transferred his sins upon the victim, who is said to take them upon him, and to carry them away: accordingly, in the daily sacrifice of the lamb, the stationary men, saith Dr. Lightfoot, who were the representatives of the people, laid their hands upon the lambs thus offered for them; and these two lambs offered for the daily sacrifice were bought with that half shekel, which all the Jews yearly paid, εἰς λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῶν, ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν, as the price of redemption of their lives, to make an atonement for them, Exod. xxx. 12. 14. 16. This lamb was therefore offered to take away the guilt of their sin, as this phrase signifies when it relates to sacrifices. (See the note, 1 Pet.

ii. 25.) When therefore the Baptist had said, he baptized them for the remission of sins, he here shews them by what means that remission was to be obtained.

[28] Ver. 31. 33. And I knew him not.] By face, or any converse with him, till he came to my baptism, God so ordering it, that there should be no suspicion that I thus testified of him by compact. Observe, also, that the Baptist said this at the same time that he saw the Spirit of God descending on him, ver. 30. and seeing this sign made good, he testifies this was that Son of God who should baptize them with the Spirit, ver. 33, 34. (See note on Matt. iii. 14.)

[29] Ver. 37. Two disciples] Of the Baptist hearing this testimony of their Master, they come to him, either to abide with him, or to gain farther knowledge of him; and therefore they inquire where he dwelt, ver. 39. that they might repair to him thither, not thinking it proper to ask him in the streets concerning the Messiah and his kingdom.

[30] Ver. 40. One of the two was Andrew.] The other is thought to have been St. John himself, who usually conceals his name. Note hence, that these two were called before Peter.

[31] Ver. 42. Thou art Simon, &c.] Woltzogenius notes, that Christ here gives Peter a specimen of his Divine virtue; and, ver. 47. he discovers the secrets of the heart of Philip, shewing that he was able, by the Holy Spirit, to search into the most internal recesses of the heart.

[32] Ver. 44. Of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.] i. e. Where they dwelt. This seems to be added, to shew the reason why Philip followed Jesus before he knew any thing of his doctrine, because what he had heard from them who dwelt near him had prepared his mind so to do; and from the following words of Philip and Nathanael, we have found him, &c. we learn, that not only Peter and Andrew, but Christ himself had discoursed to Philip of the predictions of the law and the prophets concerning him. Note also ὃν, ver. 45. is put for περὶ οὗ, of whom, as ver. 15.

[33] Ver. 49. Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.] These seem to be the two titles of the Messiah in the Jewish phrase, signifying the same thing: for though the Jews acknowledged the Messiah should be the Son of God, yet not in that high sense in which Christ was ἴδιος υἱὸς, the proper and peculiar Son of God; for this they look upon as blasphemy, John v. 18. but in that sense in which they style themselves his sons, John viii. 41.

[34] Ver. 51. Hereafter shall ye see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of man.] Christ here seems to allude to Jacob's ladder, of which we read Gen. xxviii. 12, 13. on the top of which was the Divine Majesty, and the angels ascending, saith Maimonides, to receive his commands, and descending to execute them; Christ therefore, by these words, seems to inform them, that the miracles which they should see performed by him should declare the Divine Majesty present with him, and giving him those commands he was to execute by his prophetic office, as clearly as if they had seen the angels of God ascending and descending on him. They who refer this to the day of judgment, did not consider this was to happen ἀπάρτι, within a little while; and they who refer it to Christ's passion and resurrection, must shew how the angels then ascended and descended on Christ in the sight of the apostles.

CHAP. II.

1. AND the third day (from Simon's coming to Christ, i. 41.) there was a marriage (feast) in [1] Cana of Galilee: and the mother of Jesus was there (uncalled):

2. And both Jesus was called and his disciples (Gr. but both Jesus and his disciples were called) to the marriage.

3. And when they wanted wine, the [2] mother of Jesus (being concerned for this want of her relations) saith to him, They have no wine (hoping, by this intimation, he, by a miracle, would supply this want).

4. Jesus saith unto her, [3] Woman, what have I to do with thee? [4] mine hour (i. e. that time for manifesting my glory by my miracles, ver. 11.) is not yet come (and so I am not bound to have regard to thy solicitations in this thing).

5. His mother (expecting, notwithstanding this answer, that he might gratify her) saith to the servants, Whatsoever he saith to you, do it.

6. And there were set there six water-pots (or cisterns) of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews (who constantly washed before meals), containing two or three firkins apiece.

7. Jesus saith to them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8. And he saith to them, Draw out now (of this liquor), and bear (it) to the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water which was made wine, and knew not whence it was, but the servants that drew the water knew (i. e. not knowing it to be water miraculously turned into wine by Christ as the servants did), the [5] governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10. And saith to him, Every man at the beginning (of a feast) doth (use to) set forth good wine; and when men [6] have well drunk, then that which is worse (i. e. smaller): but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

11. This beginning of (his) miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and (thereby) [7] manifested forth his glory; and his disciples (who saw the miracle) believed on him.

12. After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples, and they continued there not many days.

13. And (for) the Jews' Passover was at hand; and Jesus went up (with them) to Jerusalem,

14. And (there he) found in the temple those that sold oxen, and sheep, and doves (for sacrifices), and the changers of money (or, those who returned it by way of exchange) sitting.

15. And when he had made a [8] scourge of small cords (or of rushes), he drove them all out of the temple, and (that is) the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out (upon the ground) the changers' money, and overthrew the (counting) tables (no man making any resistance);

16. And (he) saith to them that sold doves, Take these things hence; (and) make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.

17. And his disciples (afterward) remembered that it was written (of him), The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up (Psal. lxix. 9. i. e. hath fed upon my spirits and consumed them).

18. Then answered the Jews and said to him, [9] What sign shewest thou to us (that thou art a prophet), seeing that thou doest these things (which only magistrates or prophets have authority to do)?

19. Jesus answered and said to them, (This shall be a sign to you), [10] destroy this temple (of my body), and (when you have done this) in three days I will raise it up (again).

20. Then said the Jews, [11] Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? (and this they said, thinking that Christ had spoken of the temple of Jerusalem.)

21. But he spake of the temple of his body.

22. When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this to them; and they believed the Scripture (speaking of his resurrection), and the word which Jesus had said.

23. Now when he was in Jerusalem at the Passover, on the feast-day (Gr. ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, in the time of the feast), many believed in his name when they saw the miracles that he did.

24. But Jesus did not commit himself unto them (or confide in them as his sincere disciples), because he knew (the hearts of) all men,

25. And needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. IN Cana of Galilee,] To distinguish it from another Cana, which was in the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 8. xvii. 9. whereas this was in the tribe of Asher in Galilee, Josh. xix. 28. and probably where Alpheus or Cleopas, whose wife was Mary, the sister of the mother of our Lord, lived: for that this marriage was in his house, is conjectured, first, because the mother of our Lord is there uncalled, by reason of her near relation to them; whereas Christ and his disciples are bid to the wedding: secondly, because his mother is so solicitous for the supply of the wine.

[2] Ver. 3. The mother of Jesus saith to him, They have no wine.] Some conceive, by reason of this expectation of his mother, that Christ miraculously might provide wine for them, that, whilst he lived privately with his parents, he might, upon some occasion, in an extraordinary manner, supply their want of necessaries. St. Chrysostom says, she was moved to ask this from the consideration of his miraculous conception and birth, the testimony of the Baptist, and his gathering disciples. Grotius thinks, that Joseph was then dead, because he is not mentioned here.

[3] Ver. 4. Τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ, γύναι; Woman, what have I to do with thee?] The papists here contend, that these words are not to be deemed a reprehension of his mother, but only an instruction to his disciples, that in the things of God they ought not to have respect to the solicitations of earthly parents. But,

First, The word γύναι, woman, plainly shews, these words were directed, not to his disciples, but to his mother. And,

Secondly, We never find this phrase used in Scripture otherwise than by way of objurgation or reprehension; as when Jephthah says to the king of Ammon, Judg. xi. 12. τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ; What have I to do with thee, that thou comest to fight against my land? And David to the sons of Zeruiah, 2 Sam. xvi. 20. τί ἐμοὶ καὶ ὑμῖν; What have I to do with you? and again, xix. 22. and Pharaoh-Nechoh to Josias, 2 Chron. xxxv. 21. 1 Esd. i. 26. 1 Kings xvii. 18. and Elisha to Joram, 2 Kings iii. 13.

Thirdly, Maldonate* confesseth, that most of the ancient fathers do openly or obscurely intimate, what Irenæus† plainly saith, that she was guilty of some fault or error in inciting her Son to this miracle unseasonably. So Chrysostom,‡ Euthymius, and Theophylact,§ upon the place.

[4] Οὔπω ἥκει ἡ ὥρα μου, My hour is not yet come.] Dr. Lightfoot thinks this is spoken, because Christ was to begin his public ministry, and to confirm it with miracles at Jerusalem; and therefore saith, vii. 8. ὁ καιρὸς ἐμὸς, my time of going up to Jerusalem is not yet. Others, with Dr. Hammond, say, this hour signifies the time of doing his miracles, ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, openly, was not yet; and therefore, though he did this miracle, he did it so privately, that neither the governor of the feast, nor the bridegroom, nor the guests, knew that he had done it, but the servants only. Lastly, it is observable that G. Nyssen reads these words by way of interrogation; viz. Woman, what have I to do with thee? I have begun to gather disciples, and to act as one sent from God; and is not the hour of my exemption from thy authority yet come?

[5] Ver. 9. Φωνεῖ τὸν νυμφίον ὁ ἀρχιτρίκλινος, The governor of the feast called the bridegroom.] To this governor of the feast it belonged to bless what was prepared, and having drunk of the cup thus blessed, to send it about to the whole company, whence Christ saith to the servants, Draw out, and bear it to the governor of the feast, ver. 8. Moreover, the word φωνεῖν doth not necessarily signify to call the absent bridegroom, but may only intimate, that the ruler of the feast spake thus to him being present: for, as Phavorinus saith, this word, with an accusative case, signifies τὸ λαλῶ καὶ τὸ καλῶ, both to call and to speak to. Thus in Sophocles, τί φωνεῖς; is, what sayest thou? and here, xiii. 13. ὑμεῖς φωνεῖτέ με Κύριον, is, you say I am your Master: so ἐκ τῆς κοιλίας φωνεῖν, is, to speak out of the belly, Isa. viii. 19. ἐκ τῆς γῆς φωνεῖν, to speak out of the earth, Isa. xix. 3. and οὐ φωνεῖν, not to speak, Psal. cxiii. 15.

[6] Ver. 10. Καὶ ὅταν μεθυσθῶσι, And when men have well drunk, then that which is worse.] The word μεθύσκεσθαι does not here signify to be drunk, but to drink to satiety; or, as Phavorinus saith, πληροῦσθαι, to be filled with wine. So Gen. xliii. 34. The brethren of Joseph drank, ἐμεθύσθησαν μετ' αὐτοῦ, and were merry with him; "saturati sunt cum eo," they were satisfied, saith the Vulgate: so Psal. xxiii. 5. My cup runneth over, ποτήριόν μου μεθύσκον, saith the Septuagint: so πίετε καὶ μεθύσθητε, Cant. v. 1. is, drink abundantly: Hag. i. 6. ἐπίετε καὶ οὐκ εἰς μέθην, ye drank, but not to satiety: so Ecclus. i. 16. The fear of the Lord μεθύσκει, replenisheth men with her fruits; and xxxii. 13. Bless the Lord μεθύσκοντά σε, who filleth thee with good things: so Jerome on Jer. xxxi. 14. καὶ μεθύσω τὴν ψυχὴν τῶν Ἱερέων, I will satiate the soul of my priests with fatness; and, ver. 35. ἐμέθυσα πᾶσαν ψυχὴν διψῶσαν, I have satisfied every thirsty soul; and on those words, Hosea xiv. 7. μεθυσθήσονται σίτῳ, tom. v. F. 151. H. 152. H. 1. See 1 Macc. xvi. 16. Moreover, these are not the words of Christ, but of the ruler of the feast, declaring, not how it was with the guests there present, but only that it was the usual custom to bring the best wine first, and when men had well drunk, then the meaner sort, and that this custom was not then observed. And, thirdly, admit some persons might exceed in drinking of this very wine miraculously made, which yet is more than can be gathered from the text, our Lord cannot be charged with ministering to that excess, by making this provision of it, unless we also charge the providence of God, as being instrumental to all that gluttony and drunkenness which is committed in the world; because it doth afford that meat and drink, which, by the glutton and drunkard, are abused to excess.

[7] Ver. 11. Καὶ ἐφανέρωσε τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, And he manifested his glory.] i. e. His power of working miracles, which is styled his glory, John xvii. 22. 2 Cor. iii. 18. and for which he was glorified of all, Luke iv. 15. And this was opportunely done to confirm the faith of the apostles, who were newly come to him; and therefore it is added, that they believed on him.

[8] Ver. 15, 16. He made a scourge of small cords, &c.] To what hath been said, note on Matt. xxi. 14. Mark xi. 17. add, (1.) that Christ, by making such a whip of bulrushes, which could hurt nobody, seemed to insinuate, that he would not use external force to take away the abuses of men relating to his worship. And (2.) by calling the temple his Father's house, he distinguishes himself from other prophets, who sometimes style God their God, (Isa. lvii. 21.) but never their Father. And, (3.) by purging the court of the gentiles from merchandise, not unlawful in itself, but necessary for the sacrifices which were to be offered in the temple, though not necessary to be brought there, he sufficiently insinuates, that a distinction is to be made betwixt places sacred and profane, and that what may as well be done elsewhere, ought not to be done in the house of God, the place appointed immediately for his worship.

[9] Ver. 18. Τί σημεῖον δεικνύεις; What sign shewest thou? &c.] This they ask, because it belonged only to the magistrate, as being God's minister and vicegerent, or to a prophet, to take away abuses in God's service. Now a prophet must shew himself to be so by some miracles, or some prediction of a thing future: this last Christ doth, by saying,

[10] Ver. 19. Λύσατε τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον, &c. Destroy this temple, and I will build it up in three days.] When elsewhere they require a sign, he remits them to the sign of Jonas the prophet, Matt. xii. 39, 40. And here he also seems in effect to do the same thing, by saying, that, by raising the temple of his body after they had destroyed it, or by his resurrection from the dead, he would afford them a convincing demonstration, that he had good authority for what he said and did; and that he was that prophet which was to come.

Note also, that these words are not imperative, i. e. Christ did not bid them destroy his body, but only permissive and predictive of what he saw they would do; and therefore he saith λύσατε, ye will destroy this temple. Examples of like nature we have in the Old Testament, as Gen. xx. 7. He shall pray for thee, and live thou; and xlii. 18. Do this, and live, i. e. thou shalt live; Deut. xxxii. 50. Die in this mountain, i. e. thou shalt die there: (see Isa. viii. 9, 10. liv. 1.) and in the New, as in those words of Christ to Judas, What thou doest, do quickly, John xiii. 27. and that of St. Paul, Be angry, and sin not, Eph. iv. 26. (See the note there.) Moreover, he seemeth here to call his body a temple, and elsewhere to declare he was one greater than the temple, (Matt. xii. 6.) because the Divinity dwelt always and inseparably in it, as the Jews thought the Divinity did in the temple built by Solomon. Josephus not only tells us, that Solomon prayed thus at the dedication of it, ἱκετεύω καὶ μοῖράν τινα τοῦ σου πνεύματος εἰς τὸν ναὸν ἀποικῆσαι, that some portion of the Divine Spirit might come down upon the temple, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. p. 264. F. but that, in all men's opinion, there was ἐπιδημία Θεοῦ καὶ κατοικισμὸς, an advent to, and habitation of God in it, ibid. p. 263. and that God came down into the temple, and did κατασκηνοῦν ἐν αὐτῷ, pitch his tabernacle in it, ibid. D. G. (See the note on 1 Cor. vi. 19.) In the second temple, say the Jews, were wanting the urim and thummim, the Divine glory, the Holy Spirit, and the oil of gladness. Now Christ was that oracle from whom we might receive answers full of truth and light; in him dwelt the true Schechinah, he had the Spirit without measure, and he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows; and so, in these respects, was greater than the temple. The temple, which you have polluted, saith he, I have cleansed; that temple of my body, which you will destroy, I will raise up. And that he did so, is evident from this, that after his resurrection his disciples believed the words which Jesus had said, ver. 22. which, had not Christ raised his own body from the dead, they could not have done. (See the note on x. 18.) I confess, it is more frequently said in Scripture, that the Father raised him from the dead: and this was necessary to be said, that it might appear that he had fully satisfied the Divine justice for our sins, in that he was by him delivered from that death he suffered for them. But then, as the resurrection in general is often ascribed to God the Father, and yet it cannot be denied that God the Son shall raise the dead by his own power, as the Scripture testifies, John v. 28, 29. vi. 39, 40. 44. 54. 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. 25, 26. Rom. xiv. 19. Phil. iii. 21. Rev. i. 18. so is it to be owned, that the Father raised Christ from the dead: nor yet is it to be denied, that our Lord raised up himself, seeing he was quickened by the Spirit, Rom. viii. 22. 1 Pet. iii. 18. and God raised him up διὰ πνεύματος αὐτοῦ, by his Spirit, Rom. i. 4. and this Spirit, as he was the Spirit of the Father, so was he also the Spirit of Christ, 1 Pet. i. 11. and dwelt essentially in him. And thus it is easy to conceive how he raised up himself; and yet his resurrection might be ascribed to God the Father, viz. because he did it by virtue of the Spirit of the Father dwelling in him.

[11] Ver. 20. Τεσσαράκοντα καὶ ἓξ ἔτεσιν ᾠκοδομήθη ὁ ναὸς οὗτος, Forty and six years hath this temple been building.] Mr. Whiston here saith, the words should be rendered, Forty-six years hath this temple been built; but our version is justified from the use of the same words in the Septuagint in the same case, Ezra v. 16. ἀπὸ τότε ἕως τοῦ νῦν ᾠκοδομήθη, καὶ οὐκ ἐτελέσθη, this temple hath been building from that time to this, and hath not yet been finished. 2. The argument of the Jews requires this sense, which our translation giveth of these words; for it is plain folly to state thus the years from which it had been built, to prove it could not be built again in three days; since this could have no more force to prove it could not be built in three days, than its being built at any other time; but the argument is plain and strong according to our version, viz. that it could not reasonably be thought, that Christ himself, or with his small retinue, should do that in three days, which had already cost many thousand labourers forty-six years to build.

Mr. Whiston's computation, I confess, is very plausible at the first view; it begins thus, "Josephus * assures us, that the ναὸς, or temple, was begun in the eighteenth year of Herod, from the death of Antigonus, and that it was finished in a year and six months: now from these circumstances we may certainly find the year we inquire for; Antigonus was slain about July, A. P. J. 4677; and so Herod's eighteenth year must begin about July 4694, and continue till July 4695." Let us suppose the temple begun about the feast of tabernacles in this eighteenth year 4694; add a year and six months, the space in which it was building, and it will appear to have been finished at the Passover Nisan 4696; from the Passover let us count forty-six years, and this will bring us to the Passover we inquire for, Nisan 4742, which is A. D. 29. But yet from an exact view of this computation, I find it fails in almost every particular. For,

First, It is certain from Josephus, † that Antigonus neither was nor could be slain in the month of July; because the temple was not taken by Herod and Sosius till the tenth day of September, it being taken, saith Josephus, τῇ ἑορτῇ τῆς νηστείας, on the feast of the fast; by which words, saith Langius, ‡ he intends no other than the fast prescribed by the law of Moses, and mentioned in his own history as a fast; for he names the day, that every one might know certainly when the city was taken: which, had there been more fasts, they could not have done by this character, sed omnem dubitationem eximit apposita vox ἑορτῇ; but the word feast added to it, puts the matter beyond doubt; for there was but one fast so called in a year. This, say I, is demonstrable from the word ἑορτὴ, the feast of the fast, the tenth of Tisri, being the only fast mentioned among the feasts of the Lord, and called a sabbath of sabbaths, Lev. xvi. xxi. and being by all writers called the feast of expiation. And this is also evident from the word νηστεία, for this being the only fast of God's appointment, is, by the Scripture, Philo, and Josephus, emphatically styled the fast-day: thus, sailing was dangerous (saith St. Paul), because the fast was past, Acts xxvii. 9. for on the tenth day of the seventh month we fast till eventide, saith Josephus; § and on the fifteenth day of the said month τρέπεται ὁ καιρὸς εἰς τὴν χειμέριον ὥραν, begins the winter. Ἡ λεγομένη νηστεία, The day by us called a fast is reverenced every where, saith Philo. ‖ This, saith Josephus, ¶ is the day ἣν Ἰουδαῖοι νηστείαν ἄγουσιν, on which the Jews fast; which, had they then observed any other annual and stated fasts, could have been no character of time, as in Josephus and St. Paul it is. This is yet farther evident from what Josephus saith in the same place, viz. that the city was taken ρπέ Ὀλυμπιάδος τῷ γ′ μηνὶ, in the third month of the hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad. Now the year of the Olympiads beginning in July, the third month of any year of an Olympiad must answer to the Julian September. Mr. Whiston, indeed, will not allow, that ancient writers use to cite the months of an Olympiad; but he may be convinced of his mistake in this matter from the testimony of Diogenes Laertius, * who saith that Socrates was born in the fourth year of the seventy-seventh Olympiad Θαργηλιῶνος ἕκτῃ, on the sixth of Thargelion, that Plato † was born in the eighty-eighth Olympiad Θαργηλιῶνος ἑβδόμῃ, on the seventh of Thargelion, and that Epicurus ‡ was born in the third year of the hundred and ninth Olympiad, on the seventh of Gamelion.

Mr. Whiston, to avoid this, saith the city was taken on the day of a solemn fast, in the twenty-third of the third month Sivan, kept for the defection and idolatry of Jeroboam. But (1.) Josephus doth not say it was taken in a fast, on the third Jewish month, but Ὀλυμπιάδος τῷ γ′ μηνὶ, on the third month of the eighteenth Olympiad, which answers to September; and then by way of apposition τῇ ἑορτῇ τῆς νηστείας, at the feast of the fast, which plainly fixes the taking of it to the tenth of September. (2.) As Jeroboam celebrated a feast in the eighth month, which he devised of his own head, so Mr. Whiston hath devised a fast of his own head in the month Sivan, not mentioned by Josephus, nor any Jewish writer of or near those times, nor extant in Buxtorf's § history of their feasts and fasts; but a pure product of that famous chronicle Megillah Taanith, of which I have already given an account. (3.) When Herod began to batter the wall, it was then summer, saith Josephus, ‖ and so he had no hinderance from the weather: now there being three summer months, let us take the middle of them, July the fifteenth; the first wall, saith Josephus, ¶ was taken after forty days, i. e. August the twenty-fifth; the second, fifteen days after that, i. e. on the tenth of September; ergo, not on the month Sivan, when summer was but just begun. (4.) Josephus adds,  that Herod began the siege λωφήσαντος τοῦ χειμῶνος, when winter was over, suppose about the midst of March; that he went soon back to Samaria, and married the daughter of Aristobulus; that then he gathers a greater army, and Sosius comes to him with auxiliaries; and then he places his camp near the north wall: let all this be done by the tenth of April; and then he adds, that after this, the party of Antigonus endured the siege πέντε μησὶ, five months, i. e. till the tenth of September; how, therefore, is it possible, that the city should be taken in the month Sivan, or the third month? Nor was Antigonus slain till about a month or more after the city was taken: for Josephus †† informs us, that he was afterward carried by Sosius to Antioch, where Antony then was, and that he kept him there, intending to reserve him to his triumph at Rome; but when he heard that the Jews had so great favour for him, and so great hatred to Herod, that they would not be prevailed upon by torments to own him as their king, he beheaded him at Antioch; Antigonus therefore, in all probability, could not be slain till about the tenth or fifteenth of October, and so Herod's eighteenth year could not begin till that time. And so, if Herod began his project of building the temple on the very first day of his eighteenth year, which yet is both uncertain and improbable, he could not begin it at the feast of tabernacles, that being fixed to the fifteenth day of September.

Secondly, Josephus* doth not say, that Herod began to build the temple in his eighteenth year; but only that ἐπιβάλετο, he cast in his mind to do so: and when he had proposed this to the rulers of the Jews, he engages not to attempt the work till he had prepared all the materials for it, nor doth he say how long he was preparing these materials, though, saith Casaubon, all men will think it reasonable to allow him at least a year for that; and bishop Usher saith, they were only provided in two years' space: so that Herod could not begin the work till the middle of his nineteenth year.† Now admit the fancy, that the ναὸς was first built in eighteen months, he could not finish the building of it till his twenty-first year from Antigonus; from thence he reigned only thirteen years: now thirteen and twenty-nine will never make forty-six years.

But, thirdly, that which entirely confoundeth this account is this consideration, that when Herod began to build, he first built the ἱερὸν, i. e. the court of the gentiles and lay Jews; and the building of this, saith Josephus, took up eight years: absolutoque octo annis reliquo ædificio, tandem etiam templum ipsum sacerdotum operâ sesquianno perfecit; and having finished that in eight years, he afterward, by the assistance of the priests, built the ναὸς, or the inward temple, in a year and half more; so that, according to Josephus, the ναὸς was not built till the twenty-eighth of Herod, i. e. but six years before his death: now six and twenty-nine make only thirty-five years.

Mr. Whiston, indeed, saith, that I perplex the matter, when I place the building of the ἱερὸν before the ναὸς, i. e. the outward before the inner temple. But this I do with good authority, and with better reason; for Josephus saith, the ἱερὸν was finished in eight years, and then follow these words,‡ τοῦ δὲ ναοῦ διὰ τῶν ἱερέων οἰκοδομηθέντος ἐνιαυτῷ καὶ μησὶν ϛ', ἅπας ὁ λαὸς ἐπληρώθη χαρᾶς, καὶ τοῦ τάχους πρῶτον τῷ Θεῷ τὰς εὐχαριστίας ἐποιοῦντο, then the temple being built by the priests in a year and six months, all the people returned thanks to God, and celebrate the encænia. Who sees not now, that the work done about the ναὸς was done last of all, and that instantly thereupon follow the encænia for the dedication of the whole? And this is also suitable to reason: for the Jews, fearing that Herod would not be able to perform his promise, would surely keep that part of the temple on which their daily sacrifices, and the service of the great day of expiation depended, standing; till they saw, by what he had done about the other temple, that he was likely to accomplish his undertaking, and would not have suffered themselves to be deprived of the benefit of those sacrifices for nine years and a half, as they must have done, if either the temple of the priests had not been standing, or not dedicated till that time. Wherefore, for the right stating this matter, let it be noted,

First, That, whether this computation of the Jews be true or false, neither Christ nor the evangelist is concerned in the matter, seeing St. John only relates what the Jews said to Christ; and if they said any thing that was not true, he, who relateth truly what they said, can lose no credit by it. Note,

Secondly, That the opinion of them who say, the second temple was (including the times of the interruption to its complete finishing) forty-six years in building, though it may not be true, as Drusius thinks it was; yet it was so, as here he saith, "ex opinione vulgi et sapientum," according both to the opinion of their wise men and the common people; and it is certain from Josephus,* that they had not completely finished it till long after: for he having told us, that the foundation of it being laid in the close of the reign of Cyrus, it was interrupted nine years, till the time of Darius; that Ezra† finished the temple for service, in the ninth year of Darius, in whose second year they began again to build; adds,‡ that in the twenty-fifth year of Xerxes (i. e. Artaxerxes) Nehemias was sent with his commission to repair the walls of Jerusalem, and τὸ λείψανον τοῦ ἱεροῦ τελειῶσαι, to finish the remainder of the temple, the court of the sanctuary being not yet built. (Neh. ii. 8.) And seeing they constantly called the temple built by Zorobabel, and restored by Herod, the second temple, till the destruction of it by Titus; and of necessity it must be so, in some true sense, that the prophecy of Haggai, concerning Christ's coming to that very temple, might be fulfilled; they, who always called this the second temple built by Zorobabel, why might they not say of that, according to their received computation, forty-six years was this temple in building?

But, thirdly, the opinion of Ludovicus Capellus, Dr. Allix, and others, who understand this of the temple of Herod, is exact, plain, and evident: for if you begin the time of the building in the eighteenth of Herod, when he began to set about it, and employed a thousand carts to bring the materials, and provided the most skilful artificers for that work, from that time to his death is exactly sixteen years: this was said of Christ in the thirtieth year of his age, at the first Passover after his baptism: now thirty and sixteen make forty-six years.

Obj. If it be here objected, that Josephus informs us, that Herod's temple was finished in nine years and a half:

Ans. The answer is, That it was then finished as to use; but, saith Capellus, "Planum est ex eodem, semper aliquid additum, et extructum ab eo tempore fuisse in illo templo," It is plain from the same Josephus, that from that time there was always something added to, or new built in the temple, even till the time of Agrippa junior; i. e. about the space of sixty years. Bishop Usher adds, that all Herod's wealth was not sufficient for the building, but that it was continued still by the gifts consecrated to God: and this is confirmed by the saying of Josephus,§ That all the holy treasures,

CHAP. III.

1. THERE was (at Jerusalem) a man of the pharisees, named Nicodemus, (who was) a ruler of the Jews; (i. e. one of the Jewish Sanhedrin, John vii. 50.)

2. The same (οὗτος, he) came to Jesus by night (that he might not offend his colleagues), and said to him, Rabbi, [1] we know (i. e. I know, see note on xxi. 24. or, it may be certainly known) that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him (the power that enables thee to perform them, exceeding all that men or devils can do).

3. Jesus (observing that he said nothing of the excellency and power of his doctrine, to change the hearts and reform the lives of men, but only of his miracles by which it was confirmed) answered and said to him, Verily, verily, I say to thee, (This acknowledgment will not be sufficient to render thee a member of that kingdom I am to set up, for) except a man [2] be born again, (i. e. renewed in his mind, will, and affections, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, and so become a new creature, 2 Cor. v. 17.) he cannot see (i. e. enjoy the blessings of) the kingdom of God.

4. Nicodemus (being a pharisee, exact in the observance of their traditions and ritual observances, but having no knowledge of this spiritual regeneration) saith to him, How can a man be born (again) when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

5. Jesus answered, (Though you so little understand it, yet I have told you a great truth, which farther to explain) verily, verily, I say to thee, [3] Except a man be born (again) of water (and so become one of my disciples by that baptismal regeneration, by which your proselytes are said to become as infants new born) and of the Spirit (purifying his heart from all worldly and carnal lusts, and enabling him to live a spiritual life according to my doctrine), he cannot enter into the kingdom of God, (or enjoy the blessings of my kingdom.

6. And the reason and necessity of this regeneration by the Spirit is evident, as also that it cannot be sufficient to this end to be of the seed of Abraham, he being only the father of our flesh; for) [4] that which is born of the flesh (only) is flesh (still mindeth chiefly carnal things, and lives after the motions of the flesh); and (but) that which is born of the Spirit is spirit; (i. e. is acted by, and lives after, the motions and directions of the Holy Spirit, Rom. viii. 5.

7. And) marvel not that I (have) said to thee, Ye must be born again, (because this birth is not discernible by the eye of sense, nor do men fully know the manner how this new birth is wrought within them by the Spirit; for thus it is in other matters: as, for example,)

8. The [5] wind bloweth where it listeth (as the vapours move it), and thou hearest the sound thereof (and by that discernest the thing itself), but (yet thou) canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth (though it came certainly from one place, and goeth certainly to another): so is (it with) every one that is born of the Spirit: (the effects produced in him by the Holy Spirit plainly shew a great change in him, and he himself perceives it: but the operations of the Spirit, producing this change, are not perceptible to others, nor is the renewed person always able to perceive and to distinguish them from the inward workings of his own mind.)

9. Nicodemus answered and said to him, (I apprehend not:) how can these things be?

10. Jesus answered and said to him, Art thou [6] a master (διδάσκαλος, a teacher) of Israel (one of those who say of their baptized proselytes, they are as new-born babes, and of wisdom, that it comes from above), and (yet) knowest not these things?

11. Verily, verily, I say to thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen (that is, I deliver to you what I know certainly to be true); and ye receive not our witness (i. e. you do not believe and own that truth which, by my miracles, is confirmed).

12. If I have told you (of) earthly things (or that which may be represented to you by similitudes taken from earthly things, or things done by you here on earth), and ye believe (them) not, how shall ye believe, if (when) I tell you of heavenly things (i. e. of things which cannot be thus represented, viz. of my descent from heaven, and abode still there)?

13. And (yet no other person can acquaint you with these heavenly things, for) [7] no man hath ascended up to heaven (to learn them there, see note on Rom. x. 6.) but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, who (according to his Divine nature) is in heaven (while ye see him here on earth),

14. And (yet, as great as this Son of man is, he must die for the sins of men; for) as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, (that they, who were bitten by poisonous serpents, and so would otherwise have died, looking up to it, might live, Numb. xxi. 8, 9.) even so must the Son of man be [8] lifted up (upon the cross);

15. That whosoever believeth in him should not perish (by that death, which the temptation of the old serpent brought upon all the sons of Adam), but (being delivered from it by the death of this Son of man, who is the antitype of that brazen serpent, might) have eternal life.

16. (Nor is it to be wondered, that God should thus suffer his only-begotten Son to die, this being only the effect of his great love to mankind;) for [9] God so loved the world, that he gave (up) his only-begotten Son (to death for us all, Rom. viii. 32.) that whosoever believeth in him should not perish (by lying still under the power of death), but (by rising from it, John v. 28, 29. should) have everlasting life.

17. For (surely) God (acting thus in pursuance of his great love to the world) sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the [10] world through him might be saved (by faith in him.

* Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14. p. 543.

† Ibid. lib. xx. cap. 8. p. 699.

18. And therefore) he that (having heard his doctrine, and seen the miracles by which it is confirmed) believeth on him is not condemned, (there being no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, Rom. viii. 1.) but he that (after the knowledge of this salutary doctrine) believeth not is condemned already, because he (after such conviction) hath not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God.

19. And this is (the ground of) the condemnation (of such a man), that (he continues in his infidelity, not for want of light, but from a love to his sins; for) light is come into the world, and (these) men (have) loved (to continue in) darkness [11] rather than (to embrace the) light, because their deeds were evil.

20. (And this is the proper effect of a prevailing love to sin,) for every one that doeth evil (naturally) hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest (the evil of) his deeds should be (discovered, and) reproved (by it).

21. But he that doth (sincerely love) the truth cometh to the light, that (by it) his deeds may be manifested (both to himself and others), that they are wrought in (the fear, and according to the will, of) God.

22. After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and (by them) [12] baptized (iv. 2. to prepare the Jews by the baptism of repentance, as John did, for the reception of the Messiah; see the note on this verse).

23. And John also was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim (the place being convenient for that purpose), [13] because there was much water there: and they (the people) came (to him), and were baptized (of him there).

24. For John was not yet cast into prison (by Herod).

25. Then there arose a question (or dispute) betwixt some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying, (it being without example to baptize a Jew; and they being styled δοῦλοι Θεοῦ καθαροὶ, the pure servants of God, Neh. ii. 20. and thought to be born in holiness, the pharisees might ask what need there was of any baptism to purify them; and if John's baptism was sufficient for this end, why did Christ set up another after it, which seemed to argue him greater than John, and that his baptism must confer some higher degree of purity?)

26. And (upon this) they came unto John (for satisfaction in this matter), and (by way of complaint) said to him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan (to be baptized of thee), to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth (i. e. he takes upon him thy office, as if thy baptism were imperfect), and all men come to him (i. e. the concourse to him is so great, that we fear thy baptism will be neglected).

27. John answered and said, [14] A man can receive nothing (of power or authority), except it be given him from heaven.

28. Ye yourselves (can) bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but (only) that I am sent before him (to prepare his way: seeing then God hath only made me his forerunner, I must not pretend to an equality with him, whose forerunner and servant I am).

29. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him (Gr. standing and hearing him caress and express his affection to his spouse), rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice (Christ is this bridegroom, and the church is his bride, I only am the bridegroom's friend): this my joy therefore is fulfilled (by hearing that he is thus graciously speaking to his church, and calling her, by this and other methods, to fit herself for his embraces).

30. He must increase (in his glory, and the extent of his government, Luke i. 32, 33.) but I (his forerunner, whose office ceaseth, when he comes and manifests himself to the world) must decrease.

31. (And it is reasonable to own him superior to me, and all the other prophets, which ever came into the world, even than Moses himself; for) he that cometh from above (not only by his mission from God, as I and they did; but by his original, ver. 13.) is above all (that are descended of earthly parents only; and) he that is (thus) [15] of the earth is earthly (as to his rise), and speaketh of the earth (i. e. things which, comparatively, are earthly, Moses of carnal ordinances, I of water-baptism, the prophets of obedience to the law of Moses; but) he that cometh from heaven (to reveal the will of God to man) is above all (not only in the excellency of his person, but in the spiritual and heavenly nature of his doctrines and promises).

32. [16] And what he hath seen (by the irradiation) and heard (by the immediate dictate of the Holy Ghost dwelling in him), that he testifies (to the world); and (yet) no man receiveth his testimony (i. e. they who receive it, compared with them that do not, are as none).

33. He that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal (i. e. declared his assurance) that God is true (both in his promises concerning the Messiah, and in his testimonies that he hath given to him, that this is his beloved Son; it being as impossible, that he who is sent with such heavenly doctrine, confirmed by so great testimonies from heaven, should be a deceiver, as that God himself should lie).

34. For he whom God hath sent (so as no other prophet was sent) [17] speaketh the words of God (so as no other prophet did); for God giveth not the Spirit by measure (or, in a limited manner) to him, (as he did to them, so as to come to them only at such times, and to impart such a particular revelation; for in him were all the hidden treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3.

35. And) the Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand; (the entire knowledge and revelation of his will, and the power to give eternal life to those that believe and obey it, John xvii. 2. and to condemn everlastingly those that obey not his gospel, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8.

36. And therefore) he that believeth on the Son (may be sure he) hath (a present right to, and shall hereafter receive) everlasting life: and (but) he that believeth not the Son (but rejecteth his authority and doctrine) shall not see (i. e. enjoy this) life; but the wrath of God abideth on him (for ever).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. ΟΙΔΑΜΕΝ, We know that thou art a teacher come from God.] This could not be said of his brethren, the pharisees and rulers of the Sanhedrin; for none of the pharisees or of the rulers believed on him, vii. 48. οἴδαμεν therefore here may relate chiefly to Nicodemus, and only signify, I know, as it often doth: (see note on xxi. 24.) or else may signify, it is, or may be known; as when the blind man saith, we know, God heareth not sinners, ix. 31. (See Matt. xxvi. 2. Luke xx. 21. Rom. ii. 2. iii. 19. vii. 14. 1 Cor. viii. 4. 1 Tim. i. 8.)

[2] Ver. 3. Ἐὰν μή τις γεννηθῇ ἄνωθεν, οὐ δύναται ἰδεῖν, If a man be not born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.] It is here needless to inquire, whether the word ἄνωθεν should be rendered from above, or again, as our translation doth, and as Nicodemus understood Christ's words, since every one who is born again is also born from above, (James iii. 17.) as being born of that Spirit which cometh from above.

Note also, that, to see the kingdom of God here, and to enter into it, ver. 5. is the same thing, and both these phrases signify, to be a real member of that kingdom, and to enjoy the blessings belonging to them who are so; thus to see good, Eccles. vi. 6. to see good days, Psal. xxxiv. 12. and to see life, ver. 36. is to enjoy them; and to see God, Job xix. 26. Matt. v. 8. and to see the Lord, Heb. xii. 14. is to enjoy him.

Note, thirdly, that Christ seems to speak this not primarily of that heavenly kingdom, into which the blessed shall enter at the day of judgment; but of that spiritual kingdom, which was to be erected by the Messiah, and into which men entered by baptism: whence it must follow, that no man is indeed a member of Christ's kingdom, who is not truly regenerate. If you continue in my word (saith Christ), then are ye my disciples indeed, John viii. 31. and if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his, Rom. viii. 9.

Note, lastly, that this seems to be directed against the false and pernicious conceptions of the Jewish doctors, the scribes and pharisees, who thought they had a title to the kingdom of God, and the blessings of it, as being the seed of Abraham according to the flesh; and promised to all Israelites, on that account, a portion in the world to come; declaring, saith Justin Martyr,* that to all that were of the seed of Abraham, though they were sinners, and disobedient to God's laws, should be given an eternal kingdom.

[3] Ver. 5. Ἐὰν μὴ γεννηθῇ ἐξ ὕδατος, If a man be not born of water.] That our Lord here speaks of baptismal regeneration, the whole Christian church from the beginning hath always taught, and that with very good reason; for,

First, Though water is sometimes put to signify or represent the purifying operations of the Holy Spirit; yet to be born of water is a phrase never used in Scripture, for being born of the Spirit; but very properly is it used of that baptism, which is the laver of regeneration, (Tit. iii. 5.) and was by all the ancients styled παλιγγενεσία, or regeneration. (See note on 1 Cor. vii. 14.)

Secondly, To be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire, (Matt. iii. 11. Luke iii. 16.) is to be baptized with the Holy Ghost descending on the apostles in the symbol of fire, as the event declared, the Holy Ghost falling upon them in the shape of cloven tongues like as of fire, (Acts ii. 2, 3.) and therefore, in like manner, to be baptized with water and the Holy Ghost, most likely signifies to be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with the symbol of water.

Thirdly, The question betwixt Christ and Nicodemus was about that which was requisite to fit a man to enter into the kingdom, that is, the church of God, and to make him partaker of the blessings of the gospel. Now it is certain, that baptism by water is by our Lord declared to be the ordinary means of entering into his kingdom; for he saith, Mark xvi. 16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; or of becoming one of Christ's disciples; for he not only made disciples by baptism, (John iv. 1.) but gave commission to his apostles, to make disciples in all nations by baptizing them, (Matt. xxviii. 19.) and therefore must here speak of that: hence, even when the Holy Ghost was actually fallen upon Cornelius and his friends, St. Peter commands them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, i. e. to be admitted to be Christ's disciples by that rite, and looks upon it as a necessary consequent of that higher baptism. (Acts x. 47, 48.) Christ therefore here declares it to be a rite necessary for the entrance of adult persons into his kingdom; and it seems highly reasonable to esteem so of it: for what salvation can be expected by them, who, after he hath told them they must be baptized with water, that they may enter into his kingdom, do, by refusing that sacrament, too plainly shew, that they refuse that way of entering into his kingdom, and becoming his disciples, which he had appointed for that end? But then here,

First, Infants must be excepted from this necessity, as being incapable of knowing, and therefore of transgressing, this command; they therefore shall not suffer in their eternal interests for the mistake or neglect of any of their parents.

Secondly, They also are to be excepted, who want that baptism they desire, not out of contempt, but of necessity, as dying before they can procure it: thus, though the infants, who died before the eighth day, died without the sign of the covenant, the Jews never thought fit to circumcise them before that day; and, since it is not the washing of the body, but the stipulation of a good conscience, that renders baptism saving, (1 Pet. iii. 21.) it cannot be purely the want, but the contempt of that, which must condemn us. And,

Thirdly, Whatever ignorance of the precept, or mistake about the nature of it, renders not men incapable of baptism by the Holy Ghost, can never render them incapable of the salvation promised to the baptized.

[4] Ver. 6. Τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς σάρξ ἐστι, That which is born of the flesh is flesh (only).] Our parents being only the fathers of the flesh, Heb. xii. 9. Whence it is that it cannot be sufficient to entitle infants to the blessings of this kingdom without baptism, that they are born of Christian parents according to the flesh, but that some operation of the Spirit is necessary to fit them for the kingdom of heaven. Hence some infer, that man, in his natural estate, can do nothing but what is carnal, and therefore sinful, and only can begin to do what is truly good when he is born again of the Spirit: whereas,

First, This exposition renders it impossible for a man to do any thing towards his own conversion; and so renders all God's commands and exhortations to the wicked, to turn themselves from their iniquity, all his promises of pardon to them that do so, and all his threats of death, if they neglect to do so, and all his complaints against them, that they would not do so, vain and absurd; and, as Cyril of Alexandria saith, ῥαψῴδημα κενὸν, a vain rhapsody, they being then only commands and exhortations to others, to perform that, which, if it ever be done, he must do himself.

* Ὑπολαμβάνοντες ὅτι πάντως τοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς σπορᾶς τῆς κατὰ σάρκα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ οὖσι, κἂν ἁμαρτωλοὶ εἶσι, καὶ ἄπιστοι, καὶ ἀπειθεῖς πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, ἡ βασιλεία ἡ αἰώνιος δεδόσται. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 369. C.

Secondly, This exposition makes the word flesh, and fleshly birth, to signify one corrupted by his fleshly appetite, and so led and governed by the motions of the flesh; whereas Tolet* well observes, that to be born of the flesh here only signifies that natural generation, by which a man is born into the world of the will of the flesh, this being the only birth Nicodemus spake of, as of a thing incredible; because then a man must enter twice into his mother's womb. This therefore is the plain meaning of our Lord, that, besides that natural birth, by which we receive only our flesh and body from our parents, there is need of a spiritual birth to fit us for the kingdom of God; but he saith nothing of any necessity lying upon us, till we are thus born again, to do only evil, or of our incapacity to do any thing, which may contribute to this new birth.

[5] Ver. 8. Τὸ πνεῦμα, The wind bloweth where it listeth.] They who would say that the word πνεῦμα signifies here, not the wind, but the Holy Spirit, first, destroy the comparison intimated in the word οὕτως, so; and, secondly, they make Christ say, that Nicodemus heard the voice of the Spirit, which is not very probable.

[6] Ver. 10. Art thou ὁ διδάσκαλος, a master (or teacher) in Israel?] These being received maxims among the Jews, that wisdom is given from above, (Targ. in Eccles. vii. 7.) and that when a man is a proselyte, he is reputed as an infant new born, (Seld. de Jure Nat. lib. ii. cap. 4.) our Saviour might well admire, that a teacher of Israel should have no notion of a new birth by water, or a birth from above.

[7] Ver. 13. And no man hath ascended into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, ὁ ὢν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, who is in heaven.] The Jews say, for the honour of their prophet Moses, that he ascended לשמי מדומא, into the high heavens, Targ. in Cant. i. 5. 11, 12. That this was not true of Moses, these words of Christ shew, and the history of Moses, which saith, he only ascended to Mount Sinai; but of Christ, who, in the beginning, was with the Father, (i. 1.) and who came down from heaven to do and to declare his Father's will, (iii. 35.) this is most true; but then he is said, as to his Divine nature, to descend from heaven, not by a local descent, or by quitting heaven, but only by a manifestation of himself on earth; in which sense God himself is said, in the Old Testament, to descend to see the tower of Babel, Gen. xi. 5. and to confound the lips of them that built it, ver. 7. and to see the iniquity of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 21. and to deliver his people from the hand of the Egyptians, Exod. iii. 8. and to give them the law, Exod. xix. 18. And thus, saith St. Austin, he is said to descend, not when he from heaven observes what is done on earth, for that is metaphorically to look down from heaven; but when he doth something upon earth beyond the usual course of nature, which therefore seemeth to require his more than ordinary presence there; and then he is usually said to appear, either attended by his holy angels, or in a flame or cloud of glory, the symbol of his majestic presence. Note,

Secondly, That those things are frequently ascribed, by this evangelist, to Christ, which neither do nor can agree, and which elsewhere are not ascribed, to any creature, viz. that he is he, who in the beginning was with God, i. 1. ὁ ὢν, that is in the bosom of the Father, ver. 18. ὁ ὢν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, that is with God, vi. 46. and here, who is in heaven. Now this never was nor could be said of a mere creature: for, as Woltzogenius confesseth, no creature can be in heaven and on the earth at the same time. The gloss of Grotius here is this, "singulari Dei dono nobis concessus est," he is given to us by the special gift of God; but this answers not the fulness of the phrase, he came from heaven; for all the prophets were sent to the Jews, and the apostles both to Jews and gentiles, by the especial gift and kindness of God, and yet none of them are said to come down from heaven; Christ is styled the Lord from heaven, 1 Cor. xv. 47. as coming down from thence to judge the world, 1 Thess. iv. 16. the new Jerusalem is said to come down from heaven, Rev. iii. 12. xxi. 2. 10. because it was represented so in a vision to St. John: the baptism of John is said to be from heaven; but neither he, nor his doctrine, to descend from heaven. (See the note on John vi. 32.) In vain do some Socinians produce, as parallel expressions, those words of St. Paul, He hath seated us in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Eph. ii. 6. and our city is in heaven, Phil. iii. 20. for the last only signifies, that heaven is the place where we are to dwell for ever; the first, that Christ hath exalted the human nature thither. Their strength consists in their second answer, viz. that ὁ ὢν is to be rendered, who was with God, and who was in heaven; and this, say they, is here apparent, because Christ speaks of himself as the Son of man, both here and vi. 62. To which it might be answered, that Christ, in these places, saith, the Son of man is in heaven, as St. Peter saith, the Prince of life was crucified, Acts iii. 15. St. Paul, that the Lord of glory suffered, 1 Cor. ii. 8. and that God purchased a church with his own blood, Acts xx. 28. viz. the Son of man is in heaven, not as the Son of man, but as the Son of God. But that which fundamentally destroys this answer, is this consideration, that it is not true, that Christ, as to his human nature, in the beginning was with God, or was in heaven: yes, say they, after his baptism he was taken up into heaven, there to be made acquainted with the will of God. But,

First, This sophism is sufficiently confuted by the profound silence of all the evangelists concerning it; for they tell us very particularly of very many things concerning Christ, which are comparatively of little moment, of his circumcision, of the flight with him into Egypt, of his stay in the temple, of his being carried by the tempter into a very high mountain, and his being placed by him on a pinnacle of the temple; can we then reasonably think the wisdom of the Holy Spirit would neglect to record that ascent of Christ into heaven, on which his Divine wisdom, and the truth of his whole prophetic office, did so much depend? It is true, the argument is negative; but then in matters of great moment to the establishment of our faith, in what this our great Prophet taught, and to advance him above all other prophets, as this ascent must be, even

* "Multum à vero sensu loci hujus aberrant, qui Carnem hoc loco exponunt de Peccato, cum nihil hic de peccato agatur: et quamvis nullum esset peccatum, verum esset, 'quod natum est ex carne, caro est.'"

Schlichtingius allows such arguments; it being not reasonable, saith he, to suppose the wisdom of the Holy Ghost, in matters of this nature and importance, should be wholly silent.

Secondly, To what end should our Saviour be thus snatched up into heaven, or what necessity was there of it? Could not the Father declare his will to him, as to other prophets, while he was on earth? Surely an almighty and all-present God could as well do this out of heaven, as in it: or was it, because he would not do this to him upon earth? This cannot truly be affirmed, seeing Christ was anointed, and filled with that Spirit, by which he performed his prophetic office, not in heaven, but on earth: there was it that the Spirit descended on him as a dove, Matt. iii. 16. and by virtue of this Spirit he received at Jordan, he taught in the synagogues, and was glorified of all, Luke iv. 14, 15. by this Spirit he was sanctified for his office, and sent into the world, John x. 36. by this unction the Father sent him to preach remission of sins, and the acceptable year of the Lord, Luke iv. 18, 19. on this account he spake the words of God, because the Father had given him the Spirit not by measure, here, ver. 34.: whence it appears, that Christ was fitted for this prophetic office by that Spirit he received on earth. Well, then, either our Lord was taken up into heaven to be thus instructed, before this unction he received on earth, or afterward; if before, this unction of the Spirit must be needless, unless God did his work imperfectly in heaven, and gave him there no full and perfect knowledge of his will; if after this unction, this ascent was needless, he being by it filled with the Spirit of wisdom, counsel, and power, above measure. What therefore could be wanting to him, who, from this Spirit, had received all the treasures of wisdom and power to perform the greatest miracles for the discharge of his prophetic function? (See Placæus, Disp. prima et secunda, and note on John vi. 61.)

[8] Ver. 14. Οὕτως ὑψωθῆναι δεῖ υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, &c. So must the Son of man be lifted up, that all that believe in him may have eternal life.] He saith not here, as the Socinians, that the death of Christ was necessary for the confirmation of the gospel; but with the fathers, that it was necessary to procure to us life eternal, by removing that death which sin had brought upon us. Note also, that as ὑψοῦσθαι here, and viii. 28. xii. 32. is to be lifted up upon the cross; so Rabbi Solomon interprets the pole on which the serpent was lifted up, a fork; and Justin Martyr,* Tertullian,† and Barnabas,‡ say, this was a figure of the cross, and that it was a symbol of salvation; he that turned to it being preserved from death, not by what he saw, but by the Saviour of all men.

[9] Ver. 16. God so loved the world, &c.] Two things in Scripture are noted as indications of God's especial love to man: 1. that he sent his Son into the world to die for him: 2. that he who was thus sent, was υἱὸς ἴδιος καὶ μονογενὴς, his proper and only Son, Rom. viii. 32. 1 John iv. 9. 10.

Obj. Woltzogenius here saith, (1.) that this Son of God could not be God, since then he must be his own Son.

Ans. It only follows hence, that he could not be God the Father; but yet he might be God of God by the union of the Λόγος, or the Divine nature, to his human nature.

Obj. But then, saith he, God must have suffered.

Ans. It follows only hence, that he who suffered was God, but not that he suffered as God; and this those ancient fathers well understood, who read Heb. ii. 9. that Christ suffered, χωρὶς Θεοῦ, his Divinity suffering nothing.

Obj. Hence he objects against Christ's satisfaction thus; Seeing God shewed the highest love to men in sending thus his Son to die for them, he could not then be angry with them; and therefore could require no atonement to be made to him for them; Christ therefore could not die to reconcile this kind and loving God to the world.

Ans. To this I answer, that we are taught by plain examples of holy Scripture, that love or benevolence in God towards the sinner, is well consistent with his displeasure against him for his sin, as in the case of Job's three friends; For the Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My anger is kindled against thee, and thy two friends, because ye have not spoken of me the things which are right; (Job xlii. 7.) in which words there is a declaration of God's anger against them for their sin, exactly parallel to that of God supposed by us in this case; and yet we find a like expression of his love in the ensuing words, Therefore take to you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering, for him will I accept, lest I deal with you after your folly. God's love is visible in directing them to that sacrifice, which would obtain his favour, but it was only after the oblation offered, and the prayer of Job, that ἔλυσε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῖς, he forgave their sins. Again, did not God shew his kindness to his people Israel, in admitting a beast to suffer in their stead, and appointing his blood to make atonement for them; and yet did not he himself require this atonement to be made, that so their sins might be forgiven? Did not he appoint this blood to be offered to him as a propitiation for their sins? And did not then the victim die? And was not his blood offered to reconcile this loving God to sinners? And is it not hence evident, that God's love to sinners is well consistent with his displeasure against them for sins?

[10] Ver. 17. For God sent not his Son to condemn the world, but that ὁ κόσμος the world by him might be saved.] The Jews imagined that God first made the world only for their sakes, (2 Esd. vi. 55, 56. 59.) and also, that the redemption of it was only designed for their good, and that their Messiah would come to subdue and condemn the nations whom he hated. Christ, on the contrary, here declares, that God was so far from hating or condemning them, that he sent the Messiah into the world to save them, and consequently to die for them.

Vain here is their imagination, who by the world understand only the elect out of the world: for then Christ here must only say, that he was sent, that the elect who believed in him should not perish; as if any who were absolutely elected to salvation by faith in him could either perish or not believe. No, it is apparent from these words, that of this world, thus beloved by God, some would not believe, and so would perish. And this is more apparent from the words immediately following, in which the world, which he was sent to save, is divided into believers and unbelievers, and into those that will be saved and condemned: for thus they run, He (of this world) who believeth in him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is now condemned; which must be false, if you restrain this world to such elect as cannot perish, and cannot but believe to life eternal. And, lastly, he that believeth not, saith Christ, shall therefore be condemned, because he believeth not in the name of the only Son of God. Now, is it not absurd to say, men shall eternally be condemned for not believing in him, who died not for them, and was not sent for their salvation? Since then Christ frequently declares, that all to whom the gospel is propounded, shall be condemned, if, and because, they believe not in him, (John iii. 18.) it is certain that he died for the salvation of them also.

[11] Ver. 19. And men have loved darkness more than light, μᾶλλον σκότος ἢ τὸ φῶς.] Here the critics note, that μᾶλλον ἤ is not a comparative, as if the workers of iniquity did, in some measure, love the light; for, ver. 20. they are said to hate it; but, as in other places, is a negative: so xii. 43. They loved the praise of men, μᾶλλον ἤπερ, more than the praise of God, i. e. and not the praise of God: so 1 Tim. i. 4. 2 Tim. iii. 4. Heb. xi. 25. in which places μάλλον ἤ may be rendered, as here, and not light; and this they did not only in those times of ignorance at which God winked, (Acts xvii. 30.) but after the clear light had shined upon them; by which it appeared, that the deeds of darkness were so pleasing to them, that, when they were discovered to them so to be, they still bore that affection to them which rendered the light displeasing to them, because it did reprove them: whereas they who had hearts disposed to obey that light which would direct them in the way to happiness, came to it, that they might be the more assured they were doing the works of God, i. e. those works which were performed according to his will, which tended to his glory, and chiefly did respect him as the end and object of them.

[12] Ver. 22. Καὶ ἐβάπτιζεν, And he baptized.] By his disciples, (iv. 2.) not, as most interpreters conceive, into his own name, or so as to exact from them a belief, that he was the Christ: for this he forbids his disciples to divulge till he was risen from the dead, Matt. xvi. 20. xvii. 9. He therefore only did baptize as John had done, into the faith of the Messiah, which was to come, and with that baptism of repentance which prepared the Jews for the reception of his kingdom.

[13] Ver. 23. Ὅτι ὕδατα πολλὰ ἦν ἐκεῖ, Because there was much water there.] In which their whole bodies might be dipped; for in this manner only was the Jewish baptism performed, by a descent into the water, (Acts viii. 38.) and an ascent out of it, (ver. 39.) and a burial in it. (Rom. vi. 3, 4. Col. ii. 12.) Some here inquire, why Christ should thus baptize when John had not desisted so to do? But since both, by their baptism, intended the same thing, I see no reason why our Saviour might not as well baptize as preach repentance, (Matt. iv. 17.) whilst the Baptist was doing the same thing.

[14] Ver. 27. A man can receive nothing of himself.] i. e. One who, by Divine authority, is intrusted with any commission, cannot exceed that commission; since therefore God hath only made me the forerunner of the Messiah, as I have told you, ver. 28. I cannot pretend to be equal with him.

[15] Ver. 31. Ὁ ὢν ἐκ τῆς γῆς, &c. He that is of the earth is earthly.] See the paraphrase; and note, that ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων is an epithet proper to God alone, and yet ascribed to Christ, Rom. ix. 5.

[16] Ver. 32. Καὶ ὃ ἑώρακε καὶ ἤκουσε, τοῦτο μαρτυρεῖ, And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifies.] i. e. What he fully knows; for by seeing and hearing we come to the most perfect knowledge of things; or what he hath inwardly heard and seen by the dictate and irradiation of the Holy Spirit.

[17] Ver. 34. He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not to him the Spirit by measure.] i. e. He that hath the Spirit in a limited manner, at such times only, and with respect to such particular revelations only, may sometimes speak from his ownself; but he who hath the Spirit always residing in him, without stint or measure, must always speak the word of God. To give a thing in measure, in the Scripture phrase, is to do it sparingly; as when it is said, They shall drink water by measure, Ezek. iv. 16. and to correct in measure, Jer. xlvi. 28. xxx. 11. is to do it sparingly, or in such a proportion: in which sense we read of the measure of faith, Rom. xii. 3. and the measure and gift of Christ, Eph. iv. 7. so that to give the Spirit without measure, is to give him in the greatest affluence and without restraint.

CHAP. IV.

1. WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John (the Baptist),

2. Though (in truth) Jesus himself baptized not, but (only) his disciples, (see the note on iii. 22.)

3. He (in prospect of the danger this might bring upon him from the envy and malice of these pharisees) left Judea (where the power of the Sanhedrin, of which many of them were members, prevailed), and departed again into Galilee (where they had less interest with Herod, and could less observe or be offended with his actions).

4. And he must needs go [1] through Samaria (that lying betwixt Judea and Galilee).

5. Then cometh he (Gr. he cometh therefore) to a city of Samaria, which is called (by them Sichem, but by the Jews, see the note) [2] Sichar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob [3] gave to his son Joseph (at his last benediction, Gen. xlviii. 22.)

6. Now Jacob's well (i. e. a well bearing his name) was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat [4] thus (weary and thirsty as he was) on (or by) the well: and it was about the sixth hour, (i. e. it was then about noon.

7. Then) there cometh a woman of Samaria (to that well) to draw water; (and) Jesus saith to her, Give me (some water) to drink.

8. For his disciples were gone away to the city to buy meat (and so could not draw it for him).

9. Then saith the woman of Samaria to him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, who am a woman of Samaria? (this she had cause to wonder at,) [5] for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans (they would buy of them any thing; but they would receive no gratuity or kindness from them: see the note).

10. Jesus answered and said to her, If thou knewest [6] the gift of God (i. e. what an excellent gift the Holy Spirit is), and who it is who saith to thee, Give me to drink (i. e. how able he is to impart this gift to thee); thou wouldest have asked of him, and (then) he would have given thee (this) living water, (which will spring up so continually in him that hath it, that he shall thirst no more, ver. 15. see John vii. 38, 39.)

11. The woman (thinking Christ only meant spring-water, that being, in the Hebrew idiom, living-water, Gen. xxvi. 19.) saith to him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water (of which thou speakest)?

12. Art thou greater than our father Jacob, who gave us the well (for we claim our descent from him), and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13. Jesus answered and said to her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall (soon after) thirst again:

14. But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him [7] shall never (have cause to) thirst (more); but the water which I shall give him (i. e. the Holy Spirit abiding in him) shall be in him (as) a well of water springing up to everlasting life.

15. The woman (still understanding him as grossly as she did before) saith to him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not (any more), neither (may have farther need to) come hither to draw (water).

16. Jesus (being willing to prepare her to receive his doctrine, by convincing her that he was a prophet) saith to her, Go, call thy husband, and come (ye both) hither.

17. The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said to her, Thou hast well (i. e. truly) said, I have no husband:

18. For thou hast had five husbands (from whom thou hast been divorced for thy adulteries); and he whom thou now hast (i. e. cohabitest with) [8] is not thy husband (thou living with him in fornication): in that (therefore) saidst thou truly.

19. The woman (then) saith to him, Sir, I perceive that thou (who so exactly knowest the secrets of my life, and that which I thought was known to God alone) art a prophet.

20. [9] Our fathers worshipped in this mountain (as we do); and ye (Jews) say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship (God; I ask therefore thy opinion in this case).

21. Jesus saith to her, Woman, believe me, the hour (shortly) cometh, when ye shall [10] neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

22. (But to your question I answer, That) [11] ye worship ye know not what (i. e. that God which you do not truly and savingly know; because ye know him not according as he is revealed in his word): we know what (i. e. τὸ θεῖον ὃ, the Divinity which) we worship (serving him according to those laws to which he hath promised salvation): for salvation is of the Jews (and the terms of it are to be derived from them to others).

23. But the hour cometh, and now is (instant), when the true worshippers shall worship the Father (not with carnal sacrifices as both now do, but) in [12] spirit (ual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5.) and (not in the types and shadows of the law, as the Jews now do, nor in that erroneous manner as ye do, but) in (the) truth (of the gospel, John i. 17.) for the Father seeketh such to worship him (Gr. such worshippers of him: for)

24. [13] God is a Spirit: and they that worship him (aright) must worship him in spirit and in truth (i. e. agreeably to his spiritual nature, by giving up their hearts and spirit to him; and according to his will, by serving him according to the precepts of the gospel).

25. The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, who is called Christ: and when he is come, he will tell us all things (that we are to believe and do).

26. Jesus said unto her, I that speak unto thee am he (viz. the Messiah).

27. And upon this came his disciples, and [14] marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said (to him), What seekest thou (of)? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28. The woman then left her water-pot (at the well), and went her way into the city, and saith to the men (of the city),

29. Come, see a man, who told me all things that ever I did: is not this (an evidence that he is) the Christ?

30. Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

31. In the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32. But he said unto them, [15] I have meat to eat which ye know not of (i. e. somewhat more valuable and pleasant to me than meat or drink).

33. Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him (meat) to eat.

34. Jesus saith to them, My meat (i. e. my delight) is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.

35. [16] Say not ye (proverbially, as an encouragement to the sower), There are yet four months, and then cometh (on the) harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest (i. e. look upon the Samaritans flocking to me to hear my doctrine, and you will see that the time of my spiritual harvest is already come).

36. And he that reapeth (this spiritual harvest, by bringing men to the faith) receiveth wages (for his labour), and gathereth fruit (not to sustain this mortal life, but) unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth (he that laboureth to prepare men for, and he that brings them to, the faith) may rejoice together (in the fruit of their labours).

37. And herein is that (proverbial) [17] saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth.

38. I (have) sent (or, do send) you to reap that whereon you bestowed no labour: other men laboured (the prophets, by foretelling the Messiah; the Baptist, by calling men to repentance, that they might be prepared to receive him), and ye are entered into their labours (and only are to perfect what they have begun).

39. And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, (saying) He told me all that ever I did.

40. So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and [18] he abode there two days.

41. And (in that time) many more believed because of his own word;

42. And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know (by the excellency of his doctrine, and the holiness and goodness of his precepts) that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the [19] world.

43. Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee (passing not by Nazareth, the place of his education, but another way).

44. For Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath (comparatively) no honour in his own country.

45. Then when he was come to Galilee, the Galileans received him (gladly), having seen all the things which he did at Jerusalem at the feast (of the Passover): for they also went to the feast.

46. So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he had made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman (a great man of Herod's court), whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47. (And) when he heard that Jesus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

48. Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see [20] signs and wonders (done before your eyes), ye (Jews and Herodians) will not believe (on the account of the excellence and goodness of my doctrine, as the Samaritans did).

49. The nobleman saith to him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50. Jesus saith unto him, (There is no need of my going down,) go thy way; (and thou shalt find) thy son liveth. And the man believed the word which Jesus had spoken to him, and he went his way.

51. And as he was now going down (to his house), his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

52. Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53. So the father knew that it was at the same hour in which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and (he) himself believed, and [21] his whole house.

54. This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 4. HE must go through Samaria.] For, saith Josephus,* the Galileans going up to Jerusalem at the feast, went through the country of the Samaritans.

[2] Ver. 5. He cometh to a city of Samaria called Σίχαρ, Sichar.] It is certain from the son of Sirach, (l. 26.) and from Josephus, (Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 8.) that the name of the city was Sichem. This therefore is either a corrupt pronunciation, as Βελιὰρ for Βελιὰλ, or a name of reproach put upon it by the Jews, שכר, as if it were a city of drunkards, as Achan, Josh. vii. 25. is called עכר, 1 Chron. ii. 7. as being a troubler of Israel.

[3] The parcel of ground which Jacob gave to his son Joseph.] i. e. That piece of ground which he bought of Hamor, the father of Sichem, Gen. xxxiii. 19. for that was near Sichem, saith the text there: and hence this place became not only the inheritance of Joseph, but his own burial-place; he being buried, not in the cave of Machpelah, as his father Jacob was, (Gen. l. 13.) nor saying, I will lie with my fathers, as Jacob did, (Gen. xlvii. 30.) but being buried in this place: for the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought out of Egypt, buried they in (i. e. near to) Sichem, in a parcel of ground, which Jacob bought of Hamor, the father of Sichem, for a hundred pieces of silver; and it became the inheritance of the children of Joseph, Josh. xxiv. 32. (See Bochart. Hierozoic. par. i. lib. ii. cap. 43. p. 435, 436.)

[4] Ver. 6. Ἐκαθίζετο οὕτως, He sat thus on the well.] i. e. Either weary or thirsty as he was; so Acts vii. 8. οὕτως, so Abraham begat Isaac, i. e. being circumcised; 1 Kings ii. 7. Shew kindness to the sons of Barzillai, for οὕτως, so they came to me, i. e. with kindness; or, as Chrysostom and Theophylact have it, he sat ἁπλῶς ὡς ἔτυχε, as he found a place: it follows, it was ὥρα ἕκτη, that is, saith one, six o'clock in the evening; St. John counting by the Roman hours in his Gospel. But this mistake is plainly evident from i. 39. They abode with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour; viz. four in the afternoon, not ten of the night, according to the Romish computation.

[5] Ver. 9. Οὐ γὰρ συγχρῶνται Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρείταις, For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.] So in the Jerusalem Talmud the Samaritans say, your fathers dealt with our fathers, why therefore do not you so likewise with us? (Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 1370.) By the traditions of the pharisees they might buy of them; and therefore Christ's disciples do not scruple at this; (ver. 8.) but they were not to borrow any thing of them, or receive any kindness from them, or drink of their water, or eat of their morsels; for they bound them under an anathema, not to eat of the fruit or morsel of a Cuthean, and held the eating of their flesh to be as bad as eating swine's flesh. (R. Eliezer, cap. 38.) But Christ, despising such traditions as had no foundation, either in the law of God or equity, and tended to the impairing the laws of common friendship or humanity, asks drink of this Samaritan woman, and eateth with them.

[6] Ver. 10. If thou hadst known τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gift of God.] By the gift of God and living water, Christ seems here to understand the Holy Spirit, represented in the Old Testament by clean water, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. 27. and in the New, by living water, John vii. 38. Rev. xxi. 6. xxii. 1. For (1.) spring-water is in the Hebrew idiom called living water, in opposition to that which stagnates: for life consisting in continual motion, by reason of the continual ebullition of this water, it is said to live; (see Lev. xiv. 5. 50. xv. 13. Numb. xix. 17.) hence it is here said to be water springing up, (ver. 14.) And (2.) this Holy Spirit, to be communicated to believers, is styled δωρεὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gift of God, Acts viii. 20. ἡ δωρεὰ ἐπουράνιος, the heavenly gift, Heb. vi. 4. ἡ δωρεὰ the gift, Acts xi. 17. (See the note on Rom. v. 17.)

[7] Ver. 14. He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.] i. e. He never shall have need to thirst for the enjoyment of this Spirit, he being to abide with them for ever, who have once received him, (John xiv. 16.) if they do not expel, quench, or grieve him; or, he shall thirst no more, because this Spirit will be in him the earnest of, and bring him to, that happy life, where there is no more thirst. (Rev. vii. 16.)

[8] Ver. 18. Is not thy husband.] See one reason in the

* Ἔθος ἦν τοῖς Γαλιλαίοις ἐν ταῖς ἑορταῖς εἰς τὴν ἱερὰν πόλιν παραγενομένοις ὁδεύειν διὰ τῆς Σαμαρέων χώρας, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5.

paraphrase; others say, this is spoken, because she had divorced herself from her husbands, contrary to the law, which permitted not women to begin the divorce, and so was really the wife of some former husband then living. (So Grotius.)

[9] Ver. 20. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain.] We learn from Josephus,* and from this woman, that the Samaritans, when they saw it for their advantage, pretended to be συγγενεῖς τῶν Ἰουδαίων, allied to the Jews, to have Jacob for their father, (ver. 12.) καὶ ἐκ τοῦ Ἰωσήφου γενεαλογοῦντες αὐτοὺς ἐκγόνων Ἐφραίμου καὶ Μανασσέως, and deduced their genealogy from Ephraim and Manasses, the sons of Joseph; they also contended, that Mount Gerizim was the most ancient place of worship, because Abraham built there an altar to God, (Gen. xii. 6, 7.) and so did Jacob, (Gen. xxxiii. 18.) and therefore that was the place where sacrifices were to be offered before the temple at Jerusalem was built. But the Jews answered, that the temple was built on the mountain of Moriah; in the place where Abraham offered up Isaac, (Joseph. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 10. p. 254. F.) and that that was the place of worship throughout all generations. (Targum in Chron. iii. 1. see Maimonides de ædificio Templi, Tract. 1. cap. 2. §. 2.)

[10] Ver. 21. Ὅτι οὔτε ἐν τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, οὔτε ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις, Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem.] Josephus saith the contention betwixt the Jews and Samaritans was about the place, to which they ought to bring those sacrifices and oblations by which God was then chiefly worshipped, the Jews declaring that it was their temple,† καὶ τὰς θυσίας ἐκεῖ πέμπειν ἀξιούντων, and requiring that the sacrifices should be brought thither; the Samaritans, that they should be brought to Mount Gerizim. This controversy, saith Christ, will shortly be decided by removing the occasion of it, viz. this way of worshipping God by sacrifices; and by giving liberty to worship God with spiritual sacrifices in every place, as the prophet Malachi foretold, i. 11.

[11] Ver. 22. Ὑμεῖς προσκυνεῖτε ὃ οὐκ οἴδατε, Ye worship ye know not what, &c.] This, many think, is spoken with relation to some false objects of the worship, or to some idolatrous way of worship, which obtained among them. The Jews gave it out, that they worshipped God ‡ in the image of a dove; but this seems plainly fabulous, and invented by the Jewish rabbins out of hatred to them: for, (1.) among the idols which they worshipped, when they came from Assyria to Samaria, there is not the least hint of any image of a dove worshipped by them. (2.) Josephus, § though he, in several places, inveighs against them sharply upon other accounts, doth never charge them with this crime, which shews it to be a later invention of their rabbins: and, (3.) it is a thing wholly inconsistent with the laws of Moses, which they then owned; for, as all images are forbidden by it, so it did require them to sacrifice the dove to God, and it was always judged an absurd thing to worship that which they did sacrifice. (See Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. i. p. 6. 8.)

Others say they worshipped God only as the topical god of that country; but though this might be true of them when they first came into Samaria, and retained their heathen sentiments; yet could it not be true of them after that, rejecting all their heathenish superstitions, they had embraced that law in which Jehovah is continually styled the Maker of heaven and earth, and the God of all the earth; and when, as Epiphanius* saith, they endeavoured to renounce all idolatry, and to own but one God.

But whereas Epiphanius, and many of the Jews, pronounce them guilty of latent idolatry, for worshipping God in that mountain where Jacob hid the idols of the nations, according to those words, Gen. xxxv. 4. And they gave to Jacob all the strange gods that were in their hands, and Jacob buried them under the oak which was by Sichem: it is not probable, that Christ should accuse them of false worship on the account of idols under ground, which they knew nothing of, and which they never did intend to worship. Observe then,

First, That the inquiry of the woman, and the dispute was, saith Josephus, only about the place of worship; and therefore it is very probable Christ's answer chiefly doth respect the place.

Secondly, That Christ, by saying to the Samaritan woman, that shortly they should not worship the Father in that mountain, does tacitly own, that the Samaritans did worship the Father; nor doth he instruct her, who was the true object of her worship, but only, how she was to worship the true God.

Thirdly, When they came first to Samaria, it is observed that they knew not Mishpat, the manner of worshipping the God of Israel. (2 Kings xvii. 16.) In this, saith Christ, you are still deficient, as not worshipping the God of Israel according to his prescription in the law, but according to your own inventions. You therefore may be truly said not to know him, whose will you observe not, neither worshipping him according to his nature in the spirit, nor according to that law, which is the rule of his worship, and according to which alone you can do him acceptable service: if then you would obtain salvation by the worship of him, you must do it according to the revelations made to the Jews, to whom, as the promise of a Saviour was given, so from them is salvation to come to the world, according to the promise made to their father Abraham, In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed.

[12] Ver. 23. Shall worship the Father ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, in spirit and in truth.] That is, saith Origen, οὐ σαρκικαῖς θυσίαις, not with carnal sacrifices, but with spiritual worship, or with those spiritual sacrifices, which are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ; (1 Pet. ii. 5.) οὐκ ἐν τύποις, not in types, but according to the truth contained in them; for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, John i. 17. Thus Philo saith, he brings to God, γνήσιον θεραπείαν, the true worship, who brings, τὴν ἀλήθειαν, ἁπλῆν, καὶ μόνην θυσίαν, truth, the simple and the only sacrifice; not he who uses washings and purgations of body, but defiles his soul; or who builds and adorns temples, and offers hecatombs upon the altar, περιπλάνεται γὰρ οὗτος τῆς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ὁδοῦ, θρησκείαν ἀντὶ ὁσιότητος ἡγούμενος, for he errs from the way of piety, as thinking outward worship is to be preferred to holiness. (L. quod deter. pot. p. 123. CD.)

* Εἰς τὸ μετατεθῆναι τῆς εἰδωλολατρίας, καὶ τὸν ἕνα Θεὸν ἐπιγνῶναι. Lib. i. H. 9. §. 2.

Now, that we may thus worship God in spirit, we must lay, as the foundation, not only purity of body from all uncleanness, but of the soul also from all spiritual defilements, all pride and haughtiness of mind, all malice, envy, bitterness of spirit, all impure thoughts, and evil concupiscence; for these are styled works of the flesh, Gal. v. 19. 21. Now, they that are in the flesh (saith the apostle) cannot please God, (Rom. viii. 8.) nor can they mind the things of the Lord, who are not pure in body and in spirit; (1 Cor. vii. 34. [2 Cor. vii. 1.) and with this the very heathens were so well acquainted, that they often taught that God was, "purâ mente colendus," to be worshipped with a pure mind; this was the best offering we could give,* and the best habitation we could build him.

Secondly, We must have just and awful thoughts of the Divine Majesty, oft representing him to our thoughts, as a God of infinite purity and justice, as well as power and wisdom, one who is always present with, and beholds all our secret thoughts and actions, in order to a future recompence; for by these apprehensions fixed in our hearts, we shall be naturally induced to glorify him in our spirits: (1 Cor. vi. 20.) having laid this foundation, we must endeavour to walk humbly with God, subjecting ourselves wholly to his providence, being contented in all conditions in which he doth think fit to place us, and submitting our own wills to his good pleasure, which is in Scripture styled poverty of spirit, Matt. v. 4. and the wisdom of the Spirit, Rom. viii. 6.

Thirdly, We must endeavour to resemble him as much as may be in holiness and righteousness, in truth, in goodness, and in mercy; for even the heathens say, † τιμήσεις τὸν Θεὸν ἄριστα, ἐὰν τῷ Θεῷ διάνοιαν ὁμοιώσεις, we then worship God best, when we are most like to him.

Fourthly, We must worship God from spiritual principles, a sincere love and filial reverence of him; and to spiritual ends, that we may promote his glory, and do what is well-pleasing to him; and, after a spiritual manner, serving him with the whole heart, soul, and mind, and with a fervency of spirit.

[13] Ver. 24. Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς, God is a Spirit.] The article ὁ here shews, that God is the subject, and the Spirit is the predicate; and this opinion obtained among the Platonists, who style him Νοῦς, a mind; and among the Pythagoreans,‡ who said, ἀσωμάτους πρὸ παντὸς ἡγοῦ Θεοὺς ὑπάρχειν, before all things you must hold the gods to be incorporeal. Aristotle also thought it necessary to assert, that the first mover was ἀμερὲς, or without parts; yea, even the stoics, saith Plutarch, § determined, that God was an intelligent Spirit, without form.

[14] Ver. 27. They marvelled that he talked with the woman.] This being one of the six things, say the rabbins, which render a disciple impure, viz. that he talks with women. (Buxtorf. Lexic. p. 1145.)

[15] Ver. 32. I have meat to eat, &c.] This phrase is used by the ancients concerning things which were done by them with pleasure,* "istic mihi cibus est quod fabulare," thou sayest that which is meat to me. So the servant in Plautus, and another in Aristophanes,† μαλα γ' ἐποπτεύειν δοκῶ, Ὅταν καταράσωμαι λάθρα τῷ δεσπότῃ, it is meat to me to curse my master secretly.

[16] Ver. 35. Say you not, There be yet four months of the harvest, &c.] The sense of these words seemeth to run thus—In your common harvest you usually say, after your seed is sown, four months hence will come the harvest, or the time when you shall reap the fruit of the seed sown; but in this spiritual harvest it is otherwise: for the seed of the word sown in the heart of the woman of Samaria, in your absence, hath made the Samaritans already ripe for the harvest.

[17] Ver. 37. Ὁ λόγος, This saying.] So the scholiast in Aristophanes, κατὰ τὸν παλαιὸν λόγον, ἄλλοι μὲν σπείρουσι, ἄλλοι δ' αὖ ἀμήσονται, according to the old proverb, One soweth, but another shall reap.

[18] Ver. 40. He abode there two days.] He abode there so long, that he might not contemn persons so desirous to learn of him; he stayed no longer, that he might not neglect the Jews, or seem to prefer the Samaritans before them; and he commanded his apostles not to go to any city of Samaria, (Matt. xiii. 5.) because the gospel was first to be preached to the Jews, and then to the Samaritans. (Acts i. 8.)

[19] Ver. 42. The Saviour of the world.] That is, saith Mr. Clerc, of the Jews; for it is not likely the Samaritans thought of the salvation of the gentiles; but why might they not think so, who knew, that in the seed of Abraham were the families of the earth to be blessed? and seeing the Samaritans were not Jews, had they used these words in that restrained sense, they had excluded themselves from this salvation. The word doth sometimes signify the multitude, or the public; as when Christ's brethren say to him, Shew thyself to the world, i. e. publicly, John vii. 4. and the pharisees, the world is gone after him, John xii. 19. but never the Jews in opposition to the gentiles.

[20] Ver. 48. If ye see not signs and wonders ye will not believe.] Hence some interpreters conclude this nobleman was a Jew; it being no wonder, that a heathen should not believe without a miracle.

[21] Ver. 53. Himself believed and his whole house.] i. e. All that by age were capable of doing so.

4. For an [3] angel (visibly) went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled (i. e. shook) the water:

whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

5. And a certain man was there, who had (lain under) an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6. When Jesus saw him lie, and knew (by his Divine Spirit) that he had been now a long time in that case, he (looking on him as an object worthy of compassion) saith to him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7. The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

8. Jesus saith to him, [4]Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9. And immediately (at his word) the man was made whole, and (to shew that he was so) took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day (that he did this) was the sabbath.

10. The Jews therefore said to him that was cured, It is the sabbath-day: it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed (on that day of rest).

11. He answered them, He that (with a word) made me whole, the same said to me, Take up thy bed, and walk (and surely he that could heal me with a word, must be a prophet; and, therefore, must have authority to bid me do this).

12. Then asked they him, What man is he, that said to thee, Take up thy bed, and walk? (that, knowing him, we may be the more able to judge of him.)

13. And he that was healed wist not who he was: for Jesus (having done this) had conveyed himself away (without being observed by him, as he might easily do), a multitude being in that place.

14. Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple (giving thanks to God for his cure) and said to him, Behold, thou art made whole (of a distemper laid upon thee for the punishment of thy sins): sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee (for thy insensibility and contempt of this mercy).

15. The man (knowing now who had done this, and perhaps thinking himself obliged in gratitude to own the author of his cure, and hoping hereby to convince them that he was a prophet) departed (from the temple), [5]and told the Jews (who inquired after him that had done this) that it was Jesus who had made him whole.

16. And (but though this cure demonstrated that he was sent from God, because no man could do these things except God were with him, John iii. 2. 9. 30—33. yet) therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath-day; (the doing any work on the sabbath-day being, by the law, as they thought, a capital crime, Exod. xxxi. 14, 15.)

17. But Jesus answered them, [6]My Father worketh hitherto (he, from the beginning of the creation till this present time, continues to give and preserve life, and do good on the sabbath-day), and I (after his example) work (that which is good and salutary to mankind on that day).

18. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was [7]his Father, (in a peculiar manner proper to him alone, πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε τὸν Θεὸν, thereby) making himself equal with God (in nature, as a son to his father).

19. Then answered Jesus, and said to them, Verily, verily, I say to you, The [8]Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do (ing, Gr. i. e. without commission from him to do it, and certain knowledge that he doth what the Father would have done): for whatsoever thing he doeth (ποιῇ, or ποιήσῃ, he would have done), these also (καὶ even) doeth the Son likewise (i. e. after his example as to the kind of them, according to his will as to the manner of doing them; whence you may be assured this action was done after his example, and according to his will, as to the time, as well as to the manner of it; and therefore cannot be worthy of blame).

20. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him (by the Spirit with which he hath anointed him) all things that himself (his Son) doeth: and he will shew (i. e. incite and enable) him, (by the same power, to do) greater works than these, (so) that you may (i. e. will) marvel (at them, though you will not be convinced by them).

21. For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so (shall ye see that) the [9]Son quickeneth whom he will.

22. (And this power of quickening and raising whom he will the Father hath given him, because he hath made him the judge of all men); for the Father judgeth no man, [10]but hath committed all judgment to the Son, (who yet cannot judge them till he hath raised them from the dead.

23. And this he hath done) that all men should [11]honour the Son (for his power and authority over them), even as they honour the Father, (the great Judge of all the earth, Gen. xviii. 25.) He that honoureth not the Son (invested with this power) honoureth not the Father which hath sent (and authorized) him (to exercise it.

24. And having all judgment committed to me,) verily, verily, I say to you, He that (obediently) heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath (an assurance of) everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation (for his past sins); but is passed from (the) death (threatened to him) unto life.

25. (And that you may have reason to believe I can thus raise the dead, ye shall see an instance of it shortly, not only in my resurrection, but in the rising of many others with me by my power; for) verily, verily, I say unto you, [12]The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear (it) shall live.

26. For as the Father hath (the fountain of) life in himself (and so can impart life to others); so hath he given to the Son [13]to have life in himself;

27. And he hath given him authority to execute judgment also (on the dead thus raised), because he is [14]the Son of man, (whom he hath appointed the judge of the world, Acts xvii. 31.)

28. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which (not these few only, but) all that are in the grave shall hear his voice,

29. And shall come forth; they that have done good, to the resurrection of life; and [15]they that have done evil, to the resurrection of damnation.

30. (And in passing this judgment of absolution and condemnation upon men,) I (the man Christ Jesus, Acts vii. 31. the Son of man, ver. 27.) can of my ownself (my own impulse and pleasure) do nothing; (but) as I hear, (i. e. receive the terms of absolution and condemnation from my Father, so) [16] I judge: and my judgment is (therefore) just; because I seek (i. e. pursue) not (in it) mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.

31. (And) if (in ascribing this honour and power to myself) I (did) [17] bear witness of myself (and had no credentials from my Father, or those whom he hath sent): my witness is not true: (for he that pretends to be sent, or delegated from God, and hath not his testimony to confirm his mission, cannot be true; but this is not my case, for)

32. There is [18] another that beareth witness of me (to wit, John the Baptist); and I know that the witness which he (being a prophet) witnesseth of me is true; (ye also have heard his testimony, for)

33. Ye sent unto John, (i. 22, 23.) and he bare witness to the truth, (iii. 29, 30.)

34. But (I appeal not to his testimony for my own sake, but for yours; for) I receive not testimony from man: but these things I say, that [19] ye (believing his testimony) might be saved.

35. He was a burning and a shining light (as Elias is by you represented, Ecclus. xlviii. 1. his word being clear and powerful): and ye were willing for a [20] season to rejoice in his light, (owning him as a prophet, and a just man; and therefore I insist upon his testimony, as hoping it may have some influence upon you, to work that faith in you, by which you shall be saved, John x. 41.)

36. But I have a greater witness than that of John: for the works which [21] the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do (by his power residing in me), bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

37. [22] And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me; (by a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son; and by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon me, in the Schechinah, or bright light, which is the symbol of his presence; but on this I insist not, for) ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape (Ezek. i. 28. the likeness of the glory of God).

38. And (as ye have not known his will this way, so neither will ye do it by his revealed will; for) ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not (as his word would induce you to do).

39. [23] Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have (the words of) eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

40. And (yet) ye will not (by them be persuaded to) [24] come to me (i. e. believe in me), that ye might have (the) life (I promise to them that believe in me.

41. And yet ye have no reason to disbelieve me; for) I receive not honour from men (I do nothing from desire of their applause, but purely for the honour of God, and out of love to him, and so act not like a false, but a true prophet).

42. But (this I cannot say of you; for) I know you, that you have not the love of God in you.

43. I am come in my Father's name (i. e. with his authority and testimony), and ye receive me not (i. e. ye do not own me as the promised Messiah): another shall [25] come in his own name, (without any evidence of Divine authority, even Barchochebas, and) him ye will receive (as such.

44. And indeed) how [25] can ye believe, who (strive to) receive honour (and glory) one of another, and seek not (rather) the honour that cometh from (the approbation of) God only?

45. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father; (I shall not need to do it; for) there is one that accuseth you (to him), even Moses, in whom you trust, (that, by obedience to his law, you shall have life, ver. 39.)

46. For had ye believed (the words of) Moses, ye would have believed me: for [27] he wrote of me, (saying, I will raise up a Prophet like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, Deut. xviii. 18.)

47. But if ye believe [28] not his writings (whom you own as a great Prophet sent from God), how shall you believe my words (when you have no such opinion of me, or respect for me)?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. JESUS went up to Jerusalem.] To hold communion with the Jewish church at the feast of the Passover, by observing with them the rites to be observed at the feast; he therefore refused not communion with a church that had clogged these festivals with human traditions, though, perhaps, he performed only the rites required by the law at these festivals. (See Dr. Lightfoot.)

[2] Ver. 2. Ἐστὶ δὲ, There is at Jerusalem by the sheep-gate a pool, called in the Hebrew Bethesda.] That is, the house of mercy: because of the mercy of God shewed there in curing their diseases. Moreover, if ἐστὶ δὲ, there is, be the true reading, as the consent of almost all the Greek copies argues, it seems to intimate, that Jerusalem and this pool were then standing when St. John wrote this Gospel, and therefore that it was written, as Theophylact and others say, before the destruction of Jerusalem, and not, as the more ancient fathers thought, long after.

[3] Ver. 4. An angel went down, κατὰ καιρὸν, at a certain season, and then he that first went down was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.] All the circumstances of this history shew, that Dr. Hammond's conjecture, that this angel was only an officer sent at a certain time to stir this pool, and that the warm entrails cast into it communicated this healing virtue to these waters, though it seems to be supported by the authority of St. Chrysostom and Theophylact, is highly improbable. For (1.) how unlikely is it that this should be a natural means of curing all sorts of diseases without exception, the blind, the halt, and the withered? ver. 3. (2.) That it should only cure the person that first stepped in, though he might be followed by others the same instant; for how should the natural virtue of this pool, impregnated with the warm entrails of so many sacrifices, extend itself only to one man? And (3.) how unlikely is it that it should do this only at one time of the year, viz. at the feast of Passover? For this was done, not at several times, but only κατὰ καιρὸν, at a certain time, (ver. 4.) And, lastly, the very foundation of this surmise is taken away by that observation of Dr. Lightfoot, that there was a laver in the temple for the washing of those entrails, and so they were not likely to be washed in this pool.

It is farther to be noted, that these waters of Siloam were a type of the kingdom of David and of Christ; of the kingdom of David, according to these words, Isa. viii. 6. Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Siloah, that go softly, that is, saith the Targum, the kingdom of David that rules them quietly; and of Christ, according to those words of the same prophet, xii. 2. With joy shall they draw water from the wells of salvation, whence Siloah is interpreted sent. (See note on ix. 7.) To this type of the Messiah God might therefore give this virtue about that time, to prepare the Jews to receive his advent, who was sent to them; and when a fountain was to be opened for sin and for uncleanness, Zech. xiii. 1. viz. that of the blood of Christ, might communicate this virtue to this pool, as a prefiguration of it; whence, as Tertullian * notes, the virtue of this pool then ceased, when they, persevering in their infidelity, rejected our Saviour. And this might be one reason why the Jewish writers are so silent as to the virtue of this pool; because, by its signification, it related to Christ; and, by this miracle, confirmed his doctrine. (See here Examen Millii in locum.)

[4] Ver. 8. Arise, take up thy bed, and walk.] Christ here requires not faith of him, because he had seen, and, perhaps, heard of none of his miracles; but he requires him to do that on the sabbath which was contrary to the letter of the law, to shew he was a prophet, who, by their own rules, had power to require what was contrary to the ceremonial rest of the sabbath; (see note on ix. 18.) and to instruct them that to do this, not in contempt of the law, or for bodily advantage, but as a public testimony of the great goodness of God to us, tended rather to the sanctification than to the profanation of the sabbath, that day being sanctified to this very end, that men might employ it in glorifying and praising God for his benefits.

[5] Ver. 15. Told the Jews that Jesus had done this.] Not to accuse him to them, but partly out of gratitude, to own the author of this cure; and partly to excuse himself, as only doing this at the command of so great a prophet.

[6] Ver. 17. My Father worketh hitherto, &c.] Even from the time he rested from the works of the creation, continuing to preserve and govern all things he created, and do those things which tend to his glory and to the good of his creatures, even on the sabbath-day; and, in imitation of him, I do my wondrous works of mercy, to the glory of his name, upon that day; which, being Divine, and done by his power and assistance, shew that I do nothing in them contrary to his will. Thus Philo,† speaking of God's resting on the seventh day, saith, We have declared, that God ceaseth not to work, but proceeds to the production of other things, as being not the artificer only, but the father of them.

[7] Ver. 18. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, ὅτι πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε Θεὸν, ἴσον ἑαυτὸν ποιῶν τῷ Θεῷ, because he said, God was his own Father, making himself equal to God.] Here note,

First, That he is here said to style God his Father, after a manner proper and peculiar to himself, as being ὁ ἴδιος Θεοῦ υἱὸς, the proper Son of God, (Rom. viii. 32.) and so as being his son, not as Adam and the angels were, by creation, nor as good men are, by adoption only; in which sense the Jews pretended to have God for their Father, (viii. 41.) and in which sense both Philo ‡ and the Jewish writers § speak of him as the Father of Israel, and of those who had a true knowledge of him; for, in this sense, to call himself the Son of God, could neither be worthy of death, nor worse than the violation of the sabbath. It is therefore evident the Jews thought Christ, by saying God was his Father, made himself his Son in such a manner as rendered him equal to God in nature, as a son is to his father; and yet they thought he did this, not as the Socinians say, by saying he did the works of his Father, but as their words testify, by calling God his Father, in a sense peculiar to himself: and hence they accuse him of blasphemy, for saying that he was the Son of God, Matt. xxvi. 63—65. John x. 33. 36. which they never do, for saying he was the Messiah, or that he did the works of God. Note,

Secondly, Hence, that the Jews did not then think that their Messiah was to be God, or, in the sublimer sense, the Son of God. Hence Origen * declares, that having discoursed with many wise men of the Jews, he could find none of them who allowed Θεὸν ὄντα, ἢ Θεοῦ υἱὸς, that he was God, or the Son of God. And Jerome, on those words, Jer. xvii. 5. Cursed is he who putteth his trust in man, saith, the Jews are accursed, "qui spem habent in homine Christo, videlicet suo, quem non filium Dei, sed purum hominem putant esse venturum," who trust in a man, viz. in their Messiah, whom they expect to come as a mere man, and not as the Son of God.

[8] Ver. 19. The Son of man can do nothing ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, of himself, ἐὰν μὴ τι βλέπει, but what he sees the Father doing.] The Jews concluding Christ to be a false prophet, because he, in this peculiar manner, styled God his Father, Christ here undertakes to shew, (1.) that he exercised his prophetic office, according to the will of the Father: (2.) that he confirmed it by miracles done by the power of God residing in him. Christ therefore here seems not to speak of his essential power, but of his prophetic office, and of the doctrine which he taught and confirmed by miracles. (1.) Because, as to his essential power, the action of the Father and the Son being one and the same, both as to power and time, he cannot properly be said to do nothing of himself, or to do nothing but what he sees the Father do. (2.) Because, as to speak nothing of himself, is to speak nothing of his own instinct and will without commission from God: (see note on vii. 17.) so to do nothing of himself, is to do nothing without commission from, and knowledge of the will of God, that he should do it, and so respecteth his prophetic office, and the things done in confirmation of it; and then the words following, unless he sees the Father doing them, must bear this sense; Unless he, by the Spirit of the Father residing in him, sees that the Father would have them done by him; for what the Father ποιῇ, would have done, he doth according to his will, or as he would have them to be done. And this import of the words seems to be confirmed,

First, From the following words; For the Father loveth the Son καὶ πάντα δείκνυσιν αὐτῷ ἃ ποιεῖ, and sheweth him all things, which he (the Son) doeth; and he will shew him greater works than these (which are to be done by him, even that of raising the dead, ver. 21.) For, because we receive all our knowledge from our eyes or ears, therefore Christ, speaking of the execution of his prophetic office, useth these metaphors, declaring, that he spake and testified what he had seen, (iii. 11.) what he had seen with the Father, (viii. 38.) and so the Baptist saith, what he hath seen he testifies; and again, that he spake what he had heard from the Father, (viii. 26. x. 15, 16.) And because they who teach or declare things, do by that shew them to us; therefore Christ uses this metaphor here, and saith, viii. 28. I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, so I speak: and again, xii. 49, 50. I have spoken nothing of myself; but as the Father, who sent me, gave me commandment what I should say and speak: the things therefore which I speak, as the Father said to me, so I speak. Now, that he spake this with respect to the Spirit of prophecy, with which he was anointed, and by the Father sent to preach the gospel to the poor, &c. Luke iv. 11. the Baptist teacheth in these words, What he hath seen and heard, that he testifies; for he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for the Father giveth not him the Spirit by measure: (iii. 32—34.) and he himself intimates, by saying, xiv. 10. The words that I speak to you, I speak not of myself; the Father abiding in me, he doeth the works. (See the note there.)

Secondly, That he said truly, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, he proves from the Divine works God the Father had given him power to do; though he was to do them after his resurrection and advancement to his kingdom, viz. the resurrection of the dead and the future judgment: and therefore adds,

[9] Ver. 21. As the Father raiseth the dead, and quickeneth them, so the Son quickeneth whom he will.] This is more than ever was said of any prophet or apostle, that he did such works at his will; and here chiefly respects Christ, not acting as a prophet, but as a king, sitting at the right hand of power: and this being an action represented as proper to God, who saith, I am, and there is none besides me; I kill, and make alive, Deut. xxxii. 39. 1 Sam. ii. 6. a work to be performed by his sole power, Matt. xxii. 29. Acts xxvi. 8. and by the strength of his power, Eph. i. 19. who is a God quickening the dead, Rom. iv. 17. hence it is evident, that Christ, who will not only raise our mortal bodies, but also make them like to his own glorious body, by that power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself, Phil. iii. 21. must be God; and that the Father, by giving him power to have life in himself, as he hath it in himself, ver. 26. must have given him the fulness of the Deity, from which this power is inseparable.

[10] Ver. 22. For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment to his Son.] Seeing this judgment is committed to him, it is evident, saith Woltzogenius, that he cannot be God the highest, because he reigns and judges by his own power, derived from none; and yet he owns, that in this judgment is comprehended "totum regimen, et Divinum totius mundi imperium," an entire government and Divine empire over the whole world, and especially over the whole church of God; from whence it is demonstrable, that he must be God: for, this government must be attended with a power of raising all them from the dead, whom he shall place before his judgment-seat, and with the perfect knowledge, not only of the actions of all men from the beginning of the world, but also of their secret thoughts; since otherwise he cannot bring every secret thought and work into judgment, nor bring to light the hidden things of darkness, or manifest the secrets of the heart, 1 Cor. iv. 5. or judge every man according to his works, 2 Cor. v. 10. He also must be omnipresent and omniscient, even the searcher of all hearts; that he may know and answer the prayers of all his servants in all corners of the earth, as the Socinians grant he doth; and almighty, that he may be able to supply all their wants, assist and enable them to do every where the greatest miracles in his name, defend and preserve them against all the powers on earth, and even the gates of hell, raise and condemn their enemies, with the devil and his angels, to eternal destruction from his presence, and also crown his servants with everlasting glory. Now how all these things can be done by a mere creature, is as difficult to conceive as any mystery of the blessed Trinity. I answer, therefore, in that distinction of the schools, that the principium quod, or the person thus judging, is the Son of man, ver. 27. this judgment being to be exercised by the man Christ Jesus, Acts xvii. 31. but the principium quo, i. e. the power or the principle by which he does it, is the whole fulness of the Deity, individually united to his human nature, or the Word made flesh, John i. 14. This therefore hinders not, but he to whom this judgment is thus given, may be God of God.

[11] Ver. 23. That all men may honour the Son as they honour the Father.] That is, saith Woltzogenius, "that they, owning this dignity and power, 'per quam Deo equalis est,' by which he is equal to God, may give him that obedience, honour, and worship, which are due to a Divine and heavenly King: for that the honour and worship due to Christ, is Divine honour, is evident from this, that it is such, 'qualis Patri debetur;' as is due to the Father; to whom, by the consent of all men, belongs Divine worship:" and hence he proves, that Christ is to be worshipped with invocation; "because he who refuses to pray to him, doth not honour him as he honours the Father: in this (saith he) consists the highest honour we give to the Father, that we own him for the chief monarch, and Lord of all things, in whose power is our salvation and destruction; and therefore, by prayer, endeavour to obtain from him the enjoyment of good things, and the deliverance from evil: 'Qui hæc eadem in Christo agnoscit, et eum sic colit, is honorat, et colit eum sicut Patrem;' He that owns these things to belong to Christ, and doth thus worship him, he honoureth the Son as he doth the Father:" so he: now can he be equal to God, who is only a creature, or be worthy of Divine worship, who is no God? The precept being plain, and owned by Christ himself, 'The Lord thy God is one Lord, and (therefore) thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. (Deut. vi. 13. Matt. iv. 10.) Can he, who said, Thou shalt worship no other gods but me, and I will not give my glory to another, (Isa. xlii. 8.) himself appoint, that any creature should be worshipped as God, or have that honour, worship, and obedience, in which his glory doth consist? It is therefore no unjust imputation to call them idolaters, who give this worship to one, who, say they, is by nature only man; seeing they do the very thing charged on the heathen idolaters; they worship them which by nature are no gods; (Gal. iv. 8.) and do that to a creature, which God requires to be done to himself alone, viz. that they should glorify him as God; (Rom. i. 21.) and do that with which God upbraided his own people, viz. the worshipping a new God, which their own fathers had not known. (Deut. xxxii. 17.) If you say here, they give him the same worship, not as the first, but only as the intermediate cause of our salvation: it may be easily replied, that then they cannot honour him as they honour the Father; and much less as the chief monarch, and Lord of all things. Moreover, I inquire, Whether this middle cause be created, or uncreated? If uncreated, he is, by nature, God, and, since there is but one God, of the same essence with the Father; but if created, they must be guilty of idolatry, who give him the same worship with the Father; and therefore give the creature the worship due to the Creator.

[12] Ver. 25. The hour—now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live.] That Christ here speaks not only of a spiritual resurrection from the death of sin, is evident; (1.) because he speaks of it as a thing shortly future; whereas the spiritual resurrection was in some already past: (2.) because he promises this resurrection not to them that should hear his word, but φωνὴν, his voice: and that he speaks of a proper resurrection, appears, (1.) from the gradation he here makes from the resurrection of some to the resurrection of all, ver. 28. (2.) because he adds, That they who hear, shall live; and that because the Son, whose voice they hear, hath life in himself; (ver. 26.) I therefore think that our Lord speaks of that hour, when, he rising from the dead, many bodies of the saints arose with him. (Matt. xxvii. 52, 53.)

[13] Ver. 26. He hath given the Son to have life in himself.] i. e. The power of raising whom he will, (ver. 21.) Hence, though the apostles and others raised men from the dead, it is said of none of them that they had life in themselves; because they did this, not by their own, but by the power of Christ. Note also, that the same thing is, in both places, said both of the Father and the Son: for it is not said, the Father hath life from himself, the Son in himself, but both hath life, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himself; and that as the Father, so the Son, quickeneth whom he will. Now the operations follow the essence; so that where the same operation is, there must be the same essence.

[14] Ver. 27. Because he is the Son of man.] i. e. The Messias, to whom all power and dominion is given, (Dan. vii. 13, 14.) and of whom the Jews* said, that he should raise the dead; or, because he took the human nature on him, he suffered in it, and, by that passion, became the author of salvation to all that obey him, (Heb. v. 8, 9.) and, lastly, in that nature only could be a visible judge. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[15] Ver. 29. And they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation.] This seems to be spoken in opposition to the doctrine of the pharisees, who, saith Josephus,† thought the resurrection pertained only to the just; and that the wicked and antediluvian sinners were to be excluded from it.

The hour is coming in which all they that are in the grave shall arise, and shall come forth, οἱ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιήσαντες, they (of them thus arising) who have done good, to the resurrection of life; οἱ δὲ τὰ φαῦλα πράξαντες, they (of them) who have done evil, to the resurrection of condemnation. A late author‡ hath endeavoured to avoid the clear evidence of this text for a general sentence of all men to a life of future happiness or misery. I shall not here consider all his evasions, but observe only, that he is obliged, from the force of these words, All that are in the graves shall come forth, to own, that all mankind shall arise; but yet he will not own, that the distribution of them, who thus come forth, into them that have done good, and into them that have done evil, contains all, but some of them only, viz. such as have had the gospel made known to them; which is as great an instance of a man, who shall say any thing δουλεύειν ὑποθέσει, to serve his hypothesis, as can be offered: for what instance can be given through the Scripture of a universal proposition distributed into two parts, in which the opposite members do not contain the whole general? What is this, in effect, but to allow the truth of this general proposition, "omne animal est sensibile," every little creature is sensible, and yet to deny the truth of this distribution, τῶν δὲ αἰσθητῶν τὰ μὲν λογικὰ, τὰ δὲ ἄλογα, that of sensible creatures, some are rational, some irrational? Let us see the absurdity of it in some Scripture instances: Matt. xxv. 32. The Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, and πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, all nations shall be gathered before him, and he shall place τὰ μὲν πρόβατα, the sheep on his right hand, τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια, but the goats on his left, ver. 33.: now, must not here the sheep and the goats be equal to all nations? So again, Rom. ii. 6. God, saith the apostle, will render ἑκάστῳ, to every man according to his works, τοῖς μὲν, to them who, by patience in well-doing, seek for glory, honour, and incorruption, eternal life; τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας, but to those that are contentious, and obey not the truth, tribulation: now, doth not this distribution, into the obedient and disobedient, contain all that are comprehended in the general word, every man? And doth not the apostle interpret the words so, ver. 9, 10. by saying, ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ψυχὴν, upon every soul of man that worketh evil shall be tribulation; and πάντι τῷ ἐργαζομένῳ τὸ ἀγαθὸν, to every one that worketh good, glory, honour, and peace?

[16] Ver. 30. As I hear, κρίνω, I judge.] i. e. I pronounce sentence according to the will of my Father; for κρίμα and κρίσις is a sentence; so βλάσφημος κρίσις is a blasphemous accusation, or sentence, 2 Pet. ii. 11. κρίμα θανάτου, the sentence of death, Luke xxiv. 20. κρίμα τῆς πόρνης, the sentence upon the whore, Rev. xvii. 1.; and κρίνω, I give sentence; so ὀρθῶς ἔκρινας, Luke vii. 43. thou hast judged, or given sentence aright: Out of thy mouth, κρινῶ σε, will I pronounce sentence upon thee, Luke xix. 22. (See Matt. vii. 1, 2. John vii. 24. viii. 15. Acts xv. 19. Rom. ii. 1. 3. iii. 4. 6, 7. Psal. li. 4.)

[17] Ver. 31. If I bear witness of myself (only), my witness is not true:] i. e. Say most interpreters, it is not valid, the law requiring two witnesses. But to bear witness of himself here, is to declare himself a prophet without any attestation from God, as the false prophets did; and had Christ done this, he must have been like them, and so his testimony would have been false; God never sending any prophet to men without sufficient testimonies, that he was sent from him.

[18] Ver. 32. There is another that beareth witness of me.] viz. Whom ye counted as a prophet, (Matt. xiv. 5. xxi. 26.) and, upon that account, received his baptism: now, according to your own rules, he is to be owned as a prophet, to whom a prophet gives his testimony.

† De Bello Jud. lib. iii. cap. 12.

‡ Mr. Dodwell.

[19] Ver. 34. But I spake these things, that ye might be saved.] Hence it is evident, that Christ seriously willed and intended the salvation of them, who would not come to him that they might have life, (ver. 40.) and therefore were not actually saved.

[20] Ver. 35. For a season ye rejoiced in his light.] He was a burning light, saith Christ here; his word burned as a lamp, saith the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlviii. 1. and yet in this light they rejoiced but for a season; for when he had freely given testimony to Christ, and reproved their vices, they blasphemed him, and said, he had a devil. (Luke. vii. 30. 33.)

[21] Ver. 36. The work which my Father hath given me to do, &c.] He saith not, which I do, but which the Father hath given me to do; so Woltzogenius: and yet the following words are ἃ ἐγὼ ποιῶ, which I do. He therefore here declares, that he had sufficient testimony of his mission from the works done by him through the Father dwelling in him, (Matt. xii. 28.) and that the Father had given him to do them, by giving him his Spirit and his power, together with his essence. (John iii. 34, 35. xiv. 10.

[22] Ver. 37. And the Father that sent me, beareth witness of me. You have neither heard his voice, nor seen his shape.] As in the paraphrase; or thus, Nor are you to expect the Father should testify of me otherways than by his works: for that which was granted to your fathers belongs not to you, viz. to see his glory, and hear his voice out of the middle of the fire, Deut. v. 24. so that he cannot now be otherwise seen than by his works.

[23] Ver. 39. Ἐρευνᾶτε τὰς γραφὰς, Search.] Or, ye search the Scriptures: which of these two senses the Greek bears, I will not contend: only note, (1.) that Origen, Philoc. cap. 1. et cap. 5. Chrysostom, hom. 24. et 37. in Genesin, and St. Austin, in Psal. cviii. col. 1269. and Epist. 80. col. 365. confirm our version: note, (2.) that if the Jews did truly think the doctrine of life eternal was contained there, and that they, by searching, might find it there, it must be to them a sufficient rule of faith: if in this they erred, it behoved Christ to correct in them an error so pernicious.

[24] Ver. 40. Ye will not come to me.] i. e. After the clear testimonies which the prophecies and characters of the Messiah in the Old Testament afford, that I am he, ye will not believe in me, which shews your infidelity is the result, not of simple ignorance, but of wilful obstinacy.

[25] Ver. 43. Another shall come in his own name.] Without commission or testimony from God: so did Barchochebas, working no miracles. Many of the fathers thought antichrist was here meant.

[26] Ver. 44. How can ye believe, who seek honour one of another?] And so cannot bear the reproach of the pharisees, and the chief of the Jews, or endure the infamy of being cast out of the synagogue, which is the sentence they have passed upon all that shall believe in me; (xii. 42, 43.) till you prefer the approbation of God before that of man, it is not to be expected ye should do it.

[27] Ver. 46. For he wrote of me.] viz. Deut. xviii. 17—19. Hence it follows, that those words of Moses are not primarily to be understood of a succession of prophets, but of a single person, even Christ; for a Prophet, saith he, shall the Lord raise up to you like to me: whereas no other prophet rose up to them like to Moses, (Deut. xxxiv. 10.) besides Christ. (See the bishop of Ely on that place.)

[28] Ver. 47. If ye believe not Moses.] For whom you pretend so great respect. Their pretences for not believing in Christ, were these two—their love to God, and reverence for the law of Moses: Christ proves they could have no true love to God, ver. 42. nor faith in Moses, ver. 46. for this very reason, that they believe not on him.

CHAP. VI.

1. [1] AFTER these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is (also named) the sea of Tiberias.

2. And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles, which he did upon them that were diseased, (and because some of them also needed healing, Luke ix. 11.)

3. And Jesus [2] went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4. And the Passover, (which was) a feast of the Jews (which all their males were bound to celebrate at Jerusalem), was nigh (to which the people were therefore hastening).

5. When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come to him, he saith to Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that (all) these may eat?

6. And this he said to prove him (who was slow of faith, xiv. 9.) for he himself knew what he would do.

7. Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8. (Then the disciples desiring him to send the multitude away, that they might go into the villages, and buy themselves bread: and Christ answering, that they should give them to eat: and they inquiring, how they should do this? He asks them also, How many loaves have you? Mark vi. 36, 37.) One of his disciples, (to wit) Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith to him,

9. There is a lad here, who hath five barley-loaves, and two small fishes; but what are they among so many?

10. And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11. And Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed (of them) to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were sat down; and likewise of the fishes (both which were so miraculously increased as they went through his hands, that every one of that great company did eat) as much as they would.

12. (And) when they were filled, he said to his disciples, [3] Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing (of God's good creatures) be lost.

13. Therefore they gathered them together, and (to evidence the truth and greatness of the miracle) filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above to them that had eaten.

14. Then these men, when they had seen the miracle, which Jesus did (resembling that of Moses, who fed them with manna in the wilderness; and knowing he had told them, that God would raise them up a Prophet of their brethren like to him), said, This is of a truth that Prophet which should come into the world: (and having got a false notion that their Messiah was to be a temporal king; they, finding him so able to supply them with provisions, were minded to set him up for their king).

15. When Jesus therefore [4] perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he (first sent away his own disciples, to whom he knew that motion would not be unacceptable, and then dispersed the multitude, Mark vi. 46. and so) departed again into a mountain himself alone.

16. And when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

17. And entered into a ship, and [5] went over the sea towards Capernaum. And it was now dark. and Jesus was not come to them.

18. And the sea arose (and was tempestuous) by reason of a great wind that blew.

19. So when they had rowed about [6] five-and-twenty or thirty furlongs, (about the fourth watch of the night, Mark vi. 48.) they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh to the ship: and (taking him for an apparition, ver. 49.) they were afraid.

20. But he said to them, It is I; be not afraid.

21. Then they [7] willingly received him into the ship (believing that then all things would go well with them): and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22. The day following, when [8] the people, which stood on the other side of the sea, saw that (last night) there was no other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

23. (Howbeit there came other boats (afterward) from Tiberias (which in the morning were found) nigh to the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks;)

24. When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping (in those boats), and came to Capernaum (his usual habitation), seeking for Jesus (there).

25. And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said to him, [9] Rabbi, (thou wentest not last night with thy disciples, nor saw we thee this morning where last night we left thee,) when (therefore) camest thou hither?

26. (But) Jesus (without satisfying their curiosity in this matter) answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say to you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles (as being so convinced by them as to hear and to obey my doctrine, from a desire to obtain by it eternal life, as ye should do), but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled (and expect the like benefit again: and therefore I say to you),

27. [10] Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for that meat which endureth to eternal life, which (if you believe in him) the Son of man shall give to you: for him hath God the Father sealed (i. e. hath shewed that he hath authorized him to do this; and by giving him this miraculous power to feed your bodies, hath fully testified he is the person by him appointed to convey these blessings to the souls of men).

28. Then said they to him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? (We have already the law of Moses, and know what God requires by that law: what farther duties, or what more pleasing to him, canst thou instruct us to perform?)

29. Jesus answered and said to them, This is the work (most acceptable in the sight) of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.

30. They said therefore to him, What sign shewest thou then (greater than Moses hath done), that we may see (it), and believe thee? What dost thou work (above what Moses did?

31. Thou hast indeed fed us one day in a desert, but) our fathers did eat manna in the desert (through which Moses led them) forty years (and that was heavenly food); as it is written, (Psal. lxxviii. 25.) He gave them [11] bread from heaven to eat, (and so they had by Moses a sign from heaven of his commission: such a one would we see from thee, Mark viii. 11.)

32. Then Jesus said to them, Verily, verily, I say to you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven (which I exhort you to labour for, and of which the manna only was a type); but my Father (now) giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33. For [12] the bread of God (of which you spiritually are to eat) is he that cometh down from heaven, and giveth (not a fading life, as manna did to the Jews, but everlasting) life to the (whole) world.

34. Then said they to him, Lord evermore give us this bread (which will preserve our lives; still thinking that he only spake of this present life).

35. And (then) Jesus said to them, I am the bread of life: he that [13] cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth in me shall never thirst (he being, by that faith, united to me, who am the life, xiv. 6. and partaking of that Spirit, which will be in him as a well of water springing up to eternal life, iv. 14. vii. 38. and so shall need no more to hunger or thirst after it).

36. But I said to you, That ye also have seen me (doing works sufficient to convince you of the truth of what I say), and (yet) believe (me) not; (and I shall find still cause to say so to men so worldly-minded, and prejudiced against the truth.

37. But though it be thus with you,) [14] all that the Father giveth me (i. e. all that he prevails on by the miracles he works by me, and the doctrine he teacheth me to deliver to the world, to judge of me as one sent from him to propound the terms of life eternal) shall come to me (i. e. embrace my doctrine, and believe in me); and him that cometh (thus) to me I will in no wise cast out (i. e. reject from that life).

38. For I came down from heaven, not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me.

39. And this is the Father's will that hath sent me, that of all that he hath given me I should lose nothing, (i. e. should suffer none to perish, xvii. 12.) but should [15] raise it up again at the last day.

40. And this (also) is the [16] will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son (i. e. discerneth him to be the prophet sent from God), and (therefore) believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I (for that end) will raise him up at the last day.

41. The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42. And they said (one to another), Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he (being born of earthly parents) saith, I came down from heaven?

43. Jesus therefore answered and said to them, Murmur not among yourselves (on the account of these words; for it is not want of truth in my words, but want of affection to my doctrine, and due consideration of the testimonies God hath given to it, that makes you thus murmur at and reject them.

44. And indeed) no man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me (by thus confirming my testimony, and disposing you to prize and value that eternal life I promise) [17] draw him (to believe and embrace my doctrine, and live according to it): and I will raise him up at the last day (who is thus drawn to believe and embrace it).

45. It is written in the prophets (That the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up), and (then) they shall be all [18] taught of God. Every one therefore that hath heard (the Father speaking in and by me), and hath learned of the Father (the truth of my doctrine), cometh to me.

46. (This I say) not that any man hath seen the Father, (and so immediately is taught by him, this privilege none can claim) save (but) he who is (the only-begotten Son) of God, he (only) hath (thus) seen the Father.

47. (Being therefore thus alone acquainted with his will,) Verily, verily, I say to you, He that believeth in me hath (an assurance of) everlasting life.

48. (For) I am that bread of life, (of which, if a man spiritually eat, he shall not die, ver. 50.)

49. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and (notwithstanding this they) are dead, (most of them in their sins, and for their unbelief; and all of them, because it could neither preserve life nor restore it.)

50. This (bread of which I speak) is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die (for the punishment, but for the abolition of sin, and then be raised to a state in which he can die no more).

51. I am the living (or life-giving) bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, (though he die,) he shall live (again) for ever (by virtue of his eating of it): and the [19] bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give (up to the death) for the life of the world, (that whosoever believeth in me thus dying for him may not perish, but have everlasting life, iii. 16.)

52. The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53. Then Jesus said to them, Verily, verily, I say to you, Except ye (by faith in my death) [20] eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, you have no life in you, (no spiritual life at present, nor any right to life eternal.

54. But) whoso eateth (thus) my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath (by that faith, an interest in) eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day (to enjoy it).

55. For [21] my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed, (i. e. faith in me, giving up my body to the death, and shedding my blood for the remission of your sins, is the true meat and drink, which nourisheth to eternal life.

56. For) he that (thus) eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him, (by that Spirit which will quicken your mortal bodies, and raise them from the dead, Rom. viii. 11.)

57. As the living Father hath sent me, and I (though I die, shall) [22] live (again) by the Father: so he that (thus) eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58. This is that bread which came down from heaven (to be eaten of you): not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: (see ver. 49. for) he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever (and have that life which manna never could, nor was designed to, afford).

59. These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60. Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is a hard saying; who can hear (i. e. receive) it?

61. When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he saith to them, Doth this (discourse of eating my flesh) offend you (now)?

62. What and if (ἐὰν οὖν, if, or when therefore) ye shall see the Son of man [23] ascend up where he was before? (How much more will you be offended, seeing my body will be then less capable of being eaten by you, in that gross sense in which you understand my words?

63. But know that) it is [24] the Spirit (imparted to believers) that quickeneth (their mortal bodies, Rom. viii. 11.) the flesh (even of my body, could you eat it) profiteth nothing (to that end: now) the words that I speak to you, they are spirit, and they are life (i. e. they are the means of obtaining this spirit, and life by him).

64. But there are some of you (my disciples) who believe not (and so cannot obtain this spirit and this life. This he said), for Jesus knew from the beginning (of his ministry, John ii. 24, 25.) who they were that believed not (sincerely), and who should betray him.

65. And he said, Therefore said I to you, That no man can [25] come to me (i. e. believe in me), except it were given to him of my Father (i. e. unless he were thoroughly convinced by the miracles wrought by me, that I was sent from God, and had by God wrought in him a prevailing affection to eternal life; both which were wanting in these disciples).

66. From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

67. Then said Jesus to the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68. Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? (since) thou (only) hast the words of eternal life (and for that, above all things, we are and ought to be concerned).

69. And we believe and are sure that thou art that (the) Christ, the Son of the living God (sent by him to reveal this life, and to impart it to those who do sincerely believe in thee).

70. Jesus answered them, [26] Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? (i. e. an adversary to me and my doctrine.

71. This) he spake of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. AFTER these things.] Related in the former chapter; i. e. the year following, (for he healed the man at the pool of Bethesda at the Passover, saith Dr. Lightfoot, and fed the Jews with the five loaves the following Passover, ver. 4.) he went over the sea to Galilee. (See the note on Matt. xiv. 13.)

[2] Ver. 3. He went up into a mountain.] When Jesus went out of the ship, he saw the multitude come to the place: (Matt. xiv. 14.) but it was only when he sat down upon the mountain that he saw them come to him.

[3] Ver. 12. Gather the fragments, that nothing be lost.] That, by the nature of the bread remaining, it might appear, that there was no illusion in the miracle; and, by the command to save this bread, it appears, it is not simply unlawful to save any thing till the morrow; but only to be anxious for the morrow, Matt. vi. 14. (See Examen Millii.)

[4] Ver. 15. Christ therefore knowing that they would come and make him a king.] He knew this, saith Stegmannus, by that Spirit and Divine virtue, by which he was able to discern the secrets of men's hearts, and, knowing this, he would not be made a king, because his kingdom was not of this world, (xviii. 38.)

[5] Ver. 17. They went over the sea to Capernaum.] Into the land of Gennesaret, Matt. xiv. 34. they went over πρὸς Βεθσαϊδὰν, towards Bethsaida, Mark vi. 45. The desert of Bethsaida lying on the side of the sea of Galilee opposite to the city, they first crossed over that sea towards the city, and then sailed on along that sea to Capernaum, which was in the region of Gennesaret. (See Dr. Lightfoot's Map, p. 308.)

[6] Ver. 19. About five-and-twenty or thirty furlongs.] In matters of so small importance, the Spirit of God did not think it necessary to suggest the exact measure to them.

[7] Ver. 21. Ἤθελον, They were willing to take him into the ship.] Though Peter first walked to him on the sea, and then they came both into the ship. (Matt. xiv. 30.)

[8] Ver. 22. The multitude which stood on the other side of the sea.] For though Christ then sent them away, (Matt. xiv. 43.) they might return again the next morning.

[9] Ver. 25. Rabbi, when camest thou hither?] It was usual with Christ to answer nothing to curious questions, not tending to edification, but to divert them from them to more profitable subjects. (So Luke xiii. 23, 24. John xii. 34, 35.)

[10] Ver. 27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth.] The Massalian heretics, say Chrysostom and Theophylact, abused these words, to prove it was not lawful for them to work to sustain this present life: by which doctrine, saith Chrysostom, they do ὅλον διαβάλλειν τὸν χριστιανισμὸν, wholly subvert Christianity, commanding Christians to work with their hands that which is good, (Eph. iv. 28.) to do their own business, and to work with their hands; (1 Thess. iv. 11.) and he confutes them with the example of St. Paul, labouring with his own hands night and day, (Acts xviii. 3. xx. 34. 1 Thess. ii. 2. 2 Thess. iii. 8.) and of the other apostles. (1 Cor. iv. 12.) These words are therefore to be taken not absolutely, but comparatively; i. e. Do not chiefly and primarily labour for the meat that perisheth; but let your regard for that meat which nourisheth to eternal life, be so great, as that your concern for perishing enjoyments shall be comparatively as nothing: in which sense only we are bid not to take thought for food and raiment, (Matt. vi. 28. 31.) not to fear them who can kill the body, (Matt. x. 28.) not to seek earthly things, (Col. iii. 2.)

But chiefly here observe, that whereas Christ, in this whole chapter, speaks of believing in him, and in his salutary passion, and of receiving his doctrine, under the metaphor of meat and drink, he doth this by a metaphor very familiar to the eastern nations, and frequent in the Jewish writers; thus wisdom crieth in the streets, Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled, Prov. ix. 5. that is, go in the way of understanding, ver. 6. eat you that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness, Isa. lv. 2. that is, hear, and your soul shall live, ver. 3. Thus doth the son of Sirach introduce wisdom, saying, They that eat me shall yet be hungry, and they that drink me shall yet be thirsty, Ecclus. xxiv. 21. i. e. they that obey me, (ver. 22.) Hence Philo* often speaks of prudence, wisdom, virtue, as the food of the soul, or that spiritual meat and drink which nourisheth to life eternal. So to eat of every tree in Paradise is, saith he, an exhortation, τὴν ψυχὴν μὲν ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν ἀρετῶν ὠφελεῖσθαι, that the soul should receive advantage by all virtues. The soul (saith he) is nourished with knowledge, not with meat and drink; for the Scripture testifies, † ὅτι οὐ γήϊνοι ἀλλ' οὐράνιοι αἱ ψυχῆς τροφαὶ, that the food of the soul is not earthly but heavenly, by saying, I rain down bread from heaven; and this principle, that God is the beginning and the end of all things, brings forth piety, ‡ κάλλιστον καὶ τροφιμώτατον καρπὸν, which is the best and most nourishing food. And the Talmudists § say, that all eating and drinking, mentioned in the book of Ecclesiastes, relates to the law and good works; and that their wise men are that staff of bread, of which Solomon saith, Come, eat of my bread. (See ver. 32.) So that the sense of these words is this, Labour by faith in me, and embracing my doctrine, to obtain that eternal life, which the Son of God will give to you; for he is to be lifted up upon the cross, that every one that believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life, (iii. 16, 17.) and him hath God the Father sealed, i. e. he hath by his authority commissioned, and by his testimony owned him to be that Prophet and Messiah, from whom all blessings are to be expected; and, by anointing him with his Spirit above measure, hath, as it were, set his seal in confirmation of his message; so that you may be sure the life he promises, in his Father's name, shall be given you: so Christ expounds himself, ver. 29. saying, This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent, i. e. this is that which he commands, and which is highly acceptable to him; so the sacrifices of God are a broken and a contrite heart, Psal. li. 17. i. e. these are the most acceptable sacrifices to him; and the righteousness of God, (Rom. i. 17. 2 Cor. v. 21.) is that righteousness, which he alone accepts.

[11] Ver. 31, 32. He gave them bread from heaven: Moses gave them not that bread from heaven, &c.] That we may the better understand what Christ here saith of himself, as the true bread coming down from heaven, that they might eat of it, and live; note,

First, From what hath been observed on ver. 27. that, among the orientals and Jewish writers,‖ to eat ἐστὶ τὸ φαγεῖν σύμβολον τροφῆς ψυχικῆς, is used as a symbol of the food of the soul; because the soul, saith Philo, ¶ is nourished by receiving and practising good things; and wisdom, temperance, and piety, are ψυχῆς τροφαὶ τῆς δηλάζειν ἱκανῆς, the food of a soul that can suck them in.

Secondly, They say, that Divine wisdom was this meat and drink of the soul, according to that exhortation of wisdom, Prov. ix. 5. Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled. Thus Philo * saith of the ascetic employed in Divine contemplations, ὑπὸ Θεοῦ ποτίζεται κάλλιστον πότον, σοφίαν, God gives him to drink of the best drink, wisdom, even from the fountain of his own wisdom. Accordingly Christ, the wisdom of the Father, saith, He that drinketh of the water which I shall give him, shall never thirst, John iv. 14. vii. 38, 39. (See ver. 35.)

Thirdly, They add, that this meat and drink comes down from heaven, and prove this from the words here cited by our Lord. So Philo † proves, that God only gives heavenly blessings, from those words of Moses, I rain down bread from heaven; for what food (saith he) can be rained down from thence, ὅτι μὴ τὴν οὐράνιον σοφίαν, but heavenly wisdom, which he sends down upon the soul desirous of it, who hath the fulness and abundance of it in himself?

Fourthly, They declare, that this meat and drink is therefore to be preferred to corporeal food, because it nourisheth to eternal life, or renders them immortal, who partake of it. So Philo saith, that the wisdom of God is the nurse and nourisher, ‡ τῶν ἀφθάρτου διαίτης ἐφιεμένων, of those that desire incorruptible diet. He adds, that seeking, what was the food of the soul, they found it was the Word of God, § καὶ θεῖος λόγος, and the Divine Word, ἀφ' οὗ πᾶσαι παιδείαι, καὶ σοφίαι ῥέουσιν ἀένναοι, from whom all eternal wisdom and instruction flow, and that this was the heavenly food of which Moses said, I rain down bread from heaven; and that this wisdom of God gives to the soul that drinketh of it, ‖ ἀμετάβλητον ὑγίειαν, an unchangeable health. And even Pythagoras instructed parents to provide for their children, not what would preserve the body to old age, but τὰ τὴν ψυχὴν θρέψαντα ἀϊδίῳ τροφῇ, what would nourish their souls with eternal food. (Stob. Serm. 1. p. 3.)

Lastly, They say, this meat and drink is the wisdom of God, and the Word of God, signified to them by that manna which fed the Jews, and by that rock which gave them drink; thus Philo ¶ having said the wisdom of God was a solid rock, which could not be broken, he adds, τὴν πέτραν ταύτην ἐτέρωθι συνωνυμίᾳ χρώμενος καλεῖ μάννα τὸν πρεσβύτατον τῶν ὄντων λόγον θεῖον, that Moses called this rock, which was the most ancient of beings, the Divine Word, by the synonymous name of Manna; the good man (saith he) lifts up his eyes to heaven, ἀφορῶν τὸ μάννα τὸν θεῖον λόγον, τὸν οὐράνιον τῆς φιλοθεαμένης ψυχῆς ἄφθαρτον τροφὴν, looking to the manna, the divine and heavenly Word, the incorruptible food of the soul, which loves God. Ainsworth  also notes from R. Isaac and R. Menahem, that manna signified the food of the just in the world to come, and others, that it was a type of life eternal. (See Buxtorf's History of Manna, p. 336. 339. 352.) From which observations it is easy to discern, why Christ here styles himself, the bread which came down from heaven, and gave life to the world, viz. because he was that spiritual bread prefigured by the manna coming down from heaven; and why he saith, that not Moses, but his Father, gave him the true bread from heaven, viz. because he only, by sending his Son from heaven, gave them that bread, which nourished to life eternal; (ver. 49—51.) and, lastly, why he insists so much upon this metaphor, viz. because it was familiar to the Jews, and used by their most celebrated writers.

Hence also we may see a probable reason why they desire a sign, i. e. a sign from heaven, (Matt. xii. 38. Mark viii. 11.) and do it for this reason, that their fathers did eat bread from heaven; (ver. 30, 31.) viz. they do it seeking an experiment, whether he was the Messiah, or not, * they being used to say, that as their first Redeemer made manna descend from heaven for them, so should their second Redeemer do; and how appositely our Lord answers, that what they desired was already done, by his Father sending his Son, the true heavenly manna, to them.

[12] Ver. 33. For the bread of God is he that cometh down from heaven, &c.] The oblations made to God are styled in the Old Testament, the bread of God, though they were sacrifices of living creatures, and by the Septuagint δῶρα Θεοῦ, the gifts of God, Lev. xxi. 6. 8. accordingly Christ styles his piacular victim by the same name; and whereas the Socinians say, Christ is here only said to come down from heaven, not as being in heaven first, and then condescending to dwell on earth, but only as every good and perfect gift is said to descend from above, Jam. i. 17. I know not why the gifts of the Spirit, imparted then to believers by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and being gifts of illumination, may not be properly said to descend from above, even from the Father of lights. That the Jews understood him in a sense intimating his coming down from heaven in a real sense, as from a place of his abode, appears from their murmuring at his words, on account of his earthly parentage, (ver. 41, 42.) which yet they could have had no cause to have done, had he meant this in such a sense only, in which all their own prophets must be allowed to come from heaven: moreover, thus even the Baptist came down from heaven, his authority, commission, and doctrine, being from heaven; (Matt. xxi. 25.) and yet he maketh this distinction betwixt himself and Christ, that he was from earth; but Christ was emphatically ὁ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐρχόμενος, one coming from heaven. Secondly, The antithesis put here betwixt Christ and manna, and the declaration, that Christ was that bread, which the Psalmist says was given them from heaven, shews the phrase must be used as a true descent from heaven, that manna and bread, of which the Psalmist and Moses speak, coming down truly from the clouds of heaven. And, thirdly, this is farther evident from Christ's question, (ver. 62.) What if you shall see the Son of man ascending where he was before, i. e. to his Father? (xiv. 2.) unless they will say, that, as his descent signified his having his commission, wisdom, and power from heaven, so his ascent signifies his deprivation of that commission, wisdom, and power.

[13] Ver. 35. He that cometh to me shall not hunger.] See note on iv. 14.

[14] Ver. 37. All that my Father giveth me shall come to me.] For explication of these words, let it be noted,

First, That to believe in Christ, and to come to him, is the same thing; so John v. 38. In him whom the Father hath sent, ye believe not, is, ver. 40. Ye will not come to me that ye may have life: so John vii. 37. If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink; and, to encourage them to embrace this invitation, he adds, He that cometh to me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water, ver. 38.: so ver. 35. of this chapter, He that cometh to me shall not hunger, is the same with the following words, He that believeth in me shall not thirst: so when Christ had said, Ye have seen me and have not believed, he adds this reason of their incredulity, You come not to me, because you are not given of the Father; and, ver. 40. saith, He that cometh to me I will not cast forth: for this is the will of my Father, that he, who hath seen the Son, and believed in him, should have eternal life. Note,

Secondly, That to be given of the Father cannot here signify to be absolutely chosen by him to eternal life: for then the Jews could not reasonably be accused for not coming to Christ, or not believing in him, much less that they would not believe or come to him; seeing, upon this supposition, that only they, whom God had absolutely chosen to eternal life, could come to him, it was impossible they should believe who were not thus elected, and so it could not be imputed as their crime that they did not that thing which it was impossible for them to do; whereas it is certain that our Saviour represents it as their great sin, that in him whom the Father had sent, they believed not, (John v. 38.) and that they would not come unto him that they might have life, (ver. 40.) telling them, that the Spirit would convince them of sin, because they believed not in him, (John xvi. 9.) and that they had no excuse for that sin: (John xv. 22. 24.) whereas what better excuse could be made for them than this, that they could not come unto him, as not being elected by God to that life he offered, to induce them so to do? (2.) Hence it must follow, that Christ could not rationally have invited them to come to him, or called them to believe in him, who were not given him by the Father: for this was to invite them to come to him, that they might live, who, he well knew, could never come, as being never chosen to obtain that life; much less could he have told them, that this was the work which God required them to do, or that the Father had given them this bread from heaven; this being to require them, according to this supposition, to believe a lie, viz. that Christ was sent to be the bread of life, and a Saviour to them, for whom the Father never did intend salvation by him; and yet Christ manifestly says to them, who, seeing him, did not believe, and therefore was not given to him by the Father, Labour for that meat which nourisheth to life eternal, which the Son of man shall give to you, (ver. 27.) and that this is the work of God, that ye believe in him that he hath sent, (ver. 29.) and, my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven, even him that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life (not to the elect only, but) to the world, (ver. 32, 33.) I therefore here inquire thus, Was our Lord truly willing that those he speaks to should have life? If not, why doth he say, These things I speak unto you, that ye might be saved; (John v. 34.) but ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life? If so, why did he say, that he did always those things which pleased him, (John viii. 29.) and could do nothing but what he saw his Father doing? seeing it was not the Father's will that they should be saved, or come unto him, that they might have life, whom he had not given to him, that is, had not elected to salvation. Note,

Thirdly, That Christ here gives a reason why they believed not, viz. You have seen, and yet believe not; because ye are not given to me of my Father: now it is reasonable to conceive this reason should agree with all his other reasons assigned of their infidelity, which yet are manifestly founded, not on any thing wanting on the part of God, but on something wanting in themselves, that they might do so, viz.

1. That they came not to the light, because their works were evil; and, being so, they hated the light, and would not come to it; (John iii. 19, 20.) that they believed not in him, because he spake the truth, which was distasteful to them, (viii. 45.)

2. Because they had not the word of God abiding in them, nor believed God bearing witness to him, nor Moses speaking of him, (John v. 38. 46.) and so, not being taught of God, they would not learn.

3. Because they were not of God; Ye therefore do not hear his word, because ye are not of God, (John viii. 47.) and because they had not the love of God in them. (John v. 40. 42.)

4. Because they preferred the praise of men before the praise of God, not seeking that glory which cometh of God only. (John v. 44.)

5. Because they were not of his sheep, i. e. not docile nor disposed to hear his voice; ye therefore believe not, because ye are not of my sheep. (John x. 26.)

6. Because, through the perverseness of their hearts, they could not hear his word; Why do you not know my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word: (John viii. 43.) and this they could not do, because they were of their father the devil, and his works they would do. And therefore,

Fourthly, To be given of the Father, is, (1.) to be convinced by the miracles which God had wrought by him, to testify the truth of his mission, and thereby to set his seal unto him, that he was the Messiah and the Son of God, and to be willing, upon these testimonies, to own him as such; laying aside all those unreasonable prejudices and carnal affections which obstructed their coming to him. This appears (1.) from the description which Christ gives of those whom God had given him, viz. they were thine, and thou gavest them to me; and they know that I came from thee, and they have believed that thou hast sent me: (John xvii. 6. 8.) for this is spoken of Christ's disciples, of whom it is so often said, they saw his miracles, and believed on him; (John ii. 11.) by them they therefore knew that he came forth from God, and so are said to be given him of God, who, by these miracles, convinced them of this truth, and so they believed that he had sent him. (2.) This appears farther from these words, There are some of you that believe not; for Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not (sincerely), and saith, Therefore I said to you, No man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father: (ver. 64, 65.) for these men had not laid aside their prejudices against his words; they could not believe that he came down from heaven who was the son of Joseph; (ver. 42.) they murmured at his words, and were scandalized; (ver. 61.) they went away from him, and walked no more after him; and therefore, through their prejudices against his person and his doctrine, they could not prevail with themselves to think that he came forth from God; and, upon that account, Christ here informs us that he said, No man can come unto me, unless it were given him of the Father. And (3.) this we may learn from a like expression in the book of Deuteronomy, xxix. 2—4. Ye have seen all the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, the great temptations, signs, and miracles which there he wrought; yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day, ולא, and the Lord hath not given, or rather, hath not the Lord given you? ולא being put for הלא. So ולא ילך shall not Ammon go with us? 2 Sam. xiii. 26. לא לבי הלך went not my heart with thee? 2 Kings v. 26. so also Job ii. 10. Mal. ii. 15. For here it is manifest, that the way of God's giving them a heart to perceive, was by working those signs and miracles before their eyes which might induce them so to do; and yet, for want of this improvement of them to this end, it is admired that the Lord hath not given them this heart, or is imputed as their great fault, that he had not given it; i. e. that, after all he had done to produce it in them, they had it not.

(2.) Christ being sent by God the Father, that the world through him might be saved; and he having sent his Son to propound to them that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested to us by his Son, and to propose to us the terms on which this life might be obtained (as Christ doth throughout this chapter); he is said to have given us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son, 1 John v. 11. and that this is his record concerning him, and here, that the Father had given him the true bread from heaven, that giveth life unto the world, (ver. 32, 33.) And they, who were so convinced of the truth of this promise by our Saviour's miracles, as to expect to receive it by faith in him, and obedience to his doctrine, and so affected with this promise of eternal life, as to esteem it above all other things, and so were willing to apply themselves to the performance of those duties which he required to obtain it, and to reject and quit those things which might obstruct them in the prosecution of it, are said to be given to him of the Father; because he wrought those miracles which gave them this conviction; on which account, when Peter had confessed that he was the Christ, Christ answered, Flesh and blood hath not revealed this to thee, but my Father which is in heaven, Matt. xvi. 17. (see the note there); and because he gave this promise of eternal life, and sent his Son to reveal it to the world; and therefore when he saith to his apostles, whom the Father hath given him, Will ye also go away? Simon Peter answers, ver. 68, 69. Lord, to whom should we go, seeing thou hast the words of eternal life? and we have believed, and know, that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Now it is evident, that all who have this strong conviction, that our Saviour came from God, and this concernment for that eternal life he promised, as the encouragement to come to him, will believe on him; because such persons can neither want assurance that they ought to do so, nor the most prevalent engagements so to do, as having that eternal life before their eyes, which they more value than all worldly things, and for which they are willing and prepared to quit all their lower interests.

[15] Ver. 39. But I will raise it up at the last day.] This being said of all who are given to Christ by the Father, it follows, that none of them shall rise till that day; and it being here said, they are to be raised to receive eternal life, which life is only to be enjoyed in the heavens, it follows, that none of them are to be raised to reign with Christ a thousand years.

[16] Ver. 40. It is the will of him that sent me, that every one that believeth in me should not perish, but have everlasting life.] Some hence infer, that every true believer must persevere unto the end, since otherwise he cannot have this life eternal.

But to this, and to all other promises and declarations of a like nature, which engage, that God will give eternal life to the believer, I answer, that nothing is more evident, than that they can only be understood of such a faith as doth endure to the end, (Matt. xxiv. 13.) and so includeth perseverance in it: for either these promises are made to temporary believers, and so to those which after fall away, which is contrary to the tenor of the Scripture, and makes the promises of eternal life, and the threats of perdition, belong to the same persons, viz. to them who, having lived by faith, draw back; (Heb. x. 38, 39.) or else they depend on this condition, that such men do continue in the faith, according to those express words, He hath reconciled us to God, if we continue in the faith rooted and grounded, and be not drawn away from the hope of the gospel, Col. i. 21, 22. We are Christ's household, if we hold our confidence and rejoicing of hope firm to the end, Heb. iii. 6. and ver. 14. We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence firm to the end; and then it is demonstratively certain, that perseverance is included in them, and made the condition on which the blessing promised doth depend, and therefore cannot be proved from them.

[17] Ver. 44. No man can come unto me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him.] For explication of these words, consider,

First, That to be drawn of God, cannot import our being moved by any inward and irresistible impressions from God, to believe in him: for then no man could come to Christ without these irresistible impressions; and therefore none could be blameworthy for not believing in him, because they could not do it without powerful impression, which God was not pleased to afford them; nor could it be praiseworthy to believe in him, because they only did so, when they could not choose but do it, as being acted in so doing by a force, which they could not resist. And therefore,

Secondly, To be drawn of God, can only signify to be persuaded and prevailed on so to do, by the consideration of those mighty works, which God had done, to testify, that Christ was the true Messiah, and that Prophet which he had sent into the world; to these Christ still appeals, as Divine testimonies concerning him, by saying, The works which my Father hath given me to do, bear witness of me, x. 25. by the consideration of them he persuades others to believe in him, saying, Believe in me for my works' sake, John xiv. 11. and upon this account he represents the unbelieving Jews as inexcusable, that he had done those works among them which never man did, xv. 22. 24. and all those works are said to be recorded, that men might believe that Jesus is the Son of God; and, believing, might have life through his name, xx. 31. all which must convince us, that these things were sufficient to draw men to Christ; whence he himself speaks thus, When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me, xii. 32. viz. by the power of my resurrection, by which I shall so fully be demonstrated to be the Son of God, by the mission of the Holy Ghost, to confirm my resurrection, and the truth of my doctrine by signs and wonders, and powerful distributions of the Holy Ghost, as to be sufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me; though the event shewed, that all men were not actually drawn to him by these means. Or,

Thirdly, To be moved by the great promise of eternal life to do it; for wheresoever there is any lively sense of that inestimable blessing, it strongly must engage us to use the means by which we may obtain it, and so to come to Christ, if from him only this blessing is to be expected; and this is a familiar sense of the word draw, both in the Scripture and in other writings: thus God is said to draw them to him by the cords of love, Hos. xi. 4. who yet were bent to backsliding from him, ver. 7. and men are said to be drawn away by their own lusts, Jam. i. 14. For, saith the poet, "Trahit sua quemque voluptas," Every man's pleasure draws him to a compliance with it. Thus say the Jews,* The master draws the scholar by his parables, i. e. incites him to learn; and a man is driven by wine, and by his pleasures; and it is a celebrated saying among them, that a precept draws a precept, and a transgression draws on a transgression, i. e. one sin disposeth us to commit another, and obedience to one precept to obey another: and that we are only said to be drawn by the Father to Christ, viz. by his miracles and Divine instructions, is evident from the words following: as the proof of this, it is written, They shall all be taught of God; he therefore, who hath heard of the Father, i. e. perceived him speaking and doing his mighty works by me, cometh to me. Without this drawing none can come to Christ; for none but God can give this promise of eternal life to encourage us to do so, and no power but that of God can work those miracles, which proved his commission from God; and hence Christ owns, that if he had not done those miracles among them, they had had no sin of infidelity, John xv. 22. 24.

[18] Ver. 45. It is written, ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, in the prophets.] viz. Expressly, Isa. liv. 13. and in effect, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. in these words, I will put my law in their hearts, and write it in their inward parts, and they shall not teach every man his neighbour, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall know me from the greatest unto the least.

They shall all be taught of God.] Isa. liv. 13. Thus we are taught by his example; thus we are θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God to love one another: (2.) by his Spirit, that unction, which taught the primitive Christians all things needful to be known, 1 John. ii. 27.: (3.) by his word; so, saith Clemens of Alexandria, † are we taught of God: and, lastly, by his Son, delivering the mind of God to us as his prophet, and so giving us the knowledge of what he requires us to believe and do, in order to salvation; and, secondly, confirming the truth of what he thus delivered in his name, by miracles done by the finger of God, and so setting his seal to the doctrine taught. And of his teaching by God are these words to be understood; (1.) because the prophet Isaiah is there speaking of the setting up the kingdom of Christ, and of the teaching then promised. (2.) Thus is it that the Father draws men to Christ, of which these words are made the proof: see note on ver. 37. (3.) From the argument following, ver. 46. That they were not to expect to be taught immediately by the Father, as a scholar is taught by his master, seeing him present, and hearing him speak, but only by him that had seen the Father, and so spake, and did those things, which he had seen of the Father: (John iii. 12. viii. 28. xii. 50.) so that he who had seen him, had seen the Father, (xiii. 9. 30.) It is also evident from these words, it is written, They shall all be taught of God, that this teaching must be common to all the Jews; but that is not true of God's internal and effectual teaching, but only of Christ's outward teaching. (4.) From Christ's inference πᾶς οὖν, every man therefore, it follows, 1. that to be taught of God, is not inwardly to be taught by him, but only by hearing the doctrine of his Son: 2. that not all that are thus taught will come to Christ, but they only who have learnt of him.

[19] Ver. 51. And the bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give, &c.] Up to the death, to obtain that eternal life, which was lost by the sin of Adam. Hence it is evident, that Christ here speaks of faith in him, as suffering and shedding his blood for mankind, he being our propitiation only through faith in his blood, Rom. iii. 25. and we being reconciled to God by his death, Rom. v. 9, 10. (See here Examen Millii.)

[20] Ver. 53, 54. Except ye eat the flesh, and drink the blood of the Son of man, you have no life in you.] To prove that Christ, in this chapter, speaks not of oral and sacramental eating, but only of doing this spiritually by faith in his blood, I premise,

First, That nothing was more common among the eastern nations than to use the metaphor of eating and drinking, when they speak not of corporeal meat or drink, which was to go into the mouth, but only of spiritual, to be fed on by the soul, as hath been fully proved already, note on ver. 27. 31, 32. Thus Clemens of Alexandria, discoursing upon that passage of St. Paul to the Corinthians, I have fed you with milk, and not with strong meat, saith, that milk is the rudiments of faith, or the doctrine of the catechism, the first nourishment of the soul; strong meat a contemplation, which makes us to discern the Divine power and essence; σάρκες αὗται καὶ αἷμα τοῦ λόγου, these contemplations are the flesh and blood of the Word; βρῶσις γὰρ καὶ πόσις τοῦ θείου λόγου ἡ γνῶσίς ἐστι τῆς θείας οὐσίας, the meat and drink of the Divine Word, is the knowledge of the Divine essence; and Irenæus saith, that Christ taught the weak τρώγειν καὶ πίνειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, to eat and drink the Divine Logos, lib. iv. cap. 74.

Secondly, That it is the same thing in this chapter, to eat of the bread which came down from heaven, and to believe in Christ, breaking the bread of life to us by his doctrine, and offering himself a sacrifice and oblation for us to obtain that life; for when he had exhorted them to labour for the meat that did not perish, he tells them, ver. 29. That this was to believe on him whom God had sent. When he had told them, ver. 35. that he was the bread from heaven, he immediately adds, He that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth in me shall never thirst. Having said, that he was the bread which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world, ver. 33. he confirms this expression, ver. 40. by these words, This is the will of my Father, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, should have eternal life. And again, ver. 47, 48. Ve- rily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life: I am that bread of life.

Thirdly, Observe that, from these metaphors, our Lord proceeds to that contained in these words objected by the Roman doctors, ver. 51. The bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world; that is, it is my body, which I will give up unto death, that by it the world may have life. The Jews, taking these words in a gross sense, as if our Lord had promised to give his real flesh to be swallowed down their throats, and eaten by them, as they had eaten bread the day before, and as their forefathers had eaten manna in the wilderness, exclaiming against him, as promising a thing absurd, inhuman, and impossible, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat? to this our Saviour answers, ver. 53. in words still more expressive of his violent and bloody death for the salvation of mankind, viz. Except you eat my flesh, and drink my blood, &c. Now these words are by some conceived to import thus much: Unless you, with the mouth of your bodies, do eat my real and corporeal flesh, and drink my proper blood, you cannot have eternal life. Against this sense I argue,

First, from ver. 51. thus, The flesh, which Christ here promised to give for the life of the world, is the same with the bread that cometh down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever, saith Christ; and the bread which I will give is my flesh, that I will give for the life of the world. And again, having said, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; (ver. 54.) and he that eateth me, shall live by me; (ver. 57.) he adds immediately, This is the bread which came down from heaven; and he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. Now our Lord hath expressly taught us, that the eating of this bread of life imported only our believing in him, (ver. 35.) as hath already been made evident from our second observation; therefore, the eating of his flesh doth certainly import the same spiritual action. Moreover, we are only to eat of Christ's flesh, in that import of the phrase in which we are to eat of Christ as bread: for, as Christ saith, he will give flesh to eat; so doth he say, he will give bread to eat; as he saith, he that eateth my flesh shall live for ever; so he saith, he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever; but none could say, that Christ was, or could properly be, bread, or eaten by the mouth as such; wherefore he, being only figuratively and spiritually bread, could only figuratively and spiritually be to be eaten as such. If therefore in the same importance only we are to eat his flesh, that also is to be eaten in a spiritual sense.

Secondly, From these words, ver. 52. How can this man give us his flesh to eat? it is evident the Jews conceived, that our Lord promised to give them his proper flesh to eat, and swallow down their throats, as they had done the bread with which he fed them; and it on all hands is agreed, that they mistook the sense of Christ's words, and fancied such a meaning of them as he did not intend; but had our Lord intended the corporeal eating of his flesh, and drinking of his blood, it is certain that it must be swallowed down their throats as properly as the bread which they had eaten; and therefore no man, who maintaineth this corporeal eating of Christ's flesh to be intended here, can, suitably to his opinion, say, that they imposed a false sense upon our Saviour's words, since, from this sense, it doth inevitably follow, that Christ intended that his human flesh should properly be eaten; and their words signify no more. Add to this one consideration, which shews what apprehensions the fathers of the three first centuries had of this eating of the flesh of Christ, viz. when it was objected to them by the heathens, that they did eat man's flesh; they constantly, in their apologies, reject the accusation as the vilest calumny, and as a most abominable thing, sufficient to discover the author of such an accusation must be some wicked demon. See this fully proved, note on Matt. xxvi. 26.

Thirdly, The fifty-third verse affords two farther arguments in refutation of the corporeal sense of these expressions: (1.) That it follows plainly from it, that the thief upon the cross, and all the pious and believing Jews who heard these words, and died before our Saviour's passion, must, of necessity, be damned: for our Lord saith, with an asseveration, to them, Except you eat the flesh, &c. Now this was said at the Passover then instant, ver. 4. and so at least above a year before our Saviour's passion, and so before the institution of that sacrament, in which alone his flesh could be corporeally eaten; and therefore, had it been intended of corporeal and sacramental eating, it was impossible that any person of those hearers could be saved, who died in the ensuing year. (2). These words, interpreted in the corporeal sense, do plainly and inevitably infer, that they, who do deprive the laity, all their whole lives, of drinking of this blood, expose them to inevitable damnation; Christ having said, Except you drink the blood of the Son of man, you have no life in you. For though eating and drinking, being taken figuratively, do signify the same thing, viz. believing in a crucified Saviour, yet, being taken properly, they cannot be reputed the same thing. For albeit they who receive the body only, may be well said to eat the flesh of Christ, because they take something by way of meat into their mouths; yet cannot they be said to drink his blood, if they take nothing into their mouths by way of drink. Since therefore eating and drinking are two distinct actions, so that he cannot properly be said to drink who only eats; since the privation of life is here connected with not drinking of Christ's blood, as much as with not eating of his flesh, according to the corporeal interpretation of these words; he must certainly be deprived of the life here promised, who doth not receive the cup; because he is deprived of drinking of the blood of Christ.

Fourthly, from ver. 54. 56. the argument runs thus: Whosoever eateth the flesh and drinketh the blood of Christ, in the sense here spoken of, abideth in Christ, and Christ in him; and therefore is a true and living member of Christ's body, and he shall have eternal life, and be partaker of a happy resurrection; and so no person can either be wicked here, or deprived of everlasting life hereafter, who, in this sense here mentioned, eats of the flesh and drinketh of the blood of Christ. Now this is very true, of eating spiritually, and by faith, as it imports believing in Christ. For this (saith Christ) is the will of him that sent me, that every one who believeth on the Son may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day; but then of sacramental eating of Christ's flesh, it is as false; for this was eaten by a Judas, and continually is eaten by millions, who are both wicked here, and will be damned hereafter: this therefore cannot be the import of our Saviour's words. And here observe, (1.) that our Lord speaks in the general, Whosoever eats. (2.) That he speaks thus, not by way of promise, which might be conditional, but by way of plain assertion, and declaration of a thing most certain. And, (3.) that the text shews the eating mentioned here can never be performed unprofitably, no, not without the greatest benefit; for it is opposed to eating manna in the wilderness on this account, that whereas that only gave a temporal life, this would assuredly confer eternal; whereas that was not able to preserve from temporal, this would preserve from death eternal.

Fifthly, Moreover, ver. 61. and 62. our Lord speaks thus: Doth this offend you? What if you should see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? i. e. Are you offended that I thus speak of giving you my flesh to eat? Do you look on this expression now as so absurd and unintelligible? What then will you think of it, when this body shall be removed hence to heaven? i. e. How will you then be scandalized, and think it still more difficult, and more impossible to apprehend, how you shall eat my flesh, and drink my blood, provided you go on to understand my words in the gross carnal sense? For Athanasius* saith well, that Christ here mentioneth his ascent into heaven, ἵνα τῆς σωματικῆς ἐννοίας αὐτοὺς ἀφελκύσῃ, that he might divert them from the corporeal sense; and therefore argued thus: "Seeing it will be then impossible, that you should corporeally eat my flesh, when it is so far removed from you, by this you may discern I speak of a spiritual eating of it." Whence by the way we learn, that Christ thought his ascension into heaven a sufficient demonstration to the Jews, that his flesh could not be eaten upon earth; and why it should not be so to the Christians, I am yet to learn.

Sixthly, The sixty-third verse affords us a more plain and certain exposition of our Saviour's meaning in the precedent words; for thus it runs: It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life: for the import of these words is to this effect: To that eating and drinking, of which, in this discourse, I have still spoken, I have annexed the promise of life, saying expressly, He that eateth me, shall live by me; he shall by me be quickened, i. e. be raised up to life eternal; and that he abideth in me by that Spirit, which quickeneth our mortal bodies, Rom. viii. 11. so that my words are spirit and life, as being the means of obtaining the Spirit, and by him this life; to which effects my flesh, if you could eat it, would profit you nothing. Had our Lord said, It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; therefore the flesh, which I will give, shall be joined to my Divinity, and, by the virtue of it, give you life, he had said somewhat like the sense which others put upon this text; but saying only, The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit; we cannot doubt but he speaks of eating and of drinking his flesh and blood spiritually.

Seventhly, Our Saviour having said to the twelve, Will ye also go away? St. Peter answers, To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we believe that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God. Where (1.) observe, that Peter here doth, as it were, repeat the words of Christ: My words are life, saith Christ; Thou hast the words of life eternal, saith St. Peter; whereas, if he had understood our Saviour to have spoken here of oral manducation, his answer would, in all probability, have been to this effect: Whatsoever appearance there may be of inhumanity, absurdness, and impossibility, of eating thy natural flesh, and drinking of thy blood; yet we believe it, because thou hast said it, who art truth itself, and who art able to make good thy words. We therefore hearing nothing of this tendency from him, may conclude, that he knew nothing of this import of them. And (2.) observe, that he thought it sufficient to say, We believe thou art the Christ; which, if our Lord spake here of oral manducation, was nothing to the purpose; but if he only spake of spiritually eating of him, was the very thing, which was designed by our Lord in this discourse, and which he spake of in those words, which so much offended others. We therefore conclude, with Clemens of Alexandria,* that when our Lord said, Eat my flesh, and drink my blood, he allegorically meant the drinking of faith and of the promises; and that our Lord is, by way of allegory to those that believe in him, meat, and flesh, and nourishment, and bread, and blood: with Tertullian,† that our Lord all along urged his intent by allegory, calling his word flesh, as being to be hungered after, that we might have life; "auditu devorandus, ruminandus intellectu, et fide digerendus;" to be devoured by the ear, ruminated upon by the mind, and by faith digested: with Origen,‡ that we are said to drink his blood, when we receive his words, in which life consists; that his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed, because he feedeth all mankind with the flesh and blood of his word, as with pure meat and drink: with Eusebius,§ that his words and doctrines are flesh and blood: with Athanasius,‖ that the words which Christ spake were not carnal, but spiritual; for how could his body have sufficed for meat, that it should be made the food of the whole world? with St. Austin,¶ "utquid paras dentes et ventrem? crede, et manducasti; credere enim in eum, hoc est manducare panem vivum:" why providest thou teeth and a belly? believe, and thou hast eaten; for to believe in him, this is to eat the living bread: add, lastly, with Jerome, in the truest sense, the body and blood of Christ is the word and doctrine of the Scripture; "caro Christi et sanguis ejus in auribus nostris infunditur," the flesh and blood of Christ is poured into our ears. We say, in the language of Origen,†† "Si filii estis ecclesiæ,—agnoscite, quia figuræ sunt;—se enim secundum literam sequaris," &c. If ye are the sons of the church, own these things to be figures; for if you follow the letter, this very saying, Except you eat the flesh, is a killing letter: in the words of Eusebius,* pronounced in the name of Christ, Do not think that I speak of that flesh with which I am compassed, as if you must eat of that; neither imagine, that I command you to drink of my sensible and bodily blood; but understand well, that the words that I have spoken to you, they are spirit and life. For, as St. Austin† saith, touching the exposition of Scripture phrases, If the saying be preceptive, either forbidding a wicked action, or commanding that which is good, it is no figurative speech; but if it seems to command any wickedness, or to forbid what is profitable and good, it is figurative. This saying, Except ye eat, &c. seems to command a wicked thing; it is therefore a figure, enjoining to communicate in the passion of our Lord, and sweetly and profitably remember, that his flesh was wounded and crucified for us.

[21] Ver. 55. For my flesh ἀληθῶς ἐστι βρῶσις, is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.] From what hath been said, note on ver. 53. it appears this cannot be meant of eating and drinking corporeally the flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus in the holy sacrament; it remains, therefore, that they must here be styled, truly meat and drink, in the spiritual sense; because the eating of this flesh by faith in his salutary passion, doth nourish the soul to life eternal; and the drinking of this blood by faith in the blood of Christ, shed for the remission of our sins, doth so refresh the person thirsting after righteousness, that, being justified by faith in his blood, and having the Spirit promised to all believers, conveyed to him as a fountain of living waters, he shall thirst no more. (John iv. 14. vii. 38, 39.) Thus, in the Scripture language, a thing is said to be that ἀληθῶς, truly which it is only spiritually, or by way of allegory, or reference to some effects, which it performeth answerable to some natural effects performed by that, which it is said truly and indeed to be: so our heavenly treasure is called τὸ ἀληθινὸν, the true riches, as making us rich towards God, and being a treasure of spiritual wealth, never to be taken from us. (Luke xvi. 11.) Thus Christ is styled τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν, the true light, John i. 9. because his doctrine was that to the understanding, which light is to the eye, directing us in the way of life; he also is styled ἄμπελος ἀληθινὴ, the true vine, John xv. 1. as being one who did more certainly refresh the thirsty soul, and fill it with spiritual joy, than will the fruit of the vine refresh the thirsty body, and rejoice the heart: thus heaven is called ἡ σκηνὴ ἡ ἀληθινὴ, the true tabernacle, Heb. viii. 2. and Christ here saith of himself, ver. 32. I am ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ἀληθινὸς, the true bread, which came down from heaven; i. e. more nourishing and strengthening to the soul of the believer, than bread can be to the body. (See Examen Millii.)

[22] Ver. 57. And I live by the Father.] How, saith Stegmannus, can he be God, who lives by the benefit of another? I answer, even as he can have life in himself, (v. 26.) by the life of the Father communicated to him with his essence.

Ver. 58. and 59. See Examen Millii.

[23] Ver. 62. What if you see the Son of man ascending where he was before?] It is certain, saith Stegmannus, this is spoken of the Son of man, and so not of a person, who is God. But I deny the consequence: it being indeed spoken of him, who was the Son of man; but not as he was so only, but as being also the Son of God, his only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, John i. 18.

Obj. But then, why is it said, Where he was before, as of a thing past, not where he always was?

Ans. 1. As God the Father is often said in Scripture to descend upon the earth, see note on ver. 33. and afterward to go up and ascend again to his place, Gen. xviii. 33. Hos. v. 15. that is, to the place where he was before; so, what reason can be given, why the same may not be said of the Divine Word?

Ans. 2. I add, that, according to our hypothesis, he may be properly said to ascend where he was before, who, in his Divine glory, used to appear from heaven to the patriarchs; and, when he became man, divested himself of that glory, and took upon him the form of a servant, because he after reassumed and appeared in that glory, which he had with the Father before the world was, John xvii. 5.

[24] Ver. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth: Ver. 64. Thou hast the words of eternal life.] See note on ver. 53.

[25] Ver. 65. Therefore said I to you, No man can come to me, except it be given him of my Father.] See the note on ver. 37.

[26] Ver. 70. Οὐκ ἐξελεξάμην, &c. Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?] Hence it appears, saith Theophylact, that ἡ ἐκλογὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ βιάζεται τὴν προαίρεσιν ἡμῶν, God's election lays no force upon the will of man, but leaves him ἐθελοθρέπτον ζῶον, one that may turn to good or evil, as he will.

* Ubi supra. † De Doctrinâ Christianâ, lib. iii. cap. 16.

CHAP. VII.

1. AFTER these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he [1] would not walk in Jewry, because (the rage of the chief priests and principal men of) the Jews (was such, that they) sought to kill him.

2. Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles (kept in remembrance of their living in tents forty years in the wilderness) was at hand.

3. His brethren therefore said to him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that [2] thy disciples (there) also may see the works that thou doest.

4. For there is no man who doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly: if thou (canst) do these things (in truth at any time and in any place) shew thyself to the (great men of the) world (the Sanhedrin, and the pharisees and rulers there, that they may be convinced of the truth. And this they said, being desirous that his miracles might be tried by them, hoping they would find out the cheat of them).

5. For neither did [3] his brethren believe in him, (that he did these things in truth, and for a good end, but for vain-glory, ver. 4.)

6. Then Jesus said to them, My time is not yet come (to go up thither, ver. 8.) but your time is always ready (to go thither without molestation from any body there.

7. For) the world cannot hate you (who live in conformity to the manners of it); but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

8. [4] Go ye up to this feast: I go not up yet to this feast; for my (fit) time (of going up) is not yet full come.

9. (And) when he had said these words to them, he abode still in Galilee.

10. But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up to the feast, (in obedience to the Divine command; but this he did) not openly (and with company), but as it were in secret, (as privately as he could, to avoid the design of them that sought to kill him, ver. 19.)

11. Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12. And there was much murmuring (i. e. private discourse) among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people (applying himself still to them, and not to the wise and great ones).

13. Howbeit no man (i. e. none of his favourers) spake openly of him (as of the Christ) for fear of the Jews, (who had decreed, that if any man should confess that he was the Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue, ix. 22.)

14. Now about the [5] midst of the feast (when, the number of the sacrifices lessening, the people were more at leisure to hear), Jesus went up into the temple, and taught.

15. And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters (how comes he to be so skilful in the knowledge of the Scriptures), having never learned (in the academies, or from the scribes)?

16. Jesus answered them, and said, (Ye need not admire at this, if ye consider that) [6] my doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me: (i. e. I did not frame it of myself, but received it immediately from God.

17. And) if any man will (honestly resolve to) do [7] his will (made known to him), he shall know of the doctrine (which I teach), whether it be of God, or whether I speak (only) of myself.

18. (And by this test you may discern it, for) he that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory (and therefore speaketh not those things which he knows will disgust, and procure hatred to him from men): but he that seeketh (only) his glory that sent him, the same is (a) true (prophet), and no [8] unrighteousness (i. e. falsehood) is in him.

19. (But it is otherwise with you, as being full of hypocrisy and guile, for) did not Moses give you the law (for which you seem so zealous as to be angry with me for a supposed violation of it), and yet (after all this pretended zeal) [9] none of you keepeth the law? Why (else) go ye about to kill me (against the sixth commandment?

20. Some of) the people answered and said, Thou hast a devil (i. e. thou art possessed with a lying spirit): who goeth about to kill thee?

21. Jesus answered and said to them, I have done one work, and ye all [10] marvel, (that I, who profess myself a prophet, should violate the rest of the sabbath by doing such a work on that day.

22. Now) Moses therefore [11] gave to you (the precept of) circumcision, not because it (originally) is of Moses, but of the fathers (from the days of Abraham); and ye (in obedience to the command to circumcise on the eighth day) on the sabbath-day circumcise a man (child, when the eighth day is also the sabbath-day).

23. If (then) a man on the sabbath-day receive circumcision, that the (ritual) law of Moses (requiring it to be still done on the eighth day) should not be broken; are ye (justly) angry at me, because (that the law of charity and mercy, which is superior to and more ancient than that of circumcision, might not be broken by me) I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath-day?

24. [12] Judge not according to the appearance (of violating the sabbath by that action; because it was a work done then), but (consider the goodness of the action, that ye may) judge righteous judgment.

25. Then said some of them of Jerusalem (who knew the designs of the pharisees against him), Is not this he, whom they seek to kill?

26. But, lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing to him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ? (and for this reason have they laid aside that design?

27. Howbeit there lies this plain objection against his being the Messiah, that) we know this man whence he is: but (our tradition saith, that) when [13] Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

28. Then (in answer to this cavil) cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, Ye both [14] know me, and ye know whence I am (i. e. my person, parentage, and country; but yet this should not prejudice you against my being a prophet sent from God): for (and) I am not come of myself, but he that sent me (and hath given sufficient testimony that he did send me) is true, whom ye know (i. e. you own) not (denying to receive his testimony concerning me).

29. But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me (and thus I have an original ye know not of).

30. Then they sought to take him (for assuming to be a teacher sent from God): but no man laid hands on him (God so ordering it), because his hour was not yet come.

31. And many of the people (who had seen his miracles) believed on him, and said (in justification of their faith), When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles (to convince us that he is the Christ) than these that this man hath done (to prove himself so to be)?

32. The pharisees heard that the people murmured (i. e. said privately) such things concerning him; and (therefore) the pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take him.

33. Then said Jesus (to them that were sent, Ye need not trouble yourselves to take me, for) yet (but) a little while am I with you, and then I go (again) to him that sent me.

34. And (then) [15] ye shall seek me (in your distress, Luke xvii. 22. see viii. 21.) and shall not find me: and where I (then) am, thither ye cannot come.

35. Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go, that we shall not (be able to) find him? will he go to [16] the dispersed among the gentiles, and teach the gentiles?

36. What manner of saying is this (what other meaning can he have in) that he said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

37. [17] In the last day, that great day of the feast (on which they went with great solemnity and joy, to draw water from the fountain of Siloam, to bring it to the temple, singing these words of Isaiah, With joy shall they draw water from the wells of salvation, and expecting an afflatus of the Holy Ghost), Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst (for spiritual waters), let him (not go to Siloam, but) come to me, and drink.

38. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, (Isa. xxxii. 1, 2. xliv. 3. Ezek. xxxvi. 27. so shall it be with him, for) out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters, (springing up to eternal life, John iv. 14.)

39. (But this (τοῦτο δὲ, and this) he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe in him should (after his ascension) receive: for the (effusion of the) [18] Holy Ghost was not yet (given); because that Jesus (who was to send him from the Father) was not yet glorified.)

40. Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is [19] the Prophet (of whom Moses foretold, Deut. xviii. 18.)

41. Others said, This is the Christ (the king Messias, of whom Esaias said, xlii. 1. I will put my Spirit upon him). But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42. Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Beth-lehem, where David was?

43. So there was a division among the people because of him.

44. And some of them (that were sent for that purpose) would have taken him; but (others of them, who were much affected with his doctrine, not consenting) no man laid hands on him.

45. Then came the officers to the chief priests and pharisees; and they said to them, Why have ye not brought him?

46. The officers answered, [20] Never man spake like this man: (for he told us what we came about as soon as we came to him, and discoursed so heavenly, and with such authority, that we durst not lay violent hands upon him.)

47. Then answered them the pharisees, Are ye also deceived (by him)?

48. [21] Have any of the rulers or of the pharisees (who understand the law, and are to judge for you in matters of religion) believed on him?

49. But this people, that know not the law, are accursed.

50. Nicodemus saith to them, he that came to Jesus by night, being one of them, (i. e. of the great council, iii. 1.)

51. Doth our law (permit us to) judge (and condemn) any man before it hear him (making his defence), and know what he doeth (worthy of condemnation)?

52. They answered and said to them, Art thou also (an abettor) of (those of) Galilee (as by thy actions thou seemest to be)? Search, and look: for (by so doing thou wilt find, that) [22] out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

53. And (when they had said this they dissolved the assembly, and) every man went to his own house.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 1. HE would not walk in Judea, because the Jews sought to kill him.] His time being not yet come, he parted thence, instructing us, by his example, not to irritate men, or run into danger without necessity, upon presumption of Divine protection; but that we are to use all lawful means, which God hath put into our hands, to avoid them. Only note, that by departing from Judea into Galilee, he declined not the end of his coming into the world; because in Galilee his doctrine and miracles found more faith than in Judea, so that he chose to be most there, where his doctrine was like to do most good. Note also, that to walk, when it relates to places or persons, signifies to tarry there or with them for a time; as his disciples walked no more with him, John vi. 66. (see xi. 54.) when it relates to things or actions, it signifies to be often doing them, or conversant about them, as to walk after their covetousness, to walk in malice, &c.

[2] Ver. 3. That thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest.] Either that thy disciples in Judea may see the works thou doest in Galilee, or that thy disciples in Galilee going up to the feast, and seeing thee doing the like works before the Sanhedrin, who can best judge of them, may be the more confirmed in the faith: for the Galileans received him, having seen the works that he did at Jerusalem at the feast, (iv. 45.)

[3] Ver. 5. For neither did his brethren believe in him.] i. e. They believed not that he was the Messiah; because they saw not that pomp and outward splendour, which they expected from the Messiah; or imagining, that he sought to be ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, a public person, they conceived that he pretended to do more than indeed he could; as appears from those words, ver. 4. If thou doest these things, shew that thou doest them where the best judges of thy actions are. Yet that afterward they believed, we learn from Acts i. 14. where they are numbered among those who cleaved to the apostles.

[4] Ver. 8. Go ye up to the feast.] You may do this securely at any time; for the pharisees bear no hatred to you, whereas my doctrine, being opposite to their manners and affections, may expose me to their rage; I therefore shall not yet go up. He would go up, in obedience to the Divine command, but he would go as privately as he could, to avoid danger, by human prudence, when there was no necessity of doing it by a miraculous power. Ἐγὼ οὔπω ἀναβαίνω, I go not up yet to this feast. Here Grotius notes, that this particle οὔπω, yet, was not originally in the text; because Porphyry accuses Christ of inconstancy and mutability, saith St. Jerome,* as saying, I go not up to this feast, when afterward he went; and therefore concludes this particle was after added by the Christians, to avoid the force of this objection: but this is to accuse the Christians of adding to and altering the Scriptures, to save the credit of a heathen and professed enemy to Christianity, as if he could not read negligently, or meet with a deficient or corrupt Latin copy. It is certain, that Chrysostom reads, νῦν or οὔπω; so did also the Syriac and Arabic versions, the Alexandrian, and most other manuscripts, and both the words preceding, and the words following, require this reading; Christ saying, ver. 6. My time (of going up) οὔπω πάρεστι, is not yet come; and here, I go not up (yet) unto the feast, for my time οὔπω πεπλήρωται, is not yet come; where he respects not the time of his death, as some imagine, for then he should not have gone up to Jerusalem till the time came that he was to suffer there; whereas we find him at this feast of tabernacles, ver. 10. and at the feast of dedication of the altar, x. 12.: he therefore must there speak of his going up to this feast. (See here Examen Millii.)

feast Jesus went up.] Dr. Pocock informs us, that the days betwixt those which were ordinary and festival were styled dies medii, intermediate days; because some works might be done in them, which were not lawful on their feast-days.

[6] Ver. 16. My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.] If Christ (saith Stegmannus) had any other nature besides the human, according to which he was the prime author of his doctrine, could he have truly said, My doctrine is not mine? Could one, who was the true God, deny that he sought his own glory? Since the true God cannot do otherwise, sure he that thus denies these things, which are so proper to God, cannot be God most high.

Ans. To this some answer, That this indeed cannot properly be said of him, super quem alius non est, which is the distinction put by Justin Martyr and Irenæus betwixt God the Father and the Son, whom they believed to be truly God, viz. that this cannot be said of him, who is the original and fountain of the Deity, and derived his essence from none; but it may be said of him, who is God of God, as deriving his Divine essence from the Father, especially when being in the form of God, he did not covet to appear as God, but took upon him the form of a servant: (see the note on Phil. ii. 6. and upon 1 Cor. viii. 5.) he acting, even when Lord of all things, to the glory of God the Father. (Phil. ii. 11.) For thus he speaks of himself, as having an original, according to which the Jews knew who he was, and whence he was, ver. 28. of this chapter, i. e. saith Stegmannus, of what parents he was according to the flesh; and yet, viii. 14. he saith, Ye know not whence I am, and ver. 19. Ye neither know me nor my Father; that is, saith the same Stegmannus, Ye know not my Divine excellency; and so both, saith he, are true, but in a diverse manner, they knowing him as to his earthly parents, but not as to his Divine excellency and descent from heaven. Why therefore may we not use the like distinction here, viz. that his doctrine was not his (only), and yet was his; that he came not to do his own will, and yet he did it; i. e. he did not do it, as he was man; but yet he did do it, as he was God as well as man? since from this instance it appears, that truly may be ascribed to him in a higher sense, which he removes from himself, when he speaks of himself as acting here on earth. Thus he tells his apostles, he was to be no more in the world, but to leave the world, and go to the Father, and even to go away from them, xvi. 7. 28. xvii. 11. and yet he promiseth to be always with them, Matt. xxviii. 28. and to abide with them for ever, John xiv. 16. 23. (See the note on ver. 28.) But,

Secondly, I answer, that Christ, by saying these and the like words, respects himself as a prophet, sent by his Father into the world. Now the very office of a prophet requires that he should speak nothing of himself, nor deliver his own mind and doctrine, nor seek his own glory; but should speak all things in his name, and do all things for the glory of him, that sent him; and to this may be referred most of those passages of this Gospel, which the Socinians urge against the Deity of Christ, they being spoken by him, not to declare by what power and wisdom he acted, as he was the only-begotten Son of God, but to demonstrate he was no false prophet; that he delivered not a doctrine invented by himself, to get a name and reputation to himself, but only taught that doctrine he had received from his Father, and which tended to advance his glory: for,

First, To speak of himself, in the Scripture phrase, is to speak from his own heart, and private motion and invention, what he had not received from God, as the false prophets did: so Moses saith, Numb. xvi. 28. Hereby shall ye know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these things, and that I do them not מלבי of my own heart, or at my own will, say all the Targums. And Balaam speaks thus, Numb. xxiv. 13. If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot transgress the word of the Lord, to do good or evil, מלבי, ἀφ' ἑμαυτοῦ, of myself; or, as it is xxii. 18. ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ μου, of my own mind; of my own will, saith the Targum; but what the Lord saith, that will I speak. Hence God complains of the false prophets, that they speak ἀπὸ καρδίας αὐτῶν, from their own hearts, and not from the mouth of the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 16. and τὰ θελήματα τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, the deceits of their own hearts, ver. 26. Thus, to speak from himself, here, ver. 17, 18. is opposed to speaking from God; and, viii. 28. it stands opposed to speaking what he was taught by God, in these words, I speak not of myself, but as the Father hath taught me, so I speak; and, xii. 49. I speak not of myself, but as the Father hath given me commandment: see also xiv. 10. When therefore Christ saith, my doctrine is not mine, he speaks not this in respect of his own knowledge, he having in him all the treasures of wisdom, Col. ii. 3. nor in respect of authority, for he styles it his word, his commandment; nor in respect of his will, which was always one with that of his Father's; but he only denies that he spake as a false prophet, saying things of himself without commission from his Father, or running when he had not sent him, as they did, but, as the Baptist saith of him, spake the words of God. Now what reason can be given, why Christ, though having in him all the fulness of the Godhead, might not say, when upon earth, he spake and acted as a prophet sent from God; that he was no false prophet; that he uttered no doctrine of his own invention, nor any thing which he had no commission to speak to them; and that in the delivery of it he sought not his own glory, as the false prophets did?

[7] Ver. 17. If any man will do his will, &c.] That is, if he hath an honest heart, prepared to obey the truth when he is convinced of it, he shall know of the doctrine, i. e. shall have means sufficient to convince him, that it is of God.

[8] Ver. 18. He is true, καὶ ἀδικία ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν, and there is no unrighteousness, i. e. no falsehood, in him.] So ἀδικία signifies; so οἰκονόμος τῆς ἀδικίας is the false steward, Luke xvi. 8. ἀπάτη τῆς ἀδικίας, deceit by falsehood, is opposed to the love of the truth, 2 Thess. ii. 10. (see the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 6.) so that this seems to be the import of these words, He is a true prophet, and no false impostor.

[9] Ver. 19. None of you keep the law.] i. e. None of you, who go about to kill me as a violater of the sabbath, that requiring you not to condemn the innocent. (Exod. xxiii. 7.)

[10] Ver. 21. Καὶ πάντες θαυμάζετε, And ye all wonder.] i. e. Ye do it with anger and offence; ver. 23. παραιτεῖσθε, θροβεῖσθε, Theophylact. So θαυμάζειν signifies, Eccles. v. 8. when thou seest the oppression of the poor, μὴ θαυμάσῃς, be not troubled or offended at the matter: and Ecclus. xi. 21. μὴ θαύμαζε ἐν ἔργοις ἁμαρτωλοῦ, be not offended at the works of sinners. Note also, that the words, διὰ τοῦτο, for this cause, are added to this verse thus, That you may, or so that you will, marvel at this, by Chrysostom and Theophylact. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[11] Ver. 22, 23. Moses gave you circumcision.] i. e. He continued to you that rito which began from Abraham, to whom it was commanded that it should be performed, τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὀγδόῃ, on the eighth day, (Gen. xvii. 14.) though it fell upon the sabbath, and you accordingly perform it on that day, and teach that *circumcision drives out the sabbath, or makes it lawful to perform work on that day, even all things which are necessary to be done for the circumcision of the child; and if this be lawful, by the command of Moses, to be done on that day for the benefit of a child, why may it not be lawful, according to Moses, to do a like work for the benefit of one of riper years?

[12] Ver. 24. Judge not κατ' ὄψιν, according to appearance.] i.e. Absolving them who do these works of circumcision, &c. on the sabbath-day, in observance of a ritual precept, and condemning me, who, by healing with a word on that day, do what is less laborious in observance of the higher precepts of charity and mercy; and then considering, that God will have mercy, and not sacrifice, you will judge righteous judgment. For to exempt Moses from blame for commanding that work to be done on that day, which is more laborious, and less beneficial, out of respect to him; and to condemn me, a greater prophet, for doing with a word what is more beneficial on that day, out of disrespect to me, is manifestly to judge with respect to persons: so Theophylact.

[13] Ver. 27. But when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.] This is doubtless spoken from the vain traditions of their rabbins; who owned, indeed, that their Messiah was to be born at Beth-lehem, but imagined that he was presently to be conveyed thence, and concealed till Elias came to anoint him. That this was an ancient conceit among them, appears not only from the Targum of Jonathan, who, on Micah iv. 8. saith thus, Thou, O Christ, who liest hid for the sins of the children of Sion, to thee shall the kingdom come; but also from the words of Trypho,† If Christ be born, and is any where ἀγνωστός ἐστι, he is unknown, nor hath he any power, till Elias comes to manifest him to the world: and hence Justin Martyr saith, I know your masters say, that Christ is not yet come; and, if he be come, οὐ γινώσκεται ὅς ἐστιν it is not known who he is, (pag. 336. C.)

[14] Ver. 28. Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am.] Here Stegmannus the Socinian notes, that what Christ grants here, he denies, viii. 14. 19. saying, Ye neither know me, nor whence I am, because, in different respects, mentioned note on ver. 16. both are true; when then he argues from those words, I came not from myself, Christ is not God; because God cannot but come from himself: why did he not, from these words infer, in like manner, that Christ had no Divine excellence unknown to the Jews? But he considered not that to come of himself, did only signify to come as a false prophet without commission from God, and delivering in his name a doctrine he received not from him; in which sense, though Christ could not come of himself, yet might he say these things of himself as a prophet here on earth, though he had also in him the fulness of the Godhead.

[15] Ver. 34. Ye shall seek me (in your distress), and shall not find me.] So have I interpreted this passage in the paraphrase, as most commentators do; yet the precedent words, and the words following, seem to require this sense, I go to my Father, and though you should seek me, ye cannot then find me; for you are not fitted to go to heaven where my Father is.

[16] Ver. 35. Will he go εἰς τὴν διασπορὰν Ἑλλήνων, to the dispersed among the gentiles? &c.] It is matter of dispute what is here meant by the dispersion of the gentiles, some understanding, by this phrase, the dispersion of the Jews among the Greeks in Asia and Europe, as the διασπορὰ Πόντου, the dispersion of Pontus and Galatia, 1 Pet. i. 1. is the dispersion of the Jews in those places; because the word dispersion is not thought to agree well with the gentiles, being in their native soil; but yet there seems a necessity of understanding by this phrase, the gentiles dispersed from the time of building the tower of Babel into divers nations: (Gen. x.) for (1.) it is not said, will he go to the dispersion, and teach the Jews? but, will he go, and teach τοὺς Ἕλληνας; the gentiles? which fixes the sense to them. Moreover, this seems here to be said by way of imputation and reproach to Christ; whereas it could be no imputation on him to preach to the Jews to whom he was sent, nor could this seem strange to them; but they thought it unlawful for a Jew to converse with the uncircumcised, (Acts x. 28.) nor could they patiently hear of one sent to preach to the gentiles: (Acts xxii. 22.) nor is the phrase in St. Peter parallel, it being not simply διασπορὰ, the dispersion, but παρεπίδημοι τῆς διασπορᾶς, the strangers of the dispersions of Pontus, &c. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[17] Ver. 37—39. Ἐν τῇ δὲ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ μεγάλῃ τῆς ἑορτῆς. In the last, i. e. the great day of the feast, Jesus cried, If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink.—This said he of the Spirit.] For explication of these verses observe,

First, That Christ here speaks of the internal gifts of the Spirit, viz. those of prophecy, tongues, of wisdom, and the knowledge of all mysteries; for he speaks of those gifts of the Holy Spirit, which were not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified; he therefore speaks of the gifts to be received after his ascension; now they were these internal gifts. (See note on Heb. ii. 4. 1 John v. 6.)

Secondly, Observe, that these gifts of the Spirit are promised under the metaphor of waters flowing out of the body of believers, agreeable to the nature of internal gifts. So Christ saith to the Samaritan woman, The water which I will give, will be a fountain of water springing up to life eternal, iv. 14. so Isa. xxxii. 1, 2. Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment; and man shall be as rivers of water in a dry place: and xliv. 3. I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my Spirit upon thy offspring; that is, saith the Targum, as waters are given to the thirsty earth, so will I give my Spirit upon thy sons: and Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27. I will pour clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; I will put my Spirit בקרב בכם in the midst of you, in your bowels, saith the Targum; whence it is manifest, that they must be mistaken who say the words of Christ are not to be found in the Old Testament, and so interpret his words thus, He that believeth in me (as the Scriptures require him to believe), out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; whereas that phrase, καθὼς εἶπεν ἡ γραφὴ, as the Scripture hath said, is never used to express the manner after which a thing is to be done, but always to confirm the truth and authority of the thing mentioned. (See ver. 42. Rom. iv. 3. ix. 17. x. 11. xi. 2. Gal. iv. 30. James ii. 8.)

Thirdly, Observe that Christ spake thus on the last day of the feast of the tabernacles; now on that day, say the Jews, they used to compass the altar seven times with branches in their hands, saying some prayers, in which they often repeat the words hosannah and hatzileka, Save now, and prosper us; whence that day was styled Hosanna Rabba, or the great day of the feast, as here; and as they add, by the institution of their prophets Haggai and Zechariah, they then fetched water with great joy and pomp from the fountain of Siloam, and brought it to their priests, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of their sacrifice, singing these words of Isaiah, xii. 3. With joy shall ye draw water from the fountain of salvation; that is, saith the Targum, With joy shall ye receive a new doctrine from the elect of the Just; and whilst they were thus singing, they expected the Holy Spirit should fall upon them, as they said he did on the prophet Jonas, whilst he was employed in this very action: they farther say, that there was a place in the court of the women, whither they carried these waters, called Beth-Hassoovah, the place of drawing: because thence they drew the Holy Spirit: and, lastly, Zachary foretells, that all the nations should come to Jerusalem at the feast of tabernacles, xiv. 16. and in that day (saith he) living waters shall go forth from Jerusalem, ver. 8. And hence we learn why that day was called the great day of the feast; and how appositely our Lord spake to them of receiving the Holy Ghost, under the metaphor of living, i. e. fountain-water. (See Tremellius here, and Buxtorf. Lex. p. 2298.)

[18] Ver. 39. Οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα.] Many copies read ἅγιον, and some διδόμενον; but I suspect that neither διδόμενον nor ἅγιον was in the original; (1.) because Origen reads οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα, and no more continually: (see apud Huet. tom. i. p. 299. B. tom. ii. p. 359. D. 398. C. 422. H.) nor is τὸ ἅγιον interpreted by the Syriac or Vulgar. And (2.) the words foregoing are only these, he spake περὶ τοῦ πνεύματος, of the Spirit, and so those answer these, the Spirit is not yet.

[19] Ver. 40. Of a truth this is the Prophet.] In whose time the great effusion of the Spirit, mentioned by Isaias and Joel, is to be expected.

[20] Ver. 46. Never man spake like this man.] Here two things are observable; (1.) the power of Christ's words to change the frame and temper of men's spirits; for these men came with hearts alienated from Christ, and with intention to carry him to the chief priests, but return with a great admiration of his excellency and worth. (2.) Here is observable, the honesty of these men; for they do not return with a pretence that they feared the multitude, and therefore thought it dangerous to apprehend him; but they ingenuously confess, they could not prevail with themselves to apprehend a person, whose discourses were so holy and Divine.

[21] Ver. 48. Have any of the rulers or of the pharisees believed on him?] This is plainly the popish argument, by which they attempt to prove, that private men, laics, and inferior priests, are not to be governed by their own sentiments of Christ's doctrine, but must submit to their general councils, and the major part of their church guides. And that it is as strong in the mouth of the pharisees against Christ being the true Messiah, as it is in the mouth of papists against protestants; see the sermon, at the end of this Gospel, by me upon this text.

[22] Ver. 52. Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.] It is wonderful, that not the multitude only, who had heard the shepherds declaring from an angel, that Christ was born at Beth-lehem, (Luke ii. 15, 16.) and had wondered at the words which had been told them by the shepherds, (ver. 18.) should make this objection; (ver. 41.) but that the chief priests and pharisees, who knew that the wise men went to Beth-lehem to worship him who was born King of the Jews, should insist upon it. This is an instance of the power of prejudice, to shut the eyes against the clearest truth.

CHAP. VIII.

1. JESUS went unto the mount of Olives.

2. And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came to him; and he sat down, and taught them.

3. And (as he was teaching) the scribes and pharisees brought to him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst of (the company),

4. They said to him, Master, this woman (being espoused to a husband) was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5. [1] Now Moses in the law commanded us, (Deut. xxii. 23.) that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6. This they said, tempting him (to say something in derogation from that law of Moses), that they might have to accuse him (of contempt of, or opposition to, the law of Moses). But Jesus (knowing that he was no judge to pass sentence on her, and looking upon them as unworthy of an answer, as coming not to learn of, but to ensnare him) stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, (making as) though he heard them not.

7. So when (ὡς δὲ, but as) they continued asking him, he lifted up himself and said to them, [2] He that is without sin (in this kind) among you (her accusers), let him first cast a stone at her.

8. And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground (that they might slip away without thinking he took notice of them).

9. And they which heard (this), being convicted by their own conscience (and not knowing but that Jesus might discover their guilt if they should execute this sentence on her), went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even to the last: and Jesus was left [3] alone, and the woman standing in the midst (of the people).

10. When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none (of the pharisees) but the woman (only), he said to her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11. She said, No man, Lord. Jesus said to her, Neither do I (who have no commission to pass sentence on thee, take upon me to) condemn thee (to die): go (and in the fear of Divine judgment, repent), and sin no more.

12. Then spake Jesus again (this interruption of his teaching being ended) to them, saying, [4] I am (sent to be) the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in (the ways of) darkness, but (obeying my doctrine) shall have the light of life.

13. The pharisees therefore (then present) said to him, Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record (therefore) is not true (for had God sent thee, he would have given testimony to thee).

14. Jesus answered and said to them, [5] Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true (and certain in itself, though it appear not so to you): for I know whence I came (viz. from the Father), and whither I go (viz. to him again); but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go (and for want of this knowledge cannot believe my record).

15. [6] Ye judge (of me) after the flesh (i. e. according to the meanness of my extraction and appearance, which is all that you know of me); I judge no man (at present; my business being now that of a prophet, not of a judge).

16. And yet if I (at any time do) judge (of you), my judgment is true: for I am not alone (in that judgment), but I and my Father that sent me (so judge; i. e. I do it by that Spirit of the Father in me, which enables me to discern the inward temper of your spirits).

17. And (whereas you object that I bear record of myself, note that) it is also written in your law, (Deut. xvii. 6.) that the testimony of two men is true, (i. e. is valid in causes of the greatest consequence; and this evidence of the truth of my mission ye have: for)

18. [7] I (whom the Father hath sent) am one that bear witness of myself (that he hath sent me), and that Father that sent me (he also) beareth witness of me (by the miracles by which he enables me to confirm my mission).

19. Then said they to him, Where is (he whom thou stylest) thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: if ye had known me (or had a due sense of my spiritual and heavenly doctrine, and the miracles by which it is confirmed), ye should (would) have known my Father also (i. e. would have discerned the Divine power and wisdom shining in them, and would have had the most perfect knowledge of his will).

20. These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and (though they incensed the pharisees, yet) no man laid hands on him (the providence of God restraining them); for (because) his hour was not yet come.

21. Then said Jesus again [8] to them, I (shortly) go my way, and ye shall seek me (in your distress, desiring the Messiah would come to deliver you, Luke xvii. 22.) and (ye) shall die in your sins. (For) whither I go, you cannot come (being not fitted for the celestial mansions; or, you cannot come to fetch me thence).

22. Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, you cannot come. (Sure, if he be alive, and in Judea, we can reach him.)

23. And he said to them, Ye are from beneath (and so can think and speak only of earthly things); I am from above (and so speak of the things above, whither I am going): ye are of this world (and so your thoughts, affections, words, and actions, wholly respect this world); I am not of this world (and so my life and doctrine suit not with your temper, nor have you any right apprehensions of my saying).

24. I said therefore to you (so indisposed to believe and receive my doctrine), That ye shall die in your sins: for [9] if ye believe not that I am he (whom God hath sent into the world as your Messiah, or that Prophet which was to come), ye shall die in your sins.

25. Then said they to him, Who (then) art thou? And Jesus said to them, Even the same that I said to you [10] from the beginning (viz. one sent of God to reveal his will to you).

26. [11] I have many things to say and to judge of you (which ye will not believe): but he that sent me (to speak them) is true; and I speak to the world (only) those things which I have heard of him (and which therefore must be true.

27. But) they understood not that he [12] spake to them of (his being sent from) the Father.

28. Then said Jesus to them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man (upon the cross), [13] then shall ye know (some to conviction, and some to condemnation) that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

29. And (even now) [14] he that sent me is with me: (and) the Father hath not left me alone (or, deserted me); for I do always those things that please him.

30. As he spake these words, many (who had seen the miracles by which he confirmed his sayings, vii. 31.) believed on him.

31. Then said Jesus to those Jews that believed on him, [15] If ye continue in (obedience to) my word, then ye are my disciples indeed;

32. And [16] ye shall (farther) know the truth, and the truth shall make you free (from the yoke of bondage to sin, ver. 34. and corruption).

33. They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and [17] were never in bondage to any man: how (then) sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

34. Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say to you, Whosoever [18] committeth sin is the servant of sin (and shall receive the wages of it, which is death; and from this servitude, faith in me and obedience to my word will set you free).

35. And (as) the servant abideth not in the house for ever (so shall it be with the servants of sin, who are to be cast out into utter darkness): but the Son (i. e. he that is the Son of God) abideth ever.

36. If the Son therefore shall make you free, (by giving you power to become the sons of God, through faith in him, so coheirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 17.) ye shall be free indeed (so as never to lose your freedom).

37. I know that ye are Abraham's seed (according to the flesh); but (now) ye seek to kill me, because [19] my word hath no place in you (finds no reception with you; which shews, you are not the children of Abraham by faith, but of another father).

38. I speak that which I have [20] seen with (i. e. been taught by) my Father: and ye do that which you have seen with (i. e. been taught by) your father.

39. They answered and said to him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith to them, If [21] ye were Abraham's children (in the disposition of your spirit), ye would do the works of Abraham.

40. But now ye seek to kill me, (because I am) a man that have told you the truth, which I have heard from God: this did not Abraham (who was so celebrated for his faith in God's revelation and humanity to his servants).

41. Ye do the deeds of (him who is indeed) your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of [22] fornication (i. e. we are no worshippers of idols); we have one Father, even (the true) God.

42. Jesus saith to them, If God were your Father, you would love me: [23] for I proceeded forth and came from God (into the world); neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

43. Why do ye not understand (this from) my speech? even because [24] ye cannot (endure to) hear my word (as being that which is contrary to your lusts).

44. Ye are of your [25] father the devil (as being like him in temper of mind), and (therefore) the lusts of (this) your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning (of the creation), and abode not in the truth, because there is no (affection to) truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own (i. e. that which is agreeable to him): for he is a [26] liar, and the father (the author and first exemplar) of it (and semblably the like murderous disposition in you, makes you seek to kill me; and the like hatred to truth renders you so averse from receiving my word).

45. And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46. Which of you [27] convinceth me of sin (in saying I speak that doctrine which I have received from him who is true? ver. 14.) and if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47. [28] He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear (i. e. receive) them not, because ye are not of God.

48. Then answered the Jews, and said to him, Say we not well (and with good reason) that thou art a Samaritan (an enemy to our religion), and hast a devil (i. e. a lying spirit in thee, when thou sayest, the children of Abraham are not the children of God, but of the devil)?

49. Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father (by ascribing all I say and do not to myself, but to him), and ye dishonour me (in speaking thus reproachfully of me).

50. And I seek not mine own glory (in what I say or do): there is one that seeketh (my honour) and judgeth (of these reproaches which you cast upon me).

51. Verily, verily, I say to you, If a man keep my saying, he shall [29] never see death (eternal).

52. Then said the Jews to him, Now we know that thou hast a devil (i. e. a lying spirit in thee. For) Abraham is dead, and the prophets (are dead); and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

53. [30] Art thou greater than our father Abraham, who is dead? and the prophets, (who) are (also) dead? whom makest thou thyself?

54. Jesus answered, If I honour myself (by pretending to be greater than indeed I am, or a prophet sent from God when I am not so), my honour is nothing (worth: but) it is my Father that honoureth me (by giving testimony to the truth of what I say; even he) of whom ye say, that he is your God:

55. Yet (though you call him so) ye have not (truly) known him; but I know him: and if I should say, I know him not, I should be a liar like to you: but I know him, and keep his sayings.

56. Your father [31] Abraham rejoiced (vehemently wished) to see my day (the coming of the Messiah): and [32] he saw it (afar off, by the eye of faith), and was glad.

57. Then said the Jews to him, Thou art not yet [33] fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?

58. Jesus said to them, Verily, verily, I say to you, [34] Before Abraham was, I am. (As being the Word which was in the beginning, i. 1.)

59. Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself (in the crowd), and (so) went out of the temple, going through the midst of them (unseen), and so passed by (untouched by his enemies).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 5. NOW Moses in the law commanded, that such should be stoned.] If she who was taken in adultery was a married woman, the law required she should be put to death, (Lev. xx. 10. Deut. xxii. 22.) that is, say all the Jews, that she should be strangled; but if she were only a damsel espoused, the law saith, she shall be stoned, (Deut. xxii. 23.) whence interpreters conclude, this adulteress was only espoused. (Seld. de Ux. Heb. lib. iii. cap. 11.)

[2] Ver. 7. He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone at her.] Christ speaks here, not to the magistrate, who must do his office, though he himself should not be innocent, but to the accusers of this woman before him, to whom it belonged not to pass sentence on her. Moreover, the Jews say, the woman was not to be accused of her husband, nor to be tried by the waters of jealousy, if the husband was guilty of the same crime: Christ therefore might speak thus to him in the first place, Let him who is to accuse her, and to begin the execution, if he be free from the like sin, first cast the stone at her. Nor is it to be wondered, that all her accusers, having heard this, should depart from her, being convinced by their own consciences of like guilt, seeing that was an adulterous generation; (Matt. xii. 39.) and the Jews own, that the adulterous did multiply under the second temple: and St. Paul speaks thus, even to the doctors of the Jews, Thou that sayest, a man shall not commit adultery; dost thou commit adultery? Rom. ii. 22. (see the note there:) and, lastly, Justin Martyr saith, that Trypho, and other Jews, complied with the sentiments of their rabbins, who permitted them τέσσαρας καὶ πέντε ἔχειν γυναῖκας ἕκαστον, to have every one four or five wives; and said, they sinned not, if, after the example of the patriarchs, seeing a beautiful woman, they desired her, and so taught them to commit adultery. (Dial. p. 363, 364.)

[3] Ver. 9. The woman was left alone.] i. e. Without any of her accusers; for she stood still in the midst of the people, saith the text, and the apostles were then with their Lord.

I come now to vindicate the truth and sincerity of this history from the censures of the critics who suspect it. And,

First, It appears from the testimony of St. Jerome,* that this history was found "in multis et Græcis et Latinis codicibus," in many Greek and Latin copies of the Gospel of St. John, and therefore was wanting but in few of them. The Apostolical Constitutions† acknowledge it, saying, that Christ said to the woman brought before him by the elders, Go thy way, οὐδὲ ἐγώ σε κατακρίνω, neither do I condemn thee. The Greek code, cited by Cotelerius, saith, These words are not to be found in some manuscripts, nor in Apollinaris, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ὅλα κεῖνται, but they are entire in the ancient manuscripts; and that all the apostles made mention of them in the constitutions they set forth for the edification of the church. Athanasius speaks plainly of it, saying, ἐνταῦθα τὰ περὶ τῆς κατηγορηθείσης ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ, hither must we refer what is spoken of the woman accused of adultery. St. Ambrose‡ saith, The question and absolution of the woman, which in the Gospel of St. John was brought to Christ, was always famous in the church; and St. Austin speaks often of it, and saith, They are enemies to the faith who take these words out of the books, perhaps fearing lest it give impunity to the women: and Prosper owns it. Moreover, all the versions in the Polyglot own this history; it was found in the sixteen MSS. of Stephanus, in the seventeen MSS. of Beza, save one. Nor is it to be doubted, saith Selden, that it was received from primitive antiquity in the copies of the east, as appears from the Harmonies of Tatian and Ammonius of Alexandria, and the canons thence made. Now this Tatian flourished A. D. 160. that is, sixty years after the death of St. John, and made his Harmonies of the Gospels out of the copies then in use; Ammonius flourished about the year 230. and did the same: and Eusebius of Cæsarea, who flourished about the year 320. made his ten canons out of those Harmonies: whence it may easily be discerned, what is contained in all the Gospels, what in three, what in two, and what in one only: now the number eighty-six in the canon belonging to St. John, contains this history; whence we may certainly conclude, that it was in his Codex.

That it was wanting in some few Greek copies, is not to be wondered, if we consider that the sentence of many of the ancients was so severe, that they would not admit adulterers or adulteresses into the church after the longest penance, and thought τὸν ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ ληφθέντα ὃς ἀποκτεῖναι θέλῃ, κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται, that it was no hurt to kill them: for men of these severe opinions, might be unwilling to admit this history, as St. Austin saith, "quasi permissionem peccandi tribuerit," as thinking it gave a permission to this sin, by saying, Neither do I condemn thee. The history which Papias § mentions of a woman ἐπὶ πολλαῖς ἁμαρτίαις διαβληθείσης ἐπὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, accused of many sins before our Lord, or rather by him, seems not to be this, but rather that of the woman of Samaria, this being accused but of one, she of many such sins, and so no inference can be thence made for or against the truth of this history. (See F. Simon Crit. Hist. lib. i. cap. 13. and Dr. Mills in locum.)

[4] Ver. 12. I am the light of the world.] The Jews said this of the first Adam: (see Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 1321.) this Christ applies to himself, the second Adam.

[5] Ver. 14. Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: because I know whence I came, and whither I go.] i. e. This makes it to me certain, that my testimony of my mission from him is true, though it carry no such force with you, who have no knowledge of this matter, till it shall appear by my mission of the Holy Ghost that I am indeed gone to the Father, (xvi. 10.)

[6] Ver. 15. Ὑμεῖς τὴν σάρκα κρίνετε, &c. You judge according to the flesh; I judge no man.] Κρίνω is here put for κατακρίνω, as John iii. 17. xii. 47. Rom. ii. 1. iii. 4. xiv. 3, 4. 10. 13. 1 Cor. xi. 29. 34. so that the sense runs thus, You pass sentence on and condemn me, according to your carnal tempers; I, whilst I am on earth, pass not the sentence of condemnation on men, for I came not to condemn the world.

[7] Ver. 18. I am one that bear witness of myself.] i. e. I, in whose life you can find no fault; for which of you convinceth me of sin? (ver. 46.) I, whose doctrine tends to promote piety and holiness, and to advance the honour of God; for I do always the things that please him; (ver. 29.) I, who cannot but know the truth, for I know whence I came; (ver. 14.) I testify that I came from God, and am sent by him.

[8] Ver. 21. Then said Jesus to them again.] i. e. To the same persons, though not in the same place, he being gone out of the treasury, (ver. 20.)

[9] Ver. 24. If ye believe not, ye shall die in your sins.] As wanting that faith in me, which can alone procure the pardon of them.

[10] Ver. 25. As I said τὴν ἀρχὴν, from the beginning (or before).] So Gen. xiii. 4. Abraham came to the place of the altar which he had made, τὴν ἀρχὴν, before; xiv. 20. the lean kine were κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν, as before; and, xliii. 18. 20. we came to buy corn, τὴν ἀρχὴν, before: so that I would render the whole thus; "Sum id quod locutus sum vobis prius," I am what I told you before I was: it being very common, in answer to a question, to omit sum id, or somewhat of like import; so σὺ εἶπας, Matt. xxvi. 25. 64. σὺ λέγεις, xxii. 11. i. e. "sum id quod dicis," or, "dicis quod res est," it is as you say, or, I am as you say.

[11] Ver. 26. I have many things to say and to judge of you.] i. e. You say and judge many things of me, which from my words and deeds will appear to be false; but I have many things to say of you, what you are as to your manners, and what you will be through the just judgment of God; which, though you will not believe, will be found true; for he that sent me, to save them, is true.

[12] Ver. 27. They understood not ὅτι τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῖς ἔλεγεν, that he spake to them of the Father.] So vi. 71. ἔλεγε τὸν Ἰούδαν, he spake of Judas: so here, ver. 54. ὃν ὑμεῖς λέγετε ὅτι Θεὸς ὑμῶν ἐστιν, of whom ye say that he is your God; and, ix. 19. ὃν ὑμεῖς λέγετε ὅτι τυφλὸς ἐγεννήθη, who ye say was born blind. So Plato,* ἰατρὸς ὃν ἄρτι ἔλεγες, the physician of whom you spake; and again, σὺ δὲ οἴει με τοὺς

[13] Ver. 28. Then shall ye know I am he.] i. e. Then shall ye have such testimonies, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon my disciples, as shall be sufficient to convince you, and shall prevail upon many to believe that I am the Christ.

[14] Ver. 29. And he that sent me is with me.] Yea, saith Stegmannus, that one God, who is the Father, is in me. And why then doth he deny Christ to be God? It follows, for I do always those things which please him. See here the true way to have God always graciously present with us.

[15] Ver. 31. If you continue in my word, then are you my disciples indeed.] i. e. Such disciples to whom I shall still more make known my doctrine, and on whom I shall confer the life eternal promised to them. (Matt. xxiv. 13. Heb. x. 35, 36. 2 John 8. Rev. ii. 10.)

[16] Ver. 32. And ye shall know the truth.] Christ thought no general council, no infallible judge, necessary to the knowledge of the truth: but promiseth this to him, who was steadfast in the faith, and honestly disposed to do what he knew to be his duty.

[17] Ver. 33. We never were in bondage, οὐδενὶ δεδουλεύκαμεν, we never were servants to any man.] What! Were they not brought out of the land of bondage? Does not Nehemiah confess, Behold, σήμερον ἐσμεν δοῦλοι, We are servants this day? and must they not have been then in bondage to the Egyptians and Babylonians? or, if they spake of their own age, were they not tributaries to the Romans? and did they not still clamour against this tribute, as a sign of servitude? (See note on 1 Tim. vi. 2. and James iv. 3.) Though therefore they were under the Romans, not as servants, but as tributaries, yet, since they thought, saith Josephus,* the payment of this tribute did, δουλείαν ἐπιφέρειν, bring them into servitude, they seem not well consistent with themselves, in saying, they never were servants to any.

[18] Ver. 34. Πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, &c. Every one that committeth sin is the servant of sin.] That ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν is to live and go on in any course of sin, though our reason may condemn and conscience boggle at it, see note on 1 John iii. 9. he that doth this, saith Christ, is a servant of sin, and in bondage to it; for when we thus obey sin in the lustings of it, then doth it κυριεύειν, lord it over us, and we become δοῦλοι εἰς ὑπακοὴν, servants to obey it, (Rom. vi. 14. 16.) and of what a man is overcome, of that he is brought in bondage; and this the very heathens saw,† that the man that was forced to cry out through the law of his members warring against the law of his mind, that he did not the good that he would, but the evil that he would not, had lost his freedom, and was under servitude, because he could not do as he would, but sinned, though he was not willing so to do. (See Examen Millii here.)

Ver. 35. The Son abideth ever.] i. e. I, who am the Son of God, abide for ever, and so am able for ever to confer this freedom from sin of which I speak; for this sense the following words (if the Son therefore make you free, &c.) fairly plead: it being reasonable to conceive that the Son, in this verse, should bear the same sense with the Son in the following words, which give the reason of what is here said.

[19] Ver. 37. Ὁ λόγος ἐμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, My word hath no place in you.] i. e. Your corrupt affections will not permit you to embrace it: so Matt. xix. 11. All men οὐ χωροῦσι, cannot receive this saying. (See note on xxi. 25.)

[20] Ver. 38. I speak what I have seen: Ver. 40. what I have heard of my Father.] i. e. What I have learnt of my Father abiding in me; for we learn by hearing and seeing.

[21] Ver. 39. If ye were Abraham's seed, ye would do the works of Abraham.] Christ owns they were Abraham's seed according to the flesh, (ver. 37.) and therefore only denies them to be so as to their members, or that resemblance with the works of Abraham, which would make God own them as his children, viz. his steady faith, (Rom. iv. 16,) and ready obedience, (Heb. xi. 8. 17.) by which alone they could obtain the blessing of Abraham. (Gal. iii. 9. 14.)

[22] Ver. 41. We are not born ἐκ πορνείας, of fornication; we have one Father, even God.] The prophets representing the idolaters among the Jews as fornicators, and their worshipping other gods as their going a whoring from their own God, (Lev. xvii. 7. Ezek. xxiii. 30. Hos. iv. 12. ix. 1.) when they had brought themselves off from that sin, they represented the idolatry of others under that name: so that their very treatises of idolatry bore the name of זכזוח * treatises of whores, or whoredom; and the book of Wisdom saith, The invention of images was ἀρχὴ τῆς πορνείας, the beginning of whoredom, or idolatry, xiv. 12. Hence Philo† saith, they who introduce many gods differ nothing, τῶν ἐκ τῆς πόρνης ἀποκυθέντων, from those that are born of whoredom, and so are to be driven from the congregation, the law saying, ὁ ἐκ πόρνης, a bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord, but they who have the knowledge of God, υἱοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ προσαγορεύονται δεόντως, are fitly styled the sons of God. And again, The law (saith he‡) expels both the atheist and polytheist from the congregation; the first as barren, the second as born of whoredom, ἄθεος μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἄγονος· πολύθεος δὲ ὁ ἐκ πόρνης. And hence the Jews here, being free from idolatry, say, they were not born of whoredom, but were the children of God, as worshipping one God only, and thinking that on this account God would not impute to them their former sins. (See note on James ii. 19.) But against this, Christ here declares, they only are to be owned as the children of God who do the works of God.

[23] Ver. 42. I proceeded forth, ἐξῆλθον, and came from God] Into the world, being sent by him, and not coming of myself; others are said to be ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, of God, even all that hear his word, (ver. 47.) and the prophets are styled men of God in the Old Testament, and his ministers in the New, 1 Tim. vi. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 17. But though Moses, the prophets, and apostles, were sent of God into the world, it is said of none of them, that they did ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξελθεῖν, come forth from God: this therefore must import something peculiar to Christ: it therefore either must respect the Socinian gloss of Christ's ascent into heaven, to be instructed in his prophetic office, and his descent again from thence; which gloss I have confuted, note on iii. 13. or the Jews' opinion that the soul of the Messiah was created at the beginning of the world, and so came down from heaven to animate his body, which the Socinians, who deny that Christ had any existence before he was born of the Virgin, cannot approve of; or it must import his Divine ἐξελεύσις, or original from the Father, by the communication of his essence, or the union of the Divine Λόγος to the human nature, which we assert. (See the note on xiii. 3.)

[24] Ver. 43. Because οὐ δύνασθε ἀκούειν, ye cannot hear my word.] That is, men of your tempers cannot yield obedience to it: see the fifth import of the phrase μὴ δύνασθαι, note on Mark ii. 16. This, doubtless, was the great sin of the Jews, and so they wanted not either natural power, or assistance necessary on God's part, to do this; but only a moral power, or a mind well disposed to obey his words.

[25] Ver. 44. You are of your father the devil.] i. e. By resembling him in your actions; for as he is a son of Abraham who does the works of Abraham, (ver. 39.) so is he a child of the devil who doth his works, (1 John iii. 8. 10.) not only out of ignorance and human frailty, but from choice and affection to, or good liking of them. He was a murderer from the beginning, i. e. as soon as man was created; for through the envy of the devil death entered into the world, (Wisd. ii. 24.) and so came upon all men: (Rom. v. 12.) you, by seeking my death, in this resemble him; he abode not in the truth, but seduced Eve by a lie; you in like manner therefore believe me not, because I tell you the truth, (ver. 45.) which shews you have hearts alien from the truth, but well affected to falsehood, as it is with him. O, how tremendous a thing it is to have the devil for our father! How careful therefore should we be to avoid those things which will subject us to this vile relation! viz. murder, lying, hatred of the truth here, envy, and enmity to others, (Matt. xiii. 29.) bitter zeal and strife in the heart, (James iii. 14, 15.) pride, (1 Tim. iii. 16.) every customary sin. (1 John iii. 8.)

[26] For he is a liar, καὶ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ, and the father of it.] Some of the fathers construing these words, and the father of him, hence gathered, that the devil had a father, and was the son of some superior evil spirit; this being the sentiment, not only of the Casani and Archontici, who held that the god of the Jews was the father of the devil, as St. Austin * saith, but also of many of the orthodox, as St. Jerome † testifies; and Origen ‡ leaves it as a thing doubtful: whereas αὐτοῦ here plainly refers to τοῦ ψεύδους, latent in the words ψεύστης ἐστὶ, of which see examples in Casaub. exercit. 15. ad Annal. Bar. cap. 12. p. 394.

[27] Ver. 46. Which of you convinceth me of sin?] In a false prophet some marks to discern him may easily be found; viz. his thirst after honour and applause, covetousness or falsehood: what of this nature do you see in me that you do not believe me?

[28] Ver. 47. He that is of God,] i. e. Who resembles him in holiness and goodness, and is disposed to do his will, is ready to receive the doctrine that comes from him; and it is an evidence that you do not thus resemble him, nor bear a filial affection to him, that you receive not his words.

[29] Ver. 51. Shall not see death εἰς αἰῶνα, for ever.] But shall after death obtain that life by which death shall be swallowed up in victory; (1 Cor. xv. 44. 2 Cor. v. 4.) so Christ expounds himself, vi. 58.

[30] Ver. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham, who is dead?] As by this promise thou pretendest to be: for who can promise others shall never die, but he who is himself to live for ever? (See here Examen Millii.)

[31] Ver. 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced (or, vehemently wished) to see my day.] i. e. To know the time when by my coming into the world, the promise made to him, that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed, was to be fulfilled. Thus the days of Noah and Lot are the times in which they lived, Luke xvii. 26. and the days of the Baptist is the time when he appeared, Matt. xi. 12. Christ therefore here affirms of Abraham, what he had said of others, Luke x. 24. That many prophets and kings desired to see the things which ye see, viz. Christ come into the world.

[32] And he saw it.] viz. By the eye of faith, as a thing then afar off, to be accomplished in future ages: for of this salvation the prophets inquired diligently, searching of what time the Spirit which was in them spake, when it testified of the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow them, to whom it was revealed, that not to themselves, but to us, they did minister these things, &c. (1 Pet. i. 10—12.)

[33] Ver. 57. Thou art yet not fifty years old.] There is no cause to wonder why the Jews, who were not solicitous about the age of Christ, should speak thus of one whose gravity, wisdom, and countenance, might perhaps cause them to think him older than truly he was. It was more to be admired that Irenæus should plead apostolical tradition for the Jewish error, especially when we consider, that many of the fathers, viz. Clemens of Alexandria, Strom. lib. i. p. 340. A. Tertullian, adv. Judæos, cap. 8. Julius Africanus, apud Hieron. Comm. in Daniel ix. Lactantius, lib. iv. cap. 10. Orosius, lib. vii. cap. 10. and divers others, held, that our Lord preached but one year, and suffered in the fifteenth of Tiberius, and the thirtieth year of his age. Moreover, all Christians agree that our Lord suffered under Pontius Pilate; now he was deposed by Tiberius in the last year of his reign, saith Josephus, which demonstrates that our Lord's suffering must be past in the thirty-seventh year of his age. (See the note on Luke iii. 23.)

[34] Ver. 58. Before Abraham was, I am.] This the Socinians interpret thus, Before Abraham is made the father of many nations, I am the Messiah: for, say they, πρὶν γένεσθαι doth not signify, before he was, but, before he was made, as it doth xiii. 19. xiv. 29. And (2.) those words ἐγώ εἰμι is Matt. xxiv. 5. I am the Christ, or the Messiah, as Mark xiv. 62. Luke xxi. 8. ἐγώ εἰμι is Matt. xxiv. 5. I am the Christ: so the phrase signifies, say they, here, ver. 24. 28. xiii. 19. But against this strained exposition let it be considered.

First, That the whole series of the discourse shews, that the opposition is here put, not betwixt Abraham's being the father of all nations, and Christ's being the Messiah; but between τὸ γενέσθαι, the birth of Abraham, and τὸ εἶναι, the being of Christ. Moreover, the word Abraham, so frequent in the Holy Scripture, doth also signify his person, and is never elsewhere used in this mystical sense, in which it imports not his person, but his privilege, or rather the completion of a promise made to him; it being therefore evident that the discourse from ver. 55. is of Abraham's person, it is incongruous here to introduce a mystical sense of the word, which the Jews never thought of, and which, had Christ intended, he, in all likelihood, would have said πρὶν Ἀβρὰμ γενέσθαι Ἀβραὰμ, i. e. before the reason of his new name be accomplished. In confirmation of this argument, let it be noted, that the word γενέσθαι signifies as well to be, as to be made. It signifies to be, Matt. v. 45. John i. 6. ἐγένετο, there was a man named John; and, ver. 30. ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονε, he was before me, xx. 27. Acts vii. 38. xiii. 5. And when it is used of persons in the sense of fieri, to be made. It signifies to be born, produced, or generated; and so here, before Abraham was made, must be the same as, before he was born. The places cited by the Socinians are doubly impertinent, viz. John iii. 19. xiv. 29. (1.) because πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι is before they are; and (2.) because they speak not of persons, but only of things which were to happen afterward.

Secondly, Christ in these words answers the objection of the Jews, that he being not yet fifty years old could not have seen Abraham. Now, according to our interpretation, he answers it fully, by saying, he was the eternal Logos, (i. 1.) or the person that said to Moses, I am, (Exod. iii. 14.) whereas, according to the Socinian comment, his answer is nothing to the purpose, and was no more true of him than it was of all that heard him, that they were before Abraham, they being all before he was made the father of all nations; who therefore can believe our Saviour would, upon this occasion, put them off with such a piece of sophistry? for, as Novatian argues, either Christ lied, and put a cheat upon them, if being from Abraham, he was not before him; or, he was before him, being the God of Abraham. (De Trin. cap. 23.) To this Stegmannus answers, That this is no absurdity, it being usual with Christ to answer nothing directly to the objection of the Jews, to which effect he cites, John vii. 20, 21. xii. 23. 25. xiv. 23. Luke xiii. 23, 24. but very fallaciously; for John xii. 23. 25. there is neither question nor objection; Luke xiii. 23, 24. there is a curious question, but no objection; John xiv. 23. Christ speaks not to the Jews, but to his own disciples; and John vii. 20. Christ answers to the question sufficiently, by saying, ver. 23. ἐμοὶ χολᾶτε, are you full of choler or rage against me? and the people more directly, ver. 25. which made it the less necessary for him so to do. Let Stegmannus shew, if he can, when Christ answers in this impertinent and illusive manner to the Jews carping at his words as being false and impossible to be true, with such an asseveration, Verily, verily, I say to you.

Thirdly, Had this only been Christ's meaning, why do the Jews take up stones to punish him as a blasphemer, there being not the least semblance of blasphemy in the words, taken in this sense? They may do it, saith Stegmannus, because he professed himself the Messiah: for as blasphemers, so also false prophets, were to be slain. But as they never did attempt to slay or to accuse him upon this account, though he still owned himself a prophet sent from God to them; so they themselves testify, they stoned or attempted to stone him for this blasphemy, that being a man he made himself God, (x. 33.)

Fourthly, I ask, whether our Saviour was willing to be understood by the Jews or not? If not, why did he use this solemn preface, Verily, verily, I say to you? If he would be understood, why did he speak unto them in that language, in which they neither did nor could they understand him? For how could they imagine the word Abraham was to be understood in such a sense in which they never knew it used? In a word, this interpretation is contrary to all antiquity, as their expositions in these cases use to be; for even the Ante-Nicene fathers proved that Christ was God, perfect from the beginning, and no new God, from these words: so Iren. lib. iv. cap. 27. Orig. contra Celsum, lib. viii. p. 386. Tertul. adv. Prax. cap. 22. p. 513. Novatian, cap. 23.

As for the phrase ἐγώ εἰμι, I am, let it be noted, that in the other evangelists it is only used to signify what the false Christs would say, and so can have no other import than I am the Christ; but in this Gospel it seems to signify, I am the Son of God: for he that saith, I am, ver. 24. 28. is he who had God for his Father, ver. 23. and was ἐκ τοῦ ἄνω, from above, ver. 19. and xiii. 19. he that calls them to believe, I am, is he who came from the Father, ver. 1. and was their Lord, ver. 13. and was going to the Father, ver. 3. Now the rulers of the Jews still accused Christ of blasphemy, and condemned him upon this account, Matt. xxvi. 65. Luke xxii. 70, 71. Thus therefore Christ might say, I am, and yet be God of God.

Secondly, Others answer with Grotius, That Christ here only signifies that he was before Abraham, in the decree of God. But (1.) Christ answers to the objection of the Jews, which had no respect to the priority of these two persons in the decree of God; but as to actual existence. (2.) In this sense even Judas, and all the murderers of our Lord, might be before Abraham had a being: and, lastly, the arguments produced against the former answer, conclude as strongly against this. (See Placæus, argument 11. à sect. vicesim. prim. ad finem.)

CHAP. IX.

1. AND as Jesus passed by (them, viii. 59.) he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

2. And his disciples asked him, saying, Master (diseases and imperfections in the body being the fruit of sin), [1] who did sin? this man (in the womb, or in some other body), or his parents (at the time of his conception, so as to be the occasion) that he was born blind?

3. Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents (so as to cause this blindness in the child): but (the Divine wisdom hath permitted this to be so) that the (miraculous) [2] works of God should be made manifest in (the cure of) him.

4. (And having received power from him to do these mighty works) [3] I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day, (i. e. while my time lasts; for) the night (my passion) cometh (shortly), when no man can work.

5. [4] As long as I am in the world, I am (to be) the light of the world, (by giving light to the blind, and the light of the gospel to them that sit in darkness.

6. And) when he had thus spoken, he [5] spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

7. And said to him, [6] Go, wash in the pool of Siloam; which is, by interpretation, Sent, (and so may put you in mind of him who is sent to give light unto the blind, see note v. 3.) He went his way therefore (thither), and washed, and came (back) seeing.

8. The neighbours therefore, and they that before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that (before) sat [7] and begged?

9. Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him; but he (himself) said, I am he.

10. Therefore said they to him, How were thine eyes then opened?

11. He answered and said, A [8] man that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said to me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and (accordingly) I went and washed, and I received (my) sight.

12. Then said they to him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

13. They brought to the [9] pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14. And it was the sabbath-day when Jesus made the clay (mixed with spittle), and (by) it opened his eyes.

15. Then again the pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said to them, He put clay upon my eyes, and I washed, and do see.

16. Therefore said some of the pharisees, [10] This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath-day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner (not only by violating the rest of the sabbath, but also by pretending to be of God when he is not) do such miracles? And there was a division among them (about him).

17. They say to the blind man again, What sayest thou of him? that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

18. But the (pharisees among the) Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19. And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? (if so), how then doth he see?

20. His parents answered them, and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21. But by [11] what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age, ask him; he shall (will) speak for (Gr. concerning) himself.

22. These words spake his parents, because they feared the (rulers of the) Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was (the) Christ, he should be [12] put out of the synagogue.

23. Therefore said his parents, He is of age, ask him: (this cure being such that to affirm that Jesus had done it, was in effect to own him as that Prophet, of whom Esaias had foretold, that he should open the eyes of the blind. See the note on Matt. xi. 5.)

24. Then again called they the man that was blind, and said to him, Give God the praise (of this cure: for) we know that this man is a sinner; (i. e. a false prophet, ver. 16.)

25. He answered and said, [13] Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not (Gr. that he is a sinner, I know not): one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

26. Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27. He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear (i. e. believe me): wherefore would you hear (it) again? will ye also be his disciples?

28. Then reviled they him, saying, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples.

29. We know that God spake to Moses: (but) as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

30. The man answered and said to them, Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened my eyes (which is a demonstration that he acteth by a power derived from God).

31. Now we know [14] that God heareth not sinners (usurping his authority, or pretending falsely to come from him): but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.

32. Since the world began was it not heard that [15] any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33. If that man [16] were not of God, he could do nothing (of this nature).

34. They answered and said to him, Thou wast altogether born in sins (being conceived by thy parents in their uncleanness), and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out (of the court).

35. Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said to him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God (the Messiah sent by him into the world to be the Saviour of it)?

36. He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that (knowing him) I might believe on him?

37. And Jesus said to him, [17] Thou hast both seen him (or, thou both seest him), and it is he that talketh with thee (i. e. and hearest him talking with thee).

38. And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

39. And Jesus said, For (manifesting the just) judgment (of God on men) I am come into this world, (viz.) that they [18] which see not (i. e. that are rude and simple, and sit in darkness, but are ready to own their own blindness, and come to the light) might see; and that they who (think they) see (already, and therefore shut their eyes against any farther light shining to them) might be made blind (might have this light taken from them, and so be left in darkness).

40. And some of the pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said to him, Are we blind also (in thy opinion)?

41. Jesus saith to them, [19] If ye were blind (i. e. unable to discern who I am; if ye had neither the law nor prophets to direct you, nor the light shining in your eyes, which is the case of the gentiles), ye should have no sin (of infidelity); but now you say, We see (and arrogate to yourselves the knowledge of the law and prophets, and are confident you are guides to the blind, Rom. ii. 19. and yet will not receive the light, which shineth in your eyes); therefore your sin remaineth (inexcusable).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 2. ΤΙΣ ἥμαρτεν, &c. Who hath sinned, he or his parents? &c.] Here,

First, It is certain that Christ's disciples do not inquire whether this person was born blind for his original sin; since in that all others, who were born seeing, equalled him in guilt: and yet they here suppose he might, and the pharisees say positively, ver. 34. ἐν ἁμαρτίαις σὺ ἐγεννήθης ὅλος, thou wast wholly born in sin; when as yet they themselves were equally guilty of original guilt. Both therefore must understand this of some personal and special sin.

Secondly, It is not hard to conceive what they might intend by the sin of the parents, viz. the begetting him in their uncleanness against the law, Lev. xx. 18. and* this was thought to have so ill an influence upon the child, as to render it obnoxious to leprosy, or mutilation, and so might be the cause of this person's blindness. Whence Philo† saith, that it was forbidden, that they might not produce ἀτελεῖς γονὰς, imperfect children. Note, Thirdly, That the opinion of the Platonists and Pythagoreans, concerning the transmigration of souls from one body to another, and being put, according to their merit, into better or worse bodies, had obtained among the Jews, being perhaps derived from those of Alexandria to their brethren in Judea. To this effect is that saying of the author of the Wisdom of Solomon, that being good he came into a body undefiled, or free from any notable infirmity, (viii. 20.) Josephus‡ saith, that this opinion firmly obtained among the essenes, that souls were immortal, and that they descended from the pure air, συμπλέκεσθαι ὥσπερ εἱρκταῖς τοῖς σώμασι, to be chained to bodies. And Philo§ saith, the air was full of them, and that those which were nearest to the earth, κατίασιν ἐκδεδησομέναι σώμασι θνητοῖς, descending to be tied to mortal bodies, ‖ παλινδρομοῦσι αὖθις, return back to bodies, being desirous to live in them. And so the apostles may be supposed to inquire here whether our Lord allowed of any of those sentiments, that the soul of this man might be put into this imperfect body for the punishment of what it had done before, whether in or out of the body.

[2] Ver. 3. But that the works of God might be manifested in him.] i. e. Though God did not actively concur to render this man blind; yet in his wisdom he thought fit to leave this imperfection in the plastic matter unrectified, that he might shew his miraculous power in giving sight to such a one, his wisdom using this as a confirmation of Christ's doctrine, and his goodness in illuminating the soul and body of this man at once, and ministering this motive to others to believe.

[3] Ver. 4. I must work the works of him that sent me.] Here, saith Stegmannus, Christ speaking of these works, not as his works, nor simply of the works of God, but of him that sent him, shews that he did them by the command of another; whereas the true God can be subject to the command of none; and hence he concludes Christ is not truly God. To this I answer, that Christ doth plainly call these works the works of God, ver. 3. and so declares that they were done by a Divine power, which is inseparable from a Divine essence. Secondly, Christ here speaks in the person of a prophet sent from God, which Christ was only by virtue of his human nature, and therefore could not here speak of himself as God. (See the note on vii. 16.)

[4] Ver. 5. Whilst I am in the world, I am the light of the world.] It is usual with Christ, when he hath done his cures upon the body, to convert his speech to those spiritual things which were adumbrated by them, and for which cause they were done: so having given sight to this blind man, he styles himself the light of the world, which he was by that evangelical doctrine, which did illuminate the minds of men; and though, at his departure from the world, he was no longer so by his bodily presence and oral instructions, he still continued so to be by the irradiations of his Holy Spirit, and by the doctrine of his apostles, spread throughout the world. (See i. 9. viii. 2. xii. 35, 36.)

[5] Ver. 6. He spat upon the ground, and made clay.] The fathers here say, that Christ, to illustrate his miraculous power, used that to anoint the blind man's eyes, which was the greatest impediment to seeing, and most pernicious to the eyes, though the Jews thought spittle good for the eyes, as we now do. Christ bids him thus anointed, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash; by this making trial of his faith, which, had it not produced in him obedience to this command, he had not been healed. And Christ does this on the sabbath-day, (ver. 14.) when by the canons of the Jews, saith Dr. Lightfoot, it was not lawful to anoint the eyes with spittle, to arm his disciples against that pernicious doctrine of the pharisees, that it was not lawful to do good, or perform works of mercy, on that day; and this he might the rather do, because he foresaw what danger this superstition might bring upon the believing Jews, when the days of vengeance came upon that nation; whence he exhorts them, to pray that their flight might not be on the sabbath-day, Matt. xxiv. 20.

[6] Ver. 7. Wash in the pool of Siloam, &c.] The spring of Siloam discharged itself into a double pool; the lower, which was called the pool of fleeces, Neh. iii. 15. and the upper, which is called שלוח, the pool of Siloah, which properly signifies ἀπεσταλμένος, sent, the waters being by the providence of God sent from the bowels of the earth into it, and so might by the very name mind them of the Messiah, sent as the more special gift of God for the purification of the unclean, and to enlighten the blind. (Isa. xxxv. 5. see the note on v. 3.)

[7] Ver. 8. Who sat and begged.] Here the form of begging among the Jews is observable, viz. זְבֵנִי, deserve, or do thyself good by me; intimating that by works of charity, we do good as well to ourselves as others.

[8] Ver. 11. A man that was called Jesus.] Had he not had some notice who he was, he would not have so readily obeyed his commands; now this knowledge of him he might have, either from his leader, or from Christ's disciples.

[9] Ver. 13. They bring him to the pharisees.] i. e. To the council, chiefly consisting of that sect; whence in this evangelist, the whole council passeth under the name of pharisees, i. 24. iv. 1. viii. 3. xi. 46. This they might do, either from ill-will to Christ, or out of curiosity to know whether they would own the person, who had done this signal miracle, to be the very man, of whom Esaias had prophesied, that he should open the eyes of the blind. And surely the providence of God so ordered this, that they might hear from the mouth of the blind man a testimony, which would either convince them, or render their unbelief without excuse.

[10] Ver. 16. This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath.] i. e. He is not sent of God as a prophet; and yet they themselves own, that a prophet might do and command things contrary to the rest required by the sabbath; and prove this from the example of Joshua, who commandeth, that the ark should be carried round Jericho, the armed men going before and after it seven days; one of which must be a sabbath. (Josh. vi.) How then could that, which prophets were by their own principles allowed to do, prove, that Christ was no prophet; especially, if we consider, that by these actions he did not indeed violate the rest of the sabbath, but only their corrupt traditions concerning it?

[11] Ver. 21. But how he now sees, we know not.] Here his parents seem to be faulty, (1.) in denying that which they had learned from their son, for fear of the Jews, (ver. 22.) (2.) By their ingratitude to Christ, whose kindness to their son ought to have been thankfully owned and acknowledged by them.

[12] Ver. 22. Ἀποσυνάγωγος γένηται, Should be excluded from the synagogue.] i. e. Should lie under the sentence of excommunication; either that called niddai, which only separated him four cubits from the society of others, saith Buxtorf,* but left him free, saith Lightfoot,† at that distance, either to expound traditions, or to hear them expounded in the synagogue; but perhaps not free to join with them in prayers, or giving of thanks; such a one not being admitted to join with them in their thanksgivings at their table: or else, it was that of cherem, which excluded the excommunicated person from all entrance into the synagogue; this being, saith Leo de Modena,‡ forbidden to the excommunicated; and to this rather do those words incline, ver. 34, 35. ἐξέβαλον αὐτὸν, they cast him forth, i. e. out of the place of the synagogue, and so ἀποσυναγώγους γίνεσθαι, they shall cast you out of the synagogues, seems to import, xvi. 2. And hence the primitive excommunications of the Christians excluded the criminal from the assembly, and from all communion in sacred offices for a time, and only gradually admitted him to them.

[13] Ver. 25. Εἰ ἁμαρτωλός ἐστιν, οὐκ οἶδα.] These words have I thus rendered, That he is a sinner, I know not; and this the words following require, in which the blind man proves by an unanswerable argument, (ver. 31.) that Christ was not a sinner: so εἰ doth often signify; so, do I not know εἰ σήμερον, that to-day I am king over Israel? 2 Sam. xix. 22. 1 Kings i. 51. Let Solomon swear, εἰ οὐ θανατώσει, that he will not kill his servant. (See the notes on Acts xxvi. 8. 1 Tim. v. 10.)

[14] Ver. 31. God heareth not sinners.] i. e. False prophets, who speak from themselves, and yet pretend to come from God; see ver. 16. and 24. for by so doing he would confirm their lies, and set his seal to their false doctrine.

[15] Ver. 32. That any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.] They who lose their sight by a disease, may be cured; but no man, no, not Moses, nor any of the prophets, ever did, or could, without the assistance of a Divine power, give sight to one born blind: whence even the Jews reckon this among the signs of the Messiah, that he should open the eyes of the blind, Midrash, in Psal. cxlvi. 8.

[16] Ver. 33. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.] See here a blind man, and unlearned, judging more rightly of Divine things, than the whole learned council of the pharisees: whence we learn, that we are not always to be led by the authority of councils, popes, or bishops; and that it is not absurd for laymen sometimes to vary from their opinions; these overseers being sometimes guilty of great oversights.

[17] Ver. 27. Καὶ ἑώρακας αὐτὸν, καὶ;] Grammarians know, that when two καὶs do thus come together, the first is to be rendered, both: so xi. 48. καὶ ἀροῦσιν ἡμῶν καὶ τὸν τόπον καὶ τὸ ἔθνος, and take away both our place and nation: so xii. 28. καὶ ἐδόξασα, καὶ πάλιν δοξάσω, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again: and that the aorist is usually put for the present tense, see the note on xx. 17. And so these words are well rendered thus, Thou hast seen him, and he talketh with thee: so i. 36. ἕστηκεν, one stands in the midst of you; v. 45. Moses, in whom ἠλπίκατε, ye trust; xi. 27. ἐγὼ πεπίστευκα, I believe thou art the Christ. (See Luke viii. 20. Acts i. 11. xii. 14. Rom. v. 2. 1 Tim. iv. 10. et Gloss. de Verbo, lib. iii. tr. 3. can. 46.)

[18] Ver. 39. Εἰς κρίμα, ἵνα βλέποντες τυφλοὶ γένωνται, For judgment, that they who see may be made blind.] Here the critics and some of the fathers note, that the conjunction ἵνα is not causal, but only consequential; as, when Christ saith, I came not to send peace upon the earth, but a sword, i. e. this will be the event and consequence of my coming: so ἵνα is used here, ver. 2. Rom. i. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 19. (See note on xii. 40.) And when Christ here saith, I came, that they who see not, might see; he seems especially to respect the gentiles sitting in darkness, &c. Ἵνα τὰ ἔθνη οἱ μὴ βλέποντες βλέψωσι, καὶ οἱ βλέποντες Ἰσραὴλ τυφλοὶ γενώνται, That the gentiles (saith Origen*) who are now blind may see, and Israel who now sees may be made blind, through their infidelity: so also Cyril and St. Chrysostom, in referring us to the words of St. Paul, who saith, that blindness, in part, had happened to the Jews, till the fulness of the gentiles should come in, Rom. xi. 25. (and this according to the prediction of the Psalmist, ver. 9, 10.) and who saith of the converted gentiles, ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8. (See note on Rom. xiii. 12.)

Ver. 41. If ye were blind, ye should not have sin.] i. e. If, out of the mere blindness and darkness of your minds, ye did not own me as the Messiah (which is the case of the gentiles, to whom no prophets were sent foretelling, no law promising him; no gospel preached revealing him to the world), you would have no sin of infidelity; for, if I had not come, and spoken to you, xv. 22. yea, if I had not done among you the works which no other person did, ver. 24. ye had not had (this) sin, ver. 24.: but now, you boasting of your knowledge in the law and the prophets, which have given such plain characters of me, and yet neither believing Moses nor the prophets speaking of me, (John v. 39, 40. 45, 46.) and claiming to yourselves the judgment of discerning betwixt true and false prophets, and yet giving no credit to me, proving my mission from God by a crowd of miracles done before your eyes,—your unbelief remaineth inexcusable and unpardoned: (John xv. 22.) For if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins. (John viii. 21. 24.)

CHAP. X.

1. VERILY, verily, I say to you, [1] He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold (i. e. he who pretends to be a guide and ruler of God's church and people, and owns not the Messiah, nor hath commission from him so to do), but climbeth up some other way (to get into it), the same is a thief and a robber.

2. But he that entereth in by the door is the (a true) shepherd of the sheep.

3. [2] To him (God) the porter (or, great keeper of this sheepfold) openeth (giving him his testimony and commission to feed his sheep); and the sheep hear (and obey) his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name (hath an exact knowledge and care of them), and leadeth them out (to their pastures).

4. And when he putteth forth his own sheep (to pasture), he goeth before them (after the manner of the eastern shepherds), and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5. And a [3] stranger (who hath no commission from God, nor teacheth his word) will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know (and approve) not the voice of strangers.

6. This parable spake Jesus to them (and in reproof of them, as blind guides, and not true shepherds, because they rejected him): but they understood not what things they were which he spake to them (i. e. they understood not the true import of his words).

7. Then said Jesus to them again, Verily, verily, I say to you, [4] I am the door (as of the shepherds, ver. 1. so also) of the sheep.

8. [5] All that ever came before me (pretending to be the Prophet, or the Messiah promised to the Jews, or to instruct his people when God never sent them so to do) are (to be accounted as) thieves and robbers: but the sheep (who only knew and are obedient to the voice of God) did not hear them.

9. I am the door (of the sheep): if any man enter in (to the sheepfold) by (faith in) me, he shall be saved (from the thief and wolf), and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10. The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they (who are my sheep) might have [6] life, and that they might have it more abundantly, (Gr. and that they might have abundance of pasture, ver. 3.)

11. [7] I am the good shepherd; (and act as) the good shepherd, (who) giveth (or, layeth down) his life for the sheep.

12. But he that is a [8] hireling and not the shepherd, (but one) whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth (to secure himself): and (so) the wolf catcheth (some of) them, and scattereth (the rest of) the sheep.

13. The hireling (who regards his own safety and advantage, and not that of the sheep,) fleeth, because he is a hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14. I am the good shepherd, and [9] know (i. e. love) my sheep, and am known (i. e. beloved) of (those that are) mine.

15. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and (out of love and obedience to him) I lay down my life for the sheep.

16. And [10] other sheep I have, which are not of this fold (i. e. the gentiles): them also I must bring (into the fold), and they shall hear my voice; and (so of Jew and gentile) there shall be one fold and one shepherd.

17. [11] Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life (for the sheep; and this I do, not that I might continue under the power of death, but) that I may take it again (by a glorious resurrection).

18. No man (by force) taketh it (away) from me (before the time), but (then) [12] I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again (and rise from the dead). This commandment (i. e. commission, of laying down my life for the sheep) have I received of my Father.

19. There was a division therefore again among the Jews because of these sayings (which seemed to ascribe to him such power and relation to God as his Father, and spake of his death and the conversion of the gentiles, which things the Jews could not well bear).

20. And many of them said (with the pharisees), He hath a devil, and is mad (i. e. he is possessed with a melancholy spirit and a frenzy); why hear ye him (or attend to any thing he says)?

21. Others said, These are not (like) the words of him that hath a devil; (nor are his works such: for) can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

22. And it was at Jerusalem, (and at) the [13] feast of the dedication (of the altar, profaned by Antiochus, 1 Macc. iv. 59. 2 Macc. x. 8. that Christ spake this), and it was winter (that feast beginning to be celebrated the twenty-fifth of Chisleu, which answers to part of our December).

23. And Jesus (then) walked in the temple [14] in Solomon's porch.

24. Then came the Jews round about him, and said to him, How long dost thou make us to doubt (Gr. hold us in suspense)? If thou be (indeed) the Christ, tell us plainly (that so it is).

25. Jesus answered them, I (have already) told you, and ye believed not: [15] the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me (that so I am).

26. But (notwithstanding) ye believe not, (not through want of evidence of the truth, but) [16] because ye are not of my sheep (i. e. of them who are disposed to attend to and obey my doctrine), as I said to you.

27. (For) my sheep hear my voice, and I know them (by this, that they obey) and they follow me.

28. And (therefore) I give to them eternal life; and they [17] shall never perish, neither shall any man (be able to) pluck them out of my hand.

29. My Father, who gave them me, is greater than all (their adversaries); and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

30. (Now) [18] I and the Father are one, (the Father dwelling in me, and I in him, ver. 38.)

31. Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him (as a blasphemer, who made himself equal with God, as they had done before, John viii. 59.)

32. Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed (i. e. before) you from my Father; for which of these works do you (go about to) stone me?

33. The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy; and (that is) because that thou being (only) a man makest thyself (a) God.

34. Jesus answered them, [19] Is it not written in your law, (Psal. lxxxii. 6.) I said, Ye are gods?

35. If he called them gods, to whom the word of God came, (Gr. was, i. e. who were God's prophets, as Moses and Samuel, and his judges, as Joshua and others, and had the assistance of his Spirit given them for the performance of those offices), and the Scripture cannot be broken (Gr. dissolved, but what it saith must be true),

36. Say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, (by the Holy Ghost essentially dwelling in, or without measure imparted to, him, John iii. 34.) and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I (after this unction and commission to make known his will to you) said, I am the Son of God?

37. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not, (when I say, I and my Father are one, ver. 30.)

38. But if I do, though you believe not me (on account of my own words), believe (the testimony of) the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him (and so am one with him).

39. Therefore (upon this repeated declaration that he was one with the Father) they sought again to take (or, lay hold on) him: but he (miraculously) escaped out of their hands,

40. And went away again towards Jordan to the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode.

41. And many resorted to him, and said, John did no miracle (to confirm his sayings, as Jesus doth): but all things that John spake of this man were true; (and so, if we believe John's testimony, we must own this person as the Son of God; and a much greater prophet than he was, John i. 15. iii. 35.)

42. And many believed on him there (by reason of the testimony which John had given to him).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. HE that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, &c.] For the right understanding of this parable let it be noted,

First, That Christ directs this parable against the scribes and pharisees, to whom he spake, ix. 40. as appears; (1.) from the pronoun ὑμῖν, which begins this chapter thus, I say to you: and (2.) from these words, ver. 6. This parable spake Jesus to them. They therefore must be the persons concerned in the contents of it. Note therefore,

Secondly, That these pharisees took upon them to be guides and teachers of the people, whence by our Saviour they are represented as blind guides; they also held, that others were to receive authority to teach from their commission or ordination to that office; though we find not that they received any such authority from God, who rather had appointed the priests' lips to preserve knowledge, and the people to seek the law at their mouths; (Mal. ii. 4. 7.) and of the tribe of Levi, to teach his judgments to Jacob, and his law to Israel, (Deut. xxxiii. 10.) even all the commandments which God had delivered by the hand of Moses: (Lev. x. 11.) and hence Christ represents them as a plantation which his Father had not planted, (Matt. xv. 13.) bids his disciples beware of their doctrine, (Matt. xvi. 12.) they teaching for doctrines of God the commandments of men, and making void the commandments of God by their traditions; (Matt. xv. 6. 9.) their voice therefore was such as the true sheep neither would nor ought to hear. Note,

Thirdly, that these scribes and pharisees believed not in Christ, (John vii. 48.) they neither would enter into the kingdom of God themselves, nor suffer others to enter into it, (Luke xi. 52.) and therefore are said to have taken away the key of knowledge. Christ therefore here pronouncing himself the door both of the shepherds, (ver. 1.) and of the sheep, (ver. 6.) by which they were to enter into the sheepfold, informs them, that now, that he the great Shepherd of the sheep was come, they who refused to own him, and to teach the sheep in his name, according to his doctrine, and by his authority, as his apostles and the seventy did, had no true commission to instruct them; and that they, who set up in opposition to him to be the guides and teachers of the people, were not only blind but false guides, and even thieves and robbers: the first, as taking away what belongs not to them; the second, as destroying the sheep.

[2] Ver. 3. To him (thus entering by the door) the porter (God, the great keeper of the sheepfold) openeth.] As to one allowed by him to feed his sheep, and him the sheep hear and obey, teaching the doctrine of the gospel and the kingdom of God to them, in the name and by the authority of the great Shepherd of the sheep: and when this Shepherd, by himself or others acting in his name, and by his mission, leadeth forth his own sheep, he goes before them, after the manner of the eastern shepherds, to preserve them from danger, and to conduct them into wholesome pastures, (ver. 4.) So did Christ and his shepherds, being τύποι, examples for the flock to follow. (1 Pet. v. 3.)

[3] Ver. 5. A stranger they will not follow.] And such are all they who do not teach them the doctrine of the gospel in Christ's name, and by his authority.

[4] Ver. 7. I am the door of the sheep.] Ver. 1, 2. he had represented himself as the door of the true shepherds; here he declares himself the door of the sheep also: shewing, that since his advent there is no entrance into the church or kingdom of God, but by faith in him, and embracing his doctrine.

[5] Ver. 8. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers.] i. e. All that came under pretence of being their king, or their Messiah; as Theudas, not he who, saith Josephus,* was destroyed by Cuspius Fadus; for he appeared before Judas Gaulonites, (Acts v. 36, 37.) who, according to Josephus, was suppressed towards the latter end of the reign of Augustus. (Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 1, 2.) The same Josephus saith, that of those multitudes that began seditions under Sabinus and Varus, every one was made βασιλεὺς, king: (lib. xvii. cap. 12. p. 608. G.) and speaking of the very same time, he saith, πυκνοὺς βασιλεῖαν ὁ καιρὸς ἀνέπειθε, the time (when they expected Messiah their King) made many to usurp the kingdom, (De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 6. p. 779. G.) which they must do under pretence of being their Messiah also, or the king that cometh in the name of the Lord to redeem Israel. (Luke xix. 38. xxiv. 21. see Examen Millii.)

[6] Ver. 10. Ἵνα ζωὴν ἔχωσι, καὶ περισσὸν ἔχώσιν, That they might have life, and have it more abundantly.] Having, saith Grotius, "cum eâ vitâ omne genus felicitatis," with life all kind of felicity; but βίος and ζωὴ signify, not only life, but that sustenance by which it is preserved; as when the widow's mite is styled, ὅλος ὁ βίος, her whole life: (Mark xii. 44.) so he that takes the nether millstone to pledge, taketh a man's life, (Deut. xxiv. 6.) i. e. saith the Chaldee, that which makes his meat ready to preserve life; the necessaries of life, Targum Hieros. In Homer it is ἡ πρὸς τὴν ζωὴν παρασκεύη, provision for life. (See Budæus.)

[7] Ver. 11. I am the good shepherd.] Referred to by the prophets, Isa. xl. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. xxxvii. 24. I am so κατ' ἐξοχὴν, so as to lay down my life for the sheep, and take it up again, ver. 15. 17. which words can agree to no other shepherd. I grant to Grotius, that the apostles and their successors were true shepherds, and not mercenaries; but none of them could be the good Shepherd here, or the one Shepherd, ver. 16. viz. the chief Shepherd of the sheep: (1 Pet. v. 4.) though by their ministry he brought both Jews and gentiles into his fold after his resurrection; and they doing this in his name, and by his authority and assistance, he himself is said to do it, (ver. 16.)

[8] Ver. 12. The hireling —— fleeth.] The hireling here is not he who receives maintenance from his particular flock; for this he may do by virtue of Christ's ordinance: (1 Cor. ix. 13, 14.) of this, saith Christ, he is worthy: (Luke x. 7.) and much less he who labours among them, with respect to that recompence or crown of glory he is to receive when the chief Shepherd shall appear; but he who is an intruder, whose the sheep are not, who intends not their good so much as his own profit, and who, in time of danger, flies for his own safety, not caring though the wolf tear and devour them. Hence also we may learn, that a true pastor must not desert his flock in time of peril, when by his absence they may be brought into great peril, and by his presence may be happily preserved from it.

[9] Ver. 14. I know mine, and am known of them.] i. e. I have an intimate affection for them, and they sincerely love me; for this phrase signifies,

First, To approve: thus the Lord knoweth the righteous, Psal. i. 6. and whom he approveth not, he is said not to know, Matt. vii. 23.

Secondly, To love, and to be kindly affected to; as when God saith to his own people, You have I known, of all the families of the earth, Amos iii. 2. If any man love God, he is known of him, 1 Cor. viii. 3. see Deut. ii. 7.

Thirdly, To preserve and protect; as Psal. xxxi. 8. Thou hast known my soul in adversity, Nah. i. 7. God is good to them that wait for him, γινώσκων, knowing them that fear him.

Ver. 15. Because it is said here, that Christ laid down his life for his sheep, elsewhere that he doth it for his friends, John xv. 13, 14. and for his church, Eph. ii. 26. and all are not his sheep, his friends, or his church: hence some conclude, that Christ did not die for all.

Ans. Though it be certain, from the places cited in the note here, that Christ died intentionally for all, i. e. designing the benefits of his salutary passion for them, upon their performance of the conditions of the new covenant established in his blood, according to these plain words of the apostle, 2 Cor. v. 15. He died for all, that they who live might not live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them; and so none perish, because he died not for them, but because they do not live to him who died for them: yet it is also true, that he eventually is only the Saviour of his body, and died only for his sheep and friends; because they only do perform the conditions of the new covenant, and therefore to them only can this righteous Judge assign, at last, the blessings promised in that covenant.

Secondly, In none of these places is it said, that Christ died only for his sheep, for his church, or for his friends; and therefore none of them say any thing, which contradicts the more general extent of Christ's redemption. This argument may therefore be retorted thus; He that died for his friends and for his enemies, died for all; but Christ died for his friends and for his enemies; for when we were enemies, Christ died for us. (Rom. v. 8.) Again, he that died for the church of God, and for the unrighteous, that he might bring them to the church of God, died for all; but Christ died for both, for he suffered for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. (1 Pet. iii. 18.) Lastly, He that died for his sheep that heard his voice, and for the lost sheep, that did not hearken to his voice, died for all; but Christ died for his sheep that heard his voice, as the text saith here, and for his lost sheep, for he came to seek, and to save that which was lost, even the lost sheep of the house of Israel, (Matt. xviii. 11, 12. x. 6.) therefore he died for all.

[10] Ver. 16. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold.] He calls the gentiles sheep by way of anticipation; because, as many of them as were docile, and fit to receive instruction, would in time be so; and because the partition-wall betwixt Jew and gentile was to be broken, and the gentiles to be admitted to the same privileges with the believing Jews, he says, They shall be one sheepfold.

[11] Ver. 17. Therefore the Father loveth me.] Because, out of obedience to him, and love to the sheep, I lay down my life for them; which I have good reason to do, seeing I am sure so soon to take it up again. This seems to be the sense of the words. Note also, that if we respect the council of God and the design of Christ, nothing is more certain than that Christ gave himself a ransom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6. and tasted death for every man, Heb. ii. 9. and was a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1 John ii. 2. and that the Father so loved the world as that he sent his Son into it, that the world might be saved by him, iii. 16, 17. But because the world can no otherwise obtain this salvation than by believing in him, and obeying the voice of this Shepherd; therefore he is said to do this more eminently for his sheep.

[12] Ver. 18. Ἐγὼ τίθημι αὐτὴν, I lay it down.] Grotius having hinted, note on ver. 11. that τίθεσθαι ψυχὴν, to lay down the life, signifies only to expose it to danger, or put our lives in our hands, as the phrase is, Judg. xii. 3. 1 Sam. xxviii. 21. and having said also, that πάλιν λαβεῖν αὐτὴν, to take it again, is to rescue it from danger; I shall shew this to be a very forced exposition. For,

First, This phrase τίθεσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν, to lay down the life, being absolutely put, is only used in the New Testament, and there only by this apostle; and it always signifies to die, or to give the life to death—as when St. Peter saith, τὴν ψυχήν μου θήσω, I will lay down my life for thee, xiii. 37, 38. when Christ saith, xv. 13. Greater love than this hath no man, than ἵνα τὶς τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ θῇ, that one should lay down his life for his friend: and the beloved disciple, (1 John iii. 16.) argues thus, If he τὴν ψυχὴν ἔθηκε, laid down his life for us, we ought τὴν ψυχὴν τιθέναι, to lay down our lives for the brethren: and surely, when Christ saith here, τὴν ψυχήν μου τίθημι, I lay down my life for my sheep, he meant, not only that he would expose himself to danger, but that he would suffer death for them; when therefore he saith in the same place, I have power to take it up again, he doubtless meant, he hath power to raise it from death. Stegmannus the Socinian saith here, that Christ here ascribes this power to himself improperly, because God had promised to use his power in raising him from the dead: but (1.) is it proper to introduce Christ positively saying, I have, what he had not, only because another had that power? since he says not, I have a promise, but, I have ἐξουσίαν, the power to restore this life I lay down. (2.) If we consider how plainly he had challenged this power to himself, the power of raising up and quickening whom he would, and that because he had life in himself, (v. 21. 26.) and engaged his word of truth, both to raise up his own body, (ii. 19.) and the bodies of all the saints, (vi. 39, 40. 44. 54.) yea, the bodies of all that were in their graves, (v. 28, 29.) as being the resurrection and the life, (xi. 25.) we cannot doubt his power to raise his own body. And (3.) when he saith in the preceding words, No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself, ἐξουσίαν ἔχω, I have power to lay it down; he plainly ascribes to himself a right or power to give up himself to the death: why therefore should not the same words immediately following, viz. I have power to take it up again, bear the same sense? The little sophisms of Stegmannus here are of no force to the contrary: for, why might not Christ's body die, though it was united to immortal nature, as well as when it was united to an immortal soul? Nor do we say, that he was dead according to his human nature, but only according to his body; or that the union of his body with the Divine nature was dissolved by death, but only the union of his body with his soul.

Note also, that the words following, This commandment have I received from the Father, respect not the raising of his body, but only the laying down of his life, or his dying for his sheep, as Grotius here notes.

[13] Ver. 22. Ἐγένετο δὲ τὰ ἐγκαίνια, It was at the feast of dedication, and it was winter.] The feast of dedication, here mentioned, respects not the dedication of the temple made by Solomon, or repaired by Zerubbabel; for we read of no annual feast of dedication appointed at either of them; but it respects the dedication of the altar and temple, celebrated by Judas Maccabeus; of which we read thus, 1 Macc. iv. 56. So they kept τὸν ἐγκαινισμὸν, the dedication of the altar eight days; and, ver. 59. Moreover, Judas and his brethren, and the whole congregation of Israel, ordained, that the days, ἐγκαινισμοῦ, of the dedication of the altar should be kept in their season from year to year, for the space of eight days, from the twenty-fifth day of the month Chisleu, which falls in with our December. (See also 2 Macc. x. 5. 8. and Josephus Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 11.) This is apparent, because it is said, it was winter; whereas the dedication of Solomon's temple was in the seventh month, or in autumn, (1 Kings viii. 2.) of Zerubbabel's in the month Adar, (Ezra vi. 15.) at the entrance of the spring, this in December. Moreover, from our Saviour's presence at this feast, Grotius well notes, that festival-days, in memorial of public blessings, may piously be instituted by persons in authority, without a Divine command.

[14] Ver. 23. And Jesus walked in the porch of Solomon.] In the porch new built in the same place where Solomon erected his: in summer they walked in the open air, in winter under covert.

[15] Ver. 25. The works that I do in my Father's name bear witness of me.] i. e. There is no cause why you should thus be in suspense concerning me, or not hear me plainly saying, I am the Messiah, seeing this appears sufficiently from my works. He ascribes not the works to himself, saith Stegmannus, but to his Father; and yet the text saith, ἃ ἐγὼ ποιῶ, the works which I do, viz. by the power of the Father dwelling in me, (ver. 38.) So, out of modesty he speaks, saith Grotius: so, as a prophet, say others.

[16] Ver. 26. You believe not, οὐ γὰρ, because you are not of my sheep.] It is evident that Christ here gives the reason why they believed not, as elsewhere he doth: so John viii. 43. ye own not my word, ὅτι, because ye cannot hear it (see the note there); and ver. 45. ye believe not, ὅτι, because I speak the truth; i. e. that truth which is offensive to you; and, ver. 47. διὰ τοῦτο, for this cause you do not hear; i. e. obey my word; because ye are not of God. And this observation excludes the evasion of those who say, because here is not rational, or renders not the reason of their unbelief, but only intimates, that it was consequential to their being not his sheep; for the word here rendered because, is not ὅτι, but οὐ γὰρ, for ye are not my sheep: now γὰρ is a rational particle, pointing out the cause. 2. The reason which Christ here assigns of this defect of faith, is doubtless such as render it a great crime in them: for sure that must be such for which they were to die in their sins. (John viii. 24.) It is therefore certain, this unbelief cannot be resolved into any natural defect of knowledge on their part, or any decree or act of reprobation on God's part, but into the want of a docile and well-disposed mind; for were it the same to be one of Christ's sheep, and to be predestinated to faith and salvation, the import of Christ's words must be this, Ye therefore believe not, because ye are not of the number of the elect, but of those whom God hath from eternity rejected. Now, by this account of their infidelity, Christ would not have accused, but excused, the infidelity of the Jews; for what fault could it be in them that they did not that, which by reason of this act of God before they had a being, they were incapable of doing? Then might they have replied to Christ, We therefore believe not, because God by his act of reprobation hath shut the door of faith against us, and so our infidelity is not to be imputed to us, but to God.

[17] Ver. 28. And they shall never perish.] i. e. Through any defect on my part, or by the force of any plucking them out of my hands: so the particle καὶ, which is here illative, shews, viz. they therefore shall not perish, for none shall pull them out of my hand: and this is still more evident from the reason following, My Father is greater than all their adversaries, and none can pull them out of his hands: now his power and mine is one and the same. This appears, thirdly, from the frequent exhortations directed to Christ's sheep, not to fall away from the grace received, Heb. xii. 15. not to lose what had been wrought in them, 2 John 8. to those that stand, to take heed they fall not, so as that God will not spare them, Rom. xi. 20, 21.

because not continuing in his goodness, ver. 22. Whereas if the sheep of Christ can no more cease to be so, than a man whilst living can cease to be a man, these exhortations to take care they fall not off from being so, must be as vain, as a caution to a man not to outlive his manhood. Well, therefore, said Origen* and Isidore Peleusiota, no man can snatch them away by force or tyranny; for then they must perish without and against their own wills; but this may be done by deceit and allurements, παρὰ τὴν τῶν αὐτεξουσίων ἀνθρώπων ῥαθυμίαν, through the negligence of men, who have the freedom of their wills; for such men who, by the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil, thus cease to obey Christ's laws, are not snatched out of Christ's hands, but choose to go from him. Or, secondly, Christ may speak here of sheep continuing so to the death, promising to them, that neither death, nor he that hath the power of death, shall make them perish for ever, for he would raise them up at the last day.

[18] Ver. 30. Ἐγὼ καὶ ὁ Πατὴρ ἓν ἐσμεν, I and the Father are one.] That Christ here speaks not of a unity of will and concord only, appears,

(1.) From the reason assigned of the security of the sheep—the want of power in any one to snatch them out of the hands of Christ; because the Father being greater in power than all, his power could secure them from all, and so could also Christ, he being one in power with the Father: for the foundation of this argument is, not that the Father's will, but that his power was above all.

(2.) From the inference of the Jews, that by these words he made himself God, and so was guilty of blasphemy. Now this invidious charge Christ doth not evade, by saying, he only conspired with the will of God, as all true prophets did, but by appealing to the works, which, saith he, I do by the power of the Father residing in me, which plainly carries this to a unity of power, not of will only: and then the inference of St. Chrysostom is undeniable, εἰ δὲ ἡ δύναμις αὐτὴ, εὔδηλον ὅτι καὶ οὐσία, and if the power be the same, the essence must be so.

[19] Ver. 34—36. Is it not written in your law, I have said, Ye are Gods? If he called them gods to whom the word of God came—say you of him whom the Father hath sanctified—Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?] From these words, and from Exod. xxi. 6. xxii. 9. 28. where judges and supreme magistrates are called Elohim, Stegmannus gathers, that the name of God in Scripture doth not always signify the supreme God, but sometimes only them, who have a high power by God committed to them; amongst whom he places Christ, as having a Divine authority committed to him by the favour of God; as if I should argue thus, Parents are styled gods by Philo,† or by the heathens, therefore the name of God in Philo, and among the heathens, is common to the supreme God, and to our parents. But, notwithstanding this, no parent ever was by Philo, or by the heathens, distributively, or in the singular number, called God; nor is that name thus given in Scripture to any judge, or supreme governor, as it is often in the New Testament attributed to our Saviour Christ. And (2.) when magistrates and judges are in Scripture called gods, the Holy Ghost still addeth something, which excludes them from a true Divinity, as that they should die like men, Psal. lxxxii. 6. or that they are rulers of the people, Exod. xxii. 28. Whereas when Christ is called God, it is either with the addition of some epithet belonging to the supreme God, as when he is styled ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς, God over all, Rom. ix. 5. the great God, Tit. ii. 13. ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἀληθινὸς, the true God, 1 John v. 20. or with addition of some operation proper to God, as when it is said, the Word was God, and all things were made by him, i. 1, 2. Stegmannus adds, that if these persons were not truly gods, the Scripture falsely called them gods; to which I answer, that they were truly so in title, as being God's vicegerents upon earth, but not in nature, as being only the ministers of God, Rom. xiii. 6. He adds, they must be properly and truly gods, as being invested with Divine power. But here he trifles, for a Divine power may either signify the power essential to God, by which he is enabled to do all things; and to ascribe this power to mere men is blasphemy: or it may only signify a power of government, and judging of the offences done by men, derived from God, and in this sense only is the Divine power ascribed to magistrates, and such also is the power of parents over their children, and of masters over their servants; and yet can it be reasonably said, that the formal reason of the Deity truly and properly agrees to them? He goes on, and argues against the Deity of Christ from this text, thus, (1.) That the argument of Christ hence for a proper Deity, that because magistrates are metaphorically and by virtue of their office called gods, he must be truly so, must be infirm, seeing no argument will hold from the metaphorical to the proper reason of the thing. (2.) The reason which Christ here assigns of this, viz. because the Father had sanctified him, concerneth not his eternal generation, nor can it hence be gathered that Christ is the supreme God, but rather the contrary; for greater is he who sanctifies, and sends, than he who is sanctified, and sent. And (3.) hence, saith he, we may learn there was no higher reason of Christ's filiation than this sanctification and mission into the world; for then Christ would have produced that reason, when thus assaulted by his adversaries, and not, concealing it, have rested in that reason of his sanctification, which proves not his true Divinity.

Now to these arguments two answers may be given,

First, If by this sanctification we understand the unction of Christ by the Holy Ghost, then note, (1.) that the Jewish doctors understand not the Psalmist's words, I have said, Ye are gods, to be meant of civil magistrates, but of their doctors sitting in the chair of Moses, or rather of their prophets sent to reveal God's will to them, to whom alone that phrase here used properly agrees, they only being the men, πρὸς οὓς ὁ Λόγος Θεοῦ ἐγένετο, to whom the Word of the Lord came. (See note on Luke iii. 2.) Note,

Secondly, That if we understand it of their judges and supreme civil magistrates; yet of them it is certain, that they in difficult cases judged by consulting God's oracle, the urim and thummim, and in making war had still resort to this oracle; whence all the Jews were upon pain of death obliged to hearken to the sentence of those judges and of those priests, by whom they did inquire from this oracle the mind of God, (Deut. xvii. 9. 12.) and as doing presumptuously, when they refused so to do, (ver. 12.) which they are only said to do when they opposed the mind of God made known to them, or wilfully rebelled against it, by doing any thing in contempt of the Divine Majesty, and his authority. (Numb. xv. 30.) Note, secondly, that it is a received opinion among the Jews, that even their civil governors had a particular assistance and afflatus of the Holy Spirit to fit them for that employment. So when God chose seventy elders to manage the government of the people under Moses, he put his Spirit on them, and they prophesied. (Num. xi. 17. 25.) And when Joshua was appointed to rule them after Moses, he is said to be a man in whom the Spirit was, (Numb. xxvii. 18.) and to be full of the Spirit of wisdom; because Moses had laid his hands upon him. (Deut. xxxiv. 9.) When Saul was anointed king over Israel, the Spirit came upon him, and he prophesied. (1 Sam. x. 6. 10.) And when David by his sin had caused the Holy Spirit to depart from him, he prays not only for the spirit of holiness, but that πνεῦμα ἡγεμονικὸν, the spirit of government, which God had given him, might be restored; (Psal. li. 12.) and of Solomon, the Targum on 2 Chron. vii. 6. saith, God made the Spirit rest upon him; and when God had rejected Saul, the Spirit of the Lord departed from him. (1 Sam. xvi. 14.) So that according to this exposition, the argument of Christ is to this effect: If they are called gods, and the sons of the Most High in the Scriptures of unquestionable truth, who had the spirit of prophecy, wisdom, and government, more sparingly, and only at some certain times imparted to them, and that rather to assist than abide in them; say you of him to whom the Father hath given the Spirit without measure, (John iii. 34.) and in whom he so abideth essentially, that by virtue of him, I am in the Father, and the Father in me, ἑνότητι καὶ δυνάμει τοῦ πνέυματος, by the unity and power of the Spirit, by which I am enabled to perform the works which are properly Divine, and reveal to you all the hidden treasures of wisdom, Thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God? So that the argument of Christ here proceeds from the less to the greater; from the Spirit assisting them by his gifts, to the Spirit essentially dwelling in him; in which respect, greater is he who sanctifies and sends, than he who is sanctified and sent, by virtue of his original, though not by virtue of the Divine nature, and the fulness of the Godhead communicated to Christ: for even Filbinger,* a very acute Socinian, owns, that since the Spirit of God is the power of God, (Luke i. 35.) he must be God; "quia in Deo nihil est quod non sit Deus," there being nothing in God which is not God.

Ans. 2. The second answer is, That he here saith the Father had sanctified him, not by reason of the unction of the Holy Ghost coming down upon him at his baptism, but because of the union of the Divine Logos to the human nature: for explication of which answer, note, (1.) that according to the tradition of the ancients received from the beginning of Christianity, it was this Λόγος who appeared to the patriarchs, and conversed with the judges and magistrates of the Jews, and so was literally ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, the essential Word of God, who came to them. Note, (2.) that Christ speaks of a sanctification precedent to his mission into the world, and so not of the unction of the Holy Ghost, received when he had been in it thirty years, but at the union of the Divine Logos with the human nature; and then the argument of Christ will be to this effect, If they were styled gods, and the sons of the Most High, to whom this Word only came, and with whom he conversed, can I, who am this very Λόγος, be said to blaspheme, in saying, that I am the Son of God? And according to this sense it is evident, that Christ does here argue from the sublimest notion of his filiation, according to these words of the reverend Dr. Bull;* "It appears from a due inspection of the text, that Christ did not intend to say or prove he was the Son of God, as being his ambassador extraordinarily instructed, and so sent into the world, but on a far more excellent account, viz. that before he came into the world, he was with God the Father, and so was his true and essential Son, as being God of God, partaking of the same nature as a son doth with his father. For it is apparent, that from the twenty-fifth to the thirtieth verse inclusively, Christ so discoursed to the Jews, that they still thought he asserted that he was God, and therefore, say they, we stone thee, because thou being a man makest thyself God; (ver. 33.) viz. by calling God so emphatically, and with such property, his Father, as that he was so to him alone, and so that he and his Father were one, (ver. 30.) Now Christ (saith he) does not answer by denying either that he was God, or that he ever challenged to himself that dignity, which yet seems necessary, had he been only man, to have been said, to take off this objection of his blasphemy, but rather seems to argue that he was so the Son of God, that he had the Divine nature in him."

First, After this manner—If judges and magistrates are called gods, for an imperfect resemblance and participation of the Divine authority, how much more may I be called God, who am the natural Son of God, and am moreover, in the most excellent manner, authorized by him? For though Christ speaks not thus in express words, he not obscurely signifies it by saying, his Father had sanctified him, and sent him into the world; for (1.) he saith not, me whom God, but whom the Father, hath sanctified, declaring he had God for his Father, by virtue of that sanctification. (2.) He adds, that he was first sanctified, and then sent into the world, signifying thereby that he was the Son of God in heaven, before he was sent into the world; and so he speaks more plainly to his disciples, saying, John xvi. 28. I came forth from the Father, and came into the world; again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

The second argument by which our Lord defends himself, and proves his Divine original, is taken from the Divine operations he performed; for, saith he, ver. 37, 38. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not (when I thus say he is my Father); but if I do (them), though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know and believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: as if he should have said, You might have some reason to say I blaspheme, in saying I am so the Son of God, and he is so my Father, as that I and the Father are one, and so as no other person can style God Father, or say, he is his Son, if I did not those Divine works which no other person ever did, and which demonstrate the Father is so in me, as in no other person; but seeing I do those works of omnipotency, which shew I am invested with the same power with the Father, you have no reason to imagine I blaspheme in saying, I am the Son of God, and therefore call him Father, because the Father is in me, and I and the Father are one.

CHAP. XI.

1. NOW a certain man was sick, (to wit) [1] Lazarus, of Bethany, (which was) the town of Mary and her sister Martha.

2. (And) it was [2] that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair (as we shall shew presently), whose brother Lazarus was sick.

3. Therefore his sisters sent to him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

4. When Jesus heard that, he said (to his disciples), This sickness is not to (a lasting) [3] death, but for the (manifestation of the) glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5. Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus (which made him the more willing to gratify his sisters).

6. When he had heard therefore that he was sick (that God's glory might be more conspicuous in his recovery), he [4] abode two days still in the same place where he was.

7. Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let us go into Judea again.

8. His disciples say to him, Master, the Jews of late (Gr. but now) sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither again?

9. Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walketh in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth (the sun, which is) the light of this world.

10. But if any man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him: (now my day and hour still last, ix. 4. so that by my wonted prudence I shall still escape their malice, till the night of my passion cometh.)

11. These things said he: and after that he said to them, Our friend Lazarus [5] sleepeth (i. e. is dead); but I go, that I may awake him ont of (the) sleep (of death).

12. Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

13. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of his taking rest in sleep.

14. Then said Jesus to them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15. And [6] I am glad for your sakes that I was not there (before), to the intent (that, through the miracle of his resurrection,) ye may believe (more firmly); nevertheless, (though he be dead) let us go to him.

16. Then said Thomas, who was called Didymus, to his fellow-disciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him, (for that we may expect by going thither again, ver. 8.)

17. Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

18. Now Bethany was nigh to Jerusalem, (being only) about fifteen furlongs off (from it):

19. And many of the Jews came (thence) to [7] Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20. Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21. Then said Martha to Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22. But (and) [8] I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee (though it be the raising him from the dead).

23. Jesus saith unto her, Thy [9] brother shall rise again.

24. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again at the resurrection at the last day.

25. Jesus said to her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (and therefore I, who shall hereafter raise all persons to life, can raise him now):

26. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die (Gr. shall not die for ever). Believest thou this?

27. She saith to him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world (of whom we have received by tradition that he shall raise the dead).

28. And when she had so said (being sent by Christ to do so), she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29. As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came to him.

30. Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31. The Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth to the grave to weep there.

32. Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

33. When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he [10] groaned in the (his) spirit, and was troubled,

34. And said (to them), [11] Where have ye laid him? They say to him, Lord, come and see.

35. (And from the abundance of his affection to him) Jesus wept.

36. Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

37. And some of them said, Could not this man, who opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

38. Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon (the mouth of) it.

39. Jesus (then) said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith to him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead [12] four days (and so, in all likelihood, his body is now corrupted).

40. Jesus saith to her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God (manifested in raising him from the dead)?

41. Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, [13] Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me (requesting as thy prophet that this man's spirit might return unto him).

42. And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it (this), that (owning thee as the author of this miracle) they might believe that thou hast sent me.

43. And when he had thus spoken, [14] he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44. And (then) he that was dead came forth, bound hand and feet with grave-clothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith to them, [15] Loose him, and let him go.

45. Then many of the Jews which came to Mary (to comfort her), and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46. But some of them (who believed not) went their ways to the pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

47. Then gathered the chief priests and pharisees a council, saying, What do we? (Why do we suffer this person to go on without interruption?) for [16] this man doeth many miracles.

48. If (then) we let him thus alone, all men will believe in him, and (then) the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

49. And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high-priest [17] that (same) year, said to them, Ye know nothing at all (of policy),

50. Nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for (the safety of) the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51. And this spake he not (intending any such thing) of himself: [18] but being high-priest that year (in which Christ was to suffer), he (spake as one that) prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

52. And (indeed he died) not for that nation only, but that also he should [19] gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad (all the world over).

53. Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death.

54. Jesus therefore (after this resolution) [20] walked no more openly among the Jews (till his time was come); but went thence into a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

55. And the Jews' Passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the Passover, to [21] purify themselves, (either from some defilement, which was to be expiated by sacrifice, or by reason of some vow of Nazaritism, which was upon them, Acts xxi. 23.)

56. Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves as they stood in the temple, What think ye? (Is it) that he will not come to the feast?

57. Now both the chief priests and the pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he was, he should shew it (to them), that they might take him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. LAZARUS, of Bethany, the town of Mary and Martha.] i. e. In which they dwelt; as Bethsaida is styled the city of Andrew and Peter, i. 44. Grotius here conjectures, that this remarkable history of Lazarus was therefore omitted by St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, because Lazarus was then living when they wrote their Gospels; the last of them writing, saith Theophylact, within fifteen years after our Lord's ascension; whereas tradition saith,* that Lazarus lived thirty years after that he was raised from the dead: he therefore thinks they would not publish this history of him in his lifetime, lest they should provoke the Jews to cut him off; whereas, according to the earliest computation, St. John wrote his Gospel thirty-two years after our Lord's ascension, and so after the death of Lazarus. (2.) The last of these three evangelists writing but fifteen years after our Lord's ascension, might think it needless to mention a miracle concerning a person living so near Jerusalem, where there was so great a fame thereof, and so many living witnesses to attest it. St. John writing this Gospel, say the ancients, above sixty years after our Lord's ascension, when, by the death of the person, and most of the witnesses who were present at his resurrection, the memory and fame of it might be much impaired, had great reason to perpetuate the memory of it by this large rehearsal of it.

[2] Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed our Lord with ointment.] This is by most interpreters thought to be spoken of Mary Magdalene: but (1.) I find no mention in Scripture of her anointing the head or feet of Jesus, as this Mary did, (xii. 3.) Yea, when St. Luke had spoke of a woman, who anointed not our Lord's head, as this Mary did, but his feet only, (vii. 46.) he proceeds (chap. viii.) to the mention of Mary Magdalene, giving a character of her, not from what she had done to Christ, but from what he had done to her, saying, It was that Mary out of whom he had cast seven devils, (ver. 2.) which also is the character of her in St. Mark, xvi. 9. Nor seems it for our Saviour's honour to have been so conversant with one who had been a noted harlot, though she had now repented of that lewdness; or such an ardent lover of her, as he was of this Mary, (ver. 5.)

It also is to be noted, that the apostle mentions this as a thing done, before he speaks of the raising of Lazarus; not that it was done before his resurrection from the dead, as appears, xii. 3. but because it was done before he writ his Gospel, telling us when it was done in the chapter following.

[3] Ver. 4. This sickness is not πρὸς θάνατον, to death.] i. e. Lazarus is permitted to be sick by the special providence of God; not that he designs to take him out of the world by death, as he does other men, but that the Son of God might be glorified, by shewing his almighty power in raising him from the dead; by this declaring, that he hath given to the Son to have life in himself, and to quicken whom he will, (John v. 22. 26.) and therefore that he could fulfil his promise made to them that believed in him, that he would raise them up at the last day, (vi. 39, 40. 44. 54.) and so Christ expounds himself, ver. 25, 26.

[4] Ver. 6. He abode still two days in the same place.] Not coming to Bethany till Lazarus had been dead four days, (ver. 17.) not only that the miracle of his resurrection might be the greater, but also that all pretence of his being only in a deliquium might be taken away.

[5] Ver. 11. Our friend Lazarus κεκοίμηται, sleepeth.] It is not only the death of good men which is compared to or styled a sleep, as, v. g. the death of Moses, Deut. xxxi. 16. of David, 2 Sam. vii. 12. Psal. iii. 13. but the phrase is used also of bad men, who are said, ὑπνῶσαι ὕπνον αὐτῶν, to have slept their sleep, Psal. lxxvi. 5. to sleep in the dust, Dan. xii. 2. and generally of the kings of Israel and Judah, that they slept with their fathers. So the word רדם he slept, is used, saith Buxtorf, by the Talmudists and rabbins; though, saith he, it is used by them with a parti- cular respect to the bodies of pious men, whose death is but a sleep; and perhaps the ancient Jews might use this metaphor as St. Paul doth, 1 Thess. iv. 13. in opposition to the heathens, who, having no expectation of the resurrection of the body, styled death a perpetual sleep; declaring, they expected to be raised out of it as certainly as they rose from sleep; and in allusion to this metaphor, Christ here saith, I go, ἐξυπνίζειν αὐτὸν, to awake him out of sleep, i. e. to raise him from the dead.

[6] Ver. 15. I am glad that I was not there.] Who, had I been present, could not have seen my friend languishing, or resisted the importunity of his sisters to prevent his death; but now by raising him, after he hath been four days dead, shall so confirm your faith that I am the Messiah, as that you need not doubt of it when I suffer death, as knowing my power to raise others, and therefore my own body from the dead, as I have told you I both can and will do, (ii. 19. x. 18.)

[7] Ver. 19. Πρὸς τὰς περὶ Μάρθαν καὶ Μαρίαν, To Martha and Mary.] Not to those that were about them, as some render the words; for they could not come to them to comfort them concerning their brother: and this use of the word περὶ, with an article prefixed, is very common among the Greeks, in whom οἱ περὶ Πλάτωνα is Plato, οἱ περὶ Πρίαμον, Priamus, οἱ περὶ Φίλιππον καὶ Ἀλέξανδρον, Philip and Alexander. (See Stephanus's Lexicon and Budæus.)

[8] Ver. 22. And now I know, whatsoever thou asketh of God he will give it thee.] Here Woltzogenius saith, her faith was weak, in that she believed not that Christ had in himself the power of doing this miracle; and yet it is evident, that the raising one from the dead is a demonstration of a Divine power; and therefore can reside in him only, who hath the Divine essence residing in him. (See the note on v. 21.) Grotius here also saith, her faith was weak, because she only believed that Christ was prevalent with God, but not that the fulness of Divine power resided in him.

[9] Ver. 23. Thy brother shall arise.] For, (ver. 25.) I am the author of life, and of the resurrection, and therefore always can raise whom I will, when I will, from the dead; thou therefore mayest expect from my promise, that thy brother shall shortly be restored to life, and not only at the general resurrection.

[10] Ver. 33. Ἐνεβριμήσατο τῷ πνεύματι, He groaned (or was moved) in his spirit.] Whence we learn, that human affections and commotions are not to be condemned as sinful, if they do not incline us to do any thing repugnant to piety or reason, but only to express our affection to our friend, or our compassion to mankind. (See the note on Luke xxii. 43.)

[11] Ver. 34. Where have ye laid him?] This he must know, who knew all things, even the secret thoughts and affections of men; (xxi. 17.) and yet he thus asks, that he might be conducted by them to his sepulchre, that there might be no semblance of fraud or confederacy.

[12] Ver. 39. Τεταρταῖος γάρ ἐστι, He hath been dead four days.] In which time the visage of the dead began to change in those countries, and all hopes of any return to life ceased. So Dr. Lightfoot from Maimonides and the Talmudists, They go to the sepulchres, and visit the dead for three days, for so long the spirit wanders about the sepulchre; but then they certify of the dead; for after three days his countenance is changed.

[13] Ver. 41, 42. Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.] Woltzogenius saith, it follows not from these words, that Christ requested any thing of the Father; God being, by an Hebraism, said to hear them to whom he vouchsafeth any benefit, though they did not ask it; (Psal. x. 17. Isa. lxv. 24.) there being no need that Christ should request that power, which, from his unction, he always had residing in him, but only that he should thank the Father for it. But the words following, I know that thou dost hear me always, seem plainly to imply a request; not indeed that he might receive power to raise Lazarus from the dead, for that he testifies he had already, (v. 22. 26.) but that this miracle might be efficacious to confirm the faith of his apostles, and to convince the multitude, that he was a prophet sent from God, and did all things to promote his glory.

[14] Ver. 43. He cried with a loud voice.] That it might appear to all, that even the dead were subject to his voice.

[15] Ver. 44. Loose him, and let him go.] He followed not Christ, that he might not seem to carry him about in triumph with him.

[16] Ver. 47, 48. This man doeth many signs,—all men will believe on him.] For this very cause, that he did so many miracles, all salutary and tending to the good of men, and with such evidence of a Divine power, as was sufficient to draw all men to the faith, they should have owned him as the true Messiah; but the fear of the Romans induced them rather to cut him off, and by that very action they pulled that dreadful vengeance, executed by the Romans, down upon them. This is the just and usual effect of carnal policy, exalting itself against the wisdom and the counsel of God.

[17] Ver. 49. High-priest that same year.] The high-priesthood by God's institution was to continue for the term of life; but when the power was come into the hands of the Romans, they changed them at their pleasure, and so they came to be accounted such by years; yet, because this was done by a power, which they could not resist, and the high-priesthood still continued in the line of Aaron, Christ himself owns his power.

[18] Ver. 51. Being high-priest that year, he prophesied, &c.] i. e. In that year in which Christ was to suffer for the sins of the world: and he is said to prophesy, not that he designed to foretell that Christ was to suffer upon that account, but because God so overruled his tongue, as that he should speak of the expedience of procuring our Saviour's death, in such words as might be accommodated to the design of God in giving up our Saviour to the death.

[19] Ver. 52. Ἵνα τέκνα—συναγάγῃ εἰς ἕν, That he might gather together in one the children of God.] i. e. Believers: for to as many as believed in him, he gave power to become the sons of God, (i. 12.) But note, that the gentiles are here called the sons of God, not that they were so at present, but that they were by faith to be made such, as our Lord calls them sheep, who were to hear his voice, x. 16.

[20] Ver. 54. Jesus walked not openly.] Instructing us by his example, that it is lawful to avoid danger, by giving place to the fury of the enemy; and that it is wisdom to withdraw ourselves from it, rather than expose ourselves to unnecessary perils, by abiding within the reach of them, who are resolved upon our ruin.

[21] Ver. 55. Ἵνα ἁγνίσωσιν ἑαυτούς, To purify themselves.] They who committed sins, which were to be expiated by sacrifices, were not obliged to travel instantly to Jerusalem to offer them, but might defer the oblation to the next feast, at which they were obliged to be present; and they who entered on the vow of Nazarites did usually contrive it so, as that it might conclude at one of those feasts; and therefore they are said to come to Jerusalem before the feast, to purify themselves.

CHAP. XII.

1. THEN Jesus, [1] six days before the Passover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was who had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

2. There they made a [2] supper (for him); and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at table with him.

3. Then [3] took Mary (sister to Lazarus) a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4. Then saith one of his disciples, (viz.) Judas [4] Iscariot, Simon's son, which should (who was about to) betray him,

5. Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6. (And) this he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag (or common purse of Christ and his apostles), and bare what was put therein (and so out of so great a sum could have purloined much to his own use).

7. Then said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my burial hath she kept this (she hath performed this as a fit ceremony for my burial, which is nigh at hand).

8. (Nor need ye be thus solicitous) for [5] the poor, (since them) ye have always with you, (and whenever you will you may do them good, Mark xiv. 7.) but me ye have not always (and therefore she did well in taking the present opportunity of shewing her affection to me).

9. Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he (to wit, Lazarus) was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

10. But [6] the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11. Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

12. [7] On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem,

13. Took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna: blessed is (he) the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14. And Jesus, when (sending his disciples for him) he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written (of the Messiah, Zech. ix. 9.)

15. Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting upon an ass's colt.

16. These things [8] understood not his disciples (to be spoken of him) at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things to him.

17. The people therefore that were with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record (by their hosannas, that he was the Christ).

18. For this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19. The pharisees therefore said among themselves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing (by all the opposition you have made against him? for) behold, the world is gone after him.

20. And there were certain (devout) [9] Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast:

21. The same came therefore to Philip, who was of Bethsaida in Galilee (perhaps as to a person known to them, living in Syrophœnicia), and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22. Philip cometh, and [10] telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip told Jesus.

23. And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be [11] glorified (by the faith of the gentiles; but this will chiefly be after his resurrection: for,)

24. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone (without increase): but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit: (even so, after my death, shall I have much fruit among the gentiles, by my apostles sent to preach to, and to baptize, all nations.)

25. (And in this my disciples must be ready to follow my example: for) he that loveth his life (so as to reject me to preserve it) shall lose it; and he that (seemingly) hateth his life in this world (by cleaving to me, with the loss of it) shall keep it to life eternal.

26. If (therefore) any man (will) serve me, let him (take up his cross and) follow me; and (then) where I am, there shall also my servant be: (for) if any man serve me, him will my Father honour (with a crown of glory, Rev. iii. 21.)

27. Now is my [12] soul troubled (at the apprehension of what I am to suffer); and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour (this nature would prompt me to): but (this I cannot say, since) for this cause came I to this hour (that I might die for the sins of the world).

28. (I therefore choose to say,) Father, glorify thy name (by this testimony of thy love to mankind). Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, [13] I have both glorified it (by the miracles done by thee in my name), and will glorify it again (by greater miracles).

29. The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered (the voice being attended with thunder): others said, (That) an angel spake to him.

30. Jesus answered and said (to them), This voice came not because of me (to satisfy me of the Divine favour, or comfort me against the agonies of death), but for your sake (that you might believe in me).

31. Now is [14] the judgment of this world, (i. e. the time when they shall be convinced of sin, because they believe not in me, John xvi. 9. and of a future judgment; for) now shall the prince of this world be cast out (of his dominions).

32. And if (Gr. when) I be (am) [15] lifted up from the earth (upon the cross), I will draw all men (i. e. men of all nations) to (believe in) me.

33. This he said, signifying what death he should die.

34. The people answered him, [16] We have heard out of the law that Christ (and his kingdom) abideth for ever: and how sayest thou (then, That) the Son of man must be lifted up (so as to die upon the cross)? who is this Son of man (that must die, seeing it thus appeareth by the law he cannot be the Christ)?

35. Then Jesus said to them, Yet a little while (he who) is the light (of the world, is) with you. Walk (by the directions of it) while ye have the light, lest [17] darkness come upon you (and you be led by your blind guides into the ditch): for he that walketh in darkness knows not whither he goes.

36. (And, that you may thus walk) while ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be (treated, not as children of darkness cast out from, but as) the children of light (admitted to, his presence, who dwells in the light, and have the comforts and the blessings which belong to them). These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide himself from them.

37. But though he had done so many miracles before them, (yet) they believed not in him:

38. (So) [18] that (by this infidelity) the saying (Gr. the word) of Esaias the prophet might be (was) fulfilled (in them; or, this departure was to punish their blindness and hardness of heart, that the word of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled in them;) which he spake, (saying,) Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

39. (For) therefore they could not believe, because that (which) Esaias said again (was verified in them; viz.)

40. [19] He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, (or, their eyes are blinded, and their hearts are hardened, see Matt. xiii. 14. Acts xxviii. 27.) that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them.

41. These things said Esaias (in the spirit), when he saw [20] his glory (viz. the glory of Christ), and spake of him.

42. Nevertheless (this infidelity was not general, for not only among the people) but among [21] the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the pharisees they did not (openly) confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43. For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God; (i. e. they valued their reputation with men more than that honour which cometh of God only, John v. 44.)

44. Jesus (therefore) cried and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not [22] on me (only), but on him that sent me (also).

45. And he that seeth me (doing the works of God), [23] seeth (also) him that sent me.

46. I am [24] come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in me should not abide in darkness (or be ignorant of the way to happiness).

47. And if any man hear my words, and believe (them) not, [25] I judge him not (i. e. I do not now condemn him): for I came not to judge (i. e. condemn) the world, but to save the world, (John iii. 17.)

48. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day.

49. For I have not spoken of myself (without commission from above); but the Father which sent me, he gave me commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

50. And I know that (obedience to) his commandment is (the way to) life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said to me, so I speak (and he will surely condemn those, who are disobedient to his word).

ΠΡΟ ἓξ ἡμέρων τοῦ πάσχα, Six days before the Passover.] So 2 Cor. xii. 2. πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων, fourteen years since; Amos i. 1. πρὸ δύο ἐτῶν τοῦ σεισμοῦ, two years before the earthquake: so in Plutarch, πρὸ τριῶν ἐτῶν, three years before: in Numa, p. 61. in Popl. p. 101. in Rom. p. 23.

[2] Ver. 2. They made him a supper there.] This supper was different from that mentioned Matt. xxvi. 6. Mark xiv. 13. (1.) Because this was in the house of Lazarus, ver. 2. that in the house of Simon the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6. (2.) Here Mary anoints the feet of Christ, ver. 3. there a woman, not named, pours ointment on his head, Matt. xxvi. 7. (3.) This supper was six days before the Passover, ver. 1. that only two, Matt. xxvi. 2. Mark xiv. 1. and if the suppers were not the same, the Mary that anointed Christ's feet here, and the woman that anointed his head there, were not the same.

[3] Ver. 3. Mary took a pound of ointment.] Mary, the sister of Lazarus; (see the note on xi. 2.) who is never called Mary Magdalene, nor is it ever said that Christ cast seven devils out of her. That they were divers women, we learn from the Apostolical Constitutions, which say, συνῆν γὰρ ἡμῖν, Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαλήνη, καὶ Μάρθα, καὶ Μαρία, αἱ ἀδελφαὶ Λαζάρου,* there were with us, Mary Magdalene, and Martha and Mary, the sisters of Lazarus: and from Origen in these words,† The gospel saith, there came a woman having an alabaster-box of ointment, &c. not the sinner, but Mary a holy woman; Luke indeed speaks of the sinner, but Matthew, Mark, and John, speak of that Mary who was not a sinner: elsewhere he saith, There were three Maries, one of whom Matthew and Mark, another of whom Luke, and a third of whom St. John here speaks. And Basil of Seleucia in his homily on Lazarus saith, οὐκ αὐτὴ ἦν ἡ πόρνη ἡ ἐν τῷ Ματθαίῳ οὐδὲ ἡ ἐν τῷ Λουκᾷ, this was not the Mary mentioned by St. Matthew or St. Luke, for they were harlots or sinners, αὐτὴ δὲ σεμνὴ καὶ σπουδαῖα, but she was a holy and honest woman: so also say Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact, here. church, not from the evil lurking in their hearts, which we cannot discern, but from their outward profession, this qualifying Judas for the Passover, if not for the participation of the sacrament; and, (3.) that inward holiness is not necessary to render the offices belonging to the ministerial function valid and effectual: for Judas preaches Christ, and is sent out to do it with the power of healing diseases, and casting out of devils, Matt. x. 1—10. (see the note there), though he had himself a devil; (John vi. 70.) nor is he excepted when Christ saith, He that receiveth you, receiveth me.

[5] Ver. 8. You have the poor always with you, &c.] Hence it appears that the obligation of giving alms, and being charitable to the poor, hinders not our free expenses in doing honour to good men, as this woman doth here, and Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus afterward in buying spices for the interment of our Lord, (xix. 39.)

[6] Ver. 10. The chief priests consulted to kill Lazarus also.] To destroy an innocent man without any crime laid against him, only to preserve their own honour and reputation. See here the infallible sentence of the rulers of the church.

[7] Ver. 12. Τῇ ἐπαύριον, On the next day.] i. e. On the tenth day of Nisan, when the paschal lamb was taken up and reserved till the Passover, Christ, the true paschal lamb, cometh up to Jerusalem: from this to the sixteenth verse, see the note on Matt. xxi. 8—10.

[8] Ver. 16. These things understood not his disciples at the first,] To be done in completion of any prophecy concerning him; but when Jesus was advanced to the throne of his glory, and had shed upon them the Spirit of truth and illumination promised, they not only understood that these things were done according to the words of Zachary, (ix. 9.) but also that his kingdom was not to be of this world, but spiritual, or a dominion over the hearts and consciences of men, subdued to the obedience of the truth. Hence also we may learn the manner of the operation of the Holy Spirit, viz. by bringing those things to remembrance, which are requisite that we may know the truth, and be excited to perform our duty, and by enlightening thus our understandings.

[9] Ver. 20. Certain Greeks that came up to worship at the feast.] Dr. Hammond thinks these Greeks were proselytes of the gate, at least, who worshipped the God of the Jews as the creator of heaven and earth, such as were Cornelius and the treasurer of queen Candace; for these persons used to worship God in the court of the gentiles, and also to offer sacrifice to him: that such did come in Solomon's time, and would come afterward, we learn from his petition, that their prayers might be heard which they made in his temple, 1 Kings viii. 41, 42. that they offered burnt-offerings, from Josephus: for when Eleazer the zealot persuaded the priests, μηδενὸς ἀλλοφύλου δῶρον ἢ θυσίαν προσδέχεσθαι,* not to receive the gift or offering of any gentile, this (saith he) was done contrary to the ancient custom of the Jews; for the priests produced witnesses most tenacious of their rites, deposing, ὅτι πάντες οἱ πρόγονοι τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλογενῶν θυσίας ἀπεδέχοντο,† that all their ancestors received the sacrifices of other nations, and thought it absurd that the Jews only should exclude such from worshipping and sacrificing to their God. These Greeks, says Grotius, seem to have been Syrophœnicians, perhaps dwelling about Tyre and Sidon, and so might easily be acquainted with the Galileans, with whom they had commerce, and with Philip of Bethsaida, to whom they came, ver. 21.

[10] Ver. 22. Philip telleth Andrew.] Because Christ, when he sent them forth to preach, forbade them to go into the coasts of the gentiles, (Matt. x. 5.) and it was then a controversy among the Jews, whether the gentiles should be admitted to their sacra; and so they might doubt whether such uncircumcised persons were to be admitted to converse with Jesus, and consult him first before they brought them to him.

[11] Ver. 23. The hour is come that the Son of man shall be glorified.] i. e. That he, who is contemned by the Jews, his own people, to whom he was first sent, should be glorified by the gentiles.

[12] Ver. 27. Now is my soul troubled, &c.] That they might not say that he had no dread of death, or sense of pain to render sufferings distasteful to him, and so it was not to be expected that they who were deeply affected with these things should follow his example; he here shews he had the same natural concern for these things others had, only he overruled it by a desire to promote his Father's glory.

[13] Ver. 28. I have both glorified it.] By the resurrection of Lazarus, (xi. 4.) and by all the other miracles which I have given in testimony to thy mission; (ii. 11.) and I will glorify it again by thy resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of glory, (Acts iii. 13.) by the mission of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles, the witnesses of thy resurrection, (John xvi. 14.) and by giving thee a name above every name. (Eph. i. 20, 21. Phil. ii. 9, 10.)

[14] Ver. 31. Now is the judgment of this world.] i. e. Now shall they of the world be condemned, who believe not in me: (ver. 47.) so the word κρίνεσθαι imports, iii. 18, 19. xvi. 9. Now is the prince of this world cast out; so is Satan called, because he had rendered the whole world, except the Jewish nation, subject to his idolatrous worship: (see the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 4. Eph. ii. 2. vi. 12.) and he was eminently cast out by the Christians, when, through the name of Christ, they for three centuries expelled him from the temples and altars where he was worshipped, and from the bodies which he had possessed. (See the preface to the Epistles, §. 18.)

[15] Ver. 32. Ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, If I be lifted up, I will draw all men after me.] Ἐὰν here signifies when: so Deut. vii. 1. ἐὰν δὲ εἰσαγαγῃ, when the Lord hath brought you into the land; Judg. vi. 3. ἐὰν ἔσπειραν, when the Israelites sowed; ἐὰν πληρωθῶσι, when the number of thy days shall be fulfilled, 2 Sam. vii. 12. Jer. iii. 16. (See the note on Heb. iii. 7.) I will draw all men after me, by the power of my resurrection, the mission of my Spirit, the excellency of my doctrine, and the miracles which shall attend the preaching of it; I will do what is sufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me, will actually engage many throughout all the parts of the world so to do, and render them who do not inexcusable. The event shews that Christ and the Father draw many who come not to him. (See vi. 44.)

[16] Ver. 34. We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever.] That which they had learned from the prophets, they say they had heard out of the law, that word comprehending the whole Scriptures: (see xv. 25.) this they gathered partly from the prophets representing Christ's kingdom as an everlasting kingdom, Dan. vii. 14. from Ezekiel, saying, xxxvii. 25. My servant David shall be their King for ever, and of his government there shall be no end, Isa. ix. 7. and from his promise, that he would not fail David, but cause his seed to endure for ever, Psal. lxxxix. 35, 36. But then these words hinder not the truth of those things, which the same prophets had foretold, of a body prepared, in which he was to suffer, having his hands and his feet pierced, Psal. xxii. 18. xl. 6. of his giving up his life a sacrifice for sin, Isa. liii. 2. 12. or the Messiah's being cut off, Dan. ix. 26. and these prophets having spoken not only of his sufferings, but also of his resurrection, (Psal. xli. 10. Acts iii. 24.) and of his future glory, (1 Pet. i. 11.) they might easily, by comparing these things together, have removed this scruple, especially when he so oft had told them, and they so well remembered (Matt. xxvii. 63.) he had said, that after three days he would rise again.

[17] Ver. 35. Lest darkness come upon you, &c.] As it did in a wonderful manner after the light of the gospel was taken from them, they sinning then, not only against all laws civil and sacred, but even against the laws of nature in the vilest manner, as Josephus fully testifies: (see the note on Rom. ii. 1.) and from our Lord's exhortation to them here, to walk in the light, that they may be the children of the light, it is manifest Christ thought not God had then so blinded their eyes that they could not see, or so deserted them that they could not walk in the light; for if so, he could not seriously have exhorted them to walk in the light, much less to do it so that they might become the children of light: for all exhortations to do that which it is impossible for them to do, by reason of a judicial act of God upon them, must be not only vain and delusory, but also contrary to the will of God. If you here say, Christ's exhortations must be as much in vain, supposing they had by their vicious habits contracted such a blindness, that seeing they would not see, as Scripture seems to testify they had: I answer, that this follows not; that blindness being not natural, but only moral, arising from their prejudices and ill affections to the light, and so might be deposed with them. And hence we find the Scripture frequently exhorting them who in this moral sense had their eyes blinded, and their ears made deaf, to hearken, to believe, and be obedient to the truth. So Jer. vi. 10. To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, that they cannot hearken: and yet it is said, ver. 8. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; and, ver. 16. Stand ye in the way, and see, and ask ye for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest to your souls: yea, Christ himself saith, John viii. 43. Ye cannot hear my words; and yet he adds, that he came into the world, and spake unto them, that they might be saved, Luke ix. 56. John xiii. 17, 18. v. 34. and reprehends them, because they would not come to him, that they might have life, John v. 40. and that they would not be gathered by him, Luke xiii. 34. yea, the evangelist here, ver. 37. imputes it to them as their great sin, that though Christ had done so many miracles among them, they believed not in him: yea, God himself still looks upon them as persons who might believe, for this was his commandment that they should believe in him, this was the work which he expected from them, ver. 24.

[18] Ver. 38. That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled.] Because these and the following words seem to contain a very strange and uncomfortable doctrine, viz. that the infidelity even of God's own people, is to be resolved not into the perverseness of their wills, or the evil dispositions of their hearts, but into the Divine predictions, or into a judicial blindness and obduration wrought by God upon them, which renders it impossible for them to believe; therefore, for explication of them, let it be noted,

First, That our blessed Lord in the immediate precedent verses, viz. 35, 36. doth passionately exhort these very persons to believe and walk according to the light; which is a certain evidence, our Lord well knew his Father had not, by any of his actions or predictions, made it impossible for them to believe on him, or walk according to his doctrine; for if God had so blinded their eyes that they could not see the light, or so hardened their hearts that they could not embrace it, Christ would not seriously have exhorted them to believe, or walk according to it, and that so effectually, that they might become the children of light; for every exhortation to do a thing we know to be impossible must be vain: and he who, by it, seems to be desirous we should do that, which he knows we cannot, must delude us; and if he knows that God hath by some antecedent action rendered the thing impossible to be done, it must be also an exhortation repugnant to the will of God: now it is blasphemy to say the exhortations of the Son of God were vain, delusory, or contrary to his Father's will. Moreover our Saviour knew the Jews were capable of mercy and salvation by him, for he expressly says, God sent him into the world, that the world by him might be saved, John iii. 17. he makes this declaration, these things say I unto you that ye might be saved, John v. 34. and this inquiry, how oft would I have gathered you, and you would not? Luke xiii. 34. and says, ye will not come to me, that ye may have life, John v. 40. God himself would not have his words so understood, as if he were unwilling that the Jews should believe, or had by any of his actions rendered it impossible for them to do so, for this was his commandment, that they should believe on him whom he had sent, John vi. 29. and why sent he his Son to seek, and to save that which was lost, even the lost sheep of the house of Israel, had he not truly been desirous that they should believe? The evangelist also and that good Spirit by which he did indite these words did not thus understand them; for he objects this to the Jews as their great crime, ver. 37. that though Christ had done so many miracles among them, yet they believed not on him; whereas it can be no man's sin not to do what he cannot do purely by reason of the act of God. These words must therefore have some other sense, than at first view they seem to bear.

Secondly, Observe, that God's foreknowledge, sayings, and predictions, have no such influence on the will of man, as to lay on him a necessity to do what he foreknows or hath foretold he will do: for were it otherwise, (1.) all human actions must be necessary; for to that God who is omniscient, all things, both past, and present, and to come, are known: if then this knowledge of men's actions, which the Scripture so plainly doth ascribe to God, did make them necessary, all human actions must be necessary, and so the freedom of them must be overthrown. (2.) Then vice and virtue must be only empty names, we being capable of doing nothing which is blameworthy, or deserveth praise; for who can blame a person for doing only what he could not help; or judge him worthy of applause, who doth that only which he cannot avoid? And, (3.) then must all future recompences be discarded, it being visibly unjust to punish any man for that which it was never in his power to avoid; and as unreasonable to reward him for that action which cannot be praiseworthy. We know that an almighty God is able so powerfully to work upon the hearts of men, as to convert them to himself; and it is natural to conceive, that a good God is ready to do all which he sees proper for that end: since then in some regard it must be true that God would have all men to be saved, what answer can be given to that inquiry, Why are not all men actually saved? but this—that the Divine wisdom does not see it fit to lay restraints upon their actions, and to necessitate their wills to a compliance with his calls and invitations to turn to him. This answer I believe is true; but then it is an evidence that God hath never by his prescience, or his predictions, laid such restraints upon men's actions.

When then it is said here, Therefore they could not believe, because Esaias said; these words must bear this sense, Therefore they could not believe, because that was fulfilled upon them which Esaias said, or, it had happened to them as he had foretold: so xv. 24, 25. (see the note there,) They have hated me and my Father, ἀλλ' ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος, but that the word might be fulfilled; i. e. but this hath happened to, or been done by, them, that what was written in their law might be fulfilled, viz. they hated me without a cause; and this is the exposition of the Holy Ghost, who, Matt. xiii. 13, 14. saith from the mouth of Christ, Therefore speak I to them in parables, because they seeing, see not; and in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, Their eyes have they closed, &c.

[19] Ver. 40. He hath blinded their eyes.] Observe, that whereas our translation saith, He hath blinded their eyes, the word he is not in the original, which saith only thus τετύφλωκεν αὐτῶν τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, and may be rendered, malice, or wickedness, hath blinded their eyes, as we read, Wisd. ii. 21. or, (2.) the personal is here put for the impersonal, the active for the passive; i. e. He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, for, their eyes are blinded, and their hearts hardened. To give you a plain instance of like nature, Isa. xliv. 18. in our translation we read thus, He hath shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand: and yet both the Greek and Chaldee paraphrast read them thus, ἀπημαυρώθησαν, their eyes are shut and darkened, lest they should see: and that this is the true import of the prophet's words, not that God but Satan and their own evil dispositions had done this, is evident from this consideration; that this is spoken to the shame of them who made and worshipped senseless images, (ver. 9. 11.) and to convince them of their want of consideration, (ver. 19.) And that this must be the sense here, we learn, not only from the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Arabic, which render these words of Isaiah thus, The heart of this people is waxed gross, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes; but also from our blessed Saviour, who, Matt. xiii. 15. and from St. Paul, who, Acts xxviii. 26, 27. exactly follow this translation of the words.

[20] Ver. 41. These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, &c.] i. e. When he saw the glory of the Lord Christ, not, as some Socinians contend, of God the Father: for,

First, These words, his glory, and, he spake of him, contain two pronouns, which are not in the words of the prophet, but only of the evangelist, and so must be referred to him, of whom the evangelist here speaks; viz. to him who had done so many miracles among them, and to him, in whom they believed not, (ver. 37.) and in whom they could not believe, (ver. 39.)

Secondly, If those words, These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, are not to be understood of Christ, what use have they, or to what purpose do they here serve, there being no need to tell us, that Esaias then saw the glory of God the Father, or spake of him?

Thirdly, Socinus well observes and proves, that the apostle's words do equally relate to both the passages produced from Esaias; because he saith not this, but these things said Esaias. Now it is evident, from the apostle Paul, Rom. x. 16. citing these words, and applying them to the gospel-times, that the first testimony relates to them, and from the contents of the whole fifty-third chapter that they relate to Christ's sufferings, and his future glory, as Schlictingius here grants, and consequently the words, these things spake Esaias, must induce us to believe, that he spake also in the other passage cited from him of the glory of the same person. Schlictingius therefore answers, that the prophet, by seeing the glory of God, is said also to see the glory of Christ, which was to fill the whole earth; for then was the earth replenished with his glory, when God by him did his admirable works, when he raised him from the dead, and placed him at his own right hand, subjecting all things to his feet; when Esaias in the Spirit saw his glory, John rightly says, he saw the glory of Christ, the glory of God and of Christ being so inseparably connected, as the means to the end, that the glory of Christ directly tends to the glory of God the Father. But against this evasion, it is observable,

That the prophet, chap. liii. if he speaks at all of the glory of any person, as indeed he doth, ver. 10—12. speaks of such a one, who poured out his soul unto death, and was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many; which words cannot refer at all to God the Father.

Secondly, In the sixth chapter he speaks of one, whom he then saw sitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and whose train filled the temple, (ver. 1.) and to whom the seraphims cried, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory, (ver. 3.) He therefore speaketh not of any future glory, but of the glory he then saw, and of which the seraphims then sang. And who can reasonably think the prophet should cry out, ver. 5. Woe is me, because I have seen the King, the Lord of hosts! only because he had seen a vision of a mere man, who had as yet no being? However,

Thirdly, Seeing the prophet is so express in it, that it was Jehovah-Zebaoth, the Lord of hosts, the king Jehovah, whose glory he then saw, and of whose glory the angels then sang; and yet the evangelist declares he spake these things when he saw the glory of Christ—it follows, that Christ must be one with this Jehovah.

[21] Ver. 42. Of the chief priests many believed on him.] i. e. They were inwardly convinced he was the Christ, though they durst not openly confess this faith, lest they should be rendered infamous by being turned out of the synagogue, and so their faith was insufficient in one great requisite, confession of it being made with the mouth unto salvation. (Rom. x. 9. Matt. x. 32.)

[22] Ver. 44. Believeth not on me] Only, but in him also who hath set his seal to the testimony of me: (John iii. 33.) so the word only is to be understood, when Christ saith, He that receiveth me, receiveth not me: (Mark ix. 37.) and when St. Peter saith to Ananias, Thou hast not lied to man, but to God: (Acts v. 4.) St. Paul, He that despiseth us, despiseth not man, but God: (1 Thess. iv. 8.) and this addition is here necessary, to avoid a contradiction in these words, He that believeth in me, believeth not in me. (2.) Because Christ so expressly doth require his disciples to believe in him, saying, xiv. 1. Ye believe in God, believe also in me; it is added, He believes also in him that sent me, to express the dignity and excellency of this faith, and the dreadful effects of incredulity, since he that believes not makes God a liar. (1 John v. 10.)

[23] Ver. 45. He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me.] See the note on xiv. 9.

[24] Ver. 46. I am come a light into the world.] That he who believeth in me, and embraceth my doctrine, may not abide in darkness, i. e. in ignorance of the way of life, nor be cast out into outer darkness, as the Jews will be for their incredulity. (Matt. viii. 12.)

[25] Ver. 47, 48. I judge him not.] i. e. I pass not on him the decretory sentence here on earth, where I am to perform the office of a prophet, not a judge; (viii. 15.) yet let him know he shall hereafter be judged, and have the sentence passed upon him, according to that doctrine which I preach, and be punished by God for contempt of it, because the words I speak, I speak not of myself; but as he gave me a commandment, so I speak. Christ neither doth nor could deny that he would judge all men at the last day, because he had declared the Father had committed all judgment to the Son, (John v. 27.) and had given him power to raise them up and judge them at the last day, (ver. 26, 27.) but only doth deny that he was to assume this office whilst he was on earth.

CHAP. XIII.

1. NOW, before the feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world to the Father, having loved his own (apostles) which were in the world, [1] he loved them unto the end (or close of his life).

2. And [2] supper (time) being ended (Gr. come), (the devil having now put (it) into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him,)

3. Jesus knowing (his great dignity, in) that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was [3] come (Gr. come forth) from God, and went to God;

4. He (to shew an admirable example of humility) riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself (after the manner of a servant).

5. After that he poured water into a basin, and began to [4] wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter saith to him, Lord, dost thou (think I can suffer thee to) wash my feet?

7. Jesus answered and said to him, (For) what (end) I do (this) thou [5] knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter, (when I have performed this ceremony, ver. 12. 15.)

8. Peter saith to him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not (if thy heart and thy affections be not purified by me), thou hast no part with me (thou wilt not be fitted for my service, or receive any benefit by me).

9. Simon Peter saith to him, Lord, (if this washing be so necessary to that end, wash) not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

10. Jesus saith to him, He that is washed (i. e. truly sanctified and cleansed once) [6] needeth not, save to wash his feet (his heart and his affections), but (if he still keep them pure and rightly inclined) is clean every whit (in all his thoughts and actions proceeding from them): and ye are (in a good measure clean), but not all, (Judas being full of filthiness; this exception he made)

11. For (because) he knew who should betray him: therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

12. So after he had washed their feet, and taken his garments (which he had laid aside in order to that work), and was sat down again, he said to them, Know ye what I have done to you?

13. Ye call me [7] Master and Lord: and ye say well (i. e. what is right); for so I am.

14. If I then, (who am) your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; [8] ye also ought to wash one another's feet (i. e. to be as ready to do the meanest office to other Christians).

15. For I (by doing this) have given you an example, that ye should do (to others) as I have done to you.

16. Verily, verily, I say to you, The servant is not greater than his lord: neither (is) he that is sent greater than he that sent him (and therefore you, my servants, whom I send to preach the gospel to all nations, ought not to think it beneath you to do to others what I your Lord, from whom ye receive your commission, do to you).

17. If ye know these things, (that knowledge, without a suitable practice, will only aggravate your doom, but) happy are ye if ye do them.

18. (And when I spake of your being happy) I speak not of you all; (for) I [9] know whom I have chosen (i. e. what is the inward disposition of them): but (one of them is so disposed towards me) that the Scripture may be fulfilled, (which saith, Psal. xli. 9.) He that eateth bread with me (as my familiar friend) hath lifted up his heel against me.

19. Now I tell you (of this) before it come (to pass), that when it is come to pass, [10] ye may believe that I am he (who searcheth all hearts, and also am the Son of David, to whom these things belong.

20. And, believing this, you will see cause sufficient to go on cheerfully in my service; for) verily, verily, I say to you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send (shall be esteemed as one that) receiveth me; and he that receiveth me (as one that) receiveth him that sent me.

21. When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in (his) spirit, (partly at the apprehension of his sufferings, and partly at the vileness and pernicious consequences of the fact), and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say to you, That one of you shall betray me.

22. Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake (this).

23. Now there was leaning on Jesus's bosom one of his disciples whom Jesus loved (viz. St. John).

24. Simon Peter therefore [11] beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake.

25. He then lying on Jesus's breast, saith to him (with a low voice), Lord, who is it?

26. Jesus answered (him), He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it (in the dish). And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

27. And after the sop [12] Satan entered (more fully) into him. Then said Jesus to him, [13] What thou doest (thou mayest) do quickly (as soon as thou wilt, for I am ready to suffer).

28. Now no man at the table (save St. John) knew for what intent he spake this to him.

29. For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said to him, Buy those things that we have need of against the (paschal) feast; or, that he should [14] give something to the poor.

30. He then, having received the sop, went immediately out (to accomplish his design): and it was night (when he did so).

31. Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, [15] Now is the Son of man (to suffer, and then to be) glorified, (Luke xxiv. 26. Heb. ii. 9.) and God is (to be) glorified in him (thus suffering for the salvation of mankind).

32. [16] If God be glorified in (and by) him, God shall also glorify him in himself, (by committing all things to his hands, and seating him at the right hand of majesty and power, John xvii. 5.) and shall straightway (thus) glorify him.

33. Little children, yet a little [17] while I am with you. (And then) ye shall seek me: and as I said (before) to the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you, (ye cannot come now till your work on earth be finished, ver. 36. and I have prepared mansions in heaven for you, John xiv. 2.)

34. A new commandment I give to you (to be continually observed by all my disciples), That ye love one another (after my example, who lay down my life for you, requiring) [18] as I have loved you, that ye also (so) love one another.

35. By [19] this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye (thus) love one another.

36. Simon Peter said to him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, [20] thou canst not follow me now (as being not yet prepared to suffer for my sake); but thou shalt follow me afterward (and suffer on the cross as I do).

37. Peter said to him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake.

38. Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say to thee, [12] The cock shall not crow (i. e. it shall not be the time of cock-crowing) till thou hast denied me thrice.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. HE loved them to the end.] i. e. To the close of his life, and shewed this affection to them by washing their feet. This passage therefore can afford no argument, that the regenerate can never fall away, because Christ speaks not of the choosing any to salvation, but only of those, whom he had chosen out of the world to be his apostles, (xv. 19.) nor of his love of them to the end of their lives, but of his own.

[2] Ver. 2. And supper being ended.] That this was not the paschal supper, but a supper they were at before the feast of the Passover, ver. 1. see fully proved in the appendix to the fourteenth chapter of St. Mark, answer to objection the second. To the arguments there offered for this purpose add, that at this supper Christ only privately discovers the traitor to St. John, (ver. 25, 26.) whereas at the paschal supper he makes him known openly to them all: (Matt. xxvi. 25. Luke xxii. 21.) here he discovers him to St. John, by giving him a sop, which he had dipped in the dish, (ver. 26.) there he discovers him to the rest by this, that his hand was with him in the dish. (Matt. xxvi. 23. Mark xiv. 20.) Against what is here said it may be objected, that Christ here saith, (ver. 38.) The cock shall not crow before thou hast denied me thrice: now this seems to have been said at Christ's last Passover. To this I answer, that when Christ said this to Peter elsewhere, he always adds the circumstance of time, either ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ νυκτὶ, the cock shall not crow this night, (Matt. xxvi. 34. Mark xiv. 30.) or σήμερον, this day; (Luke xxii. 34.) whereas here no circumstance of time is added, which makes it probable the words here were not spoken at the same time.

Secondly, The words here were spoken upon occasion of St. Peter's answer to these words of Christ, Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; (ver. 36.) but the like words in St. Matthew and St. Mark were spoken upon the occasion of our Lord's prediction, that they should all be scandalized at him that night, (Matt. xxvi. 31. Mark xiv. 27.) and in St. Luke, upon occasion of Christ's saying to Peter in particular, Satan hath desired to winnow thee, (Luke xxii. 31, 32.) which makes it farther probable, that these words here were spoken at a different time.

[3] Ver. 3. Jesus knowing, ὅτι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθε, καὶ πρὸς Θεὸν ὑπάγει, that he came out from God, and went to God.] So xvi. 28. I came out from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father. Now seeing it is certain, that he left the world, and went to the Father, by ascending from the earth to the highest heavens; must not the opposition require, that he came out from the Father into the world, by coming from heaven to earth? For these two are opposite by commutation of terms: the term from which in the one, being the term to which in the other; which opposition is wholly lost, by saying, with the Socinians, that Christ is said to come forth from God, or from the Father, only because he came as his legate or ambassador, and was made known to the world by his credentials, the miracles done by him in his Father's name. Moreover, according to this exposition, the opposite term, his going to God, and to the Father, must import his ceasing to be his legate, or to make himself known by the miracles done by a power derived from his Father; whereas he, after his ascension, made himself still thus more known to the world. Add to this, that the prophets of old, and Moses especially, were God's messengers, and made themselves known to the world by miracles done by God, as their credentials, and so were after them the apostles in like manner the legates and ambassadors of God and Christ; but yet it never was nor could be said of them, or any of them, I went forth from God, and from the Father, and came into the world; which shews, this phrase is proper to our Lord; and so the reason of it must be peculiar to him alone.

Obj. 1. The apostles believed, that Christ came forth from God, (John xvi. 30. xvii. 8.) but yet they believed not that he had a Divine essence.

Ans. What reason have the Socinians to say this so confidently of the apostles, who not only saw him do such mighty miracles, as argued a Divine power in him, and whom he charges so often to believe, that he was in the Father, and the Father in him, but also did themselves cast out devils, and heal diseases in his name throughout Judea, when he was absent from them: this being a proof to them, that he, though absent from them in body, was always present with them by his power? What reason have they to conclude this from the places cited, since in the first, they argue thus from his omniscience, an attribute inseparable from the Divine nature, saying, Now we perceive that thou knowest all things; and ἐν τούτῳ, by this we believe thou camest forth from God: in the second, they hear him saying, Father, glorify me with the glory I had with thee before the world was, ver. 5. and, ver. 7. are said to know, that all things which the Father had given him, even the power to do and know all things, were of God; and thence are said to know, that he truly or indeed came from God.

Obj. 2. But how can God be said to come from God into the world, when he is always in the heavens; or, to leave the world, and go to the Father?

Ans. 1. To this our Saviour partly himself answers, by saying, that he was in heaven, even then when he says, he came down from heaven. (See the note on iii. 13.)

2. I have observed, note on iii. 13. that as to his Divine nature, he is said to descend from heaven, not by a local descent, or by quitting heaven, but only by the manifestation of himself upon earth; and in this sense God himself is often said to descend from heaven, when by any Divine work done on earth he demonstrates his presence there: and he is also said to ascend again into heaven afterward. Why therefore may not God the Word be said to descend from heaven, and even dwell with men, as God is said to dwell in the tabernacle and in the temple, when the Logos dwelt in the human nature upon earth, and manifested his glory in it; and also to leave the world, and go to the Father, not only as properly doing this by the exaltation of the human nature, but as doing all his Divine works now from heaven, where he sits in the majesty and glory of the Father?

[4] Ver. 5. And he began to wash his disciples' feet.] Great is this instance of humility, if we consider (1.) the dignity of the person expressed in the foregoing words; (2.) the action itself, with the circumstances of it: for (1.) Christ lays aside his garment, and he girds himself, as Philo saith servants used to do when they ministered to their masters. (2.) He actually washed his disciples' feet, which also servants did to their masters when they came from a journey, to cleanse them from the dirt, and to refresh them; (1 Tim. v. 10.) according to those words of Abigail to David, Let me be a servant to wash the feet of my lord; (1 Sam. xxv. 41.) and which superiors did not do to inferiors. (See Dr. Lightfoot on the place.)

[5] Ver. 7. What I do, thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.] After the ceremony is finished, I shall tell thee, it was intended as an example of that humility, which I would have you shew, in ministering to the meanest Christians; though you in station and office be superior to them. It farther may be gathered from those words, ver. 8. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me, or, wilt receive no benefit by me; and from the purity, mentioned ver. 10. that Christ intended also by this rite, that purity of mind and of affection, which he required of all those who belonged to him, and which he would increase in them by his word and Spirit, (Eph. v. 26.) and which in Scripture was usually represented by washing and pouring of water, as in those words, Isa. i. 17. Wash ye, καθαροὶ γίνεσθε, be ye clean; and in that promise, Ezek. xxxvi. 35. I will pour clean water upon you, καὶ καθαρισθήσεται, and ye shall be cleansed from your iniquities.

[6] Ver. 10. Needeth not, save to wash his feet.] Because they only gather dirt and gravel in a journey. So in the metaphor, in our travel through the world, all the defilement we contract arises from our misplaced or our immoderate affections, love, desire, fear, aversion, hatred. The Jewish priests were to wash their hands as well as feet when they offered sacrifice to God, (Exod. xxx. 19.) because their hands were chiefly employed in that work, and so their hands unwashed were said to be unconsecrated, common or unclean. (Maimonides tr. de Ædif. Templi, cap. 1. §. 6. et tr. 3. cap. 5. §. 1.) The apostles are required only to wash their feet, their business being to travel through the world, preaching the gospel. Note also, that Christ washed the feet of Judas; for he was present at this rite, and is not said to be excepted: only Christ here saith, this washing did not make him clean.

[7] Ver. 13. Ye call me Master and Lord.] Your Master by teaching, and your Lord by commanding: so Grotius. But ὁ Κύριος, the word Lord here seems to import the Lord from heaven, (ver. 1.) or him, who is Lord of all; in which sense, to us Christians, there is but one Lord. (Acts ii. 36. 1 Cor. viii. 6.)

[8] Ver. 14. Ye ought to wash one another's feet.] Not in the literal sense, by doing this once a year; but in the spiritual, by being always ready to do any service, by which we may promote the welfare, and advance the purity, of any member of the church: for the servant is not above his lord.

[9] Ver. 18. I know whom I have chosen.] Christ speaks not here of an election to faith, and by it to salvation; that being constantly in Scripture ascribed to God the Father, not to Christ acting as his prophet, but of being chosen to the office of an apostle; nor does he intend here to say, that he had chosen some of his apostles, and not others: for he owns that he had chosen Judas, by saying, Have I not chosen twelve, and one of them is a devil? (vi. 70.) The import of these words seems therefore to be this—I know the temper and disposition of them whom I have chosen, and what I may expect from one of them; for which cause I said, You are not all clean; but God in his wisdom hath permitted this, that as Ahithophel betrayed David, though he was his familiar friend; so Judas, my familiar at my table, might betray the Son of God; and so the words recorded, Psal. xli. 9. might be fulfilled in him also, of whom king David was the type.

Hath lifted up τὴν πτέρναν αὐτοῦ, his heel against me.] Theophylact here notes, that this is a metaphor taken ἀπὸ τῶν παλαιόντων, from wrestlers; others from racers, who following others, endeavour to trip up their heels, and throw them down: so Esau said of Jacob, who had his name from the word Akab, here used, Is he not rightly called Jacob, ἐπτέρνικε γάρ με, for he hath tripped up my heels, or overthrown me, twice? Gen. xxvii. 36. and Jer. ix. 4. Every brother will supplant, πτέρνῃ πτερνιεῖ, he with his heel will trip up his brother's heels.

[10] Ver. 19. That when it comes to pass, ye may believe, ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι, that I am.] Not only that I am the Christ, as viii. 24. but also, that I am he, who searcheth the hearts, and knows things future and contingent, which is the property of God alone; (1 Kings viii. 30. Isa. xli. 22, 23.) and so believing in me, may believe also in him that sent me, ver. 20. (See Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 24. Simon Peter beckons to him that he should ask.] That all mentioned from this to the twenty-seventh verse was done secretly; Simon only nodding to John, he speaking to Christ only in his ear, and Christ so answering, that he only understood his words; is plain from this, that no man at the table knew for what intent Christ said to Judas, What thou doest, do quickly, save St. John, ver. 27.

[12] Ver. 27. Satan entered into him.] Non secundum substantiam sed secundum operationem, saith St. Jerome; i. e. not as to the substance, but as to the operation, as he is said to do, when the will is fully inclined to obey his motions, and we do not resist them: but of this, see the note on Luke xxii. 3.

[13] What thou doest, do quickly.] This is not a command to Judas to go on with his wicked enterprise, but only a declaration made by Christ of his readiness to suffer death, as in the paraphrase. So Ezek. xx. 39. Go ye, serve ye every one his idols.

[14] Ver. 29. That he should give something to the poor.] This charity seems to be the proper business at a feast, Esther ix. 22.

[15] Ver. 31. Now is the Son of man glorified, &c.] The context seemeth to require the sense given in the paraphrase: and then the passive aorist is put for the future, as οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ, will he not come? xi. 56. ἐβλήθη, he shall be cast out, xv. 6. (See Glass. de Verbo, can. 47.) Or else the sense may be given thus, Hitherto hath the Son of man been glorified by his doctrine and his miracles, by which he hath fully proved his mission; and God hath been glorified by them both; he having still done and spoken them in his Father's name. (See Examen Millii.)

[16] Ver. 32. If God be glorified in him, God will glorify him, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himself.] By signs done in the heaven and the earth, which shall force men to say even at his death, Truly this was the Son of God, (Matt. xxvii. 45. 51. 54.) by his glorious resurrection and ascension, and session at his own right hand, by giving him all power in heaven and earth, and a name above every name. (Phil. ii. 9.) And this he will presently begin to do: so that you seeing such admirable circumstances of my passion, and such a glorious issue of it, may go on cheerfully in preaching my gospel, expecting my power to assist you in the work, and a full reward of all your sufferings for my sake.

[17] Ver. 33. Yet a little while am I with you.] i. e. By my bodily presence; for he had promised to abide for ever with them by his Spirit, (xiv. 16.) and his Divine presence. (Matt. xxviii. 20.)

[18] Ver. 34. As I have loved you.] Even to the shedding of my blood for you, and even for mine enemies; not with respect to any merit on their part, or any advantage on mine, but out of pure affection to their souls: this is the love you are to imitate in your affection one to another.

[19] Ver. 35. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples.] The disciples of the Baptist were known by the austerity of their lives; the disciples of the pharisees by their habit and separation from other men; Christ will have his disciples known by their profound affection to each other, which in the primitive ages was so great, that it made the heathens* with admiration to cry out, "Vide ut invicem se diligunt," See how they love one another; and even to hate and envy them for their brotherly affection. Hence Julian proposes them to the heathens as a fit pattern for their imitation.

[20] Ver. 36. Thou canst not follow me now.] i. e. In my sufferings, till by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon thee thou art strengthened.

[21] Ver. 38. Before the cock crow.] viz. In the morning, styled emphatically, the cock-crowing. (See the note on Matt. xxvi. 34.)

CHAP. XIV.

1. LET not your hearts be troubled: [1] ye believe in God, believe also in me, (who am one with the Father, and to whom all power is committed: see John x. 30. 38.)

2. In my Father's house are many [2] mansions (sufficient to receive you, and all that believe in me, to eternal life): if it were not so, I would have told you, (that no such mansions were to be expected; but now) I go [3] to prepare a place for you.

3. And if I go and prepare (when I shall have gone and prepared) a place for you, [4] I will come again, and receive you to myself; that where I am, (there) ye may be also.

4. And whither I go ye know (for I have told you I go to my Father), and the way ye know (for I am the way, ver. 6. and the teacher of it; by observing whose words you will come to me).

5. Thomas saith to him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how (then) can we know the way (to thee)?

6. Jesus saith to him, [5] I am the way, and the truth, and the life (by teaching that way of saving truth which leadeth to life eternal): no man cometh to the Father, but by (faith in) me (and by observance of my word).

7. [6] If ye had (fully) known me, ye should have known my Father also (who is in me, and is made visible by his works done by me): and from henceforth (from the time I have been with you) ye (have) know (n) him (by his word), and have seen him (by his works).

* Tertul. Apol. cap. 39. "Sic mutuo, quod doletis, amore diligimus. Sic nos, quod invidetis, fratres vocamus." Minutius, p. 35, 36.

8. Philip saith to him, Lord, shew us the Father (as he was seen by Moses and the Israelites, at the giving of the law, in glorious symbols of his presence), and it sufficeth us.

9. Jesus saith to him, Have I been so long with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen (in me the works of) the Father (by which only he is visible); and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father (as if thou hadst not seen him, or could see him otherwise)?

10. Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me (by his Spirit enabling me to speak the words and do the works of God)? the words that I speak to you I speak not of myself: (see note on viii. 14.) but the Father, that dwelleth in me (by the Spirit, John iii. 34.) he doeth the works (by which my prophetic office is confirmed).

11. Believe me that I am (thus) in the Father, and the Father in me; or else (if thou believest not for my own sake) believe me for the very works' sake (which are done by the power and spirit of the Father).

12. Verily, verily, I say to you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; [7] and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father (to send the Holy Ghost to enable them to do them).

13. And [8] whatsoever ye shall ask in my name (for the promotion of the gospel), that will I (thus enable you to) do, that the Father may be glorified in (by) the Son (sending the Holy Ghost upon you from the Father).

14. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

15. If ye love me, (express the sincerity of that love, so as to) keep my commandments:

16. And (then) I will pray the Father, and he shall give you [9] another Comforter (even the Holy Ghost), that he may abide with you (and those that shall succeed you) for ever;

17. Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him (they having no experience of his presence with them, or of his sanctifying operations on them, by which alone he can be seen or known; for being a holy Spirit, he cannot abide with unholy souls): but ye (who are sanctified by him) know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

18. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you (by his Spirit).

19. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye (shall) see me, (i. e. shall find experimentally my presence with you; for) [10] because I live, ye (in the midst of all the perils and prosecutions of the world) shall live also. (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11.)

20. [11] At that day (that I send this Comforter) ye shall know that I am in my Father (by receiving this Spirit from him), and ye in me, and I in you (by this Spirit communicated from me your head, to unite you my members to me).

21. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, [12] and will manifest myself to him (by the presence and illuminations of this Spirit of truth).

22. Judas saith to him, not (he that was named) Iscariot, Lord (seeing thou art to be a glorious King over us and all the nations of the world), [13] how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not to the world?

23. Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words; and (then) my Father will love him, [14] and we will come to him, and make our abode with him (by the Spirit of the Father and the Son dwelling in him).

24. He that loveth me not (as the world doth not) keepeth not my sayings (and so can neither know me nor my Father), and (so cannot be loved by us; for) the word which you hear is not (originally) mine, but the Father's which sent me (and it is only obedience to it that procures his and my love).

25. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26. But the [15] Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name (i. e. as my Spirit, to act in my name and for my honour), he shall teach you all things (which are requisite to be known by you, and taught to others), and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said to you.

27. [16] Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you (by giving you that Spirit whose fruits are joy and peace): not as the world giveth (peace, when they part from their friends, by wishing to them that peace which they do not heartily desire, or are not able to impart), give I (it) to you, (but effectually; and therefore) let not your heart be troubled (at my departure), neither let it be afraid (what may befal you when I am gone).

28. Ye have heard how I said to you, I go away, and come again to you (but for a little while). If you loved me (and my advancement as affectionately and wisely as ye ought to do), ye would rejoice, because I said, I go to the Father: for [17] my Father is greater than I.

29. And [18] now I have told you before it come to pass, (that I am going to the Father to send the Comforter to you), that, when it is come to pass, ye might (have greater reason to) believe (in me).

30. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for [19] the prince of this world (Satan) cometh (by his agents, the rulers of the Jews, to take away my life), and hath nothing in me, (no power over me to inflict death upon me on the account of sin, as he hath over others, Heb. ii. 14.)

31. But (I give up myself to the death in compliance with my Father's will, John x. 18.) that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise (therefore), let us go hence.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΙΣΤΕΥΕΤΕ εἰς τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ εἰς ἐμὲ πιστεύετε, Ye believe in God, believe also in me.] There being no example I can find, where the same word in the same sentence is used both in the indicative and the imperative mood; I had rather render these words in the same mood thus, Believe in God, believe also in me: i. e. That I may prescribe a remedy to that trouble, which hath seized your hearts from the consideration of my passion, and my departure from you, and of the troubles you must expect in the execution of your office; I advise you to believe in God, the author of that doctrine you are to preach, and therefore the defender of those who propagate it; and in me, in whose name you are to preach it, as having all power in heaven and in earth, and being always present with you, and therefore being able to assist and preserve you from all dangers, and to reward your faithful labours with that crown of glory I have promised.

[2] Ver. 2. In my Father's house are many mansions.] In which, after your labours, you shall find eternal rest. So the Jews say, that in Paradise are seven mansions, which are each twelve thousand miles long, ten thousand broad, and as many high: so Moses Haddarson in Gen. ii. 9.

[3] I go to prepare a place for you.] For Christ by his entrance with his sacrifice into heaven, procured for us an entrance into that place, which before was inaccessible, or a new living way of entering through the veil rent for us at his death, he preparing these mansions for us by his own entrance first into heaven with his sacrifice: see the notes on Heb. ix. 8. 23, 24. x. 20.

[4] Ver. 3. I come again, and will receive you to myself.] i. e. Into those mansions, that then you may be for ever with me, and be made partakers of that happiness I there enjoy. Whence it seems probable, that all the saints, the blessed apostles not excepted, are only to be crowned at the same time, to wit, at our Lord's second advent: (see the note on Heb. xi. 40.) and observe, that ἐὰν δὲ here is to be rendered, when I come again. (See the note on Heb. iii. 7.)

[5] Ver. 6. I am the way, the truth, and the life.] The author of the way that leadeth to life; the teacher of that truth which directs to it; the giver of that life, which is to be obtained by walking in it. And this life consists in the vision or enjoyment of the Father, to whom none cometh but by faith in me, ver. 6.

[6] Ver. 7. If ye had known me, ye would have known the Father also.] Note, that Christ here speaks not of the knowledge of his Father's essence, (1.) because that is not to be seen, as here the Father is said to be, ver. 9. (2.) Because the reason here assigned of this knowledge, is, that Christ spake not from himself, but from the Father; and so the Father was to be known by what he taught. (3.) He adds, that the works he did, were done by the power of the Father abiding in him; and so the power and other attributes of the Father might be seen by them; his goodness and mercy by the kindness and mercy shewed in all his wisdom, righteousness, and holiness, in the purity of his doctrine. In me, saith he, speaking my Father's words, ye do already know him, i. e. his sacred will: in me, doing my Father's works, ye see him, viz. his attributes; and of my ability to do them, you cannot well doubt: for I am in the Father, and the Father in me, by virtue of his Spirit residing in me; so that I both perfectly know his will, and can do the most mighty works by this power of the Most High. (Luke i. 35.)

[7] Ver. 12. And shall do greater works than these, because I go to the Father.] That which interpreters here say of diseases healed by the shadow of Peter, and by napkins sent from St. Paul, and of more miracles performed throughout the world, and devils ejected through three whole centuries every where, is not unfitly mentioned here, as answering to these words; but yet I think, this chiefly is to be referred to the admirable success of the gospel, preached by the apostles after the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them; and the inward gifts of tongues, and the interpretation of them; of prophecy, and discerning of spirits, and the imparting of these gifts to others by baptism, and the imposition of the apostles' hands: for as this was a greater work in our Lord Jesus thus to assist so many with his mighty power, when absent at so great a distance, as is earth from heaven, than to do miracles in their presence; so to communicate these inward gifts to men, and to enable them to transfer them to others upon faith in Christ, is truly wonderful: for, as Arnobius saith, * Transcribere in alium jus tuum, et quod facere solus possis, fragilissimæ rei donare et participare faciendum, super omnia sitæ est potestatis, continentisque sub se omnium rerum causas, et rationum facultatumque naturas. But more especially, when he himself succeeded so little in three years' preaching here on earth, and had so few sincere disciples, that he should enable his apostles at one sermon to convert some thousands, and cause his gospel to fly like lightning through the world, and beat down all strong holds of opposition, this is truly admirable. That to these fruits of the mission of the Holy Ghost these words do principally relate, appeareth from the reason of them here assigned, Because I go to the Father; viz. to send that Holy Spirit down upon you, by whom these greater works are to be done.

[8] Ver. 13. And whatsoever you shall ask in my name, I will do.] Here Christ shews how these great works should be done by them, viz. not by their own power, or any Divine virtue residing in them, as our Lord did his; but in the name and by the power of Christ, (Acts iii. 12. 16.) by faith in him, and prayer to God in his name, (Acts iv. 24. 30.) Note also here that Christ saith, Whatever ye shall thus ask I will do; which, as it supposes in him omniscience, enabling him to know the request of all Christians upon earth, and omnipotence, enabling him to assist them every where in the performance of the greatest works, so must it consequently imply unity of essence betwixt the Father and the Son, and so the Father is glorified in the Son. Hence what is here, I will do, is, xvi. 23. the Father will give you. Note also, that whereas the Jews used to beg a blessing for the Father's sake, or for the sake of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, though being only men they never prayed to them, the Christians not only prayed to the Father in the name of the Son, but invoked the Son also, as being one God with the Father; this being a periphrasis of Christians, that they were those who called upon the name of Christ, Acts ix. 14. 21. (See note on Rom. x. 13.) And this seems here to be mentioned to confirm their faith in him, that he who so loved them had power to do all things for them.

[9] Ver. 16. Another Comforter.] See note on xvi. 7.

[10] Ver. 19. Because I live, ye shall live also.] By virtue of this promise, though the apostles were always delivered up to death for the sake of Jesus, yet was the life of Christ manifested in their mortal flesh, by preserving them, and delivering them from so many deaths; (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11.) and they are said to live by and with him, (2 Cor. xiii. 4.) by virtue of that miraculous power he conferred upon them for the promotion of the gospel. (2 Cor. iv. 7. x. 4. xii. 10.)

[11] Ver. 20. In that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you.] It is certain that Christ was in his apostles by his Spirit abiding with them, (ver. 16.) and that they were in him by the same Spirit uniting them to their head Christ; (Eph. ii. 22. iii. 16, 17. iv. 16.)

* Arnob. lib. i. p. 31.

and therefore Christ must be here said to be in the Father by the Spirit of the Father residing in him, but with this difference—that the Spirit of the Father resided in Christ without measure, (iii. 34.) and so that all that was the Father's was also Christ's, (xvi. 15.) his wisdom and his power; whereas he was in the apostles only by the gifts conferred upon them, according to the measure of the gift of Christ. (2.) He was in Christ, as Justin Martyr notes, not for indigence, but partly because the nature of his prophetic office did so require, and partly to be derived from him as the fountain upon all his members; but he was given to them because they wanted his assistance to fit them to be able ministers of the new testament. (2 Cor. iii. 5, 6.) Theophylact observes, that we must not say, that this is so in the same manner; for Christ is in the Father, ὡς ὁμοούσιος, as being of one substance with him, but in the apostles only, ὡς βοηθὸς καὶ συνεργὸς, as a helper and coworker with them: but perhaps the apostles understood Christ thus; I as a prophet work miracles by the Spirit of my Father dwelling in me, (Matt. xii. 28.) and you shall work yours, (mentioned ver. 12.) by my Spirit abiding with you, (ver. 16.)

[12] Ver. 21. And will manifest myself to him.] As in the paraphrase, so also by those miraculous works which shall demonstrate my presence with him. This presence he promiseth to his disciples, Matt. xxviii. 20. Mark xvi. 17, 18. and made good by his powerful Spirit with his church, 1 Cor. v. 4. 2 Cor. xiii. 3—5.

[13] Ver. 22. How is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not to the world?] This question seems to be put to Christ according to that known opinion of the Jews, that the kingdom of Christ was to be an earthly dominion over the whole world, appearing with great outward splendour, or with observation: (Luke xvii. 20.) so that the Jews under their Messiah should lord it over the whole earth, and so he should manifest himself to the whole world. So Josephus* speaks of an ambiguous oracle among them, declaring that about that time, ἀπὸ τῆς χώρας τὶς ἐκείνων ἄρξει τῆς οἰκουμένης, one of their country should reign over the whole earth, and that many of their own wise men did so interpret it. So Origen† tells us they expected, μέγαν καὶ δυνάστην, καὶ πάσης τῆς γῆς, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐθνων Κύριον εἶναι, that their Messiah should be a great potentate, and the lord of the whole earth, and of all nations. And Trypho,‡ in his dialogue with Justin Martyr, saith the same.

[14] Ver. 23. And we will come to him, and take up our abode with him.] By that Spirit whose temple is the body of the saints, (1 Cor. iii. 16. vi. 13.) and by whose indwelling they are made a habitation of God: (Eph. ii. 22.) here therefore is no express mention made of the Holy Spirit, because by him it is that the Father and the Son dwell in us; and so it is in the beginning of the Epistles, praying for grace and peace from the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, because this grace and peace was to be conferred on men by the Spirit.

[15] Ver. 26. But the Comforter, whom the Father will send in my name.] Whom I will send you from the Father: (John xv. 26. xvi. 7.) he proceeding from the Father and the Son, him the Father shed forth according to his promise, Acts ii. 17, 18. the Son, ver. 33. Hence is he styled the Spirit of the Father, Matt. x. 20. and the Spirit of the Son, Gal. iv. 6. the Spirit of Christ, 1 Pet. i. 11. Rom. viii. 9. Phil. i. 19.

[16] Ver. 27. Peace I leave with you, not as the world,] In empty wishes of what they neither do nor can give; nor that external peace, which is both temporary and uncertain; but inward peace of conscience arising from the pardon of your sins, (Rom. v. 1.) from the sense of the favour of God, and of my presence with you by the Spirit, that peace, which no man can take from you, (xvi. 22.) that peace, which passeth understanding, which will keep your hearts in the faith, (Phil. iv. 7.) and free you from all solicitude and fear of the world.

[17] Ver. 28. For my Father is greater than I.] This (saith Woltzogenius) is a demonstration that Christ is not the true God, than whom none is or can be greater. But the primitive fathers did not allow that there was any strength in this argument; for they granted that there was one God the Father, who was over all, and yet that Christ with the Father was the God of the living, as having in all things the excellency or sovereignty of the Father, saith Irenæus.* They therefore owned that the Father was greater than the Son, as to his original, the Son being begotten by him, and yet declared that he was God, and equal to God, as to his essence, as Tertullian† and Novatian‡ teach. So then we may grant, as to the Divine nature, that as to the dependance on the Father it is less, i. e. as it is received dependantly from the Father, for greater is he that gives than he that receives; and yet, as to essence, they are both one God, and so equal, ὡς αἴτιος καὶ ἀρχὴ οὐ κατὰ φύσιν, Athan. Naz. Basil.

Add to this, that the argument produced to prove that Christ speaks not of his human nature, viz. because none could doubt but that God is greater than man, proves as effectually, that Christ could not be only man, because then none could doubt but God was greater than he; nor is any such comparison, as to greatness, to be found in Scripture betwixt God and mere man.

[18] Ver. 29. And now I have told you before it come to pass.] viz. Of my ascent into heaven, and of the mission of the Holy Ghost, that when you have received this Spirit you more firmly may believe, I am the Son of God, invested with all power in heaven and earth.

[19] Ver. 30. The prince of this world cometh.] By his ministers, Judas and the rulers of the Jews, and findeth nothing in me; he himself having no power to inflict death on me, in whom is no sin, and they finding nothing in me worthy of death. (Acts xiii. 28.) Though therefore I am to suffer death, I do not suffer for any fault that can deserve it, or on account of any power he or his ministers have over me to inflict it, but I give up myself to the death in compliance with my Father's will, that the world may

CHAP. XV.

1. [1] I AM the true vine (which gives juice and nourishment to every branch belonging to me), and my Father is (as) the husbandman, (who prunes and cleanses the branches of this vine, to render them more fruitful; and therefore)

2. [2] Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away (i. e. every professor of faith in me that is unfruitful); [3] and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it (from all those suckers that hinder the growth of the fruit, or make it less), that it may bring forth more fruit.

3. Now (thus it is with you, for) ye are clean through the word which I have spoken to you.

4. [4] Abide in me, and I (will abide) in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more (Gr. so neither) can you, except you abide in me (by faith).

5. I am the vine, ye are the branches (which receive nourishment from the vine, and become fruitful by it): he that abideth in me (by faith), and I in him (by the Spirit), the same bringeth forth much fruit: for [5] without me (abiding thus in you) ye can do nothing.

6. If a man abide not in me, he is [6] cast forth as a branch, and (that) is withered; and men gather them (or, and is gathered), and cast (them) into the fire, and they are burned (Gr. καὶ καίεται, and is burned).

7. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you (so that ye yield obedience to them), [7] ye shall ask what ye will (in my name, and for the glory of God), and it shall be done to you.

8. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, (καὶ, and) [8] so shall ye (appear to) be my disciples.

9. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

10. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even [9] as I (his prophet) have kept my Father's commandments (doing all he sent me to do), and (so) abide in his love.

11. These things have I spoken to you (of my abode in you by the Spirit, and your abiding in my words), that (through the comforts of this Spirit) [10] my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

12. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, [11] as I have loved you (to the end, John xiii. 1. and with a most fervent love).

13. Greater love hath no man [12] than this, that a man [13] lay down his life for his friends, (and this love will I shew to you acting as my friends, and expect you should imitate it.

14. Now) ye are my [14] friends (and shall receive the tokens of my love as such), if ye do whatsoever I command you.

15. (And therefore) henceforth I call you not [15] servants (nor treat you as such); for the servant (usually) knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called (and treated) you (as) friends; [16] for all things that I have heard (i. e. received) of my Father (to impart to you) I have made known to you.

16. You have not chosen me, but [17] I have chosen you (first), and ordained (i. e. appointed) you, that ye should go (abroad into the world) and bring forth (much) fruit (by converting many to the faith), and that your fruit should remain (in a succession of Christians to the world's end): and (that being thus employed in my service), whatsoever (in pursuance of that work) ye shall ask the Father in my name, he may give it you.

17. These things I (especially) command you, that ye (moved by my example, and by these tokens of my love, may be induced to) love one another.

18. If the [18] world hate you, (let this give you no discouragement in the performance of your office, since it will be only with you as it hath been with me doing the same work, for) ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19. If ye were of the world (conforming yourselves to it in your life and doctrine), the world would love his own (men like to them); but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world (to lead a life and preach a doctrine opposite to the vices of it), therefore the world hateth you.

20. (But) remember the word that I said to you, (viz.) The servant is not greater than the lord (and so cannot expect to be treated better). If (then) they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you (who are doing the same work); if they have (had) [19] kept my saying, they will (would) keep yours also (who speak the same things).

21. But all these things, (this hatred, ver. 19. and persecution, ver. 20.) will they do to you for my [20] name's sake, because they (after all the miracles I have wrought in his name) know not him that sent me.

22. If I had not come and spoken to them (the words of my Father), they had not had sin, (in not knowing him that sent me): but now (they have heard and rejected his word) they have no cloak (or excuse) for their sin, (it being the fruit not of their want of knowledge of my Father's will, but of their hatred to him and his word; for)

23. He that hateth me (speaking the words of God, which I have learned from my Father, John xii. 49, 50.) hateth my Father also.

24. If I had not done among them [21] the works which no man did (Gr. hath done), they had not had (the) sin (of infidelity): but now (this sin must be charged upon their hatred, for) they have both seen (the works which the Father in me hath done), and (yet have been so far from being convinced and reformed by them, that they have) hated both me (who do them) and my Father (by whose power and commission I do them).

25. But (this cometh to pass, or, this they are permitted to do) [22] that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, (Psal. xxxv. 19.) [23] They hated me without a cause.

26. But when the Comforter is come, [24] whom I will send to you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall (by his miraculous gifts) testify of me (who send him).

27. And [25] ye also shall bear witness (of me), because ye have been with me from the beginning (and saw my works).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1. I AM the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.] That vine which gives vital juice to render all my branches fruitful, and whose fruits refresh and fill their hearts with joy, as doth the fruit of the vine the body. (Judg. ix. 13. Psal. civ. 15.) Of the epithet true, see vi. 55. My father is the husbandman, who takes care of these branches, cutting off the suckers and the withered branches, pruning the vine, and purging the fruitful branches, that they may bring forth more fruit. Grotius thinks the occasion of this parable was taken from the Lord's supper he had then celebrated, or was instantly to celebrate: for as chap. vi. discoursing of his passion, he calls himself the true bread, so here he calls himself the true vine, nourishing to life eternal, with relation to that element, which was the fruit of the vine: (Luke xxii. 18.) and thus it seemed necessary to speak of the fruit of his death; because his disciples were offended at it, and their faith wavered on that account. Others think, that having spoken of Judas, as a branch not purged but withered, and fit only for the fire, (xiii. 10, 11.) he admonisheth them to be careful that they become not such branches; and as he had said there, ver. 10. so he repeats that saying here, ver. 3. ye are clean, &c.

[2] Ver. 2. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit.] These unfruitful branches are said to be in Christ, or in his church, as being by profession Christians, and by baptism admitted into the church, and owning her faith, but they are still dead branches, because unfruitful in good works; for faith without works is dead. (James ii. 26.)

[3] And every branch that bringeth forth fruit he purgeth.] In its season, or the fit time of pruning. The apostles then laboured under many infirmities and prejudices of their minds, they were weak in the faith, and understood but little of Christ's salutary passion, and the oblation of himself as a piacular victim for their sins, (Luke xviii. 34.) as judging this not well consistent with that earthly kingdom, which was fixed in their hearts; they knew nothing of the calling of the gentiles, or of God's intended kindness to them, and therefore would not preach to them without a special admonition from heaven so to do; (Acts xi. 19.) they were contending for primacy, and that out of prospect of carnal advantages: (2 Cor. v. 16.) from these and such-like infirmities, the good husbandman purged them when he shed the Holy Ghost upon them, and sent them to preach the gospel to all nations. When therefore he saith, You are now καθαροὶ clean, (ver. 3.) we must not understand this absolutely, but comparatively, in respect of those who did not believe or obey his word; and in good part, they being to be farther purged by the operation of the Holy Spirit.

[4] Ver. 4. Remain in me (by faith, love, ver. 9. and obedience, ver. 10.) κἀγὼ ἐν ὑμῖν, and I will remain in you.] By my Spirit. Here is an ellipsis of the word μενῶ, as Matt. xx. 13. To sit on my right hand—is not mine to give; but (it shall be given) to them for whom it is prepared of my Father; 2 Thess. ii. 7. He that letteth (will let) till he be taken away. (See 1 Cor. iv. 15. Gal. ii. 7.)

[5] Ver. 5. He that abideth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruit: for, χωρὶς ἐμοῦ, without me ye can do nothing.] That is, χωρὶς ἐμοῦ ὄντες, being separated from me; ver. 4. not abiding in me, ver. 6. being cast out from me. As this respects all Christians, the sense runs thus, If ye abide in me by that faith which purifies the heart, (Acts xv. 9.) and worketh by love, (Gal. v. 6.) and I in you by that Spirit, (1 John iii. 24. iv. 13.) without whom none can be a member of Christ, (Rom. viii. 9.) you shall abound in the fruits of the Spirit, but without my Spirit abounding in you, and uniting you to me your head, you can do nothing acceptable to me, or worthy of my gospel: as it respects the apostles it may farther note, that without the gifts and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit, they could do nothing to convert the world to the faith, as being not sufficient of themselves for that work: but having their sufficiency from that God, who giveth them the Holy Spirit. (2 Cor. iii. 5, 6.) Hence they are bid to stay at Jerusalem till this Spirit fell upon them. (Acts i. 8.)

[6] Ver. 6. He is cast out, ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, καὶ ἐξηράνθη.] Ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, supple, μὴ φερόμενον καρπὸν, as a branch bringeth forth no fruit; or καὶ here signifies because, or that, and so the sense runs thus, As a branch is cast out that is withered, or because it is withered; for branches are first withered, and then cast out: so Josh. i. 5. καὶ ὥσπερ for as I have been with Moses, so will I be with thee: xxii. 25. καὶ ἀπαλλωτριώσουσι, for they will turn away thy children: 1 Sam. ii. 15. give us roast, καὶ οὐ μὴ λάβω, for I will not receive sodden flesh of thee: Micah vii. 8. rejoice not at my fall, καὶ ἀναστήσομαι, for I shall rise again: see Luke i. 24. John vi. 54. It also signifies that, or which: so Isa. v. 4. what shall I do to my vine, καὶ οὐκ ἐποίησα, which I have not done? so Matt. ix. 11. καὶ ἰδόντες, which the pharisees seeing; Acts i. 19. καὶ γνώστον, which thing was known. (See Noldius de Partic. Heb. p. 297, 298.)

[7] Ver. 7. Ask what ye will, and it shall be given you.] Whatever ye ask according to the will of God, (1 John v. 14.) for the promotion of his glory, (xiv. 13.) and the furtherance of your ministry, (Matt. xxi. 21, 22.) asking in faith, (Mark xi. 24.) and in my name, (John xvi. 23.) ye shall receive. (See the note on Matt. xxi. 21.)

[8] Ver. 8. And ye shall be my disciples.] By your likeness to me your Master, who am intent on this, that I may glorify my Father upon earth, (xvii. 4.) and give up myself to the death, that I may be more fruitful in drawing all men to the knowledge of him, (xii. 24.) it will appear that you, thus bringing forth much fruit to the glory of God, are my genuine disciples: ἐν τούτῳ, is here to be repeated from the beginning of the verse.

[9] Ver. 10. As I keep my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.] Here it is inquired, how Christ being truly God could say he keeps his Father's commandments? I answer, as on earth he sustained the person of a prophet sent from him, it being necessary to that office that he should be sent by him, and do his commandments, according to those words of God, Deut. xviii. 18. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words into his mouth; and he shall speak to them all that I shall command him. (See ver. 19, 20.) Hence Christ so often saith, I speak not of myself, but as my Father gave me commandment, so I speak; (xii. 49, 50.) declaring by these words he was no impostor, but that very Prophet of whom Moses spake. (See the note on vii. 16. and viii. 28.) Hence Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact, note, that Christ spake this according to his human nature. But still Woltzogenius inquires, why, according to his human nature, he is said to obey the commandment of the Father, rather than of his own Divine nature? I answer, because the Father is the fountain of the Deity, and because it belonged to Christ executing his prophetic office, to refer all to the glory of his Father, whom the Jews only owned.

[10] Ver. 11. That my joy might be in you.] i. e. I speak of your remaining in me by the Spirit, that your joy, arising from his consolations, may be full; and this joy I call mine, because this Spirit dwelleth in me, and is derived from me. Pious and true is the note of Woltzogenius here, that the observation of God's commandments gives here the fullest and most perfect joy. For what richer treasure is there in this world, than that of a good conscience? and what greater joy than that which flows from the good Spirit testifying to our spirits that we are the sons of God, and shall be made heirs of eternal life? (Rom. viii. 17. Gal. iv. 6.)

[11] Ver. 12. As I have loved you.] Not only as in the paraphrase, but so as to lay down my life for you, (ver. 13.)

[12] Ver. 13. Μείζονα ταύτης ἀγάπην οὐδεὶς ἔχει, ἵνα. Greater love than this hath no man, than that one should lay down his life for his friend.] Here it is observable, that ἵνα after μείζονα signifies ἢ ἵνα quàm ut; so in the Third Epistle of St. John, ver. 4. μειζοτέραν τούτων οὐκ ἔχω χαρὰν, ἵνα. I have no greater joy, than that I may hear my children walking in the truth.

[13] To lay down his life for his friends.] It is certain Christ did this for his enemies; (Rom. v. 6—8.) Christ notwithstanding speaks of his friends, as speaking only to his apostles, whom he here owneth as his friends. Note also, that Christ here saith he doth ψυχὴν τιθέναι, lay down his life for his friends, rather to express the greatness of his love than the merit of his passion; and when he doth so, he uses constantly this phrase, viz. John x. 15. 17. 1 John iii. 16. but when the merit of his passion is expressed, the phrase used is ἀποθανεῖν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, or περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, to die for us, or for our sins, Rom. v. 6. 8. 2 Cor. v. 15. Heb. ii. 9. 1 Pet. iii. 18. as the circumstances of those places shew.

[14] Ver. 14. You are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you.] For both Cicero and Sallust* make this conformity of will to him we love the test of sincere friendship.

[15] Ver. 15. Not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth.] i. e. I deal not with you as servants, to whom I make known my councils, οὐδὲ γὰρ δεσπότων φύσιν ἡ πρᾶξιν δούλους δεῖ εἰδέναι, for servants are not (saith Xenophon) to know the customs or actions of their lord, but only bosom friends. (Epist. ad Æschinem.)

[16] For all things which I have heard from my Father I have made known unto you.] Not absolutely, for they were not yet able to hear of the cessation of the law, of circumcision, and the sabbath, the casting off of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles to be his church, without offence; (xvi. 12.) but all things fit to be told them then, concerning his salutary passion, his glorious resurrection and ascension, the mission of the Holy Ghost, the future judgment, and the promise of eternal life.

[17] Ver. 16. I have chosen you,] From the rest of the Jews to bear witness of me, (ver. 27.) and to be my apostles. That Christ speaks here of this election, appears (1.) from the preceding words, Ye have not chosen me, as disciples among the Jews chose to themselves a master, for ye came not to me till I called you. (2.) From the persons called: for, saith Christ, Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? (vi. 70.) And, (3.) from the end of their vocation here, viz. that they might go into the world and bring forth fruit, or that they should go forth and preach that gospel to the world, which should abide for ever, (2 John 2.) and erect that church against which the gates of hell should not prevail. It follows, that you should go and bring forth fruit, &c. ἵνα ὅ, τι ἂν αἰτήσητε, that whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he may give it you. I have observed, note on ver. 25. that there is often somewhat deficient after ἵνα: so 1 Cor. i. 31. ἵνα (sub. γένηται) that (it may be) as it is written; and so it seems to be here, the full sense being either that, being thus employed, or being thus fruitful, ye may ask what ye will.

[18] Ver. 18. If the world hate you—hated me first.] Here Christ begins to fortify his apostles against the hatred of the world, and to encourage them to continue firm and constant in the performance of their office against all its opposition: (1.) from his own example, who patiently had endured it before their eyes, and was now to suffer death by reason of it; so that they, who preached the same doctrine, which rendered him so hateful to the world, might reasonably expect the like treatment from it; nor had they reason to expect it should be otherwise, or grudge it was not better with the disciple than with his master: for he being not of the world, and they being chosen by him out of the world, the ground of the world's hatred against them must be the same.

[19] Ver. 20. Εἰ τὸν λόγον μου ἐτήρησαν, If they had kept my word.] Some conceive that τηρεῖν here imports to observe with an insidious intent to carp at it, and accuse the author of it, as it is said of the church to Satan, he τηρήσει, shall break, or observe, thy head to wound it, καὶ σὺ τηρήσεις, and thou shalt bruise, or observe, his heel to ensnare it; Gen. iii. 15. but the right reading there seems to be τειρήσεις, conteres, nor are there any instances in the New Testament where the simple verb τηρέω bears that sense: for Matt. xxvii. 36. 54. the word signifies only to observe, not to watch an opportunity against, that being παρατηρεῖν, (Mark iii. 2. Luke vi. 7. xiv. 1. xx. 20.) and the phrase τηρεῖν λόγους μου, which is proper to St. John, is always taken in a good sense for an obedient observance of the words of Christ, viz. John viii. 51, 52. 55. xiv. 23, 24. xvii. 6. 1 John ii. 5. Rev. iii. 8. 10. xxii. 7. 9.

[20] Ver. 21. But these things will they do for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.] It is farther ground of comfort to you that you should be thus hated, not from your own fault, but for my sake, and so shall be entitled by that hatred to a great reward in heaven, (Matt. v. 12.) and that out of ignorance of, or hatred to, him that sent me, and being hated for our sakes, you need not question our protection and assistance.

[21] Ver. 24. Works which no man ever did: Ver. 22. If I had not spoken to them,—no sin.] i. e. Nor yet can they be said to hate me out of ignorance of my commission; for I have spoken to them a doctrine plainly Divine, and worthy of God, against which they have no exceptions, which arise not from their own lusts and prejudices, and have confirmed it not only with the testimonies of Moses and the prophets, (v. 46.) but also with such works as neither Moses nor the prophets ever did; had not this been done by me, they could not reasonably have been charged with the great sin of infidelity: but now, shutting their eyes against the light thus shining on them, and hardening their hearts against that strong conviction of my mission, which my mighty works afford, it is evident that they reject me not out of ignorance and weakness, but out of wilful hatred to me, and him that sent me, and so their infidelity is inexcusable.

[22] Ver. 25. Ἀλλ' ἵνα, But that.] i. e. This hath happened, or is permitted. Examples of such an ellipsis we find frequently in this Gospel: so ix. 3. ἀλλ' ἵνα, but this hath happened that the works of God might be made manifest; xiii. 18. ἀλλ' ἵνα, but this hath happened to Judas, that the Scripture might be fulfilled; xiv. 31. ἀλλ' ἵνα γνῷ, but this I do that the world may know. (See note on xii. 40. and above at ver. 16.)

[23] For they have hated me without a cause.] This, which David, who was a type of Christ, spake of himself, may reasonably be thought, in the mystical sense, to relate to the Son of David, especially if we consider that the sixty-ninth Psalm, where these words are, (ver. 5.) is truly referred to Christ. (See the Synopsis in the argument of that Psalm.)

[24] Ver. 26. Whom I will send to you from the Father.] It is certain, saith Betuleius, from the words, I will send, that this cannot be understood of the eternal spiration of the essence, but of the temporary mission of the Holy Ghost, which Christ would ask of the Father, (xiv. 16.) and send from him in his name, (ver. 26.) after his departure, (xvi. 7.) after his glorification, (vii. 39.) and who was to be sent according to the promise of the Father. (Luke xxiv. 49.)

[25] Ver. 27. And you shall testify of me, &c.] You have been still my companions from the beginning of my prophetic office, and so are fit witnesses of my works: for good men use, and ought, to be believed, when they testify of what their eyes have seen, and their ears have heard, as the apostles did. (Acts iv. 20. 1 John i. 1, 2.)

CHAP. XVI.

1. [1] THESE things have I spoken unto you, that you should not be offended, (i. e. deterred from my service, by the sufferings you will be exposed to from the world; for)

2. [2] They shall put you out of the synagogues (as persons excommunicated): [3] yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God service (by so doing).

3. And these things will they do to you, because they have not known the (will of the) Father, nor me (who am sent by him to reveal it to the world).

4. But these things have I told you (beforehand), that [4] when the time shall come (when you are thus to suffer them), you may remember that I told you of them (and so may be confirmed in the truth, by seeing my perfect knowledge of things future, and may remember you suffer only what I had forewarned you of). And these things I said not to you at the beginning (of my preaching), because I was (then) with you (to protect you from, and comfort you in, all dangers).

5. But now I go my way to him that sent me; and [5] none of you (now) asketh me (as you did before), Whither goest thou?

6. But because I have said these things to you (concerning my departure), sorrow hath filled your hearts.

7. Nevertheless I tell you the truth; (viz. That) [6] it is expedient for you that I go away (from you): for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come to you; (he coming to supply my absence, and as the consequent of my ascension into heaven, John vii. 39.) but if (when) I depart, I will send him to you.

8. And when he is come, [7] he will reprove the world (and will convince men) of (their) sin (in rejecting me), and of (my) righteousness, and of (a future) judgment:

9. Of sin, because they believe not in me (of whose mission and resurrection he will convince them by his wondrous gifts conferred on them that believe in me).

10. [8] Of (my) righteousness, because I go to my Father (to whom I could not ascend were I not a righteous person), and ye see me no more (on earth).

11. [9] Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged (i. e. the devil is condemned, and cast out of his dominions by my servants; and consequently the time will come when all the subjects of his dominions shall be judged also).

12. I have yet [10] many things to say to you (concerning the abrogation of the sabbath, and your ritual law; of justification by faith without the works of the law, &c.) but ye cannot bear (i. e. receive) them now (without offence).

13. Howbeit when he, (who is) [11] the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you (executing your office) into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself (deceitful and uncertain things invented by himself, as do the evil spirits in the heathen oracles); but whatsoever he (who searcheth the deep counsels of God) shall hear (i. e. shall know to be the will of the Father), that shall he speak: and he [12] will shew you things to come.

14. He [13] shall (also) glorify me (by what he teacheth): for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it to you (i. e. he shall be sent to impart to you the things which relate to my kingdom, my laws, and service; and what he teacheth you, is to be delivered in my name).

15. All things that the Father hath are mine; (the power to govern, and to give rules and laws to all men, and to judge and recompense them according to those laws, which under the Mosaical dispensation was done by me, and in my name, Phil. ii. 9—11.) therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it to you.

16. (It is but) a little while, and ye shall not see me (because I shall be taken from you by death): and again, (after my resurrection, it is but) a little while, and (that) ye shall see me; (and this I say,) because (then) I go to my Father.

17. Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is (the import of) this that he saith to us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again a little while, and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18. They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell (the meaning of) what he saith.

19. Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him (the meaning of his words), and (therefore) said to them, Do ye inquire among yourselves of that (which) I said, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again a little while, and ye shall see me?

20. Verily, verily, I say to you, That (for a season) ye shall weep and lament, but the (men of the) world (the rulers of the Jews) shall rejoice (at my sufferings): and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy, (at my resurrection, ascension, and mission of the Holy Ghost, Luke xxiv. 41. 52. Acts ii. 46.)

21. (For as) a woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come; but (so) as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembers no more the anguish (she lay in), for joy that a man (child) is born into the world: (so shall be your case.)

22. And ye now therefore (καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν, for you therefore) have (now) sorrow (because of my death): but I will see you again (after my resurrection), and your hearts shall rejoice, and (though I personally be taken from you) your joy (through the Holy Spirit, shall be such as) no man taketh (or can take) from you.

23. And in[14] that day (that you receive this Comforter) ye shall (have need) to ask me nothing (for resolution of your doubts, as now you do). Verily, verily, I say to you, Whatsoever (assistance) ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24. [15] Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name (as Mediator betwixt God and man): ask (what is requisite for the discharge of your office), and ye shall receive (it), that your joy (in having all your petitions granted) may be full.

25. These things have I spoken to you in proverbs (obscurely of the Father): but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak to you in proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly (the will) of the Father.

26. In that day ye shall ask in my name: [16] and I say not to you (I need not say), that I will pray (or intercede with) the Father for you:

27. For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.

28. (And as) [17] I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: (so) again, I (shall shortly) leave the world, and go to the Father.

29. His disciples said to him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb.

30. Now we are sure that thou knowest all things (in that thou knowest our secret whisperings among ourselves), and (so) needest not that any man should ask thee (that thou mayest know what they desire, thou knowing this unasked): by this [18] we (more firmly) believe thou camest forth from God.

31. Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32. Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own (home), and shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

33. These things I have spoken to you, that in me (being with you by my Spirit) you may have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but [19] be of good cheer; I have overcome the world (and, as I am able, so by my sufferings am I the more inclined to assist and strengthen you against the temptations of it).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. THESE things have I spoken to you, that ye be not offended.] i. e. These things, concerning the hatred of the world, and the reasons of it; and of those considerations, which may induce you to bear it patiently, lest they coming unexpectedly upon you unarmed against them, you should fall from the faith, or desist from your office in the propagation of it: that this is the true notion of being scandalized, see the note on Matt. xviii. 6.

[2] Ver. 2. They shall put you out of the synagogues.] In their synagogues they had not only assemblies for reading the Scriptures every sabbath-day, (Acts xiii. 27. xv. 21.) for public prayers and exhortations to the people then and upon other days, (Acts xiii. 15.) but offences committed against the law were there corrected, and sometimes punished with scourging. (Matt. x. 17. xxiii. 34.) And they who would not be reformed by stripes, nor by the lesser excommunication, which removed them, saith Buxtorf,* four feet from others, were pronounced ἀποσυνάγωγοι, (John ix. 22. 24. xii. 42.) and by a public recitation of their names were cast out of the communication of the church; which, Luke vi. 22. is separating them, and casting out their names as evil; this, Christ here saith, would be their portion.

[3] Ἀλλ' ἔρχεται ὥρα ἵνα, Yea, the hour cometh, when whosoever killeth you shall think he doeth λατρείαν προσφέρειν τῷ Θεῷ, God service.] The particle ἀλλὰ here signifies yea, and denotes the increase of a thing; as Luke xii. 7. ἀλλὰ καὶ, yea, even your hairs are all numbered; see 1 Cor. iii. 2. xii. 22. ἵνα is here put for ὅτε, when, as ver. 32. the time cometh ἵνα σκορπισθῆτε, when you shall be scattered; see the note on the Third Epistle of John, ver. 4. The phrase λατρείαν προσφέρειν, to offer sacrifice, is taken from Exod. xxxii. 29. Consecrate your hands to the Lord, every one upon his brother; that is, saith the paraphrase of Onkelos, "obtulistis oblationem," ye have offered an oblation. Hence the zealots among the Jews, who killed those they esteemed transgressors with their own hands, not expecting the judgment of the Sanhedrin, were by them deemed religious men, filled with zeal in the cause of God, they having their name, saith Josephus,† ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ζηλουμένων, from those that were zealous for what was good: and therefore, after infinite slaughters of their brethren, they pronounced themselves ἀναμαρτητοὶ,‡ men without offences: and suitably to this prediction, Justin Martyr§ informs us, that the Jews did καταρᾶσθαι ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν τοὺς πιστεύοντας ἐπὶ τὸν Χριστὸν, disgrace and execrate the Christians in their synagogues, and were αὐτοχείρες αὐτῶν, killing them with their own hands wherever they could. This they will do, saith Christ, because they know not the Father; i. e. how alien those cruelties are from his benign nature: so Grotius. (See the note on xv. 21.)

[4] Ver. 4. That when the time cometh you may remember, &c.] And so be assured of my Divine prescience and veracity; and therefore may not doubt of that assistance and consolation I have promised you under these troubles. But here it may be asked, why Christ here saith, These things I said not to you at the beginning, because I was with you, when in the first mission of the apostles to preach in the cities of Judea, he useth almost the same words? Matt. x. 17, 18. and the like words, Matt. xxiv. 9. Luke vi.

22. Woltzogenius answers, that Christ in these places had in the general informed them of the great persecutions they were to suffer, but had not so clearly told them they were to suffer them on the account of religion; but this seems a mistake, for he had told them, that they were to suffer these things in the Jewish synagogues for his name's sake, and for righteousness' sake, Matt. v. 12, 13. x. 18. xxiv. 9. I answer therefore, that what was spoken, Matt. xxiv. 9. was said about this time; and so Christ might well say, He said it not to them from the beginning; and that what Christ saith, Matt. x. and Luke vi. does plainly respect the times, which were to come upon them, after our Lord's departure from them: for the words of Christ in St. Matthew, from ver. 16. to 36. respect those times when they were to give testimony to him before the gentiles, (ver. 18.) and were to be filled by the Holy Spirit, (ver. 20.) and so do the words of St. Luke also, as appears from the particle ὅταν, when these things shall happen; what therefore Christ there foretells as future, he speaks of here as instant, and now ready to befal them.

[5] Ver. 5. And none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?] This Peter asked, xiii. 36. but received no direct answer; they did not therefore so ask as to know, (xiv. 5.) much less to consider duly whither he was going, viz. to his and their Father's house, (John xx. 17.) or why he went, viz. to prepare a mansion for you, (xiv. 2.) or none of them asked now his departure was at hand, and so gave greater reason for this inquiry, whither he was going?

[6] Ver. 7. It is expedient for you that I go away.] Since by the advent of the Holy Spirit you will find greater comfort than from my presence; now this Spirit was not to come till Christ was glorified, and had ascended into heaven. (John vii. 39.) The word παρακλήτης, here mentioned, signifies an advocate and a comforter; he did the part of an advocate in respect of Christ and his gospel, by convincing the world of sin in not believing on him, and of the righteousness of Christ, (ver. 9—11.) and by confirming the apostles' testimony of him by signs and miracles, and various gifts imparted to them, (Heb. ii. 4. 1 John v. 6—8.) and by pleading their cause before kings and rulers, (Matt. x. 18, 19.) and against all their adversaries. (Luke xxi. 15. Acts vi. 10.) In respect of the apostles and the faithful, he also did the part of a Comforter, as being sent for their consolation and support in all their troubles, filling their hearts with joy and gladness, and giving them an inward testimony of God's love to them, and an assurance of their future happiness. (Rom. viii. 15, 16.)

[7] Ver. 8, 9. He will convince the world of sin, because they believe not in me.] The Holy Spirit had departed from the Jews about four hundred years since; and his return, according to Christ's promise, must be sufficient to evince, that Jesus, who had thus shed the Spirit upon his disciples, was the true Messiah, and so to convince them of sin, who believed not in him, as we see it did, Acts ii. 37. 41.

[8] Ver. 10. Of righteousness, because I go to the Father.] For that was a sufficient evidence, that the Father owned him as a righteous person, and his true prophet, though by the Jews he was condemned as an impostor. Now this the Holy Spirit proved, because his mission from heaven, and the miraculous powers done by him in the name of Jesus, evinced, that he who sent this Spirit from heaven was translated thither. Hence Peter from this effusion of the Holy Spirit argues, that this Jesus was by God made Lord and Christ, (Acts ii. 36.) and that the Jews had crucified that Holy and Just One whom the Father had glorified. (Acts iii. 13, 14.)

[9] Ver. 11. Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.] i. e. Because Satan, the prince of this world, is now to be condemned, and cast out of his dominions: whence it may appear, that all who belong to his kingdom, and choose rather to serve him than Christ, their lawful prince and judge, shall be condemned with him. (See the preface to the Epistles, §. 10.)

[10] Ver. 12. I have yet many things to say to you, but ye cannot bear them yet.] viz. Concerning the abolishment of the sabbath, and the ceremonial law, justification by faith without the works of the law, the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles, which, through the prejudices you now lie under, ye cannot yet bear. (See Orig. contra Celsum, lib. ii. p. 57, 58.)

[11] Ver. 13. The Spirit of truth shall lead you into all truth.] Necessary to your apostolical office, and to direct the Christian church to the end of the world in all saving truth: for, as Irenæus notes,* The doctrine which they taught, they after delivered in the Scriptures, to be the pillar and foundation of our faith. And as St. Austin adds,† Christ having committed to them the writing of those things, which he would have us read, they chose out those things to write which they judged sufficient to be written for the salvation of the faithful. It is therefore certain, that the apostles, in compiling the canon of Scripture, were so assisted by the Holy Spirit, as to write all truths necessary for the salvation of believers, and, consequently, that all things necessary to be believed or done by Christians, are fully and perspicuously contained in the Holy Scriptures.

[12] And he shall teach you things to come.] From this, and from the parallel place, xiv. 26. He shall bring all things to your remembrance which I have said to you, two things are evident: (1.) That this promise of the Holy Spirit can belong only to the apostles, seeing to their remembrance only could Christ bring those things which he had said to them. (2.) That this promise can agree to no councils assembled after their decease, seeing they never challenged to themselves the gift of prophecy, nor had future contingencies revealed to them.

[13] Ver. 14, 15. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it to you. All things which the Father hath are mine.] These words contain two arguments for the Divinity of Christ. For,

First, The things the Holy Spirit was to receive from Christ, who is emphatically styled the truth, are, all truth by the apostles to be delivered to the church, and all future contingencies respecting the church to the end of the world: for, saith Schlictingius‡ here, To this we are to refer the Revelation of St. John, in which are contained prophecies of the state of the church from that time to the end of the world.

* "Apostoli evangelium quod tunc præconiaverunt, postea per Dei voluntatem in Scripturis nobis tradiderunt, fundamentum et columnam nostræ fidei futuram." Lib. iii. cap. 1. "Quicquid Christus de suis factis et dictis nos legere voluit, hoc scribendum illis tanquam suis manibus imperavit."

† "Electaque esse quæ scriberentur ea quæ saluti credentium sufficere videbantur." De Consens. Evangel. lib. i. cap. 35. et Tr. 49. in Joh. p. 355.

‡ "Is revelabit vobis quid vel cum mundo, vel cum Judaico populo, vel cum ecclesia in posterum agetur; huc etiam pertinet tota Apocalypsis Johannis, in qua continentur prophetiæ de mirabili statu ecclesiæ Christi, ab illo tempore usque ad finem mundi."

Now the knowledge of these things must imply a Divine prescience. We speak (saith the apostle) the wisdom of God, which God hath revealed to us by his Spirit; (1 Cor. ii. 7. 10.) Christ therefore, from whom the Spirit received these things, must be God. Lastly, God saith to the idols of the gentiles, Shew the things that are to come, that we may know that ye are gods; (Isa. xli. 23.) he therefore who sheweth these things to the Spirit must be God.

Secondly, By saying, all things which the Father hath are mine; he challenges to himself the incommunicable attributes, and consequently that essence which is inseparable from them.

Ans. To this Woltzogenius answers, That the phrase, all things, must be restrained to the subject of Christ's discourse, viz. to all things, which the Spirit of truth was to reveal to them, and which respected their office and the good of the church; all which things the Father had communicated to him.

But (1.) Christ saith not here, I am conscious to the secrets of my Father; but all things which the Father hath are mine. (2.) Christ here gives the reason, why he had said, he shall receive of mine, viz. because all that the Father hath is mine. Take away any thing from the generality of this expression, and you render our Lord's inference infirm, since that which you take away, the Holy Spirit might not receive from him. (3.) All those things, which he confesses are here to be understood, are sufficient to prove the Divinity of Christ, as the citation from him shews.

[14] Ver. 23. And in that day ye shall ask me nothing.] i. e. When I have sent the Holy Spirit, to lead you into all truth, you shall have no need to inquire satisfaction in any thing, as now ye do, or to ask the sense of any thing suggested to you by the Spirit, as you sometimes ask the meaning of my words. This sense of the word ἐρωτᾶν is gathered from ver. 19. they were desirous ἐρωτᾶν to inquire of him the sense of those words, yet a little while, and ver. 30. there is no need that any one ἐρωτᾷ should inquire of thee—in that day, i. e. say St. Austin and Maldonate, in the day of judgment; but then the apostles could have nothing farther to ask for the church's benefit. And, secondly, it appears from the preceding verse, that day was the time when they should see him again after his resurrection, and so on. Nor can Origen's * conceit stand, that Christ here excludes himself, requiring them to pray only to God the Father, this being contrary to the practice of St. Paul, and the whole Christian church. (See note on Rom. x. 13.)

[15] Ver. 24. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name.] i. e. By me as mediator betwixt God and man, and with respect to my merits; do this after my death, and intercession for you at the right hand of God, and you shall receive such answers as will fill you with joy.

Ver. 25. These things I have spoken to you ἐν παροιμίαις in parables.] Παροιμία ἐστὶ λόγος ὠφέλιμος μέτ' ἐπικρύψεως μετρίας ἐκδεδόμενος, A proverb (saith St. Basil) is a profitable speech uttered with some obscurity, and so it is here, as is apparent from the answer of the apostles, ver. 29. Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb; and from the following words in the same verse, Hereafter I shall no more speak to you in proverbs, but shall shew you plainly (the will) of my Father.

[16] Ver. 26, 27. And I say not that I will ask the Father, for he himself loveth you.] i. e. I need not say this for your comfort, that I will intercede with my Father for you, seeing his love to you, who have thus loved me, is so great, as to incline him to grant your petitions on his own accord.

[17] Ver. 28. I came out from the Father.] See note on xiii. 3.

[18] Ver. 30. By this we believe that thou camest forth from God.] Why did they not believe him to be God? saith Woltzogenius. Ans. They say this sufficiently, by owning he knew all things, even the thoughts of men's hearts; and thence, as they well might, concluding, he came forth from God: for omniscience and the knowledge of the heart, being the attributes of God, (1 Kings viii. 39. Jer. xvii. 10.) they cannot be communicated to any without the communication of the Divine nature.
